APPENDIX C-15
(to Scriptures of India / China)

THE DIRGHA AGAMA
Sanskrit: Dirgha Agama, DA
Chinese: Chang Ahanjing
Pali: Digha Nikaya, DN
Also called "The Long Discourses"
Translation into Chinese: Zhu Fonian, 413 A.D.
Translation: Charles Patton, 2022
Estimated Range of Dating: 500-200 B.C.

(The Dirgha Agama (DA), Chinese: Chang Ahanjing, is one of the oldest Buddhist agamas orinally composed in Sanskrit. It corresponds to the Digha Nikaya (DN) of the Pali Canon. Experts often use the abbreviations DA and DN to distinguish both versions. The Dirgha Agama is a collection of discourses (Sanskrit: sutra; Pali: sutta) preserved primarily in Chinese translation, with substantial material also surviving in Prakrit / Sanskrit and lesser but still significant amounts surviving in Gandhari and in Tibetan translation. These sutras correspond to the first four Nikayas (and parts of the fifth) of the Sutta-Pitaka of the Pali Canon, which are also occasionally called agamas. In this sense, agama is a synonym for one of the meanings of nikaya. The content of both collections, the agama (here: Northern Collection), and the nikaya (here: Southern Collection), are dissimilar to an extent. Large parts of the Anguttara nikaya and Samyutta nikaya do not occur in the agama, and several sutras/suttas are dissimilar in content.

Agama is the Sanskrit word for "tradition" or "received knowledge" in post-Vedic scripture conveying ritual knowledge and considered to have been revealed by a personal divinity. Sometimes the word agama is used to refer not to a specific scripture, but to a class of scripture. They represent the oldest texts. In contrast to Vedic Samhitas, such as the Rigveda, and the Shakta Tantras, agamas are often composed in the form of a dialogue. The word agama is also used by Buddhists for the very simple reason that Buddism started as one of the many branches of Hinduism. The Theravada tradition holds that the Dirgha Agama be the oldest and most historically accurate representation of the teachings of Gautama Buddha, together with the Vinaya-pitaka.

According to tradition, the Buddha's discourses were already collected by the time of the first council, held shortly after the Buddha's death. Scholars, however, see the texts as continually growing in number and size from an unknown nucleus, thereby undergoing various changes in language and content. It seems clear that, among the early schools, at a minimum the Sarvastivada, Kasyapiya, Mahasamghika, and Dharmaguptaka had recensions of four of the five Prakrit/Sanskrit agamas that differed. The agamas have been compared to the Pali Canon's nikayas by contemporary scholars in an attempt to identify possible changes and root phrasings. The agamas' existence and similarity to the Sutta Pitaka are sometimes used by scholars to assess to what degree these teachings are a historically authentic representation of the Canon of Early Buddhism. Sometimes also the differences between them are used to suggest an alternative meaning to the accepted meaning of a sutta in either of the two recensions.

The use of Pali as a Buddhist canonical language came about because the Buddha, Siddharta Gautama, opposed the use of Sanskrit, a learned language, as a vehicle for his teachings and encouraged his followers to use Prakrit oder Pali, the languages of the ordinary people in the north of India. Sanskrit and Prakrit were actually the same language in Antiquity, just like Classic Latin and the Vulgar Latin of the ordinary folk. Pali then was equivalent to Old Italian and became the sacred language of the Theravada Buddhist canon roughly 2,000 years ago. Sanskrit, Prakrit, and Pali, are Middle Indo-Aryan languages of Indo-European origin.

The orally transmitted sayings of the Buddha spread through India. With the introduction of the Brahmi Script by Emperor Chandragupta Maurya, his grandson, Emperor Ashoka (c.273–232 BC), who converted to Buddhism, published some of the Buddha's teachings in inscriptions on stone pillars and other rocks known as the Edicts of Ashoka [See The Grand Bible pp.2823; 7461.].

The Pali texts went to Ceylon (c.3rd century BC), where they were written down in the 1st century BC. Pali eventually became a revered, standard, and international tongue. The Pali language together with the Theravada canon, known in Sanskrit as Tripitaka, were brought to Myanmar (Burma), Thailand, Cambodia, Laos, and Vietnam. Pali was eventually replaced by Hindi and died out as a literary language in mainland India in the 14th century but survived elsewhere until the 18th.

A Chinese translation of the text attributed to the Dharmaguptaka school is included in the Chinese Buddhist Canon. This translation was completed by Buddhayasas and Zhu Fonian in the Late Qin dynasty, dated to 413 AD. This version (by experts called recension or reading) consists of 30 sutras in contrast to the 34 suttas of the Digha Nikaya (DN) of the Pali Canon. The original Sanskrit text of the Dharmaguptaka recension is lost. However, in the 1990s, extensive fragments of a Sarvastivadin Sanskrit recension of the Dirgha Agama text were discovered. Portions of the Sarvastivadin recension also survive in Tibetan translation.

The various agamas

There are four extant collections of agamas, and one for which we have only references and fragments (the Ksudrakagama). The four extant collections are preserved in their entirety only in Chinese translation (agama), although small portions of all four have recently been discovered in Sanskrit, and portions of four of the five agamas are preserved in Tibetan. The five Agamas are:

Dirgha Agama (1st Agama)

The Dirgha Agama ("Long Discourses," Chang Ahanjing Taisho 1) corresponds to the Digha Nikaya of the Theravada school. A complete version of the Dirgha Agama of the Dharmaguptaka school was done by Buddhayasas and Zhu Fonian in the Late Qin dynasty, dated to 413 AD. It contains 30 sutras in contrast to the 34 suttas of the Theravadin Digha Nikaya. A "very substantial" portion of the Sarvastivadin Dirgha Agama survives in Sanskrit, and portions survive in Tibetan translation.

Madhyama Agama (2nd Agama)

The Madhyama Agama (traditional Chinese: "Middle-length Discourses") corresponds to the Majjhima Nikaya of the Theravada school. A complete translation of the Madhyama Agama of the Sarvastivada school was done by Samghadeva in the Eastern Jin dynasty in 397-398 AD. The Madhyama Agama of the Sarvastivada school contains 222 sutras, in contrast to the 152 suttas of the Pali Majjhima Nikaya. Portions of the Sarvastivada Madhyama Agama also survive in Tibetan translation.

Samyukta Agama (3rd Agama)

The Samyukta Agama ("Connected Discourses", Za Ahanjing Taisho 2.99) corresponds to the Samyutta Nikaya of the Theravada school. A Chinese translation of the complete Samyukta Agama of the Sarvastivada school was done by Gunabhadra in the Song state, dated to 435-443 AD. Portions of the Sarvastivada Samyukta Agama also survive in Sanskrit and Tibetan translation. In 2014, The Collation and Annotation of Samyuktagama, written by Wang Jianwei and Jin Hui, was published in China.

There is also an incomplete Chinese translation of the Samyukta Agama (Taisho 100) of the Kasyapiya school by an unknown translator, from around the Three Qin period, 352-431 AD. A comparison of the Sarvastivadin, Kasyapiya, and Theravadin texts reveals a considerable consistency of content, although each recension contains texts not found in the others.

Ekottara Agama (4th Agama)

The Ekottara Agama ("Numbered Discourses," Zengyi Ahanjing, Taisho 125) corresponds to the Anguttara Nikaya of the Theravada school. A complete version of the Ekottara Agama was translated by Dharmanandi of the Fu Qin state, and edited by Gautama Samghadeva in 397–398 AD. Some believed that it came from the Sarvastivada school, but more recently the Mahasamghika branch has been proposed as well. According to A.K. Warder, the Ekottara Agama references 250 Pratimoksa rules for monks, which agrees only with the Dharmaguptaka Vinaya, which is also located in the Chinese Buddhist canon. He also views some of the doctrine as contradicting tenets of the Mahasamghika school, and states that they agree with Dharmaguptaka views currently known. He therefore concludes that the extant Ekottara Agama is that of the Dharmaguptaka school.

Of the four Agamas of the Sanskritic Sutra Pitaka in the Chinese Buddhist Canon, it is the one which differs most from the Theravadin version. The Ekottara Agama contains variants on such standard teachings as the Noble Eightfold Path. According to Keown, "there is considerable disparity between the Pali and the [Chinese] versions, with more than two-thirds of the sutras found in one but not the other compilation, which suggests that much of this portion of the Sutra Pitaka was not formed until a fairly late date."

Ksudraka Agama or Ksudraka Pitaka (5th Agama)

The Ksudraka Agama ("Minor Collection") corresponds to the Khuddaka Nikaya, and existed in some schools. The Dharmaguptaka in particular had a Ksudraka Agama. The Chinese translation of the Dharmaguptaka Vinaya provides a table of contents for the Dharmaguptaka recension of the Ksudraka Agama, and fragments in Gandhari appear to have been found. Items from this Agama also survive in Tibetan and Chinese translation—fourteen texts, in the latter case. Some schools, notably the Sarvastivada, recognised only four Agamas—they had a "Ksudraka" which they did not consider to be an "Agama." Others—including even the Dharmaguptaka, according to some contemporary scholars—preferred to term it a "Ksudraka Pitaka." As with its Pali counterpart, the Ksudraka Agama appears to have been a miscellany, and was perhaps never definitively established among many early schools.

Additional materials

In addition, there is a substantial quantity of agama-style texts outside of the main collections. These are found in various sources:

1. Partial agama collections and independent sutras within the Chinese canon.

2. Small groups of sutras or independent sutras within the Tibetan canon.

3. Sutras reconstructed from ancient manuscripts in Sanskrit, Gandhari, or other ancient Indic languages.

4. Passages and quotes from agama sutras preserved within Mahayana Sutras, Abhidharma texts, later commentaries, and so on.

5. Isolated phrases preserved in inscriptions. For example, the Ashoka pillar at Lumbini declares iha budhe jate, a quote from the Mahaparinirvana Sutra.

Contents of the DN For Comprarison (Digha Nikaya Sutta number, Pali title, Description). Some details can be found online by searching for the here given names of the 34 Suttas. A partial translation of the Digha Nikaya was made by Thanissaro Bhikkhu (Geoffrey DeGraff).

DN 1 Brahmajala Sutta (The All - embracing Net of views): Mainly concerned with 62 types of wrong view.

DN 2 Samannaphala Sutta (The Fruits of the Contemplative): Life King Ajatasattu of Magadha asks the Buddha about the benefits in this life of being a samana ("recluse" or "renunciant"); the Buddha's reply is in terms of becoming an arahant.

DN 3 Ambattha Sutta: Ambattha the Brahmin is sent by his teacher to find whether the Buddha possesses the 32 bodily marks, but on arrival he is rude to the Buddha on grounds of descent (caste); the Buddha responds that he is actually higher born than Ambattha by social convention, but that he himself considers those fulfilled in conduct and wisdom as higher.

DN 4 Sonadandanta Sutta): The Buddha asks Sonadanda the Brahmin what are the qualities that make a Brahmin;

Copyright © 2018 by Lord Henfield, Guildford Scientific Press

Sonadanda gives five, but the Buddha asks if any can be omitted and argues him down to two: morality and wisdom.

DN 5 Katadanta Sutta: Kutadanta the Brahmin asks the Buddha how to perform a sacrifice; the Buddha replies by telling of one of his past lives, as chaplain to a king, where they performed a sacrifice which consisted of making offerings, with no animals killed.

DN 6 Mahali Sutta: In reply to a question as to why a certain monk sees divine sights but does not hear divine sounds, the Buddha explains that it is because of the way he has directed his meditation.

DN 7 Jaliya Sutta: Asked by two Brahmins whether the soul and the body are the same or different, the Buddha describes the path to wisdom, and asks whether one who has fulfilled it would bother with such questions

DN 8 Kassapa Sihanada Sutta (or: Maha Sihanada or Sihanada Sutta): The word sihanada literally means 'lion's roar'; this discourse is concerned with asceticism.

DN 9 Potthapada Sutta (About Potthapada): Asked about the cause of the arising of sanna, usually translated as perception, the Buddha says it is through training; he explains the path as above up to the jhanas and the arising of their perceptions, and then continues with the first three formless attainments; the sutta then moves on to other topics, the self and the unanswered questions.

DN 10 Subha Sutta: Ananda describes the path taught by the Buddha.

DN 11 Kevatta Sutta (alt: Kevaddha Sutta; To Kevatta): Kevaddha asks the Buddha why he does not gain disciples by working miracles; the Buddha explains that people would simply dismiss this as magic and that the real miracle is the training of his followers.

DN 12 Lohicca Sutta (To Lohicca): On good and bad teachers.

DN 13 Tevijja Sutta: Asked about the path to union with Brahma, the Buddha explains it in terms of the Buddhist path, but ending with the four brahmaviharas; the abbreviated way the text is written out makes it unclear how much of the path comes before this; Robert Gombrich has argued that the Buddha was meaning union with Brahma as synonymous with nirvana.

DN 14 Mahapadana Sutta: Tells the story of a past Buddha up to shortly after his enlightenment; the story is similar to that of Gautama Buddha.

DN 15 Mahanidana Sutta (The Great Causes Discourse): On dependent origination.

DN 16 Mahaparinibbana Sutta (The Last Days of the Buddha): Story of the last few months of the Buddha's life, his death and funeral, and the distribution of his relics.

DN 17 Mahasudassana Sutta: Story of one of the Buddha's past lives as a king. The description of his palace has close verbal similarities to that of the Pure Land, and Rupert Gethin has suggested this as a precursor[9]

DN 18 Janavasabha Sutta: King Bimbisara of Magadha, reborn as the god Janavasabha, tells the Buddha that his teaching has resulted in increased numbers of people being reborn as gods.

DN 19 Maha-Govinda Sutta: Story of a past life of the Buddha.

DN 20 Mahasamaya Sutta (The Great Meeting): Long versified list of gods coming to honour the Buddha.

DN 21 Sakkapanha Sutta (Sakka's Questions): The Buddha answers questions from Sakka, ruler of the gods (a Buddhist version of the Hindu goddess Indra).

DN 22 Mahasatipatthana Sutta (The Great Discourse on the Foundations of Mindfulness): The basis for one of the Burmese vipassana meditation traditions; many people have it read or recited to them on their deathbeds.

DN 23 Payasi Sutta (or: Payasi Rajanna Sutta): Dialogue between the skeptical Prince Payasi and a monk.

DN 24 Patika Sutta (or: Pathika Sutta): A monk has left the order because he says the Buddha does not work miracles; most of the sutta is taken up with accounts of miracles the Buddha has worked.

DN 25 Udumbarika Sihanada Sutta (or: Udumbarika Sutta): Another discourse on asceticism.

DN 26 Cakkavatti Sihanada Sutta (The Wheel-turning Emperor) Story of humanity's decline from a golden age in the past, with a prophecy of its eventual return.

DN 27 Agganna Sutta: Another story of humanity's decline.

DN 28 Sampasadaniya Sutta: Sariputta praises the Buddha.

DN 29 Pasadika Sutta: The Buddha's response to the news of the death of his rival, the founder of Jainism.

DN 30 Lakkhana Sutta: Explains the actions of the Buddha in his previous lives leading to his 32 bodily marks; thus it describes practices of a bodhisattva (perhaps the earliest such description).

DN 31 Sigalovada Sutta (or: Singala Sutta, Singalaka Sutta or Sigala Sutta; To Sigala / The Layperson's Code of Discipline): Traditionally regarded as the lay vinaya.

DN 32 Atanatiya Sutta (The Discourse on Atanatiya): Gods give the Buddha a poem for his followers, male and female, monastic and lay, to recite for protection from evil spirits; it sets up a mandala or circle of protection and a version of this sutta is classified as a tantra in Tibet and Japan.

DN 33 Sangati Sutta: L. S. Cousins has tentatively suggested that this was the first sutta created as a literary text, at the Second Council, his theory being that sutta was originally a pattern of teaching rather than a body of literature; it is taught by Sariputta at the Buddha's request, and gives lists arranged numerically from ones to tens (cf. Anguttara Nikaya); a version of this belonging to another school was used as the basis for one of the books of their Abhidharma Pitaka.

DN 34 Dasuttara Sutta: Similar to the preceding sutta but with a fixed format; there are ten categories, and each number has one list in each; this material is also used in the Patisambhidamagga.)

Text:

(DA 1) THE GREAT LEGEND
(DN 14) [T 1.1b12]

(This sutra is parallel to Pali DN 14 and Chinese T2, T3, T4, T125 (48.4). There's also a reconstructed Sanskrit text from Turfan (Xinjiang, China) that shows a close relationship with the present text.)

(A group of monks gather to discuss Dharma after their meal and discuss the Buddha's knowledge of buddhas that have existed in the past. They wonder if he knows about them through his own knowledge or because gods tell him. The Buddha overhears their conversation and joins them, giving a lengthy discourse about six buddhas who proceeded him in the distant past. He also gives a second discourse outlining the life of the Buddha Vipasyin, which is essentially the same as the tradition story of Gautama's early life and awakening. Finally, the Buddha relates how the Suddhavasa gods, being former disciples of buddhas, have also told him about the buddhas of the past.)

Introduction

1. Thus I have heard: One time, the Buddha was in Sravasti at the Flowering Grove Hut of Jeta's Grove. He was accompanied by a large assembly of 1,250 monks.

2. It was then that the monks gathered in the Flowering Grove Hall after soliciting alms. They engaged in a discussion with each other: "You monks, only the unsurpassed sage is so extraordinary! His miraculous powers are far-reaching, and his authority is tremendous. He has come to know the countless buddhas of the past who have entered nirvana, broken the bonds, and eliminated speculation.

3. "He also knows how many eons ago those buddhas existed as well as their names, surnames, birth castes, the meals they had, the length of their lives, and what suffering and happiness they experienced.

4. "He also knows that those buddhas possessed such precepts, such principles, such wisdom, such liberation, and such abodes."

5. "What do you think? Does the Tathagata know this by discerning well the nature of things, or does he know these things because the gods come and tell him?"

6. The Bhagavan was in a quiet place at the time and clearly overheard the monks having that discussion with his heavenly ear. He rose from his seat, went to the Flowering Grove Hall, prepared a seat, and sat down.

7. Knowing the answer, the Bhagavan asked them, "Monks, what have you been discussing after gathering here?" The monks then related to him what it had been.

8. The Bhagavan told the monks, "Good, good! With complete faith, you've left home to cultivate the path, and you practice as you should. All of you have two types of conduct: The first is noble discussion of the teaching, and the second is noble silence. This discussion of yours is as it should be. The Tathagata's miraculous powers and authority are tremendous. He entirely knows the events of countless eons in the past. He knows it because he understands well the nature of things and because the gods come and tell him."

9. The Buddha then spoke in verse:
• "Monks gathered in the Dharma hall
To have a noble discussion;
In a quiet place, the Tathagata
Heard it all with his heavenly ear.
• The Buddha's sunlight shines everywhere
As he discerns the Dharma sphere's meaning.
He also knows the past events
Of fully awakened ones and their complete nirvana.
• Their names, surnames, and castes,
The births they received, he knows, too.
The places where they lived,
He sees them all with clear vision.
• Gods of great authority,
So handsome and dignified,
Also come and tell me about
Fully awakened ones and their complete nirvana.
• Recounting their births, names, and surnames,
With a kalavinka voice, fully knowing them,
The unsurpassed lord of gods
Describes the buddhas of the past."

The Seven Buddhas

10. He also told the monks, "Would you like to hear about the circumstances of the buddhas in the past? The Tathagata knows them with the knowledge of past lives. I'll tell you about them."

The monks said to him, "Bhagavan, now would be a good time for it!" "We'd be glad to hear it!" "Excellent, Bhagavan!" "Once the discourse is complete, we'll approve of it!"

11. The Buddha told the monks, "Listen closely! Listen closely, and consider it well! I'll discern and explain it for you." The monks then accepted the teaching and listened.

12. The Buddha told the monks, "Ninety-one eons ago, there was a buddha in the world named Vipasyin. He was a tathagata, an arhat, who arose in the world. Furthermore, monks, thirty-one eons ago, there was a buddha named Sikhin. He was a tathagata, an arhat, who arose in the world. Furthermore, monks, thirty-one eons ago, there was a buddha named Visvabhu. He was a tathagata, an arhat, who arose in the world. Furthermore, monks, during the present eon of fortune, there was a buddha named Krakucchanda. He was a tathagata, an arhat, who arose in the world. Another was named Kanakamuni, and another was named Kasyapa. Now, I've also achieved the supreme and perfect awakening during this present eon of fortune."

13. The Buddha then spoke in verse:
• "Ninety-one eons ago,
There was the Buddha Vipasyin.
Next, thirty-one eons ago,
There was the buddha named Sikhin.
• During that same eon,
The Tathagata Visvabhu arose.
During the present eon of fortune,
There've been countless millions of years.
• There were four great sages
Who arose because of their pity for beings:
Krakucchanda, Kanakamuni,
Kasyapa, and Sakyamuni.

14. "You should know that during the time of Buddha Vipasyin, people lived for 80,000 years. During the time of Buddha Sikhin, people lived for 70,000 years. During the time of Buddha Visvabhu, people lived for 60,000 years. During the time of Buddha Krakucchanda, people lived for 40,000 years. During the time of Buddha Kanakamuni, people lived for 30,000 years. During the time of Buddha Kasyapa, people lived for 20,000 years. In the present time that I've arisen in the world, few people live more than a hundred years, and many live for less."

15. The Buddha then spoke in verse:
• "During the time of Vipasyin,
People lived for 84,000 years.
During the time of Buddha Sikhin,
People lived for 70,000 years.
• During the time of Visvabhu,
People lived for 60,000 years.
During the time of Krakucchanda,
People lived for 40,000 years.
• During the time of Kanakamuni,
People lived for 30,000 years.
During the time of Buddha Kasyapa,
People lived for 20,000 years.
• Now during my time,
People live not more than a hundred."

16. "Buddha Vipasyin arose from the warrior caste, and his clan was Kaundinya. Buddha Sikhin and Buddha Visvabhu were from the same caste and clan. Buddha Krakucchanda arose from the priestly caste, and his clan was Kasyapa. Buddha Kanakamuni and Buddha Kasyapa were from the same caste and clan. Now, I'm a tathagata, an arhat, who arose from the warrior caste, and my clan is Gautama."

17. The Buddha then spoke in verse:
• "The Tathagatas Vipasyin,
Sikhin, and Visvabhu
Were three perfectly awakened ones
Who arose from the Kaundinya clan.
The next three tathagatas
Arose from the Kasyapa clan.
• Now, I, the unsurpassed lord,
The trainer of sentient beings,
And supreme among gods and humans,
Am from the courageous Gautama clan.
• The first three perfectly awakened ones
Arose from the warrior caste,
And the next three tathagatas
Arose from the priestly caste.
Now, I'm the unsurpassed lord
With the courage to arise from the warriors."

18. "Buddha Vipasyin sat under a pippala tree and achieved the supreme and perfect awakening. Buddha Sikhin sat under a pundarika tree and achieved the supreme and perfect awakening. Buddha Visvabhu sat under a sala tree and achieved the supreme and perfect awakening. Buddha Krakucchanda sat under a sirsa tree and achieved the supreme and perfect awakening. Buddha Kanakamuni sat under an udumbara tree and achieved the supreme and perfect awakening. Buddha Kasyapa sat under a nyagrodha tree and achieved the supreme and perfect awakening. Now, I am a tathagata, an arhat, who sat under a 'pattha tree and achieved the supreme and perfect awakening."

19. The Buddha then spoke in verse:

• "The Tathagata Vipasyin
Went to a pippala tree.
He made it his abode
And achieved supreme and perfect awakening.
• Sikhin's was a pundarika tree where he Awakened and destroyed the source of existence.
• The Tathagata Visvabhu
Sat under a sala tree.
When he knew and saw liberation,
His miraculous abilities had no hindrance.
• The Tathagata Krakucchanda
Sat under a sirsa tree.
He purified knowledge of everything;
He was undefiled and attached to nothing.
• Kanakamuni
Sat under an udumbara tree.
He made it has dwelling place
And destroyed cravings and anguish.
• Tathagata Kasyapa sat
Under a nyagrodha tree.
He made it his dwelling place
And eradicated the root of existences.
• Now, I'm Sakyamuni
Who sat at a 'pattha tree.
A tathagata, a ten-powered sage
Who eradicated the bonds.
I crushed the army of Mara,
And explained great insight to the assembly.
• These seven buddhas with the power of effort
Radiated light and dispelled darkness.
They each sat at trees
Where they achieved the perfect awakening."

20. "Tathagata Vipasyin taught Dharma to three congregations. The first congregation had 168,000 disciples. The second congregation had 100,000 disciples. The third congregation had 80,000 disciples. Tathagata Sikhin taught Dharma to three congregations. The first congregation had 100,000 disciples. The second congregation had 80,000 disciples. The third congregation had 70,000 disciples. Tathagata Visvabhu taught Dharma to two congregations. The first congregation had 70,000 disciples, and the next congregation had 60,000 disciples. Tathagata Krakucchanda taught Dharma to one congregation of 40,000 disciples. Tathagata Kanakamuni taught Dharma to one congregation of 30,000 disciples. Tathagata Kasyapa taught Dharma to one congregation of 20,000 disciples. Now, I teach Dharma to one congregation of 1,250 disciples."

21. The Buddha then spoke in verse:

• "Vipasyin was named for vision;
His wisdom was immeasurable.
He saw everything without fear
And had three congregations of disciples.
• Sikhin's light was undisturbed,
And he destroyed the bonds.
His measureless and great authority
Was impossible to fathom.
That Buddha also had three congregations
Of disciples who gathered from all around.
• Visvabhu cut the bonds,
And gathered great sages together.
His name was heard in all directions,
And his wonderful teaching was famous.
To his two congregations of disciples,
He widely explained the profound meaning.
• Krakucchanda had one congregation;
He took pity on them and healed their pains.
That teacher educated sentient beings
In that single congregation of disciples.
• Tathagata Kanakamuni
Was likewise supreme.
His body was the color of purple gold,
And his appearance was perfect.
To his one congregation of disciples,
He widely explained the subtle teaching.
• Kasyapa's unified mind perceived
Each one of his hairs without distraction.
With a single voice that wasn't troubling,
He had a single congregation of disciples.
• Sakyamuni's mind was tranquil,
That highest ascetic of the Sakya clan.
Being the highest honored, a god among gods,
I have a single congregation of disciples.
• To that congregation, I show the doctrine,
Proclaiming the pure teaching.
My mind always feels joyous;
With contaminants gone, the afterlife is ended.
• Vipasyin and Sikhin had three,
Buddha Visvabhu had two,
And four buddhas each had one
Congregation of sages whom they taught.

22. "The Buddha Vipasyin had two disciples who were foremost: 1. Khanda, and 2. Tisya. The Buddha Sikhin had two disciples who were foremost: 1. Abhibhu, and 2. Sambhava. The Buddha Visvabhu had two disciples who were foremost: 1. Bhujisya, and 2. Uttama. The Buddha Krakucchanda had two disciples who were foremost: 1. Sanjiva, and 2. Vidhura. The Buddha Kanakamuni had two disciple who were foremost: 1. [Sovana] (?), and 2. Uttara. The Buddha Kasyapa had two disciples who were foremost: 1. Tisya, and 2. Bharadvaja. Now, I have two disciples who are foremost: 1. Sariputra, and 2. Maudgalyayana."

23. The Buddha then spoke in verse:

• "Khanda and Tisya
Were disciples of Vipasyin.
Abhibhu and Sambhava
Were disciples of Sikhin.
• Bhujisya and Uttama
Were foremost disciples
Who both defeated Mara.
They were Visvabhu's disciples.
• Sanjiva and Vidhura
Were disciples of Krakucchanda.
[Sovana] (?) and Uttara
Were disciples of Kanakamuni.
• Tisya and Bharadvaja
Were disciples of Kasyapa.
Sariputra and Maudgalyayana
Are my foremost disciples.

24. "Buddha Vipasyin had an attendant disciple named Asoka. The Buddha Sikhin has an attendant disciple named Ksemakara. The Buddha Visvabhu had an attendant disciple named Upasanta. The Buddha Krakucchanda had an attendant disciple named Subuddhi. The Buddha Kanakamuni had an attendant disciple named Svastika. The Buddha Kasyapa had an attendant disciple named Sumitra. I have an attendant disciple named Ananda."

25. The Buddha then spoke in verse:

• "Asoka and Ksemakara,
Upasanta and Subuddhi,
Svastika and Sumitra,
And Ananda is the seventh.
• These attendants to the buddhas
Had perfected the gist of their doctrines,
Day and night, they were never remiss.
They benefited themselves and others.
• These seven worthy disciples
Attended the seven buddhas, right and left.
Joyous and supportive,
They peacefully took refuge in complete liberation.

26. "The Buddha Vipasyin had a son named Proper Heart. The Buddha Sikhin had a son named Measureless. The Buddha Visvabhu had a son named Subuddhi. The Buddha Krakucchanda had a son named Uttama. The Buddha Kanakamuni had a son named Sarthavaha. The Buddha Kasyapa had a son named Gathered Army. Now I have a son named Rahula."

27. The Buddha then spoke in verse:

• "The sons Proper Heart and Measureless,
Subuddhi and Uttama,
Sarthavaha and Gathered Army,
And Rahula is the seventh.
• These noble sons
They loved Dharma and focused on generosity,
Being fearless in the noble Dharma.

28. "The Buddha Vipasyin's father was named Bandhumat, and he was from a lineage of warrior kings. His mother was named Bandhuvati, and the king ruled from a city named Bandhuvati."

29. The Buddha then spoke in verse:

• "Universal Vision's father was Bandhumat,
And his mother was Bandhuvati.
His capital was Bandhuvati,
Where that Buddha taught Dharma.

30. The Buddha Sikhin's father was named Aruna, and he was from a lineage of warrior kings. His mother's name was Prabhavati, and the king ruled from a city named Arunavati."

31. The Buddha then spoke in verse:

• "Sikhin's father was Aruna,
And his mother's name was Prabhavati.
In the city of Arunavati,
His authority defeated foreign enemies.

32. "The Buddha Visvabhu's father was named Supradipa, and he was from a lineage of warrior kings. His mother's name was Famous Virtue, and the king ruled from a city called Anupama."

33. The Buddha then spoke in verse:

• "Buddha Visvabhu's father
Was Supradipa of the warrior caste.
His mother was named Famous Virtue,
And his capital was Anupama.\

34. "The Buddha Krakucchanda's father was named Yajnadatta, and he was from the priestly caste. His mother was named Susakha. The king was named Ksema, and the capital was named Ksemavati after the king."

35. The Buddha then spoke in verse:

• "[His father was] the priest Yajnadatta,
And his mother was named Susakha.
The king was named Ksema,
And his city of residence was Ksemavati.

36. "The Buddha Kanakamuni's father was named Mahaguna, and he was from the priestly caste. His mother's name was Sujaya, and the king then was named Sobha. The capital was named Sobhavati after the king."

37. The Buddha then spoke in verse:

• "[His father was] the priest Mahaguna,
And his mother was named Sujaya.
The king's name was Sobha,
And his city of residence was Sobhavati.

38. "The Buddha Kasyapa's father was named Brahmadatta, and he was from the priestly caste. His mother was named Dhanavati, and the king then was named Krkin. The king ruled from a city called Varanasi."

39. The Buddha then spoke in verse:

• "[His father was] the priest Brahmadatta,
And his mother was named Dhanavati.
The king's name was Krkin,
And his city of residence was Varanasi.

40. "My father is named Suddhodana, and he is from a lineage of warrior kings. My mother's name is Great Pure Wonder, and the king rules from the city called Kapilavastu."

41. The Buddha then spoke in verse:

• "My father is the warrior Suddhodana,
And my mother's name is Great Purity.
Their land is wide and its people prosperous,
That place where I was born.

42. "These were the conditions, names, castes, and birthplaces of those buddhas. What wise person who hears these circumstances wouldn't rejoice and feel delighted by it?"

The Buddha Vipasyin

The Bodhisattva's Birth

43. The Bhagavan then told the monks, "Now, I'd like to give a talk on the events of past Buddhas using the knowledge of past lives. Would you like to hear it?"

The monks replied, "Now is the right time. We'd be glad to hear it!"

44. The Buddha told the monks, "Listen closely! Listen closely and consider it well! I will give you a discerning explanation.

45. "Monks, you should know the way it always is with buddhas. When Bodhisattva Vipasyin's spirit descended from the Tusita Heaven to his mother's womb and entered through her right side, he was properly mindful and undisturbed.

46. "At that moment, there was an earthquake, and a great radiance illuminated the whole world. The sun and moon couldn't compare to its brilliance. Sentient beings in complete darkness saw each other and recognised where they were going. When this light illuminated Mara's palace, and the gods, Sakra, Brahma, ascetics, priests, and other sentient beings were all outshined by that great radiance, the light of those gods naturally disappeared."

47. The Buddha then spoke in verse:

• "Thick banks of clouds in the sky
Illuminate the earth with lightning.
Vipasyin descended into a womb,
And his illuminating light was likewise.
• The sun and moon couldn't compare,
No light wasn't outshined by it.
He dwelled in her womb, pure and undefiled:
This is the way it is with buddhas.

48. "Monks, you should know the way it always is with buddhas. While he was in his mother's womb, Bodhisattva Vipasyin was focused and undisturbed. There were four gods armed with spears who stood guard over his mother so that neither humans nor non-humans could harm her. This is the way it always is."

49. The Buddha then spoke in verse:

• "Four gods in four directions,
They were famous and dignified.
The Lord of Gods Sakra sent them
To guard the Bodhisattva well.
• Always armed with spears,
They never left their guard posts.
Humans and non-humans did no harm;
This is the way it always is with buddhas.
• Gods and spirits kept her protected
Like goddesses protecting a god.
His followers felt joyous;
This is the way it always is with buddhas."

50. He also told the monks, "This is the way it always is with buddhas. When Bodhisattva Vipasyin's spirit descended from the Tusita Heaven to his mother's womb, he was focused and undisturbed. His mother's body was relaxed, she didn't have any kind of illness, and her wisdom improved. His mother looked into her womb and saw the Bodhisattva's body with fully formed faculties. It was the color of purple gold and without any blemish. She was like a man with eyesight seeing a pure beryl that's transparent and lacks any obstructions to his vision. Monks, this is the way it always is with buddhas."

51. The Bhagavan then spoke in verse:

• "He was like a pure beryl gemstone
That's bright like the sun and moon.
That gentle sage dwelled in his mother's womb,
And his mother had no illness.
• Her wisdom was improved,
And she saw her fetus like a golden statue.
His mother's pregnancy was comfortable;
This is the way it always is with buddhas."

52. The Buddha told the monks, "[This is the way it always is with buddhas.] When Bodhisattva Vipasyin's spirit descended from the Tusita Heaven to his mother's womb, he was focused and undisturbed. His mother's heart was pure, without any notions of desire. Nor was she burned by the fire of lust. This is the way it always is with buddhas."

53. The Bhagavan then spoke in verse:

• "The Bodhisattva in his mother's womb
Had achieved the merit of a god in heaven.
His mother's mind was pure;
She didn't have any notions of desire.
• She abandoned lustful desires,
Neither defiled by nor going near them.
She wasn't burned by the fire of desire;
The mothers of buddhas are always pure."

54. The Buddha told the monks, "This is the way it always is with buddhas. When Bodhisattva Vipasyin's spirit descended from the Tusita Heaven to his mother's womb, he was focused and unconfused. His mother upheld the five precepts, purified the religious practice, and was faithful and loving. These virtues being accomplished, she was happy and fearless. When her body broke up and her life ended, she was born in the Trayastrimsa Heaven. This is the way it always is [with buddhas]."

55. The Bhagavan then spoke in verse:

• "The woman who's pregnant with the sage
Makes effort and perfects the precepts.
Afterward, she surely receives a heavenly body;
This is the reason she's called a 'buddha mother.'"

56. The Buddha told the monks, "This is the way it always is with buddhas. When he was born, Bodhisattva Vipasyin emerged from his mother's right side. There was an earthquake, and a radiance illuminated [the whole world]. Just as when he first entered her womb, there wasn't any dark place that wasn't illuminated. This is the way it always is [with buddhas]."

57. The Bhagavan then spoke in verse:

• "When the prince was born, the earth shook,
And a great light shined everywhere:
In this world and other worlds,
Above, below, and in all directions.
• He emitted a light that granted pure sight
Of his fully formed heavenly body.
With joyous and pure voices,
The Bodhisattva's name was announced."

58. The Buddha told the monks, "This is the way it always is with buddhas. When he was born, Bodhisattva Vipasyin emerged from his mother's right side, and he was focused and undisturbed. The Bodhisattva's mother held onto a tree limb, neither sitting nor lying down. Four gods stood in front his mother and presented fragrant water. They said, 'Indeed, heavenly mother! Now you've given birth to a holy son. Don't feel anguish over it!' This is the way it always is [with buddhas]."

59. The Bhagavan then spoke in verse:

• "A Buddha's mother doesn't sit or lie down,
She stands in precepts, and cultivates the religious life.
Giving birth to the sage, she's not indolent;
Gods and humans offer their help."

60. The Buddha told the monks, "This is the way it always is with buddhas. When he was born, Bodhisattva Vipasyin emerged from his mother's right side, and he was focused and undisturbed. His body was clean, not being sullied by filth. It was like a man with eyesight putting a pure, bright jewel on white silk, and neither of them dirties the other because they are both pure. The Bodhisattva emerged from the womb in the same way. This is the way it always is [with buddhas]."

61. The Bhagavan then spoke in verse:

• "He was like a pure and bright jewel
That isn't defiled when placed on silk.
When he emerges from the womb,
The Bodhisattva was clean and undefiled."

62. The Buddha told the monks, "This is the way it always is with buddhas. When he was born, Bodhisattva Vipasyin emerged from his mother's right side, and he was focused and undisturbed. Upon emerging from her right side, he fell to the ground and walked seven paces without anyone helping him. He looked all around in the four directions, raised his hand, and said, 'Only I am exalted by both heaven and earth, for I will save sentient beings from birth, old age, illness, and death.' This is the way it always is [with buddhas]."

63. The Bhagavan then spoke in verse:

• He was like a lion taking a step
And looking all around in the four directions.
He fell to the ground and walked seven paces,
Like a lion among humans.
• He also walked like a great naga,
Looking all around in the four directions.
He fell to the ground and walked seven paces,
Like a naga among humans.
• When the most exalted of bipeds was born,
He walked seven paces, steady on his feet;
Looking in the four directions, he raised his voice:
'I will end the suffering of birth and death.'
• When he was first born,
He was equal to the unequalled.
He himself saw the root of birth and death,
And that body was his very last."

64. The Buddha told the monks, "This is the way it always is with buddhas. When he was born, Bodhisattva Vipasyin emerged from his mother's right side, and he was focused and undisturbed. Two streams of water sprung forth, one hot and one cold, which were provided to bathe him. This is the way it always is [with buddhas]."

65. The Bhagavan then spoke in verse:

• "When the most exalted of bipeds was born,
Two streams of water sprung forth.
They were provided for the Bodhisattva
To cleanse and purify his universal vision.
• Two streams sprung forth,
And their water was extremely pure.
One was hot, and the other was cold,
In which the Omniscient One was bathed.

The Thirty-Two Signs

66. "When the prince was first born, his father, king Bandhumat, summoned a group of physiognomists and fortune-tellers to examine him and determine his [future] fortune or misfortune.

67. "The physiognomists accepted his command and examined the prince. Lifting his robe, they saw he had the full set of signs. The fortune-tellers said, 'Someone possessing these signs will have one of two destinies, without a doubt. If he remains at home, he'll become a noble wheel-turning king. He'll be the king of the four continents, and his four armies will be complete. He'll rule with the correct Dharma without any wickedness, and he'll be a blessing to the world. The seven treasures will come naturally to him. He'll have a thousand courageous sons who defeat foreign adversaries, and there'll be a great peace under heaven without the use of weapons. If he leaves home, he'll achieve perfect awakening and be given the ten epithets.'

68. "The physiognomists then said to the king, 'This son born to the king has thirty-two signs. He'll have one of two destinies, without a doubt. If he stays at home, he'll become a noble wheel-turning king. If he leaves home, he'll achieve perfect awakening and be given the ten epithets.'"

69. The Buddha then spoke in verse:

• "The prince was born with a hundred merits
That the physiognomists foretold.
Like reading from a book they carried, [they said:]
'He has one of two destinies, without doubt.
• If he enjoys the home life,
He'll become a wheel-turning king.
Seven treasures that are hard to get
Will naturally come and make him a king.
• The gold wheel is replete with a thousand spokes
That hold a golden rim all around them.
It turns and flies wherever he travels;
Therefore, it's called the heavenly wheel.
• Well-trained and standing with seven tusks,
Tall, broad, and white as snow,
And able to flying through the sky:
This is called the second elephant treasure.
• A horse travels all over the world,
Leaving in morning and returning to eat at sunset.
With a red mane and a peacock's throat,
It's called the third treasure.
• A pure beryl gemstone,
With a glow that illuminates a yojana
And lights up the night like it's daytime:
That's called the fourth treasure.
• With form, sound, fragrance, flavor, and touch
That's unequalled by anyone else,
She is the best of women
Who's called the fifth treasure.
• He presents beryl treasures to the king,
Jewels and myriad valuables, too.
Delighted to offer this tribute,
[The householder] is called the sixth treasure.
• As the wheel-turning king wishes,
His army quickly comes and goes.
Strong and swift, they do what the king wills,
And [their general is] called the seventh treasure.
• These are called the seven treasures:
The wheel, elephant, and horse pure white,
Householder, jewel, and woman treasures,
And the general treasure makes seven.
• He'll look on them without tire
And enjoy himself with the five desires.
Like an elephant that breaks its bonds,
He'll leave home to achieve perfect awakening.
• The king has such a son,
Exalted among two-legged beings.
In the world, he'll turn the Dharma wheel,
Awakening he'll achieved without negligence.'

70. "His father the king repeated himself three times, asking the physiognomists, 'Look again at the prince's thirty-two signs. What are they called?'

"The physiognomists lifted the prince's robe and described his thirty-two signs: 'First, his feet are flat. The soles of his feet are level and full, and they step on the ground comfortably. Second, the wheel sign is on the soles of his feet. Complete with a thousand spokes, they shine with many lights. Third, his hands and feet are webbed like the king of geese. Fourth, his hands and feet are soft like heavenly cloth. Fifth, his fingers and toes are unmatched in slenderness and length. Sixth, his heels are so full one never tires of looking at them. Seventh, his calves are straight up and down like a deer's legs. Eighth, his bones are a chain, their joints hooking together like chain links. Ninth, his organ is hidden like that of a horse. Tenth, his hands hang lower than his knees. Eleventh, each of his pores has a hair growing from it, the hair curls to the right, and it's the color of a dark blue beryl. Twelfth, his hairs curl to the right, are blue in color, and turn upward. Thirteenth, his body is gold-colored. Fourteenth, his skin is fine and soft, and dirt doesn't stick to it. Fifteenth, his shoulders are even, full, rounded, and attractive. Sixteenth, he has the svastika symbol on his chest. Seventeenth, his body is twice as long as a human. Eighteenth, his seven points are equally full. Nineteenth, his body's length and breadth is like that of a nyagrodha tree. Twentieth, he has rounded cheeks like a lion. Twenty-first, his breast is dignified like that of a lion. Twenty-second, he has forty teeth in his mouth. Twenty-third, he is dignified and symmetrical. Twenty-fourth, the gaps between his teeth are hidden. Twenty-fifth, his teeth are pure white and bright. Twenty-sixth, his throat is clean, and whatever flavored food he eats is always agreeable. Twenty-seventh, his tongue is so long and broad, it can lick his left or right ear. Twenty-eighth, his Brahma voice is clear. Twenty-ninth, his eyes are deep blue. Thirtieth, he has eyes like a bull king that blink together, up and down. Thirty-first, he has a white tuft of soft and shiny hair between his brows. It's a fathom long when pulled taut, and it curls to the right like a jewel when released. Thirty-second, he has a fleshy knot on his crown. These are the thirty-two signs.'"

71. The Buddha then spoke in verse:

• "He stood well on soft feet
That didn't leave footprints on the ground.
They were adorned with the thousand-spoked signs,
All of which were lustrous.
• He was like a nyagrodha tree
In circumference, straightness, and evenness.
The Tathagata was unprecedented,
Whose organ was hidden like that of a horse.
• His body was adorned with golden jewels
As his many signs reflected each other.
Though he traveled conventionally,
Neither dust nor earth dirtied him.
• His heavenly form was so soft and gentle,
A heavenly parasol naturally shaded him.
His Brahma voice and purple-gold body
Were like a lotus when it first emerges from water.
• The king asked the physiognomists,
And they respectfully answered him.
They praised the Bodhisattva's signs,
As his whole body was glowing.
His hands, feet, limbs, and joints,
His centre and extremities were all apparent.
• The flavor of his food was always perfect,
And his body was straight and not crooked.
The wheels on the soles of his feet were clear,
And his voice was like a kalavinka bird.
• The shape of his thighs was full,
Formed by his past actions.
His arms were full and well-rounded,
And his eyebrows were quite dignified.
• He was an exalted lion among humans,
His majestic power was supreme.
His rounded cheeks were dignified,
And he lay on his side like a lion.
• His well-arranged teeth were forty,
And the gaps between them were hidden.
His Brahma voice is unprecedented,
So [people] come from far and near.
• Standing straight and not leaning over,

Both his hands touched his knees.
His hair was even and soft,
And people honored his beautiful signs.
• Each pore had a hair growing from it;
His hands and feet had the sign of webbing.
He had a fleshy topknot and deep blue eyes,
Which both blinked up and down.
• Both his shoulders were full and well-rounded,
Completing his thirty-two signs.
His heels were neither high nor low;
His calves were straight and slender as deer legs.
• A god among gods had come to us
Like an elephant that broke its leg bonds.
He would free sentient beings from suffering
That dwell in birth, old age, illness, and death.
• Out of kindness and compassion,
He would teach the four truths.
With plain Dharma expressions and meaning,
He'll prompt many offerings and utmost honors."

The Bodhisattva's Early Life

72. The Buddha told the monks, "When he was born, Bodhisattva Vipasyin was sheltered from cold, heat, wind, rain, and dust by gods in the sky who held white parasols and jeweled fans for him."

73. The Buddha then spoke in verse:

• "Unprecedented among humans,
He was born the most exalted of bipeds.
The gods respected and supported him
By offering jeweled parasols and fans.

74. "His father, the king, provided him with four nannies: The first fed him milk, the second bathed him, the third rubbed him with incense, and the fourth entertained him. They joyously nurtured him without any neglect."

75. The Buddha then spoke in verse:

• "His nannies were kind and loving,
Entrusted to nurture the boy from birth.
One fed him milk, one bathed him,
Two applied incense and entertained him.
The fragrance was the world's most superb
That the exalted of humans was rubbed with.

76. "When he was a youth, the whole country's men and women watched him without tire."

77. The Buddha then spoke in verse:

• "He was respected and liked by people
Like a freshly-made gold statue.
Men and women clearly observed him,
And they watched him tirelessly.

78. "While he was a youth, the whole country's men and women would pass him around and hold him up as though they were looking at a jeweled flower."

79. The Buddha then spoke in verse:

• "When the exalted of bipeds was born,
He was respected and loved by people.
They took turns holding him up
As though looking at a jeweled flower.

80. "When he was born, the Bodhisattva's eyes were unblinking like a Trayastrimsa god. He was named Vipasyin because he didn't blink."

81. The Buddha then spoke in verse:

• "The god among gods didn't blink
Just like a Trayastrimsa god.
Seeing a form, he rightly observed it;
Therefore, he was called Vipasyin.

82. "When he was born, the Bodhisattva's voice was clear, gentle, and harmonious like the voice of a kalavinka bird."

83. The Buddha then spoke in verse:

• "He was like the bird of the Himalayas
That drinks flower nectar and sings.
The most exalted of bipeds
Had a voice that was just as clear.

84. "When he was born, the Bodhisattva's vision could see clearly as far away as a yojana."

85. The Buddha then spoke in verse:

• "As a result of practicing pure deeds,
He got the marvelous glow of a god.
The Bodhisattva's eyes could see
At a range of a one yojana.

86. "When he was born, the Bodhisattva grew up to adulthood and was educated in the way [of governing] in the royal hall. His favor reached the common people, and his reputation for virtue was heard far away."

87. The Buddha then spoke in verse:

• "In the royal hall, that young man
Educated the world with the way.
He made a variety of decisions,
So he was called Vipasyin.
• His pure knowledge was vast
And deep like the ocean.
He delighted the mass of beings
And improved their wisdom.

The Bodhisattva Leaves Home

88. "At that point, the Bodhisattva wanted to go out sightseeing, so he ordered his driver to prepare a chariot and horses to tour a forest park. Once the chariot and horses were ready, the driver returned and said, 'Now is a good time.' The prince then rode in the precious chariot to the scenic park. While they were on the road, they saw an elderly man. His hair was white, his teeth had fallen out, and his wrinkled body was bent. He walked wearily with a cane and was short of breath.

89. "The prince asked his aide, 'What sort of man is that?'

"He answered, 'This is an old man.'

90. "The prince also asked, 'What is "old"?'

"He answered, 'Old age happens as the end of one's life approaches. When there aren't many years left, it's called being old.'

91. "The prince asked, 'Will I be likewise? Will I not escape this hardship?'

"He answered, 'Yes, anyone born is sure to become old. It doesn't matter if they are upper or lower class.'

92. "The prince was disturbed and unhappy. He told his driver to turn the chariot around and go back to the palace. He silently thought to himself, 'To think I'll also have to suffer being old!'"

93. The Buddha then spoke in verse:

• "Seeing an old man, his life about to end,
Walking weakly with a cane,
The Bodhisattva thought to himself,
'I've yet to escape from this hardship!'

94. "His father, the king, asked the driver, 'Did the prince enjoy his excursion?'

"He answered, 'He didn't enjoy it.'

95. "The king asked him why, and the driver replied, 'We happened upon an old man on the road, which made him unhappy.'

96. "His father, the king, then thought silently to himself, 'The physiognomists foretold that the prince would leave home, and now he isn't happy. What can I do about it? I'll devise a way to make him stay in the inner palace and entertain him with the five desires. He'll be delighted, which will prevent him from leaving home!' He then decorated the palace's guest quarters and selected some maidens to entertain the prince."

97. The Buddha then spoke in verse:

• "His father, the king, heard this said
And decorated the palace guest quarters.
He gave him more of the five desires,
To prevent the prince from leaving home.

98. "After that time, the prince again ordered his driver to prepare a chariot and horses for an excursion, and they encountered a sick man on the road. His body was limp, and his belly was huge. His face and eyes were dark, and he was lying alone in his own waste without anyone looking after him. His illness was so painful that he couldn't speak.

99. "The prince looked back at his driver and said, 'What sort of man is that?'

"He answered, 'That is a sick man.'

100. "The prince asked, 'What is 'sick'?'

"He answered, 'Sickness is being attacked by one of many diseases. When a person is still alive and hasn't died yet, they are called sick."

101. "'Will I be likewise? Haven't I escape this hardship yet?'

"'Yes, anyone born becomes sick. It doesn't matter if they are upper or lower class.'

102. "The prince was disturbed and unhappy. He told the driver to turn the chariot around and return to the palace. He thought silently to himself, 'To think I'll also have to suffer being sick!'"

103. The Buddha then spoke in verse:

• "Seeing that man who'd been sick a long time,
whose appearance was wasting away,
The prince thought quietly to himself,
'I've yet to escape from this hardship!'

104. "His father, the king, again asked the driver, 'Did the prince enjoy his excursion?'

"He answered, 'He didn't enjoy it.'

105. "The king asked him why, and the driver answered, 'We happened upon a sick man on the road, and he wasn't happy about it.'

106. "His father, the king thought, 'The physiognomists foretold that the prince would leave home, and now he isn't happy. What can I do about it? I'll devise a way to improve his entertainment. He'll be delighted, which will prevent him from leaving home!' The king then decorated the palace guest quarters and selected maidens to entertain the prince."

107. The Buddha then spoke in verse:

• "Sight, sound, odor, flavor, and touch,
Sublime and delightful were they,
A result of the Bodhisattva's merits;
Therefore, he was entertained by them.

108. "At another time, the prince ordered his driver to prepare a chariot and horses for an excursion, and they encountered a dead man on the road. Multi-colored banners were posted in front and behind his corpse, and his relatives and family were lamenting, crying as they took it out of the city. The prince again asked, 'What sort of man is that?'

"He answered, 'That's a dead man.'

109. "'What exactly is "dead"?'

"'Death is the end. Breath goes first, warmth goes next, and then the faculties decay. When a person dies, they go somewhere else and live in a separate family. Therefore, it's called death.'

110. "The prince also asked the driver, 'Will I be likewise? Haven't I escaped this trouble?'

"He answered, 'Yes, everyone born is sure to die. It doesn't matter if they are upper or lower class.'

111. "The prince was disturbed and unhappy. He told the driver to turn the chariot around and return to the palace. He silently thought, 'To think I too will have to suffer this death!'"

112. The Buddha then spoke in verse:

• "When he first saw a dead person,
The prince knew they would be reborn.
He silently thought to himself,
'I haven't escaped this hardship yet!'

113. "His father, the king, again asked the driver, 'Did the prince enjoy his excursion?'

"He answered, 'He didn't enjoy it.'

114. "The king asked him why, and the driver answered, 'We happened upon a dead man on the road, and he wasn't happy about it.'

115. "His father, the king, thought, 'The physiognomists foretold that the prince would leave home, and now he isn't happy. What can I do about it? I'll devise a way to improve his entertainment. He'll be delighted, which will prevent him from leaving home!' The king then decorated the palace guest quarters and selected maidens to entertain the prince."

116. The Buddha then spoke in verse:

• "The young man was famous
And surrounded by many maidens.
He enjoyed the five desires,
Like that Lord of Gods, Sakra.

117. "At another time, he ordered his driver to prepare a chariot and horses for an excursion, and they encountered an ascetic on the road. He wore Dharma clothes and carried a bowl, looking at the ground as he walked. The prince asked his driver, 'What sort of man is that?'

"His driver replied, 'That is an ascetic.'

118. "The prince also asked, 'What is an ascetic?'

"He answered, 'An ascetic renounces loved ones, leaves home, and cultivates the path. He controls his faculties so that he isn't defiled by external desires. He's kind to everyone, and he doesn't do any harm. When he encounters suffering, he isn't saddened. When he meets with pleasure, he isn't delighted. He's accepting like the earth; therefore, he's called an ascetic.'

119. "The prince said, 'Excellent! This is the path is that truly severs worldly ties. It's subtle, pure, and clear. This is the only way to happiness.' He then ordered his driver to pull the chariot over [beside the ascetic].

120. "The prince then asked the ascetic, 'What's the purpose of cutting off one's hair and beard, putting on Dharma robes, and carrying a bowl?'

"The ascetic replied, 'A person leaves home wanting to train their mind, forever part with defilement, kindly nurture living things, and do no harm. They quiet their vain thoughts; their only work is the path.'

121. "The prince said, 'Excellent! This path is the truest!' He immediately ordered his driver, 'Take my precious clothes and carriage and return them to the King. I'm going to cut off my hair and beard, put on the three-piece Dharma robe, and leave home to cultivate the path. Why is that? I want to train my mind, discard defilement, and purify my life in order to seek the methods of the path.'

122. "Thereupon, the driver took the prince's precious chariot and robes and returned them to his father, the king. Afterward, the prince cut off his hair and beard, put on the three-piece Dharma robe, and left home to cultivate the path."

123. The Buddha told the monks, "When he saw the elderly man and the sick man, the prince recognised the suffering of the world. When he saw the dead man, his feelings of attraction to the world ceased. Then, he saw the ascetic and the vastness of the great awakening. He dismounted his precious chariot and walked away from bondage, step by step. This was how he genuinely left home, his genuine renunciation.

The Bodhisattva Achieves Awakening

124. "When the people of the country heard that the prince had cut off his hair and beard, put on a Dharma robe, carried a bowl, and left home to cultivate the path, they said to each other, 'This path must be genuine for the prince to give up his position as the country's heir. That's a serious thing to discard!' Eighty-four thousand people in the country went to the prince wanting to become his disciples and leave home to cultivate the path."

125. The Buddha then spoke in verse:

• "The prince choose the profound teaching;
And those who heard about it left home with him.
Free of the prison of loved ones,
They had none of the various bonds.

126. "The prince then accepted them as disciples, and they traveled together, giving teachings in various places. From town to town and country to country, he was paid respects everywhere with the four types of service and support. The Bodhisattva thought, 'When I travel through these countries with a large assembly, the hustle and bustle of people isn't right for me. When will I be free of these crowds of people? The genuine pursuit of the path is done in a secluded place; then, a person can fulfill their aspirations. In a quiet place, I could focus my efforts on cultivating the path.'

127. "He also thought, 'Sentient beings are pitiable, always living in darkness and experiencing the physical frailties of birth, old age, illness, and death, that collection of myriad pains. Dying here, they're born there, and they're born here after dying there. As a result of this mass of suffering, they cycle around endlessly. When will I comprehend this mass of suffering and extinguish birth, old age, and death?'

128. "Again, he thought, 'Where does birth and death come from? What's the condition for their existence?' He then wisely examined their source. Old age and death comes from birth. Birth is the condition for old age and death. Birth arises from existence. Existence is the condition for birth. Existence arises from clinging. Clinging is the condition for existence. Clinging arises from craving. Craving is the condition for clinging. Craving arises from feeling. Feeling is the condition for craving. Feeling arises from contact. Contact is the condition for feeling. Contact arises from the six senses. The six senses are the condition for contact. The six senses arise from name and form. Name and form are the condition for the six senses. Name and form arise from consciousness. Consciousness is the condition for name and form. Consciousness arises from volition. Volition is the condition for consciousness. Volition arises from ignorance. Ignorance is the condition for volition.

129. "'From the condition of ignorance, there's volition. Volition is the condition for consciousness. Consciousness is the condition for name and form. Name and form is the condition for the six senses. The six senses are the condition for contact. Contact is the condition for feeling. Feeling is the condition for craving. Craving is the condition for clinging. Clinging is the condition for existence. Existence is the condition for birth. Birth is the condition for old age, illness, death, grief, sorrow, pain, and trouble. This whole mass of suffering exists on the condition of birth. This is the formation of suffering.'

130. "When the Bodhisattva contemplated the formation of this mass of suffering, knowledge arose, vision arose, awakening arose, insight arose, comprehension arose, wisdom arose, and realization arose.

131. "The Bodhisattva contemplated this as well: 'The absence of what would cause the absence of old age and death? The cessation of what would cause the cessation of old age and death?'

132. "He then wisely observed their origin: 'Old age and death don't exist when birth doesn't exist. Old age and death cease when birth ceases. Birth doesn't exist when existence doesn't exist. Birth ceases when existence ceases. Existence doesn't exist when clinging doesn't exist. Existence ceases when clinging ceases. Clinging doesn't exist when craving doesn't exist. Clinging ceases when craving ceases. Craving doesn't exist when feeling doesn't exist. Craving ceases when feeling ceases. Feeling doesn't exist when contact doesn't exist. Feeling ceases when contact ceases. Contact doesn't exist when the six senses don't exist. Contact ceases when the six senses cease. The six senses don't exist when name and form don't exist. The six senses cease when name and form cease. Name and form don't exist when consciousness doesn't exist. Name and form cease when consciousness ceases. Consciousness doesn't exist when volition doesn't exist. Consciousness ceases when volition ceases. Volition doesn't exist when ignorance doesn't exist. Volition ceases when ignorance ceases.

133. "'It's because ignorance ceases that volition ceases. Consciousness ceases because volition ceases. Name and form cease because consciousness ceases. The six senses cease because name and form cease. Contact ceases because the six senses cease. Feeling ceases because contact ceases. Craving ceases because feeling ceases. Clinging ceases because craving ceases. Existence ceases because clinging ceases. Birth ceases because existence ceases. Old age, death, grief, sorrow, pain, and trouble cease because birth ceases.'

134. When the Bodhisattva contemplated the cessation of this mass of suffering, knowledge arose, vision arose, awakening arose, insight arose, comprehension arose, wisdom arose, and realization arose."

135. "The Bodhisattva observed these twelve causal conditions in forward and reverse order. When he truly knew and saw them, he rose from his seat and achieved the supreme, correct, and perfect awakening."

136. The Buddha then spoke in verse:

• "I'll explain this to the assembly;
All of you should listen well.
Past bodhisattvas observe
Principles never heard before.
• 'What's the condition for old age and death?
What are causes for them to exist?'
Having thus correctly observed them,
He knew the roots of their arising.
• 'What condition is the root of birth?
What causes it to exist?'
Having thus contemplated it,
He knew that birth arises from existence.
• Clinging to this, clinging to that,
One cycles to further existences.
Therefore, the Tathagata teaches
That clinging is the condition for existence.
• It's like a pile of refuse
That the wind blows all around.
Thus, clinging causes clinging,
Which proliferates because of craving.
• Craving arises from feelings
And the snare of suffering takes root.
Conditioned by its defilement,
Pain and pleasure are associated with it.
• 'What condition is the root of feeling?
What causes feeling to exist?'
Having contemplated this,
He knew feeling arises from contact.
• 'What condition is the root of contact?
What causes contact to exist?'
Having contemplated this,
[He knew] contact arises from the six senses.
• 'What condition is the root of the six senses?
What causes the six senses to exist?'
Having contemplated this,
[He knew] six senses arise from name and form.
• 'What condition is the root of name and form?
What causes name and form to exist?'
Having contemplated this,
[He knew] name and form arise from consciousness.
• 'What condition is the root of consciousness?
What causes consciousness to exist?'
Having contemplated this,
He knew consciousness arises from volition.
• 'What condition is the root of volition?
What causes volition to exist?'
Having contemplated this,
He knew that volition arises from ignorance.
• Such causes and conditions
Are called the true meaning of causation.
Observing it with wisdom and skill,
One can see the root of dependent origination.
• Suffering is not a noble creation,
Nor does it exist without reason.
Therefore, the discomfort of change
Is what wise people eliminate.
• If ignorance completely ceases,
Then there's no volition.
If there isn't any volition,
Then there isn't any consciousness, either.
• If consciousness forever ceases,
There isn't any name and form.
When name and form have ceased,
Then there aren't any senses.
• If the senses are forever ceased,
Then there isn't any contact.
If contact is forever ceased,
Then there isn't any feeling, either.
• If feeling is forever ceased,
Then there isn't any craving.
If craving is forever ceased,
Then there isn't any clinging, either.
• If clinging is forever ceased,
Then there isn't any existence.
If existence is forever ceased,
Then there isn't any birth, either.
• If birth is forever ceased,
There's no old age, illness, or mass of suffering.
The complete and eternal end of this,
That's what is taught by the wise.
• These twelve conditions are profound,
Hard to see, and hard to recognise.
Only a buddha can fully realize:
'Depending on this, that exists or doesn't exist.'
• If someone can examine this themselves,
Then they won't have various feelings.
With a profound vision of dependent origination
They won't seek teachers outside themselves.
• Regarding the aggregates, elements, and senses,
They're secluded from desire and undefiled.
They're worthy of all gifts
And grace their benefactors with pure rewards.
• Attaining four techniques of discernment,
They win the realization of certainty.
Able to free themselves from many bonds,
They sever them with carefulness.
• Form, feeling, conception, volition, and consciousness,
They are like a rotten, old cart.
Honestly examining this principle,
One achieves the correct and perfect awakening.
• Like a bird flying in the sky,
Following the wind east or west,
The Bodhisattva cut the many bonds;
He was like a light cloth waving in the breeze.
• Vipasyin in quietude
Examined these things:
'What's the condition for old age and death to exist?
What would cause them to cease?'
• After he had examined this,
Pure wisdom arose in him.
He knew old age and death come from birth,
And old age and death cease when birth does.

Brahma's Request

137. "When the Buddha Vipasyin first achieved awakening, he often cultivated two contemplations: The contemplation of peace and the contemplation of escape."

138. The Buddha then spoke in verse:

• "The Tathagata, being equal to the unequalled,
Often cultivated two contemplations:
That of peace and that of escape.
The sage had crossed over to the other shore.
• His mind attained freedom,
Having severed the many bonds.
Climbing the mountain, he looked in all directions,
So he was called 'Vipasyin.'
• The light of great wisdom destroys darkness
Like illuminating oneself with a mirror.
He eliminated anguish for the world,
Ended the suffering of birth, old age, and death.

139. "In a quiet place, Buddha Vipasyin again had this thought: 'Now, I've attained this unsurpassed teaching that's profound, subtle, hard to understand, hard to see, calming, pure, known by the wise, and not within the reach of ordinary fools. This is because sentient beings acknowledge different things, have different views, accept different things, and have different trainings. Based on their different views, they each pursue what delights them and study their professions. They therefore can't understand this profound dependent origination, but nirvana's end of craving is twice as hard to know. If I were to teach it, they surely wouldn't understand, and I'd be troubled by it.' After having this thought, he remained silent and didn't go on to teach the Dharma.

140. "Knowing what the Buddha Vipasyin was thinking, the Brahma King thought to himself, 'Now, it'll be very sad when this world is destroyed. Buddha Vipasyin has attained knowledge of this profound and subtle teaching, but he doesn't want to teach it!' In the time it takes a strong man to flex his arm, Brahma instantly came down from his Brahma Heaven palace to stand in front of the Buddha. He bowed his head at the Buddha's feet and withdrew to stand to one side.

141. "The Brahma King knelt on his right knee and saluted the Buddha with his palms together. He said, 'Please, Bhagavan, use this time to teach the Dharma! These sentient beings today have weakened their defilements, their faculties are strong, they're respectful, and they could be easily educated. Fearing the afterlife and having no salvation from misdeeds, they can desist from their evil ways and be born in good destinies.'

142. "That Buddha told the Brahma King, 'So it is, so it is! It's as you say, but I thought to myself in a quiet place, "The correct Dharma I've attained is profound and subtle. If I taught it to others, they surely wouldn't understand, and I'd be troubled by it." So, I'm silent, not wanting to teach the Dharma. I've gone through countless eons of hardship without quitting and cultivated the unsurpassed practice. Now, I've won this hard to get Dharma for the first time. If I taught it to lustful, hateful, and ignorant sentient beings, they'd surely not put it into practice. It would be pointless and wearisome. This teaching is subtle and contradicts the world. Sentient beings who are defiled by desire and benighted by foolishness can't be confident about it. Brahma King, I observe this to be so. That's why I've remained silent and don't want to teach the Dharma.'

143. "The Brahma King repeated his encouragement three times in earnest: 'Bhagavan, if the Dharma isn't taught, then it'll be very sad when the world is destroyed. Please, Bhagavan, take this time to expound it. Don't let sentient beings fall to other destinies!'

144. "The Bhagavan listened to the Brahma King repeat this encouragement three times, and he then looked at the world with his buddha eye. Sentient beings had weakened their defilements, and their faculties were sharp and dull, so teaching them would be hard with some and easy with others. Those who easily accepted the teaching feared their misdeeds in the afterlife, so they could desist from their evil ways and be born in good destinies. They were like utpala flowers, padma flowers, kumuda flowers, and pundarika flowers. Whether they're beginning to grow from the muck but haven't emerged from the water, they've grown enough to emerged from the water, or they've emerged from the water but haven't bloomed yet, they'd easily bloom when they didn't have the water's muck clinging to them. The world's sentient beings were likewise.

145. "The Bhagavan told the Brahma King, 'I do pity all of you. I will disclose the Dharma entrance to immortality now. This teaching is profound and subtle; it's difficult to understand, but I will teach those who'll believe, accept, and enjoy listening to it. I won't teach those who'll be troubled or gain nothing from it.'

Turning the Dharma Wheel

146. "When the Brahma King realized that that Buddha had accepted his request, he rejoiced and celebrated. Circling the Buddha three times, he bowed his head at the Buddha's feet and instantly disappeared.

147. "Not long after he was gone, the Tathagata then thought to himself, 'Now, who will be the first people I teach the Dharma?' Then he thought, 'I'll go to Bandhuvati. The king's son Tisya and the great minister's son Khanda will be the first to whom I'll reveal the Dharma entrance to immortality.'

148. "Thereupon, in the time it takes a strong man to flex his arm, the Bhagavan instantly disappeared from that tree of awakening and went to the king's deer preserve at Bandhuvati. He prepared a seat there and sat down."

149. The Buddha then spoke in verse:

• "He was like a lion in the forest,
Wandering wherever it wants.
That Buddha was likewise;
He traveled without obstacles.

150. "The Buddha Vipasyin addressed the park's warden, 'Please go to the city and tell the king's son Tisya and the great minister's son Khanda, "Did you know? The Buddha Vipasyin is residing in the deer preserve. He would like to see you if it's a good time for it."'

151. "The park's warden accepted this instruction and left. He went to those two men and told them both what the Buddha had said. When the two had heard this, then went to the Buddha, bowed their heads at his feet, and withdrew to sit to one side.

152. "The Buddha gradually taught them the Dharma, teaching, instructing, profiting, and delighting them. He discussed generosity, precepts, how to be born in heaven, that desire was bad and impure, and the trouble of the higher contaminants. He praised escaping it as the most subtle, pure, and supreme thing.

153. "The Bhagavan then saw that those two men's minds were softened, joyous, confident, and ready to accept the correct teaching. He taught them the noble truth of suffering, expounding and disclosing it. He discerned and interpreted the noble truth of suffering's formation, the noble truth of suffering's cessation, and the noble truth of escaping suffering.

154. "The king's son Tisya and the great minister Khanda became removed from dust and free of defilement right there on their seats, and their vision of the Dharma was purified. They were like a white cloth that readily accepts a dye.

155. "At that moment, the spirit of the earth announced: 'In the deer preserve of Bandhuvati, the Tathagata Vipasyin has turned the unsurpassed Dharma wheel that couldn't be turned by ascetics or priests, gods such as Mara and Brahma, or any other worldly person.' Thus, it made the rounds. The voice was clearly heard by the four god kings … the Paranirmitavasavartin gods. In an instant, the voice reached the Brahma gods."

156. The Buddha then spoke in verse:

• "Rejoicing and celebrating,
The gods praised the Tathagata:
'Vipasyin became a Buddha
And turned the unsurpassed Dharma wheel!'
• First rising from the king of trees,
He went to Bandhuvati.
For Khanda and Tisya,
He turned the Dharma wheel of four truths.
• After Khanda and Tisya
Accepted the Buddha's teaching, they converted.
From that pure Dharma wheel,
There was nothing higher than the religious life.
• The host of the Trayastrimsa gods
And the Lord of Gods, Sakra,
Rejoiced at its turning and said,
'There's no god who hasn't heard:
• "A buddha has arisen in the world
And turned the unsurpassed Dharma wheel!"
The host of gods will increase,
And those asuras will diminish!'
• Up his name went to be heard everywhere,
His skillful wisdom left the limits of the world.
Having been freed in teachings,
He turned the Dharma wheel with wisdom.
• Observing the equal teaching,
His calmed heart was unpolluted.
Free from the yoke of birth and death,
He turned the Dharma wheel with wisdom.
• To cease pain and part with many evils,
He escaped desire and attained freedom.
Having left the prison of loved ones,
He turned the Dharma wheel with wisdom.
• Being rightly awakened, a sage among humans,
Exalted among bipeds, and a trainer,
He freed himself from all bonds
And turned the Dharma wheel with wisdom.
• He was a teacher and skilled guide
Who vanquished the Mara foe.
Having departed from all evils,
He turned the Dharma wheel with wisdom.
• His uncontaminated power defeated Mara,
His faculties were focused and not neglectful.
Contamination ended, Mara's bonds gone,
He turned the Dharma wheel with wisdom.
• When he learned the certain principle,
He knew that all things are not self.
This is the best of principles with which
He turned the Dharma wheel with wisdom.
• He didn't do it for profit or support,
Nor was he looking for renown.
It was out of pity for other sentient beings
That he turned the Dharma wheel with wisdom.
• He saw pain and disaster of sentient beings,
Being oppressed by old age, illness, and death.
Because of these three bad destinies
He turned the Dharma wheel with wisdom.
• He severed greed, anger, and delusion
And pulled up the root of craving.
Immovable and liberated,
He turned the Dharma wheel with wisdom.
• He'd won the hard victory over himself;
After that, he'd mastered himself.
Having won that and the hard victory over Mara,
He turned the Dharma wheel with wisdom.
• This unsurpassed Dharma wheel
Can only be turned by a Buddha.
Gods like Mara, Sakra, and Brahma
Are incapable of setting it in motion.
• Being near when the Dharma wheel turns
Is a blessing to the host of gods and humans.
The teacher of these gods and humans
Discovered the way to cross to the other shore.

Vipasyin's First Congregation

157. "At that point, prince Tisya and the great minister's son Khanda saw the Dharma and obtained its fruit truly and without pretense, and they achieved fearlessness. They then said to Buddha Vipasyin, 'We want to cultivate the pure religious practice of the Tathagata's teaching!'

158. "The Buddha said, 'Welcome, monks! My Dharma is pure and free. Cultivating it will bring an end to suffering.'

159. "Those two men then were given the complete precepts. They hadn't had those precepts long before the Tathagata taught them three subjects: 1. miraculous abilities, 2. observing others' minds, and 3. admonishments. They then become uncontaminated, their minds were liberated, and their knowledge of birth and death was unobstructed.

160. "At the time, the city of Bandhuvati was quite populous, and many heard about those two men who had left home to train on the path, put on Dharma robes, carried bowls, and purely cultivated the religious life. They said to each other, 'That path must be genuine to make them both give up their stations of worldly prosperity. That's a serious thing to discard!'

161. "In that city, there were 84,000 people who visited Buddha Vipasyin in the deer preserve. They bowed their heads at his feet and withdrew to sit at one side. The Buddha gradually taught them the Dharma, teaching, instructing, profiting, and delighting them. He discussed generosity, precepts, how to be born in heaven, that desire was bad and impure, and the trouble of the higher contaminants. He praised escaping it as the most subtle, pure, and supreme thing.

162. "The Bhagavan then saw that the minds of this great assembly were softened, joyous, confident, and ready to accept the correct teaching. He then taught them the noble truth of suffering, expounding and disclosing it. He discerned and interpreted the noble truth of suffering's formation, the noble truth of suffering's cessation, and the noble truth of escaping suffering.

163. "Those 84,000 people then became removed from dust and free of defilement right there on their seats, and their vision of the Dharma was purified. They were like a white cloth that readily accepts a dye. They saw the Dharma and obtained its fruit truly and without pretense, and they achieved fearlessness. They said to the Buddha, 'We want to cultivate the pure religious practice of the Tathagata's teaching.'

164. "The Buddha said, 'Welcome, monks! My Dharma is pure and free. Cultivating it will bring an end to suffering.'

165. "Those 84,000 people then were given the complete precepts. They hadn't had those precepts long before the Tathagata taught them three subjects: 1. miraculous abilities, 2. observing others' minds, and 3. admonishments. They then become uncontaminated, their minds were liberated, and their knowledge of birth and death was unobstructed.

166. "In the deer preserve, there were 84,000 people who heard that the Buddha had turned the unsurpassed Dharma wheel that couldn't be turned by ascetics or priests, gods such as Mara and Brahma, or any other worldly person. They then went to Bandhuvati to visit Buddha Vipasyin. They bowed their heads at his feet and withdrew to sit to one side."

167. The Buddha then spoke in verse:

• "As when saving someone whose head is on fire,
One looks quickly for a way to put it out.
Those people were likewise;
They went quickly to the Tathagata.

168. "The Buddha teaching them Dharma was likewise. Then, there were 168,000 people in Bandhuvati who formed a great assembly of monks. The monks Tisya and Khanda rose up into the air over that great assembly, and fire and water sprung from their bodies. They demonstrated such miracles and then taught the subtle Dharma for the assembly.

169. "The Tathagata then thought to himself, 'Now, there's a great assembly of 168,000 monks in this city. They ought to go traveling from place to place in pairs for six years. When they return to the city, I'll teach them the complete precepts.'

170. "The Suddhavasa gods then knew what the Tathagata was thinking. In the time it takes a strong man to flex his arm, they disappeared from their heavens and reappeared in front of the Bhagavan. They bowed their heads at his feet and withdrew to stand to one side. They instantly said to the Buddha, 'So it is, Bhagavan! There's indeed a great assembly of 168,000 monks in this city. They ought to go traveling from place to place in pairs for six years. When they return to the city, teach them the complete precepts. We will keep them safe and prevent anyone from taking advantage of them.'

"When he heard what the gods said, the Tathagata silently accepted it.

171. "The Suddhavasa gods saw the Buddha silently gave his consent. They bowed at the Buddha's feet and instantly disappeared as they returned to their heavens above. Not long after they left, the Buddha told the monks, 'Now, there's a large assembly of monks in the city. You ought to each spread out to travel and teach. After six years, return and gather for the teaching of the precepts.'

172. "After accepting the Buddha's teaching, the monks took their robes and bowls, bowed to the Buddha, and departed."

173. The Buddha then spoke in verse:

• "That Buddha sent away his undisturbed assembly
Without desires or attachments of affection.
Majestic as garuda birds,
They were like cranes taking off from a lake.

174. "After a year, the Suddhavasa gods told the monks, 'You've been traveling for a year. Five years are left. Know that after six years have passed, you are to return to the city for the teaching of precepts.'

175. "Thus, when the sixth year arrived, the gods again told them, 'Six years have passed. You should return for the teaching of precepts.'

176. After hearing what the gods said, the monks gathered up their robes and bowls and returned to Bandhuvati. They went to Buddha Vipasyin in the deer preserve, bowed their heads at his feet, and withdrew to sit to one side."

177. The Buddha then spoke in verse:

• "They were like well-trained elephants
That do whatever the handler wishes.
That great assembly was likewise;
They returned as they'd been instructed.

178. "That Tathagata then rose in the air above the great assembly in a cross-legged sitting posture and taught them the Precepts Sutra. 'Tolerance is supreme. The Buddha teaches that nirvana is the highest. It's not possible to become an ascetic by cut off one's hair and beard and then harming others.'

179. "The Suddhavasa gods weren't far from the Buddha when he spoke these verses:

• "'The Tathagata has great wisdom,
He's sublime and uniquely venerable.
He perfected calm observation
And achieved the supreme, perfect awakening.
• For the masses of beings,
He achieved awakening in the world.
With the four genuine truths,
He taught his disciples.
• Suffering, suffering's cause,
The truth of its cessation,
And the noble eightfold path
Arrive at the place of safety.
• The Buddha Vipasyin
Appeared in the world.

Amidst a great assembly,
He's as brilliant as the sun.'
"After he spoke these verses, they instantly disappeared."

The Suddhavasa Gods

180. The Bhagavan then told the monks, "I thought to myself, 'Once when I was on Mount Grdhrakuta at Rajagrha, this thought occurred to me, "There's nowhere I haven't been born except for the Suddhavasa heavens. If I were born in those heavens, I wouldn't return to this world."'

181. "Monks, I also had this thought: 'I want to go up to the Avrha Heaven.' In the time it takes a strong man to flex his arm, I disappeared from here and appeared in that heaven.

182. "When the gods there saw me arrive, they bowed their heads and stood to one side. They said to me, 'We were disciples of the Tathagata Vipasyin. Having been taught by that Buddha, we were reborn here. We recite the history of that Buddha as well as that of Buddha Sikhin, Buddha Visvabhu, Buddha Krakucchanda, Buddha Kanakamuni, Buddha Kasyapa, and Buddha Sakyamuni. They were our teachers. Having been taught by them, we were reborn here.'

183. "They recited the history of buddhas when I was born in the Akanistha Heaven. It was the same there, too."

184. The Buddha then spoke in verse:

• "In the time it takes a strong man
To flex his arm for a moment,
I used my miraculous abilities
To go to the Avrha Heaven.
• I was the seventh great sage
Who defeated the two Maras.
When the Atapa gods saw me,
They saluted and venerated me.
• Like the parijata tree,
The Sakya teacher was heard from afar.
With signs and excellencies replete,
I arrived in the Sudarsana Heaven.
• I was like a lotus flower
To which the muck doesn't cling.
The Bhagavan was undefiled
When he arrived in the Mahasudarsana Heaven.
• I was like the sun at daybreak,
Clear, without specks or blurriness.
Bright like the autumn moon,
I visited Akanistha one time.
• These are five dwelling places
Of purified sentient beings
Who're Born there because of mental purity;
I visited those gods without affliction.
• Those of pure mind who arrive there
Were disciples of buddhas.
They discarded defiled clinging,
Were happy to cling to nothing.
• Seeing the Dharma with certainty,
They were disciples of Vipasyin.
With pure minds, they were welcome
To visit the great sage of humans.
• The disciples of Buddha Sikhin
Were unsullied and unconditioned.
They came with pure minds
To visit the sage who left existence.
• The disciples of Visvabhu
Were replete with faculties.
With pure minds, they visited me
Like the sun shining in the sky.
• The disciples of Krakucchanda
Had renounced their desires.
With pure minds, they visited me
Resplendent with sublime light.
• The disciples of Kanakamuni
Were unsullied and unconditioned.
With pure minds, they visited me
Their light like the full moon.
• The disciples of Kasyapa
Were replete with faculties.
With pure minds, they visited me
As though praying to the northern sky.
• Those undisturbed great sages
With supreme miraculous abilities
And steadfast minds,
They were disciples of buddhas.
• Those with pure minds who came
Were disciples of buddhas.
They venerated the Tathagata
And fully informed the sage of humans:
• Those born to achieve awakening,
Their names, surnames, and castes,
Who saw and knew the profound teaching
And achieved the supreme awakening.
• Monks in a quiet abode,
They were free of dust and defilement.
Earnest and not negligent,
They cut the bonds of existence.
• These were the buddhas,
Their histories from beginning to end.
The Tathagata of the Sakyas
Has discoursed it."

185. After the Buddha had taught this Sutra of the Great History, the monks who heard what the Buddha taught rejoiced and approved.

DA 2 THE FINAL JOURNEY
(DN 16 & DN 17) [T 1.11a8]

(The direct parallels for this sutra are DN 16, T5-7, and an extant S. manuscript. There are also numerous parallels to portions of this sutra that appear elsewhere in the Buddhist canon.)

(The final teaching tour of the Buddha's life is recounted in this sutra. It begins with King Ajatasatru seeking the Buddha's advice about going to war with a neighboring republic and follows the Buddha's travels until he fell ill and passed away near Kusinagara. It then recounts the events leading to his funeral and the division of his remains among eight countries. This version of the Parinirvana Sutra also includes the story of the noble wheel-turning king Mahasudarsana (DN 17).)

1. Thus I have heard: One time, the Buddha was staying on Mount Grdhrakuta at Rajagrha. He was accompanied by a group of 1,250 great monks.

Varsakara's Visit

2. It was then that the king of Magadha, Ajatasatru, wanted to attack Vrji. The King thought to himself, "Although their people may be brave and fierce, it won't be enough to stop me from seizing that country."

3. King Ajatasatru then summoned his priestly great minister Varsakara and told him, "Go to the Bhagavan on Mount Grdhrakuta and bow at the Bhagavan's feet in my name. Ask about the Bhagavan's health: 'Are you getting around easily? Have your travels been difficult?' Then also say to the Bhagavan, 'The people of Vrji are independent and brave, and the population is fierce. They won't submit to me, so I want to attack them. What instruction might the Bhagavan have?' If he has some instruction, then remember it well. Don't forget any of it. Report to me the Tathagata's words just as you heard them, for they are never false.'"

4. The minister Varsakara accepted the King's instructions and rode a precious chariot to Mount Grdhrakuta. Reaching a place to stop, he dismounted and proceeded on foot until he reached the Bhagavan. When they were done exchanging greetings, he sat to one side. He said to the Bhagavan, "The king of Magadha, Ajatasatru, bows his head at the Buddha's feet and respectfully and politely asks, 'Are you getting around easily? Have your travels been difficult?' He also says to the Bhagavan, 'The people of Vrji are independent and brave, and the population is fierce. They won't submit to me, so I want to attack them. What instruction might the Bhagavan have?'"

5. At the time, Ananda was standing behind the Bhagavan fanning him. The Buddha asked Ananda, "Have you heard that the people of Vrji frequently hold meetings and discussions on what's proper?"

He replied, "I've heard that."

6. The Buddha said to Ananda, "If they do that, then the elders and the youth will be in accord, and that'll make them flourish. Their country will be safe for a long time. They'll be impossible to conquer.

7. "Ananda, have you heard that the people of Vrji are in accord with the nobility and ministers? Do those in high and low stations respect each other?"

He replied, "I've heard that."

8. "Ananda, if they do that, then the elders and the youth will be in accord, and that'll make them flourish. Their country will be safe for a long time. They'll be impossible to conquer.

9. "Ananda, have you heard that the people of Vrji are respectful of the law, clear about what to avoid, and don't violate the rules of propriety?"

He replied, "I've heard that."

10. "Ananda, if they do that, then the elders and the youth will be in accord, and that'll make them flourish. Their country will be safe for a long time. They'll be impossible to conquer.

11. "Ananda, have you heard that the people of Vrji are dutiful to their parents and respectfully follow their teachers and elders?"

He replied, "I've heard that."

12. "Ananda, if they do that, then the elders and the youth will be in accord, and that'll make them flourish. Their country will be safe for a long time. They'll be impossible to conquer.

13. "Ananda, have you heard that the people of Vrji venerate their ancestral shrines and pay their respects to the spirits?"

He replied, "I've heard that."

14. "Ananda, if they do that, then the elders and the youth will be in accord, and that'll make them flourish. Their country will be safe for a long time. They'll be impossible to conquer.

15. "Ananda, have you heard that the people of Vrji are honest, pure, and undefiled inside their households, and their words are never perverse even when joking?"

He replied, "I've heard that."

16. "Ananda, if they do that, then the elders and the youth will be in accord, and that'll make them flourish. Their country will be safe for a long time. They'll be impossible to conquer.

17. "Ananda, have you heard that the people of Vrji traditionally serve ascetics, respect those who observe the precepts, look up to them, protect them, and support them so that they are never negligent?"

He replied, "I've heard that."

18. "Ananda, if they do that, then the elders and the youth will be in accord, and that'll make them flourish. Their country will be safe for a long time. They'll be impossible to conquer."

19. Varsakara then said to the Buddha, "If the people of that country were to practice just one of those principles, they couldn't be schemed against. How would it be if they have all seven? I'd like to take my leave now; I have many duties of state."

The Buddha said, "It's up to you to decide when to go."

20. Varsakara then rose from his seat, circled the Buddha three times, saluted him, and departed.

How to Ensure the Teaching's Growth

21. Not long after he left, the Buddha told Ananda, "Go and tell all the monks here in Rajagrha to assembly at the meeting hall."

22. Ananda replied, "Very well," then he went to the city of Rajagrha and called all the monks to assembly in the meeting hall. He then [returned and] said to the Bhagavan, "The monks have assembled. It's up to the sage to decide when to go."

23. The Bhagavan then rose from his seat and went to the Dharma meeting hall. He prepared a seat there and sat down. He then addressed the monks, "I will give a discourse on seven principles of not declining. Listen closely! Listen closely, and consider it well."

The monks said to the Buddha, "Very well, Bhagavan! We'd be glad to hear it."

24. The Buddha told the monks, "These are seven principles of not declining: First, if we frequently hold meetings and discuss the proper meaning, elders and juniors will be in accord, and the teaching will be indestructible.

25. "Second, if those in high and low positions are in harmony, respectful, and don't contradict each other, elders and juniors will be in accord, and the teaching will be indestructible.

26. "Third, if we uphold the law, are clear about what to avoid, and don't violate the rules, elders and juniors will be in accord, and the teaching will be indestructible.

27. "Fourth, if a monk has the ability to protect the community, has many associates, and pays his respects as he should, elders and juniors will be in accord, and the teaching will be indestructible.

28. "Fifth, if we are careful with our minds and dutiful to our leaders, elders and juniors will be in accord, and the teaching will be indestructible.

29. "Sixth, if we purely cultivate the religious life and avoid situations of desire, elders and juniors will be in accord, and the teaching will be indestructible.

30. "Seventh, if we put others first and ourselves after them and don't covet fame or profit, elders and juniors will be in accord, and the teaching will be indestructible."

31. The Buddha told the monks, "There's another seven things that will make the teaching grow and not diminish. [What are the seven?] First, if we enjoy few duties and don't like doing many things, the teaching will grow and not diminish. Second, if we enjoy silence and don't like much talk … Third, if we're seldom sleepy and don't have any gloominess … Fourth, if we don't keep company or talk about pointless things … Fifth, if we don't praise ourselves for virtues we don't have … Sixth, if we don't associate with bad people or make them our companions … Seventh, if we're happy living alone in quiet places in mountains and forests… Thus, monks, the teaching then will grow and not diminish."

32. The Buddha told the monks, "There's another seven principles that will make the teaching grow and not diminish. What are the seven? First, have faith in the Tathagata, Arhat, and Perfectly Awakened One who's been given the ten epithets. Second, be conscientious and ashamed of one's failings. Third, be modest and embarrassed by bad behavior. Fourth, be well-versed in and remember what's good in the beginning, middle, and end, that's profound in content and expression, that's pure and undefiled, and that perfects the religious life. Fifth, diligently practice asceticism, cease doing what's bad, cultivate what's good, and don't abandon that effort. Sixth, remember and don't forget what's been learned in the past. Seventh, cultivate wisdom, recognise the law of birth and cessation, head for the noble goal, and end the source of suffering. Thus, the teaching will grow and not diminish with these seven principles."

33. The Buddha told the monks, "There's another seven principles that will make the teaching grow and not diminish. What are the seven? First, respect the Buddha. Second, respect the Dharma. Third, respect the Sangha. Fourth, respect the precepts. Fifth, respect samadhi. Sixth, be in respectful accord with your father and mother. Seventh, respect carefulness. Thus, the teaching will grow and not diminish with these seven principles."

34. The Buddha told the monks, "There's another seven principles that will make the teaching grow and not diminish. What are the seven? First, observe the impurities of the body. Second, observe the impurities of food. Third, don't be happy with the world. Fourth, always be mindful of the idea of death. Fifth, [be mindful of] the idea that what arises is impermanent. Sixth, [be mindful of] the idea that impermanence is painful. Seventh, [be mindful of] the idea that what's painful is not self. Thus, the teaching will grow and not diminish with these seven principles."

35. The Buddha told the monks, "There's another seven principles that will make the teaching grow and not diminish. What are the seven? First, cultivate the awakening factor of mindfulness in quietude, without desire, and escape to the unconditioned. Second, cultivate the awakening factor of [discriminating] the teaching … Third, cultivate the awakening factor of effort … Fourth, cultivate the awakening factor of joy … Fifth, cultivate the awakening factor of mildness … Sixth, cultivate the awakening factor of samadhi … Seventh, cultivate the awakening factor of equanimity. Thus, the teaching will grow and not diminish with these seven principles.

36. The Buddha told the monks, "There's six principles of not declining that will make the teaching grow and not diminish. What are the six? First, always be kind with physical actions and don't harm sentient beings. Second, be benevolent when expressing oneself and don't use harsh words. Third, have mindful and kind thoughts and don't harbor harmful ones. Fourth, get support in pure ways and share it with the community equitably. Fifth, observe the noble precepts without missing any of them and don't have defilements, and one's samadhi will sure be undisturbed. Sixth, see the noble path as the way to reach the end of suffering. Thus, the teaching will grow and not diminish with these six principles."

37. The Buddha told the monks, "There's another six principles of not declining that will make the teaching grow and not diminish. [What are the six?] First, remember the Buddha. Second, remember the Dharma. Third, remember the Sangha. Fourth, remember the precepts. Fifth, remember generosity. Sixth, remember the gods. Cultivating these six recollections, the teaching will grow and not diminish."

At the Bamboo Park

38. After staying in Rajagrha for as long as was fitting, the Bhagavan told Ananda, "All of you, get ready. I'm going to visit the Bamboo Park."

39. Ananda replied, "Very well," prepared his robe and bowl, and followed the Bhagavan with the large assembly. They took the road from Magadha and arrived at the Bamboo Park next.

40. He went up into the hall there and sat down with the monks, giving them a discourse on the precepts, samadhi, and wisdom: "Cultivating precepts and obtaining samadhi wins a great reward. Cultivating samadhi and obtaining wisdom wins a great reward. Cultivating wisdom and purifying the mind wins complete liberation. With the end of the three contaminants, which are the contaminants of desire, existence, and ignorance, the knowledge of liberation arises after one is liberated: 'My births and deaths have been ended, the religious life has been established, and the task has been accomplished. I won't be subject to a later existence.'"

At Pataliputra

41. After staying at the Bamboo Park for as long as was fitting, the Bhagavan told Ananda, "All of you, get ready. I'm going to visit Pataliputra."

42. Ananda replied, "Very well," prepared his robe and bowl, and followed the Bhagavan with the large assembly. They took the road from Magadha and arrived at the city Pataliputra next. They sat down under the patali trees there.

43. The faithful laymen there noticed the Buddha and the large assembly approach from afar and sit under the patali trees when they arrived. The laymen came out of the city and spotted the Bhagavan there under the trees. He looked handsome and upright with peaceful and settled faculties. He was the most well-behaved [person they'd seen]. Like a great naga in clear water without any dirt and was adorned with the thirty-two signs and eighty excellent features. They rejoiced upon seeing him and made their way to the Buddha. They bowed their heads at his feet and withdrew to sit to one side.

44. The Bhagavan then gradually taught them the Dharma, teaching, instructing, profiting, and delighting them. Those pure laymen who listened to the Buddha teach the Dharma said, "I would like to take refuge in the Buddha, Dharma, and noble Sangha. Please let the Bhagavan have compassion and permit us to become upasakas. From now on, we won't kill, steal, engage in sex, lie, or drink alcohol. We'll uphold the precepts and won't forget them. We'd also like to provide support tomorrow. Please let the Bhagavan and his large assembly have compassion and allow us to take care of you."

45. The Bhagavan then silently gave his consent. Seeing the Buddha remain silent, those laymen rose from their seats, circled the Buddha three times, bowed, and returned home. They quickly set up a large residence hall for the Tathagata and arranged the dwelling places, sweeping, washing, burning incense, and preparing precious seats. Having arranged and provided this, they returned and said to the Bhagavan, "We've prepared everything. It's up to the noble ones to decide when to go."

46. The Bhagavan then rose from his seat, put on his robe, picked up his bowl, and went to that meeting hall with the large assembly. They washed their hands and feet, then they went into the building and sat down. The monks sat to the right, and the laymen sat to the left.

47. The Bhagavan then addressed the laymen, "Ordinary people who break the precepts will decline in five ways. What are the five? First, they won't get the wealth that they want. Second, what they've managed to acquire will decline daily. Third, the community where they go to live won't respect them. Fourth, a bad reputation and insults about them will be heard everywhere. Fifth, they'll go to Hell when their bodies break up and their lives end."

48. He also told the pure laymen, "Ordinary people who observe the precepts have five virtues. What are the five? First, they easily acquire the things they seek as they wish. Second, their property increases and doesn't diminish. Third, people respect and like them wherever they go. Fourth, a good reputation and compliments about them are heard everywhere. Fifth, they'll be born up in heaven when their bodies break up and their lives end."

49. Halfway through the night, he told the laymen that it would a good time for them return home. The laymen accepted the Buddha's instruction, circling him three times and bowing at his feet before leaving.

50. When the night ended and the first light of dawn appeared, the Bhagavan went to a quiet place. With his clear and penetrating heavenly eye, he saw great heavenly spirits taking up individual residences on earth, and he saw middling and lesser spirits were taking up their residences, too. The Bhagavan returned to the meeting hall, prepared a seat, and sat down. Though he knew the answer, he asked Ananda, "Who is building this city, Pataliputra?"

51. Ananda said to the Buddha, "The minister Varsakara is building it as a defense against the Vrji."

52. The Buddha told Ananda, "The builders of this city have correctly ascertained what the gods want. When the night ended and the first light of dawn appeared, I went to a quiet place. With the heavenly eye, I saw great heavenly spirits taking individual residences on earth, and I saw that middling spirits and lesser spirits were taking up their residences, too. Ananda, you should know that the people who live where the great heavenly spirits take up residence on earth will be happy and prosperous. Middling people will live where the middling spirits take up residence, and lesser people will live where the lesser spirits take up residence. They each will live according to whether their virtues are many or few.

53. "Ananda, noble people live here, and merchants gather here. The country's laws are true, and there isn't any fraud. This city is the greatest, while others in the region are in decline and can't destroy it. If it were to be destroyed in the future, it would require three conditions: First is a great flood. Second is a great fire. Third, it would take both civilized and barbaric men to destroy this city."

54. The laymen of Pataliputra had prepared offerings during the night. They then went to the Buddha and said, "Meals are fully prepared. It's up to the sage to decide when to go." The laymen then served the meals with their own hands, and they cleaned up when the meals were finished. Afterward, they brought out small seats and sat in front of the Buddha.

55. The Bhagavan then instructed them. "Today, you have venerable sages living here. Many people observe precepts and purely cultivate the religious life. They delight good spirits who then chant prayers for them. They know to respect what's respectable and serve who should be served. They're liberal in generosity and affectionate to all. Their compassionate hearts are commended by the gods. They are always with good people and don't associate with evil."

56. After he gave this teaching, the Bhagavan rose from his seat and was seen off by the laymen. Surrounded by the large assembly, he returned to the grove. As the minister Varsakara followed behind the Buddha, he thought, "Now, the gate through which the ascetic Gautama leaves the city shall be named Gautama's Gate. When we see where he crosses the river, it'll also be named Gautama's Ford."

57. The Bhagavan then left the city of Pataliputra and continued to the river's bank. A large crowd of people was on the shore, and some were being ferried across. Some rode on boats and some on rafts to cross the river. In the time it takes a strong man to flex his arm, the Bhagavan and his large assembly instantly crossed to the other side.

58. After contemplating the meaning of this, the Bhagavan spoke in verse:

• "The Buddha is the ocean's ship captain;
The Dharma is the bridge that crosses the river.
Guiding a great vehicle to carry them,
All the gods and people cross over.
• Indeed, by untying his own bonds
He crossed to the shore and became a sage.
He helped all of his disciples
Who're freed from bondage and will attain nirvana."

At Kutigramaka

59. The Bhagavan then toured Vrji until he reached Kutigramaka. There, he addressed the monks while they were in a grove: "There are four profound principles: First is the noble precepts. Second is the noble samadhi. Third is the noble wisdom. Fourth is the noble liberation. These principles are sublime and difficult to understand. Because you and I didn't comprehend them, we've been in birth and death for a long time, cycling around endlessly."

60. After contemplating the meaning of this, the Bhagavan spoke in verse:

• "Higher precepts, samadhi, wisdom, and liberation
Were discernible only to the Buddha.
Free of suffering, he teaches others
To end the habits of birth and death."

At Nadika

61. After he had stayed in Kutigramaka for as long as was fitting, the Bhagavan told Ananda, "Let's visit Nadika." Ananda accepted his instruction, put on his robe, took his bowl, and followed the Bhagavan with the large assembly. They took the road from Vrji to Nadika and stopped at Kunjikavasatha when they arrived.

62. Ananda then was in a quiet place and silently thought to himself, "Here in Nadika, there are twelve laymen named Karkataka, Kadangara, Nikata, Katyarsabha, Caru, Upacaru, Bhadra, Subhadra, *Darsana, *Sudarsana, Yasas, and Yasottara. Where will these men be born now that their lives have ended? There's another fifty people and another 500 people. Where will they be born now that their lives have ended?"

63. After thinking this, he emerged from his quiet place and went to the Buddha. Bowing his head at the Buddha's feet, he sat to one side. He said, "Bhagavan, I was in a quiet place and silently thought to myself, 'There are twelve laymen here in Nadika, Karkataka and others, whose lives have ended. There's another fifty people whose lives have ended, and another 500 people whose lives have ended. Where were they be born?' Please explain this."

64. The Buddha told Ananda, "Those twelve people, Karkataka and the others, had cut the five lower bonds and were born in heaven when their lives ended. From there, they were completely extinguished and did not return to this world. Those fifty people whose lives have ended had eliminated the three bonds of lust, anger, and delusion. They became once-returners who'll return to this world and then end the source of suffering. Those 500 people whose lives have ended had eliminated the three bonds and become stream-enterers. They didn't fall to bad destinies and will surely achieve awakening. They'll be reborn seven times and reach the end of suffering.

65. "Ananda, that someone born has died is the normal course of life. What's strange about it? If you come and ask me about each person who dies, wouldn't it be troublesome?"

66. Ananda replied, "I trust it would be, Bhagavan. It would really be troublesome."

67. The Buddha told Ananda, "Now, I'll teach the Dharma mirror to you, which lets a noble disciple know about where they'll be born. 'The three bad destinies have ended, I've attained stream-entry, and I'll surely reach the end of suffering in no more than seven births.' They can tell other people about such matters.

68. "Ananda, 'Dharma mirror' means a noble disciple attains unwavering faith. They rejoice and believe in the Buddha, Tathagata, Arhat, and Completely Awakened One who's been given the ten epithets.

69. "They rejoice and believe in the Dharma as genuine, sublime, freely taught at any time, showing the path to Nirvana, and practiced by the wise.

70. "They rejoice and believe in the Sangha as good together, in harmony, having genuine practices, having no deceptions, accomplishing the path's reward, whose low and high stations are in accord, and the perfection of the Dharma body. They head for stream-entry and become stream-enterers. They head for once-returning and become once-returners. They head for non-returning and become non-returners. They head for becoming an arhat and become arhats. These four pairs are the eight kinds of people called the Tathagata's noble Sangha. They are the most respectable fields of merit in the world.

71. "He also believes in the noble precepts as pure, undefiled, and without defect or contamination. They are practiced by intelligent people and obtain samadhi.

72. "Ananda, this is the Dharma mirror. It lets noble disciples know about where they'll be born: 'The three bad destinies have ended, I've attained stream-entry, and I'll surely reach the end of suffering in no more than seven births.' They can tell other people about such matters."

At Vaisali

73. After the Bhagavan had stayed for as long as was fitting, he told Ananda, "Let's visit Vaisali." Ananda accepted his instruction, put on his robe, took his bowl, and followed the Bhagavan with the large assembly. They took the road from Vrji to Vaisali and sad down under a tree.

74. There was a prostitute named Amrapali. Hearing that the Buddha had led his disciples to Vaisali and was sitting under a tree, she prepared horses and a precious chariot to go honor and give offerings to him. Before arriving, she saw from afar the Bhagavan's handsome appearance, distinguished faculties, signs, and excellencies. He looked like the moon among stars. She rejoiced when she saw him. Dismounting from her chariot, she made her way to the Buddha, bowed her head at his feet, and withdrew to sit to one side.

75. The Bhagavan then gradually taught her the Dharma, teaching, instructing, profiting, and delighting her. After listening to the Buddha's teaching, she rejoiced and said, "From this day forward, I take refuge in the three worthy things. Please permit me to become a laywoman in the correct teaching. For the rest of my life, I won't kill, steal, commit sexual misconduct, speak falsely, or drink alcohol."

76. She also said to the Buddha, "Please let the Bhagavan and his disciples clearly accept my invitation to stop at my grove this evening."

77. The Bhagavan silently accepted her request. Seeing that he had, she rose from her seat, bowed her head at his feet, circled the Buddha, and returned home.

78. Not long after she left, the Buddha told Ananda, "Let's all go visit her park."

79. Ananda replied, "Very well." The Buddha then rose from his seat, gathered his robes and bowl, and went to her park with the assembly of 1,250 disciples.

80. There was a group of Licchavi men who heard that the Buddha was going to stay at Amrapali's Park. They had five-colored precious chariots and horses. Some rode on blue chariots with blue horses, and their clothes, parasols, banners, and retainers were all blue. The same was true for the other four colors, too.

81. 500 of these Licchavis dressed in entirely in the same color decided to visit the Buddha. Amrapali was returning home after speaking with him and encountered those Licchavi chariots on the road. They were traveling very fast and collided with each other. Their banners and parasols were knocked down, but she didn't move out of their path. The Licchavis yelled at her, "Who do you think you are, not making way for us? You've run into our chariots and knocked down our banners and parasols!"

82. She replied, "Gentlemen, I've invited the Buddha for a meal tomorrow, and now I'm going home to prepare it, so I was going fast. There wasn't enough room to avoid you."

83. The Licchavis said to her, "Perhaps you could set aside your invitation and let us go first? We'll give you a 100,000 gold!"

84. She quickly replied, "My invitation has already been settled; I can't give it to you."

85. The Licchavis again said to her, "We'll give you 16 times 100,000 gold. Surely, it can be arranged for us to go first?"

86. She still didn't agree. "My invitation has already been settled. I can't do that!"

87. The Licchavis again said to her, "We'll give you the middle part of the country! Couldn't you let us go first?"

88. She also replied, "Even if it were all the wealth in the country, I still wouldn't give it to you. Why is that? The Buddha is staying in my park, and he's already accepted my invitation. The matter is settled, and I'd never give it to someone else."

89. The Licchavis each clapped their hands and sighed, "Now, my first bit of good fortune is lost because of this woman!" They went on ahead, then, to visit her park.

90. The Bhagavan saw those 500 Licchavi chariots from afar, their horses were so numerous, filling the road as they approached. He told the monks, "If you want to know how dignified-looking and decorated the Trayastrimsa gods are when they entertain themselves in their scenic parks, it's no different than this.

91. "You monks, you should collect your thoughts and behave in a dignified manner. How does a monk collect his thoughts? Here, a monk observes body internally to be body. Diligent and unflagging, he's mindful and doesn't forget it, setting aside worldly greed and sorrow. He observes body externally to be body. Diligent and unflagging, he's mindful and doesn't forget it, setting aside worldly greed and sorrow. He observes body internally and externally to be body. Diligent and unflagging, he's mindful and doesn't forget it, setting aside worldly greed and sorrow. He also observes feelings, mind, and principles in the same way.

92. "How does a monk behave in a dignified manner? Here, a monk knows to walk when he should walk and to stop when he should stop. He looks left and right before bending and stretching, looking down and up, or gathering his robes and bowl. When he eats, drinks, and takes medicine, he doesn't forget what's appropriate. He skillfully prepares when relieving himself, taking away screens, while walking, standing, sitting, and lying down, and while awake, asleep, speaking, and being quiet. He collects his thoughts and isn't disturbed. This is a monk who behaves in a dignified manner."

93. Those 500 Licchavis arrived at Amrapali's Park to visit the Buddha and then dismounted and proceeded on foot. They bowed their heads at his feet and withdrew to sit to one side. The Tathagata glowed with a singular light there on his seat, outshining the great assemblies like the autumn moon. He was also like the sun shining with a singular brilliance when the sky and earth are clear, bright, and pure, and there isn't any dust to obscure it.

94. At that point, the Buddha glowed with a singular light in the middle of the assembly with the 500 Licchavis sitting around him.

95. There was an ascetic named Paingika who rose from his seat, bared his right shoulder, and knelt on his right knee. He saluted the Buddha with his palms together and praised him in verse:

• "The kings of Magadha and Anga
Are delighted to obtain good profits.
They wear jeweled armor,
And the Bhagavan arose in their land.
• His majesty moves three thousand [worlds],
His name plain as the Himalayas!
He's like a blooming lotus flower
With perfume most sublime.
• Looking at the Buddha's glow now,
It's like the sun at daybreak.
He's like the moon roaming the sky
Without any clouds to obscure it.
The Bhagavan is likewise:
His light shines on the world.
• Observing the Tathagata's wisdom
Is like seeing with a torch in the dark.
He gives sentient beings the clear vision
To settle their doubts and confusion."

96. After they heard these verses, the 500 Licchavis again told Paingika, "You can say that again!"

97. Paingika then repeated what he said three times. After listening to him repeat these verses, they each gave their precious clothing to Paingika, and he then offered their clothing to the Tathagata. The Buddha accepted it out of compassion for them.

98. The Bhagavan then told the Licchavis of Vaisali, "The world has five treasures that are hard to find. What are the five? First, the arising of a Tathagata, a Realized One, in the world is hard to find. Second, a person who can be taught the correct teaching by a Tathagata is hard to find. Third, a person who'll believe the Tathagata's teaching is hard to find. Fourth, a person who can accomplish the Tathagata's teaching is hard to find. Fifth, a person who's saved from disaster, recognises the danger, and returns [the favor] is hard to find. These are five treasures that are hard to find."

99. When they heard the Buddha teach, instruct, profit, and delight them, those 500 Licchavis said to the Buddha, "Please let the Bhagavan and his disciples accept our invitation!"

100. The Buddha told the Licchavis, "Now that you have invited me, I'll let you give me your offerings after I'm finished with Amrapali's prior invitation."

101. When they heard that Amrapali had invited the Buddha first, those 500 Licchavis snapped their fingers and said, "We wanted to give offerings to the Tathagata, but this woman beat us to it!" They rose from their seats, bowed their heads to the Buddha, circled him three times, and returned to their homes.

102. That night, Amrapali prepared a variety of offerings. When morning arrived, the Bhagavan went to the place of her invitation surrounded by 1,250 monks who had adjusted their robes and carried their bowls. They prepared seats and sat down.

103. Lady Amrapali then brought out fine dishes and offered them to the Buddha and the Sangha. When they were done with the meal, she took their bowls and cleared the table. She held a gold jar for them to wash up. When they were done, she went before the Buddha and said, "This city of Vaisali has scenic parks, but my park is the best of them. Now, I donate this park to the Tathagata. Please let him accept this out of compassion for me."

104. The Buddha told her, "You may donate this park to the Buddha and the Sangha of the four directions. Why is that? The Tathagata possesses these six things: parks, groves, quarters, buildings, robe, and bowl. Even Mara, Sakra, Brahma, and other gods of great miraculous power are incapable of accepting these offerings."

105. She accepted his instruction and donated the park to the Buddha and the Sangha of the four directions. The Buddha accepted it out of compassion for her.

106. He then spoke in verse:

• "Building shrines and monasteries,
And fruitful parks give refreshment.
Bridges and boats to ferry people,
And open land are gifts of water and grass.
• Raised halls, too, are gifts
With merits that increase day and night.
A disciplined and pure person
Surely will arrive in a good region."

107. Amrapali fetched a small seat and sat in front of the Buddha. He gradually taught her the Dharma, teaching, instructing, profiting, and delighting her. He discussed generosity, precepts, how to be born in heaven, the great danger of desire that's polluting and impure, and the obstacle of the higher contaminants. [He praised] escaping it as the [most subtle, pure, and] supreme thing.

108. The Bhagavan then knew that her mind was softened, joyous, shaded, light, and easily educated. As was the way of Buddhas, he then taught her the noble truth of suffering, suffering's formation, suffering's cessation, and the truth of suffering's escape.

109. Amrapali's belief was purified. Like a white cloth that readily accepts a dye, she became removed from dust and free of defilement right there on her seat, and the Dharma eye arose in her. She saw the Dharma, got the Dharma, and was certainly in the proper standpoint. She wouldn't fall to unpleasant destinies and had achieved fearlessness. She said to the Buddha, "Now, I take refuge in the Buddha, take refuge in the Dharma, and take refuge in the Sangha." She repeated this three times.

110. "Please, Tathagata, permit me to become a laywoman in the correct teaching. From now on, I won't kill, steal, commit sexual misconduct, lie, or drink alcohol."

111. She then received the five precepts from the Buddha, discarded her previous lifestyle, and eliminated her defilements. She rose from her seat, bowed to the Buddha, and departed.

At Venugramaka

112. The Bhagavan then stayed in Vaisali for as long as was appropriate. Then he told Ananda, "All of you, get ready. I'm going to Venugramaka."

113. Ananda replied, "Very well," prepared his robe and bowl, and followed the Bhagavan with the large assembly. They took the road from Vrji to Venugramaka.

114. There was then a priest named Visvadaya who heard that the Buddha and the great assembly was visiting Venugramaka. He thought to himself, "This ascetic Gautama's reputation for virtue has gotten around. It's heard in all directions that he's been given the ten epithets. He's self-realized among the gods such as Sakra and Brahma, or Mara, spirits, ascetics, and priests. He teaches the Dharma to others that's genuine in the beginning, middle, and end. It's meaning and content is profound, and it perfects the religious life. It would be fitting to meet such a true man as this!"

115. That priest then left Venugramaka and visited the Bhagavan. After they exchanged greetings, he sat to one side. The Bhagavan gradually taught him Dharma, teaching, instructing, profiting, and delighting him. After listening to him, the priest rejoiced and invited the Bhagavan and the great assembly for a meal at his home the next day. The Buddha silently accepted his invitation. Recognising that he had agreed, the priest rose from his seat, circled the Buddha, and returned home. That night, the priest prepared offerings of food and drink. It was up to noble one to decide when to go the next morning.

116. The Bhagavan put on his robe and took his bowl to the priest's home while surrounded by the great assembly. There, they prepared their seats and sat down. The priest then provided a variety of sweet dishes as offerings to the Buddha and Sangha. When they were done eating, he took their bowls. When they were finished washing up, the priest got a small seat and sat in front of the Buddha.

117. The Bhagavan then spoke in verse for the priest:

• "Whether it's food and drink
Or clothes and sleeping arrangements;
A gift to those observing precepts
Will win a great reward.
• It'll be a true companion,
Following a person from beginning to end.
It'll arrive at their destination
Like a shadow follows one's body.
• Therefore, plant what's good
And you'll reap its bounty in a later life.
With the foundation of their merits,
Sentient beings will find peace.
• With merit as their heavenly protection,
They won't run into disaster.
Their births won't be difficult,

And they'll ascend to heaven when they die."

118. The Bhagavan then taught the subtle Dharma for the priest. After he was taught, instructed, profited, and delighted by it, he rose from his seat and departed.

119. During that time that there was a crop failure and famine in the region, which made soliciting alms difficult. The Buddha told Ananda, "Order all the monks present in this country to assemble in the meeting hall."

120. Ananda replied, "Very well." Having received his instruction, he announced to those near and far to assemble at the meeting hall.

121. Once the great assembly in that country had gathered, Ananda told the Buddha, "The great assembly has gathered. It's up to the noble one to decide when to go."

122. The Bhagavan then rose from his seat and went to the meeting hall. He prepared a seat and sat down. He then told the monks, "There's a famine in this region that's making it difficult to solicit alms. It would be best for all of you to split into groups and visit people you know in Vaisali and Vrji where there's no shortage of food. I will stay here in this safe abode with Ananda. Why is that? It's dangerous when there's such shortages." The monks accepted his instruction and did so. The Buddha and Ananda stayed there by themselves.

123. After the summer retreat, the Buddha became sick, and his whole body ached. The Buddha thought to himself, "Now, I've become sick, and my whole body is in pain, but none of my disciples are present. It wouldn't be appropriate for me to obtain nirvana. I must make effort to extend my life with my own power for now."

124. The Bhagavan then emerged from his quiet abode and sat in an open place. When Ananda saw him, he hurried over and said, "Now that I see the sage's face, his sickness has made it worse!"

125. Ananda also said, "When the Bhagavan was sick, I felt trepidation, and the bond of sorrow depressed me. I didn't know which way I was going. But I'm still breathing. I think to myself, 'The Tathagata isn't completely extinguished yet. the world's eye hasn't ceased yet. The great teaching hasn't declined yet.' Does he not have instructions for the assembled monks now?"

126. The Buddha told Ananda, "Does the Sangha need something from me? If there were someone who said, 'I maintain the Sangha' or 'I collect the Sangha,' this person would have some instructions for the assembly. The Tathagata doesn't say, 'I maintain the Sangha' or 'I collect the Sangha.' Why must he have some instructions for the Sangha?

127. "Ananda, the Dharma that I've taught is complete inside and out, but I've never claimed to have mastered its view. I'm elderly, fully eighty years old now. Like an old chariot that can still reach a destination with skill and maintenance, my body is likewise. With skill, I have the power to extend my life for a while longer, but it takes strength and effort to tolerate these pains. It's when I'm not mindful of any conceptions and enter the samadhi without conception that my body is peaceful and without any distress.

128. "Therefore, Ananda, you must light yourself and light the Dharma. Don't light something else. You must be your own refuge and take refuge in the Dharma. Don't take refuge in something else. How does one light themselves, light the Dharma, and not light something else? How does one take refuge in themselves, take refuge in the Dharma, and not take refuge in something else?

129. "Ananda, a monk observes body internally [to be body.] Diligent and unflagging, he's mindful and doesn't forget it, setting aside worldly greed and sorrow. He observes body externally … observes body internally and externally … Diligent and unflagging, he's mindful and doesn't forget it, setting aside worldly greed and sorrow. He also observes feelings, mind, and principles in the same way. That's how, Ananda, one lights themselves, lights the Dharma, and doesn't light something else. One must take refuge in themselves, take refuge in the Dharma, and not take refuge in something else."

130. The Buddha told Ananda, "After my extinguishment, some will be capable of practicing this teaching. They will truly be my disciples and the best students."

At Capala Shrine

131. The Buddha told Ananda, "Let's go to Capala Shrine."

"Very well."

132. The Tathagata then rose, put on his robe, took his bowl, and went to a tree there. He told Ananda, "Prepare a seat. My back pain is troubling me. I want to stop here."

"Very well." Ananda quickly prepared his seat.

133. After the Tathagata was seated, Ananda prepared a small seat and sat in front of the Buddha. The Buddha told Ananda, "There's the cultivation of four miraculous abilities. Someone who often cultivates and trains in them, who's always mindful and doesn't forget them, can live for an eon or more if they so desire. Ananda, the Buddha has often cultivated these four miraculous abilities, being mindful and not forgetting them. The Tathagata can remain for an eon or more if he so desires to eliminate the darkness of the world, for the gain of many, and to give peace to gods and humans."

134. Ananda was silent and didn't reply. The Buddha repeated this three times, but Ananda was silent. Under the influence of Mara, Ananda had become drowsy and wasn't alert. Three times the Buddha gave this clear hint, but he didn't realize his request.

135. The Buddha told Ananda, "I'll let you to decide when to go."

Understanding what the Buddha meant, Ananda rose from his seat, bowed to the Buddha, and departed. He wasn't far away when the Buddha quieted his mind and contemplated there under the tree.

136. It wasn't long before Mara the Wicked One came to the Buddha and said, "The Buddha's heart desires nothing. He can parinirvana. Now would be a good time. He ought to be extinguished soon."

137. The Buddha told the Wicked One, "Stop! Stop! I'll decide when it's time. For now, the Tathagata hasn't decided on nirvana yet. My monks need to be assembled who can discipline themselves, overcome agitation without fear, and arrive at the place of safety. They need to obtain their own reward, be teachers for other people, disseminate the sutra teachings, and make their words and meanings plain. They need to defeat whatever other teachings there may be with the correct Dharma. They'll need to realize these miracles for themselves. Such disciples haven't assembled yet. There also need to be nuns, laymen, and laywomen who are all like this, and they haven't been assembled yet, either. What's essential now is to broadly lecture about the awakened heart in the religious life and let gods and humans all see these miracles."

138. Mara the Wicked One again said to the Buddha, "Once, the Buddha was sitting under the goatherd's nyagrodha tree on the bank of the Nairanjana River in Uruvilva when he first achieved the perfect awakening. I went to the Bhagavan then and asked the Tathagata to parinirvana. I said, 'Now would be a good time! You ought to be extinguished soon!'

139. "The Tathagata replied to me, 'Stop, Wicked One! Stop! I'll decide when it's time. For now, the Tathagata hasn't decided on nirvana because I need to gather my disciples … let gods and humans see these miracles. Then, I'll choose extinguishment.' Now, the Buddha has gathered his disciples … let gods and humans see these miracles. Now would be a good time. Why not extinguish yourself?"

140. The Buddha said, "Stop, Wicked One! Stop! The Buddha will decide when it's time. He won't remain for very long. In three months' time, I will choose extinguishment in my homeland of Kusinagara between a pair of trees in a sal grove."

141. Mara then thought, "The Buddha doesn't speak falsely. He surely will be extinguished now!" He rejoiced and celebrated, then he instantly disappeared.

142. Not long after Mara had departed, the Buddha entered a samadhi of settled mind at the Capala Shrine in which he discarded his remaining life. There was a great earthquake at that moment, and there was no one in the whole country who wasn't startled and frightened by it, who didn't get goosebumps. The Buddha then emitted a great radiance. There was nowhere that it didn't illuminate. Even the darkest places were made bright, and the beings there saw each other.

143. The Bhagavan then spoke in verse:

• "The two formations, being and non-being,
I reject those conditioned states now.
Focused in samadhi and settled,
I'm like a bird emerging from its egg."

144. It was difficult for the venerable Ananda to think, he was so startled and had goosebumps. He hurried to the Buddha, bowed his head at his feet, and withdrew to stand to one side. He said to the Buddha, "How strange, Bhagavan! What was the reason for that earthquake?"

145. The Buddha told Ananda, "An earthquake usually has eight causes. What are the eight? The earth rests on water. Where the water stops, there's air. Where the air stops, there's space. Sometimes a great gale rises by itself in that empty space, which create a large wave in the water. That large wave of water then makes the whole earth quake. That's one cause.

146. "Furthermore, Ananda, sometimes a monk, nun, great spirit, sage, or exalted god achieves awakening. They observe how much water there is and how little earth there is. Wanting to test their power, they make the whole earth quake. This is the second cause.

147. "Furthermore, Ananda, when a bodhisattva's spirit first descends from the Tusita Heaven to his mother's womb while focused and undisturbed, there's a great earthquake. This is the third cause.

148. "Furthermore, Ananda, when a bodhisattva first emerges from his mother's womb, he's born from her side while focused and undisturbed, and the whole earth quakes. This is the fourth cause.

149. "Furthermore, Ananda, at the moment a bodhisattva first achieves the unsurpassed and perfect awakening, there's a great earthquake. This is the fifth cause.

150. "Furthermore, Ananda, when a buddha first achieves awakening and turns the unsurpassed Dharma wheel, which can't be turned by [gods such as Sakra, Brahma,] or Mara, demons and spirits, ascetics and priests, or worldly people and gods, then the whole earth quakes. This is the sixth cause.

151. "Furthermore, Ananda, when a Buddha's teaching is nearing it's end and he discards his life force while focused and undisturbed, the whole earth quakes. This is the seventh cause.

152. "Furthermore, Ananda, when the Tathagata parinirvana-s in the realm of nirvana without remainder, there's a great earthquake. This is the eighth cause. These are the eight reasons that lead to an earthquake."

153. The Bhagavan then spoke in verse:

• "The unsurpassed sage of bipeds,
He's a great ascetic who lights up the world.
Ananda asked the teacher of gods,
'What's the reason for this earthquake?'
• The Tathagata explained it in a kind voice
That sounded like a kalavinka.
'I'll tell you all, so listen:
There are these causes of earthquakes.
• The earth depends on water, which remains.
Water depends on air, which abides.
If a wind rises in that space,
Then the earth is shaken greatly.
• Sometimes, a monk or nun
Wants to test their miraculous power.
The mountains, oceans, grasses, and trees,
The whole earth is shaken.
• Sakra, Brahma, and the venerable gods
Sometimes want to shake the earth.
Demons and spirits of mountains and oceans
Also make the earth quake.
• When bodhisattvas and sages of bipeds,
Replete with a hundred signs of merit,
First enter their mother's womb,
Then the earth is shaken greatly.
• They dwell in the womb for ten months
Like nagas lying on a mat.
When they first emerge from her right side,
Then the earth is shaken greatly.
• When the Buddha was a young man
He eliminated the conditions that fettered him,
Achieved awakening supreme and measureless,
Then the earth was shaken greatly.
• Become a sage, he turned the Dharma wheel
There in the deer preserve.
When he defeated Mara with awakening's strength,
Then the earth was shaken greatly.
• The god Mara came to press his request,
Urging the Buddha to parinirvana.
When the Buddha discarded his life force,
Then the earth was shaken greatly.
• The human worthy, the great teacher,
The miraculous sage ended later existences.
He was hard to move but chose to go out,
And the earth was shaken greatly.
• The pure eye explained these reasons,
These eight situations that cause earthquakes.
When there's this, there's also that;
These are the occasions of earthquakes."

154. The Buddha told Ananda, "The world has eight assemblies. What are the eight? First is the warrior assembly. Second is the priestly assembly. Third is the householder assembly. Fourth is the ascetic assembly. Fifth is the assembly of the four god kings. Sixth is the assembly of the Trayastrimsa gods. Seventh is the Mara assembly. Eighth is the assembly of Brahma gods.

155. "I remember this about myself: Once, I was reborn with an assembly of warriors, sitting, rising, and speaking with them. I can't say how many times. With effort and the power of samadhi, I was able to appear among them. They had excellent forms, and my form was better than theirs. They had wonderful voices, and my voice was better than theirs. They would concede to me and withdraw, but I didn't concede to them. What they could explain, I could explain, too. I could also explain what they couldn't.

156. "Ananda, I broadly taught the Dharma, teaching, instructing, profiting, and delighting them, and then I would disappear from that place. They didn't know whether I was a god or a human. So it was up to the assembly of Brahma gods. I couldn't count how many times I went there. I broadly taught them the Dharma, but they didn't know what I was."

157. Ananda said to the Buddha, "That's amazing, Bhagavan! It's unprecedented to be able to achieve something like that."

158. The Buddha said, "This is something that's sublime and extraordinary, Ananda! It's amazing, incredible, and unprecedented. There's only the Tathagata who could achieve this."

159. He also told Ananda, "The Tathagata is able to know the arising, duration, and cessation of feelings, the arising, duration, and cessation of conceptions, and the arising, duration, and cessation of contemplations. This is how the Tathagata is something amazing, incredible, and unprecedented. You should remember this."

At Fragrance Shrine

160. The Bhagavan told Ananda, "Let's go to Fragrance Shrine." … They prepared seats to sit under a tree there.

161. The Buddha told Ananda, "Here at Fragrance Shrine, monks are present left and right. Order all of them to gather in the meeting hall."

162. Ananda accepted this instruction and made the announcement for everyone to gather. Ananda then said to the Buddha, "The great assembly has gathered. It's up to the noble one to decide when to go."

163. The Bhagavan then went to the meeting hall, prepared a seat, and sat down. He told the monks, "All of you should know this teaching that I've realized for myself and which achieved the supreme and perfect awakening. It's this: The four abodes of mindfulness, four mental disciplines, four miraculous abilities, four dhyanas, five faculties, five powers, seven factors of awakening, and the noble eightfold path."

164. "All of you must to be in harmony and respectful in this teaching. Don't create conflicts; accept the same teacher like water and milk in the same pot. You ought to diligently accept and train in my teaching. Light each other, and entertain each other.

165. "Monks, you should know this teaching that I've realized and widely demonstrate it to others. It's the sutras, songs, assurances, verses, inspirations, past events, past births, histories, extensive sutras, unprecedented things, parables, and explanations. All of you must well remember them, weigh and discern them, and cultivate the practice as they dictate. Why is that? Not long from now, the Tathagata will parinirvana in three months' time."

166. When the monks heard him say this, they were all bewildered, cut short, perplexed, and agitated. They fell to the ground, all of them crying loudly. "How could it be so soon? The Buddha has chosen to be extinguished! How could it be so painful? The world will go blind! We'll be left here in decline for a long time!" Some of the monks cried and beat their breasts, some twisted and turned as they wailed. They couldn't control themselves. They were like a cut snake that twists, turns, and writhes urgently, not knowing where to go.

167. The Buddha told the monks, "All of you, stop! Don't feel grief and sorrow. Among the people and things in heaven and earth, there's nothing born that doesn't die. The desire for this conditioned life to stop changing is impossible. I've taught you in the past that love and affection is impermanent, too. Things that come together also fall apart. Your body is not your own, and life doesn't last long."

168. The Bhagavan then spoke in verse:

• "Now, I am free,
I've arrived at the place of safety.
I brought together a great assembly
And taught them this meaning.
• I've become elderly,
With nothing much left of my life.
I've accomplished the task,
So now I discard my life.
• Mindful and without carelessness,
A monk perfects the precepts.
Collecting himself, his mind is settled,
And he guards his thoughts.
• In this teaching of mine,
A person isn't careless.
They can destroy the root of suffering
And end birth, old age, and death."

169. He also told the monks, "Why have I admonished you in this way? The god Mara the Wicked One made this request of me: 'The Buddha's heart desires nothing. He can parinirvana. Now would be a good time. He ought to be extinguished soon."

170. "I said, 'Stop, Wicked one! Stop! The Buddha will decide when it's time … My monks need to be assembled … let gods and men all see these miracles.'

171. "Mara the Wicked One again said, 'Once, the Buddha was sitting under the goatherd's nyagrodha tree on the bank of the Nairanjana River in Uruvilva when he first achieved the perfect awakening. I went to the Bhagavan then and asked the Tathagata to parinirvana. I said, "Now would be a good time! You ought to be extinguished soon!"

172. "'The Tathagata replied to me, "Stop, Wicked One! Stop! I'll decide when it's time. For now, the Tathagata hasn't decided on nirvana because I need to gather my disciples … let gods and humans see these miracles. Then, I'll choose extinguishment." Now, the Buddha has gathered his disciples … let gods and humans see these miracles. Now would be a good time. Why not extinguish yourself?'

173. "I said, 'Stop, Wicked One! Stop! The Buddha will decide when it's time. He won't remain for very long. In three months' time, I will choose extinguishment …'

174. "Mara then thought, 'The Buddha doesn't speak falsely. He surely will be extinguished now!' He rejoiced and celebrated, then he instantly disappeared.

175. "Not long after Mara had departed, I entered a samadhi of settled mind at the Capala Shrine in which I discarded my remaining life. There was a great earthquake at that moment that startled and frightened both gods and humans, giving them goosebumps. The Buddha then emitted a great radiance. There was nowhere that it didn't illuminate. Even the darkest places were made bright, and the beings there saw each other.

176. "I then spoke in verse:

• "'Being and non-being, those two formations,
I reject those conditioned states now.
Focused in samadhi and settled,
I'm like a bird emerging from its egg.'"

177. The venerable Ananda then rose from his seat, bared his right shoulder, knelt on his right knee, and saluted the Buddha with his palms together. He said, "Please, let the Bhagavan stay for an eon! Choose not to be extinguished out of compassion for sentient beings and the benefit of gods and humans!"

178. The Bhagavan remained silent and didn't respond. Ananda repeated this request three times, and then the Buddha told him, "Don't you believe in the Tathagata's path of perfect awakening?"

He replied, "Indeed, I really do believe it!"

179. The Buddha said, "If you believe it, why have you harassed me three times? You personally heard and received this from the Buddha: 'There's the cultivation of four miraculous abilities. Often cultivating and training in them, always mindful and not forgetting them, one can live for an eon or more if they so desire. The Buddha has often cultivated these four miraculous abilities, and he was mindful and didn't forget them. The Tathagata can remain for an eon or more if he so desires to eliminate the darkness of the world, for the gain of many, and to give peace to gods and humans.'

180. "Why didn't you make this solemn request for me not to be extinguished at that time? You didn't just hear this once. You heard it three times, but you didn't urge me to remain for an eon or more to eliminate the darkness of the world, for the gain of many, and give peace to gods and humans.

181. "It's only now that you speak. Are you an idiot? I gave an obvious hint three times, and three times you were silent. Why didn't you say at the time, 'May the Tathagata remain for an eon or more to eliminate the darkness of the world and benefit many!'?

182. "Just stop, Ananda. I've discarded my life force. I've thrown it away and rejected it. It's impossible for a Tathagata to go back on his word. Suppose a wealthy nobleman spits food on the ground. Would he pick it up and put it back in his mouth?"

"No."

183. "The Tathagata is likewise. He has discarded and rejected his life force. How could he put his words back into his mouth?"

At Amragramaka

184. The Buddha told Ananda, "Let's go to Amragramaka." Ananda prepared his robe and bowl and followed the Bhagavan with the great assembly. They took the road from Vrji to Amragramaka and stayed in a mountain forest there.

185. The Bhagavan then taught the great assembly about precepts, samadhi, and wisdom. "Cultivating precepts and obtaining samadhi wins a great reward. Cultivating samadhi and obtaining wisdom wins a great reward. Cultivating wisdom and purifying the mind wins complete liberation. With the end of the three contaminants, which are the contaminants of desire, existence, and ignorance, the knowledge of liberation arises after one is liberated: 'My births and deaths have been ended, the religious life has been established, and the task has been accomplished. I won't be subject to a later existence.'"

At Bhoga

186. After he had stayed at the town of Amragramaka for as long as was appropriate, the Buddha told Ananda, "All of you, get ready. I will be going to Jambugramaka, Gandagramaka, Hastigramaka (?), and then to the city Bhoga."

187. Ananda replied, "Very well," prepared his robe and bowl, and followed the Bhagavan with the great assembly. They took the road from Vrji and made their way to that other city, stopping in the rosewood grove to the north of Bhoga.

188. The Buddha told the monks, "I will give you a discourse on the four great ways of teaching. Listen closely! Listen closely, and consider it well!"

The monks said, "Very well, Bhagavan. We'd be glad to hear it."

189. "What are the four? Suppose a monk makes this statement: 'Gentlemen, I personally heard and received this teaching from the Buddha in that town, city, or country.' Those who hear his claim shouldn't disbelieve or criticize it. They must judge from the sutras whether it's true or false. Rely on the Vinaya and the Dharma to investigate whether it's fundamental or superficial.

190. "If what he said isn't in the sutras, the Vinaya, or the Dharma, they should say this to him: 'The Buddha didn't say this, so you must be mistaken. Why is that so? We rely on the sutras, the Vinaya, and the Dharma. What you said earlier contradicts the Dharma. Sir, you shouldn't remember it or teach it to others. You should discard it.'

191. "If what he said is based on the sutras, the Vinaya, and the Dharma, they should say to him, 'What you say is really what the Buddha taught. Why is that so? We rely on the sutras, the Vinaya, and the Dharma. What you said earlier matches the Dharma. Sir, you should remember it and teach it widely to others. Take care not to discard it.' This is the first great way of teaching.

192. "Furthermore, suppose a monk makes this statement: 'I personally heard and received this Dharma, Vinaya, and teaching from a unified Sangha or well-versed elder in that town, city, or country.' Those who hear his claim shouldn't disbelieve or criticize it. They must judge from the sutras whether it's true or false. Rely on the Vinaya and the Dharma to investigate whether it's fundamental or superficial.

193. "If what he said isn't in the sutras, the Vinaya, or the Dharma, they should say this to him: 'The Buddha didn't say this, so that Sangha you've been listening to must be mistaken. Why is that so? We rely on the sutras, the Vinaya, and the Dharma. What you said earlier contradicts the Dharma. Sir, you shouldn't remember it or teach it to others. You should discard it.'

194. "If what he said is based on the sutras, the Vinaya, and the Dharma, they should say to him, 'What you say is really what the Buddha taught. Why is that so? We rely on the sutras, the Vinaya, and the Dharma. What you said earlier matches the Dharma. Sir, you should remember it and teach it widely to others. Take care not to discard it.' This is the second great way of teaching.

195. "Furthermore, suppose a monk makes this statement: 'I personally heard and received this Dharma, Vinaya, and teaching from a group of monks who maintain the Dharma, Vinaya, and observances in that town, city, or country.' Those who hear his claim shouldn't disbelieve or criticize it. They must judge from the sutras whether it's true or false. Rely on the Vinaya and the Dharma to investigate whether it's fundamental or superficial.

196. "If what he said isn't in the sutras, the Vinaya, or the Dharma, they should say this to him: 'The Buddha didn't say this, so that group of monks you've been listening to must be mistaken. Why is that so? We rely on the sutras, the Vinaya, and the Dharma. What you said earlier contradicts the Dharma. Sir, you shouldn't remember it or teach it to others. You should discard it.'

197. "If what he said is based on the sutras, the Vinaya, and the Dharma, they should say to him, 'What you say is really what the Buddha taught. Why is that so? We rely on the sutras, the Vinaya, and the Dharma. What you said earlier matches the Dharma. Sir, you should remember it and teach it widely to others. Take care not to discard it.' This is the third great way of teaching.

198. "Furthermore, suppose a monk makes this statement: 'I personally heard and received this Dharma, Vinaya, and teaching from a monk who maintains the Dharma, Vinaya, and observances in that town, city, or country.' Those who hear his claim shouldn't disbelieve or criticize it. They must judge from the sutras whether it's true or false. Rely on the Vinaya and the Dharma to investigate whether it's fundamental or superficial.

199. "If what he said isn't in the sutras, the Vinaya, or the Dharma, they should say this to him: 'The Buddha didn't say this, so that monk you've been listening to must be mistaken. Why is that so? We rely on the sutras, the Vinaya, and the Dharma. What you said earlier contradicts the Dharma. Sir, you shouldn't remember it or teach it to others. You should discard it.'

200. "If what he said is based on the sutras, the Vinaya, and the Dharma, they should say to him, 'What you say is really what the Buddha taught. Why is that so? We rely on the sutras, the Vinaya, and the Dharma. What you said earlier matches the Dharma. Sir, you should remember it and teach it widely to others. Take care not to discard it.' This is the fourth great way of teaching."

At Papa

201. The Bhagavan stayed in Bhoga for as long as was appropriate, then he told Venerable Ananda, "Let's go to the city of Papa."

202. Ananda replied, "Very well," prepared his robe and bowl, and followed the Bhagavan with the great assembly. They took the road from Malla to the city of Papa and stopped in Cunda's Park.

203. There was a smith there named Cunda. Hearing that the Buddha had arrived in the city from Malla, he got dressed up and went to the Bhagavan. He bowed his head at the Buddha's feet and sat to one side.

204. The Bhagavan gradually taught and properly edified Cunda, teaching, instructing, profiting, and delighting him. Hearing the Buddha teach Dharma, Cunda believed it and rejoiced. He then invited the Bhagavan to his home for a meal the next day.

205. When the Buddha silently accepted his invitation, Cunda knew that he had agreed. He rose from his seat, bowed to the Buddha, and returned home. He immediately prepared meals to offer them during the night. When the next morning came, it was up to the noble one to decide when to go.

206. The Bhagavan then put on his robes, took his bowl, and went to Cunda's home while surrounded by the great assembly. Once there, they prepared seats and sat down. Cunda immediately offered them the meals that he had prepared to the Buddha and Sangha. He had specially cooked sandalwood tree ears, making them the most exquisite in the world, and offered the dish only to the Bhagavan.

207. The Buddha told Cunda, "Don't serve these ears to the monks." Cunda accept this instruction and didn't dare serve any of it to them. There was then an elderly monk in the assembly who had left home during his sunset years. He took the remainder of that dish from where he sat.

208. Seeing that the assembly had finished eating, Cunda took their bowls and washed them. When this was done, he went before the Buddha and asked a question in verse:

• "I would venture to ask the great sage,
The perfectly awakened sage of bipeds,
The skilled trainer, and supreme tamer:
How many ascetics are there in the world?"

209. The Bhagavan answered him in verse:

• "To answer your question,
There are four kinds of ascetic in all.
Each has different inclinations;
You should know and discern them.
• The first practices the most supreme path.
The second skillfully teaches the path's meaning.
The third gets their livelihood from the path.
The fourth is defiled while on the path.
• What's considered the most supreme path,
Skillfully teaching the path's meaning,
Getting livelihood from the path,
Or being defiled while on the path?
• To cross over the thorns of love,
Enter Nirvana without doubt,
And leap over the road of gods and humans,
I say this path is the most supreme.
• Understanding well the supreme meaning,
Teaching the path that lacks defilement,
And kindly settling myriad doubts,
This is skillfully teaching the path.
• Skillfully elaborating Dharma passages,
Basing one's life on the path,
And seeing the immaculate state from afar,
This is called getting livelihood from the path.
• Being perverted inside one's heart,
Looking pure and clean on the outside,
And being fraudulent and dishonest,
This is being defiled while on the path.
• How can one be both good and bad,
Mixing the pure with the impure?
They appear attractive on the outside
Like copper rubbed with gold.
• Ordinary people who meet them
Call them noble and wise disciples.
Not all the rest are like that,
So they don't lose their faith.
• A person with a large assembly,
Who's turbid inside and clear outside,
Keeps their perversions private,
But they're self-indulgent at heart.
• Don't look at outward appearance,
And give your esteem automatically.
Some keep their perversions private,
But they're self-indulgent at heart."

210. Cunda then got a small seat and sat in front of the Buddha, and the Buddha gradually taught him the Dharma. After teaching, instructing, profiting, and delighting him, the Buddha returned to the park with the great assembly surrounding him.

211. The Buddha stopped under a tree on the road and told Ananda, "Could you prepare a seat? My back is aching."

212. Ananda replied, "Very well," and he prepared a seat right away so that the Bhagavan could take a break. Ananda also prepared a small seat for himself and sat in front of the Buddha.

213. The Buddha asked Ananda, "Did Cunda have any regrets or resentments about what happened? If he did, what was the reason for it?"

214. Ananda said to the Buddha, "Cunda provided alms that didn't bring any benefit. Why is that? The Buddha had the final meal before obtaining Nirvana at his home."

215. The Buddha told Ananda, "Don't say that. Don't say that. Cunda will get a great reward in the present. He'll have a long life both in appearance and strength, and he'll get a good reputation from it. He'll create many treasures, and he'll be born in heaven when he dies. He'll naturally get what he desires. Why is that? The two virtues of providing a meal to a Buddha when he's just achieved awakening and when he's about to be extinguished are perfectly and completely without difference. Now, you can go and tell Cunda, 'I personally heard and received this from the Buddha: 'The meal that Cunda provided will bring a great reward in the present. It will obtain a great result.'"

216. Ananda got the point of Buddha's instruction and went to Cunda. He told him, "I personally heard and received this from the Buddha: 'The meal that Cunda provided will bring a great reward in the present. It will obtain a great result. Why is that? The two virtues of providing a meal to a Buddha when he's just achieved awakening and when he's about to be extinguished are perfectly and completely without difference.'"

• After the meal at Cunda's home,
Such words were heard for the first time.
The Tathagata's discomfort was severe,
His life and practice coming to an end.
• Although he only ate sandalwood ears,
His discomfort still increased.
He embraced it on the road
And made his way to Kusinagara.

217. The Bhagavan then rose from his seat, walked for a while on the road, and then went to a tree again. He said to Ananda, "This backache is excruciating. Could you prepare a seat for me?"

218. Ananda replied, "Very well," and he immediately prepared a seat for the Tathagata to rest. Ananda then bowed at the Buddha's feet and sat to one side.

219. There was an arhat disciple named Pukkasa who was headed to Kusinagara from Papa. He saw the Buddha under a tree on the road. He looked handsome and upright with peaceful and settled faculties. He was the most well-behaved [person he'd seen], and his tranquility was supreme. He was like a great naga in clear water without any dirt [and adorned with the thirty-two signs and eighty excellent features.] He rejoiced upon seeing him, and a good thought arose in him.

220. When he reached the Buddha, he bowed his head at his feet and withdrew to sit to one side. He then said to the Buddha, "Bhagavan, it's extraordinary for someone who's left home to reside in a pure state and love being in a quiet place. Just now, there were 500 carts passing by, but you didn't hear or see them. There was a time when my teacher was sitting quietly under a tree between Kusinagara and Pava. When 500 carts and chariots passed by him, he didn't hear the noise and ruckus that they made. Someone came and asked my teacher, 'Didn't you see that group of carts pass by?'

"He replied, 'I didn't.'

221. "They then asked, 'Did you hear them?'

"He replied, 'I didn't.'

222. "They again asked, 'Were you here or somewhere else?'

"He replied, 'I was here.'

223. "They asked, 'Were you awake?'

"He replied, 'I was awake.'

224. "They asked, 'Were you awake or asleep?'

"He replied, 'I wasn't asleep.'

225. "That person thought, 'That's amazing! This homeless man was so focused that he didn't notice or hear the noise and ruckus those carts made!'

226. "Then that person said to my teacher, 'The noise of those 500 carts and chariots shook the ground as they passed by on the road, yet you still didn't hear them. How could you have heard any other sound?' He then bowed to my teacher, rejoiced, and departed."

227. The Buddha told Pukkasa, "Now, I will ask you a question. Answer it how you think. Is it harder for someone to be awake when a group of carts shake the ground and not hear it or to be awake and not hear thunder shake heaven and earth?"

228. Pukkasa said to the Buddha, "How could the noise a hundred thousand carts be equal to a thunderclap? It wouldn't be as hard to not hear the noise of the carts, but it'd be a difficult thing to be awake when thunder shakes heaven and earth and not hear it!"

229. The Buddha told Pukkasa, "I once traveled to the village Aduma (?) and stayed in a thatched hut. There was an unusually intense downpour with lightning and thunder. Four oxen and two brothers tilling their field were killed. A crowd of people had gathered together when I came out of my grass hut to pace back and forth. Someone from the crowd came over to me, bowed their head at my feet, and followed along as I walked. Knowing the answer, I asked, 'Why has this large crowd gathered?'

230. "That person then asked, 'Where was the Buddha when it happened? Was he awake or asleep?'

231. "I answered, 'I was here, and I wasn't asleep at the time.'

232. "That person praised it as a rare thing to hear of a samadhi like the Buddha's. The lightning and thunder was a loud noise in heaven and earth, but I was the only awake person who didn't hear it in my peaceful samadhi.

233. "Then he said to the Buddha, 'There was an unusually intense downpour with lightning and thunder. Four oxen and two brothers tilling their field were killed. That's what they are doing here.' Glad and joyful to obtain the Dharma, that person bowed to the Buddha and departed."

234. That Pukkasa was at the time wearing two sheets of yellow cloth worth a hundred thousand [coins]. He rose from his seat, saluted the Buddha with his palms together, and said to the Buddha, "Now, I offer these sheets of cloth to the Bhagavan. Please accept it."

235. The Buddha told Pukkasa, "Give one to me and one to Ananda."

Pukkasa got the point of the Buddha's instruction and offered one sheet to the Tathagata and gave one to Ananda. The Buddha accepted them out of compassion for him.

236. After bowing at the Buddha's feet, Pukkasa then sat down to one side. The Buddha then gradually taught him Dharma, teaching, instructing, profiting, and delighting him. He discussed generosity, precepts, how to be born in heaven, the great danger of desire that's polluting and impure, and the obstacle of the higher contaminants. [He praised] escaping it as [the most subtle, pure, and] supreme thing.

237. The Buddha knew Pukkasa's mind was joyous and softened, didn't have hindrances or entanglements, and easily educated. As buddhas always do, the Buddha then taught Pukkasa the noble truth of suffering … suffering's formation … suffering's cessation, and the noble truth of suffering's escape.

238. Pukkasa's belief was purified. Like a white cloth that readily accepts a dye, he became removed from dust and free of defilement right there on his seat, and the Dharma eye arose in him. He saw the Dharma, got the Dharma, and was certain of the proper abode. He wouldn't fall to unpleasant destinies, and he achieved fearlessness. He said to the Buddha, "Now, I take refuge in the Buddha, take refuge in the Dharma, and take refuge in the Sangha. Please, Tathagata, permit me to become a layman in the correct teaching. From now on, I won't kill, steal, commit sexual [misconduct], lie, or drink alcohol for the rest of my life. Please, Bhagavan, permit me to become a layman in the correct teaching!"

239. He also said to the Buddha, "Bhagavan, if you happen to visit Papa during your teaching tours, please consider visiting our poor district. Why is that? All the households there will have meals, sleeping arrangements, clothing, and medicines to offer the Bhagavan. After he accepts these offerings, those families will find peace."

The Buddha said, "That sounds good!"

240. After the Bhagavan had taught Pukkasa the Dharma, teaching, instructing, profiting, and delighting him, he rose from his seat, bowed his head at the Buddha's feet, rejoiced, and departed.

241. Not long after he had left, Ananda offered his sheet of yellow cloth to the Tathagata, and the Tathagata accepted it and put it on out of compassion for him.

242. The Bhagavan's countenance was relaxed. His majestic glow was brilliant, his faculties were pure, and his face was happy. Seeing this, Ananda thought to himself, "I've been his attendant for twenty-five years, but I've never seen the luster of the Buddha's face be as bright as it is now!"

243. He rose from his seat, knelt on his right knee, saluted with his palms together, and said to the Buddha, "I've been his attendant for twenty-five years, but I've never seen the luster of the Buddha's face as bright as it is now! It's unclear to me why that is. I'd like to hear his thoughts."

244. The Buddha told Ananda, "There are two circumstances for the Tathagata's luster to be more exceptional than usual. First is when the Buddha first attains the path and achieves the unsurpassed and perfect awakening. Second is when a Buddha wants to be extinguished soon and discards his life force for parinirvana. Ananda, a Tathagata's luster is exceptional because of these two circumstances."

245. The Bhagavan then spoke in verse:

• "His golden robe shined with happiness,
Fine, soft, immaculate, and pure.
Pukkasa offered to the Bhagavan
Light like his snow white eyebrow tuft."

246. The Buddha ordered Ananda, "I'm thirsty; I'd like something to drink. Go and fetch some water."

Ananda said, "500 carts recently forded the river upstream. The water is still muddy. We could bathe in it but not drink from it."

247. The Buddha ordered him three times, "Ananda, go and fetch some water."

Ananda said, "It's not far to go to Kukusta River. It's clear and cool to drink, and we could bathe in it."

248. There was then a yaksa spirit residing in the Himalayas that believed in the Buddha's path. It filled a bowl with water of eight kinds of purity and offered it to the Bhagavan. The Buddha immediately accepted it out of compassion for it. He then spoke in verse:

• "With his eightfold voice, the Buddha
Ordered Ananda to fetch water:
'I'm thirsty. I want a drink now.
After I drink, let's go to Kusinagara.'

• With a gentle and peaceful voice,
His words made many hearts glad.
Serving the Buddha right and left,
He quickly said to the Buddha:
• 'Earlier, 500 carts
Forded to the other side of the river.
They muddied the river's waters;
I fear it's not suitable to drink.
• The Kukusta River is not far away;
Its water is delicious and refreshing.
If we go there, we could get a drink
And we could bathe ourselves, too.'
• A yaksa spirit in the Himalayas
Offered water to the Tathagata.
His majestic strength restored,
He paced like a lion in the assembly.
• The river was home to a spirit naga;
It clarified the water of its muddiness.
His noble appearance like the Himalayas,
The Buddha calmly crossed the Kukusta."

At Kukusta River

249. The Bhagavan then went to Kukusta River. After drinking, he bathed and then departed with the assembly. They stopped to rest under a tree on the road, and he told Cunda, "Take an outer robe, fold it four times, and lay it out. My back is hurting, and I want to rest for a while."

250. Cunda accepted this instruction. He laid out the robe, and the Buddha sat on it. Cunda then bowed to him and sat to one side. He said to the Buddha, "I want to parinirvana! I want to parinirvana!"

251. The Buddha told him, "It's up to you to decide when it's time." Cunda thereupon parinirvana-ed right there in front of the Buddha.

252. The Buddha then spoke in verse:
• "The Buddha headed for Kukusta River,
Cool, refreshing, and without muddiness.
The sage among humans entered the water,
Bathed, and crossed to the other side.
• The founder of the great assembly
Gave his instruction to Cunda:
'My body is wore out now.
Quickly, lay out a bed for me.'
• Cunda accepted it at once,
Folding a robe and laying it out.
The Tathagata then rested there
With Cunda sitting in front of him.
• He said to the Bhagavan,
'I want to obtain extinguishment.
That place without love or hate,
That's where I will arrive now.'
• That sea of measureless virtue,
The Supreme One told him,
'You have accomplished the task;
It's up to you to decide when it's time.'
• After recognising the Buddha's assent,
Cunda then redoubled his efforts.
Volition ceased without remainder,
Like a lamp's flame going out completely."

253. Ananda then rose from his seat and went before the Buddha. He said, "After a buddha is extinguished, how is he interred?"

The Buddha told Ananda, "You, be quiet and think about your actions. The faithful laymen would be happy to do it."

254. Ananda repeated his inquiry three times: "After a buddha is extinguished, how is he interred?"

The Buddha said, "Someone wanting to know the way to inter a buddha should do it the way they would a noble wheel-turning king."

255. Ananda then asked, "What's the way a noble wheel-turning king is interred?"

256. The Buddha told Ananda, "This is the way a noble king is interred. First, his body is bathed in fragrant water. He's wrapped all around with fresh cotton. Next, he's wrapped in 500 layers of cloth. His body is placed in a gold coffin and sesame oil is poured onto it. The gold coffin is lifted and placed in a second larger iron coffin. Sandalwood incense is next layered outside of that coffin. Firewood of many fragrances is piled on top of fine robes, and then he is cremated. When it's done, his remains are placed in a shrine built at a crossroads. It's exterior is hung with silks, and people from the country travel to see the Dharma king's shrine. They think longingly about the correct teaching that benefited many people.

257. "Ananda, when you inter me, first bathe my body in fragrant water and then wrap it all around with fresh cotton. Wrap it in 500 layers of cloth, place my body inside a gold coffin, and pour sesame oil on it. Lift the gold coffin and place it in a second larger iron coffin. Next, layer sandalwood incense on the outside of that coffin. Pile firewood of many fragrances on top of fine robes, and then cremate me. When it's done, place my remains in a shrine built at a crossroads. Hang its exterior with silks, and have people from the country travel to see the Buddha's shrine. They'll think longingly about the Tathagata, the Dharma king, and his awakened teaching. While they're alive, they will get merits and rewards, and they'll be born up in heaven when they die."

258. Thereupon, the Bhagavan restated this by speaking in verse:
• "Ananda rose from his seat
And said to the Bhagavan while kneeling:
'After the Tathagata's extinguished,
What's the way he should be interred?'
• 'Ananda, you stay quiet
And think about your actions.
The laypeople in this country
Will be happy to do it.'
• After Ananda asked this thrice,
The Buddha described interring a noble king.
'When you inter the Tathagata's body,
Wrap it in cloth and put it in two coffins.
• Build a shrine at a crossroads
For the benefit of sentient beings.
Those who come to venerate it
Will obtain measureless merit."

259. The Buddha told Ananda, "There are four kinds of people in the world who should be memorialized by building a shrine and providing incense, flowers, silk canopies, and music there. Who are the four? First, a tathagata should have a shrine build for him. Second is a pratyeka buddha. Third is a disciple [of a buddha]. Fourth is a [noble] wheel-turning king. Ananda, these four kinds of people should be memorialized by building a shrine and providing incense, flowers, silk canopies, and music."

260. The Bhagavan then spoke in verse:
• "A buddha's shrine is first,
Then a pratyeka buddha's, disciple's,
And noble wheel-turning king's,
Who ruled over the four regions.
• These four deserve memorials
As the Tathagata has described,
At a buddha's, pratyeka buddha's, disciple's,
And a noble wheel-turning king's shrine."

Between a Pair of Trees in Malla

261. The Bhagavan then told Ananda, "Let's go to Kusinagara [and stop] between a pair of trees in Malla."

262. Ananda replied, "Very well." The Buddha was surrounded by the great assembly as he walked on the road.

263. There was an ascetic from Kusinagara headed to Pava who saw the Bhagavan on the road from afar. He looked handsome and upright with peaceful and settled faculties. The ascetic rejoiced upon seeing him, and a good thought arose in him. He went before the Buddha, exchanged greetings with him, and stood to one side. He said to the Buddha, "The village where I live is not far to go. Please stop there, Gautama. After having a meal in the morning, you could continue on to your destination."

264. The Buddha told the ascetic, "Stop! Stop! You've already made an offering to me."

The ascetic persisted in inviting him three times, and the Buddha's answer was the same as the first time. He then told the ascetic, "Ananda will be here later; you can tell him about your wishes then."

265. After hearing the Buddha's instruction, the ascetic went to Ananda. After exchanging greetings, he stood to one side. He said, "The village where I live is not far to go. I'd like Gautama to consider stopping there. After having a meal in the morning, he could continue on to his destination."

Ananda replied, "Stop, stop! Ascetic, you've already given offerings to him."

266. The ascetic still persisted with his invitation three times. Ananda replied, "The weather is too hot right now, and your village is too far to go. The Bhagavan is exhausted and not strong enough."

267. After contemplating the meaning of this, the Bhagavan spoke in verse:
• "The pure eye made progress on the road;
Exhausted, he stopped between a pair of trees.
An ascetic saw the Buddha from a distance,
Hurried over to him, and bowed his head.
• 'My village is nearby now,
Have pity and stay there for a night.
I'll provide alms in the morning;
Afterward, you can continue to that city.'
• 'Ascetic, my body is wore out.
It's too far to go, beyond what I can do.
The attendant is sitting over there;
You can tell him about your wishes.'
• Getting the Buddha's point,
He went to Ananda:
'Please go to my village.
You can depart after the morning meal.'
• Ananda said, 'Stop, stop!
It's too hot, he can't go so far.'
Three invitations weren't accepted,
He was dejected and unhappy.
• Oh, how this conditioned state flows, changes, and isn't constant!
Here, between a pair of trees,
My uncontaminated body will pass away.
• Buddhas, pratyeka buddhas, and disciples
All return to that same cessation.
They have no choice but be impermanent;
They're like mountain forests on fire."

268. The Bhagavan arrived in his homeland on the way to Kusinagara and was between a pair of trees in Malla. He told Ananda, "Prepare a bed here between this pair of trees. Arrange it so my head is to the north and I'm facing the west. Why is that? My Dharma will spread and remain for a long time in the north."

269. Ananda replied, "Very well!" He prepared the bed so the Buddha's head was to the north.

270. The Bhagavan folded his outer robe four times and laid down on his right side like a lion king, placing one foot on the other.

271. A yaksa spirit was present between those two trees who believed in the Buddha. It scattered out-of-season flowers on the ground. The Bhagavan told Ananda, "The spirit of these two trees has offered these out-of-season flowers to me. These are not offerings to the Tathagata."

272. Ananda said, "What would be called an offering to the Tathagata?"

The Buddha said to Ananda, "When someone can accept the teaching and practice the teaching, I call that an offering to the Tathagata."

273. After contemplating this meaning, the Buddha spoke in verse:
• "The Buddha was between a pair of trees;
Lying there, his heart was undisturbed.
A tree spirit with a heart that was pure
Scattered flowers on the Buddha.
• Ananda said to the Buddha,
'What would be called an offering?'
'Accepting and practice the teaching;
The flower of awakening is an offering.'
• Purple gold flowers like cartwheels
Had never been scattered on the Buddha.
Selfless aggregates, elements, and senses,
That's what's called the supreme offering."

274. Upamana was in front of the Buddha fanning him at the time. The Buddha said, "You can retire; don't stand in front of me."

275. Ananda then thought to himself, "This Upamana has always served the Buddha right and left, providing what he needs. He would venerate the Tathagata and gaze at him without tire. Now, he's looking after his needs for the final time, but he's ordered to retire. What was the cause of this?"

276. Ananda then adjusted his robe and went before the Buddha. He said, "This Upamana has always served the Buddha right and left, providing what he needs. He would venerate the Tathagata and gaze on him without tire. Now, he's looking after the Buddha's needs for the final time, but he was ordered to retire. What was the cause of this?"

277. The Buddha told Ananda, "For as far as twelve yojanas outside Kusinagara, there are great spirits and gods that live here; there's no space empty of them. Those great spirits were criticizing this monk who was standing in front of the Buddha. 'Now, finally the Buddha is about to be extinguished, and we spirits have come to present offerings, but this monk is outshining us with his great majesty and glowing light. He's preventing us from approaching, venerating, and making offerings to the Buddha!' Ananda, this is the reason I ordered him to retire."

278. Ananda said to the Buddha, "This venerable monk has accumulated what virtue and cultivated when actions that he has such majesty today?"

279. The Buddha told Ananda, "Long ago, ninety-one eons in the past, there was a Buddha named Vipasyin. At the time, this monk carried a grass torch with a joyous heart to illuminate his shrine. He has this glowing majesty today that penetrates the twenty-eight heavens above because of this history. The glow of these gods and spirits doesn't compare to his."

The Story of Mahasudarsana

280. Ananda then rose from his seat, bared his right shoulder, and saluted with his palms together. He said to the Buddha, "Don't be extinguished in this inferior, little city, in this barbaric land. Why is that? There are other great countries such as Campa, Vaisali, Rajagrha, Vrji, Sravasti, Kapilavastu, and Baranasi. There are many people among their populations who confidently believe the Buddha's teaching. After the Buddha's extinguishment, they surely will pay respects and give offerings to his remains."

281. The Buddha said, "Stop! Stop! Don't make such observations. No one takes this land to be barbaric. Why is that? In the past, this country had a king named Mahasudarsana.

282. "At that time, the city here was called Kusavati. That great king's capital city was 480 yojanas long and 280 yojanas wide. Grain was bountiful there, and its people were prosperous. The city had seven walls, and it was surrounded by seven balustrades that were carved, engraved, and hung with precious bells here and there. The city's foundation was twenty-four feet deep, and it was 160 feet tall. Its lookout towers rose 160 feet above the city, and there were pillars that were twenty-four feet around. Where the city wall was gold, the gates were silver. The silver city walls had gold gates, the beryl city walls had crystal gates, and the crystal city walls had beryl gates.

283. "The perimeter of the city was also decorated with the four treasures. The balustrades alternated between the four treasures, too. There were gold towers with silver bells and silver towers with gold bells. It had a sevenfold treasure moat with lotus flowers growing in it, such as utpala flowers, padma flowers, kumuda flowers, and pundarika flowers. Its bottom was strewn with gold sand. Tala trees grew on both sides of the road. Some had golden trunks with silver leaves, flowers, and fruit. Others had silver trunks with gold leaves, flowers, and fruit, crystal trunks with beryl leaves, flowers, and fruit, and beryl trunks with crystal leaves, flowers, and fruit.

284. "There were many bathing pools between the tala trees that were clear, flowing, deep, clean, and unpolluted. They had stairs along their sides with bricks made of the four treasures. The gold stairs had silver steps, the silver stairs had gold steps, the beryl stairs had crystal steps, and the crystal stairs had beryl steps. Balustrades also encircled them in connected circles a distance away [from the pools].

285. "Tala trees grew everywhere in the city. Those with gold trunks had silver leaves, flowers, and fruit. Those with silver trunks had gold leaves, flowers, and fruit. Those with crystal trunks and beryl leaves, flowers, and fruit. Those with beryl trunks had crystal leaves, flowers, and fruit. There were also pools made of the four treasures between the trees where the four kinds of flowers grew. The streets were orderly, arranged in grids of five [buildings to a side]. The breeze blew the myriad flowers and scattered them along the roadsides. Light winds blew in all directions through the treasure trees, making gentle sounds like heavenly music. The people of that country, male and female, adults and children, walked among the trees to entertain themselves.

286. "Ten kinds of sound were constantly heard in that country: Conch sounds, drum sounds, small drum sounds, sounds of singing, sounds of dancing, sounds of flutes, sounds of elephants, sounds of horses, sounds of carts, and the sounds of eating, drinking, and making merry.

287. "King Mahasudarsana had possession of the seven treasures then. The King had four virtues and ruled the four continents. What were the seven treasures? First is the golden wheel treasure. Second is the white elephant treasure. Third is the dark blue horse treasure. Fourth is the magic jewel treasure. Fifth is the beautiful woman treasure. Sixth is the householder treasure. Seventh is the army general treasure.

288. "How did that great king Mahasudarsana achieve the golden wheel treasure? Every fifteenth-day full moon, the King bathed in fragrant water, went up into the high hall, and surrounded himself with maidens. The wheel then spontaneously appeared before him. It had a thousand spokes and possessed a glow. It was something made by a heavenly artisan, not something made in this world. It was made of pure gold, and it was about fourteen feet in diameter.

289. "King Mahasudarsana thought to himself, 'In the past, I've heard senior elders say this: "A warrior king from a water anointed tribe bathes in fragrant water on the fifteenth-day full moon, go up into the high hall, and surround themselves with maidens. The golden wheel then spontaneously appears before them. It has a thousand spokes and possesses a glow. It's something made by a heavenly artisan, not something of this world. It's made of pure gold, and it's fourteen feet in diameter. He's then called a noble wheel-turning king." Now, this wheel has appeared! But is it that one? I had better test this wheel treasure.'"

290. "King Mahasudarsana then summoned his four armies and faced the golden wheel treasure with his right shoulder bared. He knelt on his right knee, touched the golden wheel with his right hand, and said: 'Head east. Turn according to the Dharma, and don't go contrary to the eternal law.' The wheel then turned east.

291. "The king then followed it, leading his four armies, and four spirits were ahead of the golden wheel, guiding it. The king stopped his horses where the wheel stopped to dwell. When the lesser kings in the east saw the great king arrive, they came to him with gold bowls holding silver grain and silver bowls holding gold grain. They presented them to their chief, saying, 'Welcome, Great King! The lands in this eastern region are plentiful now, and the people are prosperous. Their culture is gentle, loving, and loyal. Please, Noble King, rule them properly! We'll serve you, right and left, and accept what's appropriate.'

292. "King Mahasudarsana told the lesser kings, 'Stop, gentlemen! Stop! You've given offerings to me, but I will simply rule with the correct Dharma. Don't go out of your way to serve me, and let no one in the country act contrary to the Dharma. This is what I call my way of ruling.'

293. "When the lesser kings heard these instructions, they followed the Great King as he toured their countries. He went east until the ocean was in sight, and next traveled south, west, and north, going wherever the wheel went. The kings in those regions each presented their countries in the same way as the lesser kings in the east did.

294. "King Mahasudarsana followed the golden wheel as it traveled around the four oceans, revealing the way and making the populace peaceful as he went. He then returned to Kusavati in his home country. When the golden wheel treasure hovered in the air while he was in his palace, King Mahasudarsana celebrated. 'This golden wheel treasure is a true sign to me that I really am a noble wheel-turning king.' This was his accomplishment of the golden wheel treasure.

295. "How did the Great King Mahasudarsana accomplish the white elephant treasure? The Great King Mahasudarsana was sitting up in his proper Dharma hall in the morning, and the elephant treasure suddenly appeared before him. Its hair was all white, it stood flush in seven places, and it had the ability to fly. Its head was mottled, and its six tusks were delicate and filled with pure gold.

296. "When he saw this, the King thought, 'This elephant treasure is excellent! If it's well trained, I could ride it.' He then tested its training, and it was capable of doing everything it should. The Great King Mahasudarsana wanted to further test the elephant, so he mounted it and rode it out of the city in the morning. He traveled around the four oceans and returned after it was time to eat.

297. "King Mahasudarsana celebrated. 'This white elephant treasure is a true sign to me that I really am a noble wheel-turning king now!' This was his accomplishment of the elephant treasure.

298. "How did the Great King Mahasudarsana accomplish the horse treasure? King Mahasudarsana was sitting up in his correct Dharma hall in the morning, and the horse treasure suddenly appeared before him. It was dark blue with a vermilion mane and tail. It's head and neck were like an elephant's, and it had the ability to fly.

299. "When he saw this, the King thought, 'This horse is excellent! If it's well trained, I could ride it.' He then tested its training, and it was capable of doing everything it should. King Mahasudarsana wanted to test this horse treasure himself, so he mounted it and rode it out of the city in the morning. He traveled around the four oceans and returned after it was time to eat.

300. "King Mahasudarsana celebrated. 'This dark blue horse treasure is a true sign to me that I really am a noble wheel-turning king now!' This was his accomplishment of the blue horse treasure.

301. "How did the Great King Mahasudarsana accomplish the magic jewel treasure? King Mahasudarsana was sitting up in his correct Dharma hall in the morning, and the magic jewel treasure suddenly appeared before him. Its substance and color were transparent and without any flaw or defilement.

302. "When he saw this, the king thought, 'This jewel is marvelous! If it glows, it could light the inside of the palace!' King Mahasudarsana then tested it by summoning his four armies and placing the jewel treasure atop a tall banner. He carried this banner out of the city during a dark night, and the jewel's light illuminated the troops as though it was daytime. The troops marched in a circuit outside the city, and it's illumination had range of a yojana. Inside the city, people could go about their business like they did during the day.

303. "King Mahasudarsana celebrated. 'This magic jewel is a true sign to me that I really am a noble wheel-turning king now!' This was his accomplishment of the magic jewel treasure.

304. "How did that great king Mahasudarsana accomplish the beautiful woman treasure? The beautiful woman treasure suddenly appeared before him. Her countenance was agreeable, and her appearance was handsome. She wasn't too tall or short, too crude or fine, too white or black, or too sharp or gentle. In winter, her body was warm, and she was cool during summer. The hair pores of her whole body exuded the scent of sandalwood, and her breath had a fragrance like an utpala flower. Her words were gentle, stimulating, and calm. She was the first to rise and the last to sit. She didn't do anything inappropriate. King Mahasudarsana was pure and detached, so he didn't think about her for a moment, much less be intimate with her.

305. "King Mahasudarsana celebrated. 'This beautiful woman treasure is a true sign to me that I really am a noble wheel-turning king now!' This was his accomplishment of the beautiful woman treasure.

306. "How did that great king Mahasudarsana accomplish the householder treasure? A householder man suddenly appeared with a natural storehouse of treasures and measureless wealth. The householder had an eye from past merit that clearly saw hidden treasures in the earth and whether they had owners or not. He saw and knew all this. When the treasure had an owner, he would protect it for them. When a treasure didn't have an owner, he would collect it and provide it for the King's use. The householder treasure went to the King and said, 'Great King, you don't need to worry about giving me a salary. I can take care of it myself.'

307. "King Mahasudarsana wanted to test the householder treasure. He ordered a boat prepared to go sailing on a river, then he told the householder, 'I need a treasure of gold. Quick, provide it to me.'

"The householder replied, 'Wait just a moment, Great King, while I'll go onto shore.'

308. "The King pressed him, 'I need it immediately. Get it right now.'

"The householder treasure accepted the King's command and knelt down on the boat. He put his right hand into the water, and a precious jar came out of the water after his hand. Like a caterpillar climbing a tree, that householder treasure was likewise. Putting his hand in the water, a treasure would climb his hand as he brought it out. Filling the boat up [with treasures] and then told the king, 'How much treasure does the king need?'

309. "King Mahasudarsana said to the householder, 'Stop, stop! I didn't need any treasure; it was just a way to test you. You've already given offerings to me.'

"Hearing what the king had said, that householder immediately threw the treasures back into the water.

310. "King Mahasudarsana celebrated. 'This householder treasure is a true sign to me that I really am a noble wheel-turning king now.' This was his accomplishment of the householder treasure.

311. "How did Great King Mahasudarsana accomplish the army general treasure? The army general treasure suddenly appeared. He was shrewd, courageous, and good at planning. He went to the King and said, 'Great King, if there's anyone to be made to submit, don't worry about it. I can handle it for you.'

312. "Great King Mahasudarsana wanted to test the army general treasure. He assembled the four armies and told the general, 'Now, take charge of the army. Assemble those who haven't yet assembled and disperse those who have assembled. Equip those who haven't yet been equipped, and dismiss those who've been equipped. Let go those who haven't yet been on leave, and have those who've been on leave remain.'

313. "Hearing what the King said, the army general treasure led the army. He assembled those who hadn't yet assembled and dispersed those who had assembled. He equipped those who hadn't yet been equipped, and dismissed those who'd been equipped. He let go those who hadn't yet been on leave, and made those who had been on leave remain.

314. "King Mahasudarsana celebrated. 'This army general treasure is a true sign to me that I really am a noble wheel-turning king now.' Ananda, this was how the Noble Wheel-Turning King Mahasudarsana accomplished the seven treasures.

315. "What were his four miraculous virtues? First was a long life that was incomparable and didn't end early. Second was physical vigor that was incomparable and tireless. Third was a handsome appearance that was incomparable. Fourth was a treasury that was incomparable and overflowing. These were the seven treasures and four virtues accomplished by that noble wheel-turning king.

316. "Ananda, after a long time, King Mahasudarsana ordered his horses readied and went for a ride to visit a park. He told the driver, 'Be a good driver, and go at leisurely pace. Why is that? I want to closely observe the country and see that people are happy and untroubled.'

317. "Once he had observed the country's people from the side of the road, he then told his driver, 'Continue at a leisurely pace. I want [them] to closely observe the Noble King's majestic countenance.'

318. "Ananda, King Mahasudarsana kindly nurtured the people and cared for their needs like a father loving his children. The people were fond of the King like children looking up to their father. They all paid tribute to the King with precious things, hoping that he would accept their gifts.

"The king responded, 'Stop, people! I have my own treasures. You can use these for yourselves.'

319. "At another time, the king had the thought, 'Now, I'd better oversee the building of a palace.'

320. "When he made this decision, people came to King Mahasudarsana, and they each said, 'I would like to build a palace hall for the King!'

"The king replied, 'Now, I've received your offerings, but I have treasure and materials enough to build it myself.'

321. "The people would then repeat their request, 'I would like to contribute to building a palace hall for the King!'

"The king told the people, 'You may do as you wish.'

322. "Accepting the King's instruction, those people brought 84,000 carts laden with gold. They went to Kusavati and built a Dharma hall there. At the time, the wondrous craftsman god of the Trayastrimsa Heaven thought to himself, 'I'm the only one capable of building a correct Dharma hall for King Mahasudarsana.'

323. "Ananda, that craftsman god built a Dharma hall that was sixty yojanas long and thirty yojanas wide. It was decorated with the four treasures and had a level foundation beneath it. Bricks made of the seven treasures were used to build its stairsteps. That Dharma hall had 84,000 pillars. The gold pillars had silver capitals. The silver pillars had golden capitals. There were also beryl and crystal pillars [with crystal and beryl] capitals. Four balustrades made of the four treasures encircled the hall. Four sets of stairs were also made of the four treasures.

324. "That Dharma hall had a tower above it made of 84,000 jewels. Where the tower was gold, it had silver doors and windows. Where it was silver, it had gold doors and windows. Where it was beryl or crystal, it had [crystal or beryl] doors and windows. The gold part of the tower had silver couches, and the silver part of the tower had gold couches. Fine and soft cloth made of gold spun into thread was spread over the seats. The beryl and crystal parts of the tower had [crystal and beryl] couches, too. The radiance of that hall dazzled people's eyes. It was like the full radiance of the sun; no one could look at it.

325. "King Mahasudarsana then thought, 'Now, I could build many parks and ponds in the area to the left and right of this hall.' He then built those parks and ponds in a radius of one yojana.

326. "He also had this thought, 'I'll build a Dharma lake in front of the Dharma hall.' He immediately set aside land for it a yojana in length and width. That body of water was clear, pure, and unpolluted. It had stairs going down into it that were built with bricks made of the four treasures. A balustrade circled the lake on four sides that was made of the four treasures of gold, silver, crystal, and beryl. A variety of water-born flowers grew in the lake, such as utpala flowers, padma flowers, kumuda flowers, and pundarika flowers. They emitted a sublime fragrance that wafted in all four directions.

327. "That lake also had land-born flowers on its four shores, such as atimuktaka flowers, campaka flowers, patala flowers, sumana flowers, varsika flowers, and dhanuskari flowers. Workers maintained the lake, and passersby swam and bathed in it. They would roam around in it, refreshing themselves as they liked. Those needing a drink were given drinks. Those needing food were given meals. Clothing, carts, horses, fragrant flowers, and treasures weren't denied to the people who wanted them.

328. "Ananda, King Mahasudarsana had 84,000 elephants that were decorated with gold and silver and wore jewels, but the king of the elephants was the best. The King had 84,000 horses that were decorated with gold and silver and wore jewels, but the king of the horses was the best. The King had 84,000 chariots covered with lion skins and adorned with the four treasures. The chariot with golden wheels was the best. The King had 84,000 jewels, but the magical jewel was the best. The King had 84,000 beautiful women, but the beautiful woman treasure was the best. The King had 84,000 householders, but the householder treasure was the best. The King had 84,000 warriors, but the army general treasure was the best. The King had 84,000 cities, but the city of Kusavati was the best. The King had 84,000 halls, but the correct Dharma hall was the best. The King had 84,000 towers, but the great, correct tower was the best. The King had 84,000 couches made of gold, silver, and many treasures with fine and soft cushions and blankets spread over them. The King had 84,000 million clothes, and the ksauma cloth, Kasi cloth, and karpasa cloth were the best. The King had 84,000 kinds of food that were prepared every day, and each meal tasted unique.

329. "Ananda, King Mahasudarsana rode the best elephant of his 84,000 elephants, leaving Kusavati at sunrise to travel the world and go around the four oceans. In an instant, he returned to the city to eat. Of his 84,000 horses, he rode his strong horse treasure, leaving [Kusavati] at sunrise to travel the world and go around the four oceans. In an instant, he returned to the city to eat. He rode the golden-wheeled chariot of his 84,000 chariots and harnessed the strong horse treasure to it. He left [Kusavati] at sunrise to travel the world and go around the four oceans. In an instant, he returned to the city to eat. Of his 84,000 jewels, he used his magical jewel treasure to illuminate the inside of his palace, making it as bright as day at night. Of his 84,000 beautiful women, the beautiful woman treasure well and nobly served him left and right. Of his 84,000 householders, the householder treasure was capable of providing his income. Of his 84,000 warriors, the army general treasure was capable of making enemies submit. Of his 84,000 cities, Kusavati was always his capitol. Of his 84,000 halls, the King always stayed in the correct Dharma hall. Of his 84,000 towers, the King always stayed in the great, correct tower. Of his 84,000 seats, the king always sat on a crystal seat in calm meditation. Of his 84,000 million clothes, he wore whatever fine treasure ornaments he wished with modesty and conscientiousness. Of his 84,000 kinds of food, the King always satisfied eating naturally cooked rice.

330. "When his 84,000 elephants came to the King, they trampled and crashed into untold numbers of sentient beings, injuring them. The king then thought, 'These elephants frequently come and injure many people. From now on, I will permit one elephant to appear every hundred years.' Thus, each elephant took turns appearing in subsequent centuries, and they started over when they had all appeared."

331. The Buddha then told Ananda, "The king then thought, 'What virtues did I accumulate and what roots of goodness did I cultivate in the past to obtain these such glorious rewards in the present?'

332. "He then thought to himself, 'There were three causes and conditions that brought about these fortunate rewards. What are the three? First was generosity, second was observing precepts, and third was meditation. It was because of these causes and conditions that I've obtained these great rewards in the present.'

333. "The king also thought, 'Now that I've received these fortunate rewards among humans, I should go further by cultivating the deeds of heavenly fortune. It would be good to restrain myself, leave this hubbub, and live in a secluded place in order to revere the path.'

334. "The king then summoned his good and noble woman treasure and told her, 'Now that I've received these fortunate rewards among humans, I should go further by cultivating the deeds of heavenly fortune. It would be good to restrain myself, leave this hubbub, and live in a secluded place in order to revere the path.'

335. "She replied, 'Very good! I'll do as the great king instructs.' So, he ordered her to stop attending to him in public and private.

336. "The king then went up into the Dharma hall, entered his golden tower lookout, and sat on a silver bench. He contemplated greed and lust as being bad and not good. With perception and examination, this seclusion gave rise to joy and happiness, and he attained the first dhyana.

337. "Perception and examination ceased, and he was joyous with an inner confidence. He gathered his mind and unified it. Without perception or examination, this samadhi gave rise to joy and happiness, and he attained the second dhyana.

338. "He discarded joy and guarded against it. Focusing his mindfulness, he was undisturbed. He knew for himself the happiness that was sought by noble people. Guarded, mindful, and happily practicing, he attained the third dhyana.

339. "To abandon pain and pleasure, he first eliminated sorrow and joy. Neither discomforted nor pleasured, his guarded mindfulness was purified, and he attained the fourth dhyana.

340. "King Mahasudarsana then rose from his silver bench, emerged from his golden lookout tower, and went to his great, correct tower. He sat on an beryl seat there and cultivated kindness. He pervaded one direction with it and then the other directions as well. Everywhere, throughout, peerless, and measureless, he eliminated various resentments. His heart having no ill will, he was quiescent, kind, and gentle and enjoyed himself. He did likewise with compassion, joy, and equanimity.

341. "His beautiful woman treasure thought to herself, 'It's been a long time since I saw his face, and I've been thinking of going to look after him. I'd better present myself to the Great King now.'

342. "The woman treasure nobly addressed his 84,000 maidens, 'It would be good if each of you bathed in fragrant water and dress up in fine clothes. Why is that? It's been a long time since we've seen the King's face, so we ought to present ourselves to him.' Hearing this, the women dressed up and put on ornaments after they bathed and were clean.

343. "The woman treasure also nobly told the army general treasure to assemble the four kinds of troops. 'It's been a long time since we've seen his face. We ought to present ourselves to the King.'

344. "The army general treasure then assembled the four armies and said to the woman treasure, 'The four armies have assembled. Let us know when it's time.'

345. "The woman treasure led the 84,000 maidens. With the four armies in the front and rear, they went to a golden tala tree park. That great assembly shook the ground, and the sound reached the King. He was sitting next to a window and looked out when he heard them. The woman treasure came forward and stood at the door.

346. "Upon seeing her, the king immediately told her, 'Stop, don't go any further. I'll come out to see you.' King Mahasudarsana rose from his crystal seat, emerged from his great, correct tower, came down from the correct Dharma hall, and accompanied the beautiful woman treasure to the tala tree park. Once there, they prepared seats and sat down.

347. "King Mahasudarsana's countenance was more radiant than usual. His noble woman treasure thought, 'Now, the great king's appearance is better than usual. What does this portend?'

348. She then said to the Great King, 'Your countenance is [better than] usual now. Is this a sign of some change? Are you going to discard your life? Now, the white elephant treasure is the best of the 84,000 elephants that are decorated with gold and silver and wear jewels. They are the King's own possessions. Please stop and consider this for a moment. Enjoy being with them; don't be so ready to discard your life and forsake the people.

349. "There's also the powerful horse king who is the best of 84,000 horses … the wheel treasure that's the best of 84,000 chariots …. the magic jewel treasure that's the best of 84,000 jewels … the beautiful woman treasure who's the best of 84,000 women … the householder treasure who's the best of 84,000 householders … the army general treasure who's the best of 84,000 warriors … Kusavati is the best of 84,000 cities … the correct Dharma hall is the best of 84,000 halls … the great, correct tower is the best of 84,000 towers … the treasure ornamented [seat] is the best of 84,000 seats … the softest [clothing] is the best of 84,000 garments … You have 84,000 kinds of food that have unique flavors. All these many treasures are the King's possessions. Please stop and consider this for a moment. Enjoy being with them; don't be so ready to discard your life and forsake the people.'

350. "King Mahasudarsana answered the woman treasure, 'Your service to me up until now has been kind and dutiful. Your words were never crude. Why is it now that you say this?'

"The woman treasure said to the King, 'I don't understand. Did I say something disagreeable?'

351. "The king told the woman treasure, 'You speak of such things as elephants, horses, jewels, chariots, golden wheels, halls, towers, names of garments, and delicious food. These things are impermanent. They don't last that long, but you exhort me to stay. How's that agreeable?'

"The woman treasure said to the king, "I don't understand. What words would be kind and agreeable?'

352. "The king told her, 'Suppose you were to say: "Elephants, horses, jewels, chariots, golden wheels, halls, towers, names of garments, and delicious foods are all impermanent and not long-lasting. Please don't be attached to them. It's tiresome to the spirit. Why is that? There isn't much left of the King's life before he goes to the next life. What's born has its death, and those who come together have their separation. How can something that's born have an eternal life? It's best to cut off affections and live wishing for awakening." These words I would called agreeable.'

353. "Ananda, when she heard the King's instruction, the beautiful woman treasure cried and wept. Wiping her tears, she said, 'Elephants, horses, jewels, chariots, golden wheels, halls, towers, names of garments, and delicious foods are all impermanent and not long-lasting. Please don't be attached to them. It's tiresome to the spirit. Why is that? There isn't much left of the King's life before he goes to the next life. What's born has its death, and those who come together have their separation. How can something that's born have an eternal life? It's best to cut off affections and live wishing for awakening.'

354. "Ananda, that beautiful woman treasure was touched by these words for a moment before King Mahasudarsana suddenly died. Like a young man taking a bite of a delicious meal, [he passed away] without any pain or hardship. His spirit was born up in the seventh Brahma Heaven. Seven days after King Mahasudarsana died, the wheel treasure and jewel treasure spontaneously disappeared, and the lives of the elephant treasure, horse treasure, beautiful woman treasure, householder treasure, and army general treasure ended on the same day. The city, lakes, Dharma hall, lookout tower, precious decorations, and tala tree parks all became [ordinary] land and trees."

355. The Buddha told Ananda, "This conditioned state is impermanent and liable to change. It's certain to erode away, but greed and desire are tireless. A man's life is squandered on his attachments and affections, without any satisfaction. Satisfaction comes only by attaining noble wisdom and truly seeing this path.

356. "Ananda, I recall myself being in this situation in the past. I became a noble wheel-turning king six times, and their bones were interred here when they died. Now, I've achieved the unsurpassed, perfect awakening. Once again, I've discarded my life, and my body will be interred here. But from this time on, my births and deaths are forever ended. There won't be another place where my body will be interred. This one being the very last, I won't be subject to another existence."

The Buddha Announces His Parinirvana

357. The Bhagavan remained in his homeland of Kusinagara between a pair of trees in the sal forest. When his nirvana was imminent, he told Ananda, "Go to Kusinagara and tell the Mallas, 'Gentlemen, you should know that the Tathagata will parinirvana between a pair of trees in the sal forest in the middle of the night. You may go and ask question about what doubts you have and receive personal instruction from him. This is a good time to do it. Those who don't go may regret it later.'

358. Accepting the Buddha's instructions, Ananda rose from his seat, bowed to the Buddha, and departed. Accompanied by another monk, they walked with tears streaming down their faces. When they entered Kusinagara, they saw 500 Mallas who had gathered in one place for some minor reason.

359. Seeing Ananda approach, the Mallas rose, bowed to him, and stood to one side. They said to Ananda, "We don't understand why venerables would come into the city at night. What are you doing here?"

360. With tears streaming, Ananda said, "I wanted to benefit all of you, so I've come to tell you this, 'You should know that the Tathagata will parinirvana in the middle of the night. You can go and ask about what doubts you have and receive personal instruction from him. This is a good time to do it. Those who don't go may regret it later.'"

361. When the Mallas heard what he said, they lamented loudly. They twisted, turned, and fell to the ground. Some fainted and revived again, like a large tree with its root pulled up and limbs chopped off. They all shouted, "The Buddha has decided to be extinguished! How can it happen so soon? The Buddha has decided to be extinguished! How can it happen so fast? The multitude of beings will be in decline for a long time! The world will go blind!"

362. Ananda then consoled the Mallas, "Stop, stop! Don't lament! There's nothing born in heaven and earth and that doesn't die. The desire for this conditioned life to last forever is impossible. Doesn't the Buddha say, 'What comes together also falls apart, and what's born surely comes to an end?'"

363. The Mallas said to each other, "Let's go back home and bring our households and 500 bolts of white cloth to that pair of trees!"

364. After they had each returned home, they led their households carrying the white cloth to Kusinagara. Arriving at that place between a pair of trees, they went to Ananda. Ananda saw them from afar and thought to himself, "That's a lot of people. If they meet the Buddha individually, I'm afraid they wouldn't all get a hearing before the Buddha's extinguishment. Now, I'd better send them all at once to meet the Buddha early in the evening."

365. He then led the 500 Mallas and their households to the Bhagavan. They bowed their heads at his feet and stood to one side. Ananda then stood in front and introduced them to the Buddha: "So-and-so the Malla and his family has come to greet the Bhagavan and ask whether he's doing well or not."

366. The Buddha replied, "It's good that all of you came. It will bring you long life without illness or pain." Ananda then brought the Mallas and their households forward to meet the Bhagavan.

367. The Mallas bowed their heads at his feet and sat to one side. The Bhagavan then taught them about impermanence, teaching, instructing, profiting, and delighting them. The Mallas listened to the Dharma and rejoiced. They then offered their 500 bolts of white cloth to the Bhagavan, and the Buddha accept them. The Mallas then rose from their seats, bowed to the Buddha, and departed.

The Liberation of Subhadra

368. There was a wanderer in Kusinagara at the time named Subhadra. He was an 120-year-old elder with much wisdom. He heard that the ascetic Gautama was between a pair of trees that night and had decided to be extinguished. Subhadra thought, "I have some doubts about the Dharma that only Gautama could explain for me. Now would be the time to muster my strength and walk there."

369. That evening, he left Kusinagara and arrived at that place between a pair of trees and went over to Ananda. After exchanging greetings, he stood to one side and said to Ananda, "I heard that the ascetic Gautama has decided to be extinguished tonight, so I've come here to seek a meeting with him. I have some doubts about the Dharma that I hope a meeting with Gautama will resolve for me. Would he some time to see me?"

Ananda replied, "Stop, Subhadra! Stop! The Buddha is physically ill and can't be troubled."

370. Subhadra repeated his request three times, "I've heard that a Tathagata appears in the world only as often as an udumbara flower does. I have some doubts about the Dharma that I hope [meeting Gautama] will resolve for me. Would he have some time to see me?"

Ananda answered him as he did the first time: "The Buddha is physically ill and can't troubled."

371. The Buddha then said to Ananda, "Don't stop him. Allow him to approach. His desire to settle his doubts is no trouble to me. If he listens to my teaching, he'll surely comprehend it."

Ananda told Subhadra, "If you want to meet the Buddha, it's up to you when to go."

372. Subhadra then approached. After exchanging greetings, he sat to one side of the Buddha and said, "I have some doubts about the Dharma. Would you have some time to settle a problem for me?"

The Buddha said, "You may ask your question."

373. Subhadra asked, "How is it, Gautama, that there are these different groups who declare their teachers to be Purana Kasyapa, Maskali Gosaliputra, Ajita Kesakambala, Kakuda Katyayana, Samjayin Vairutiputra, and Nirgrantha Jnatiputra. These teachers each have different teachings. Does the ascetic Gautama know them all or not all of them?"

The Buddha said, "Stop, stop! What's the use of just discussing whether I know them all? I will teach you the profound and sublime Dharma now. Listen closely! Listen closely and consider it well!"

374. Subhadra accepted his teaching. The Buddha told him, "If the noble eightfold path is absent from a teaching, then the first fruit of the ascetic won't exist, nor the second … third … fourth fruit of the ascetic. Subhadra, when the noble eightfold path is present in a teaching, the first fruit of the ascetic will exist, as will the second … third … fourth fruit of the ascetic. Subhadra, the noble eightfold path is present in my teaching, and it has the first fruit of the ascetic and the second … third … fourth fruit of the ascetic. These other religious groups don't have these fruits of the ascetic."

375. The Bhagavan then spoke to Subhadra in verse:

• "When I was twenty-nine,
I left home to pursue the good path.
Subhadra, since I became a Buddha,
It's now been fifty years.
• I practiced precepts, samadhi, and wisdom,
Living alone and contemplating.
Now, I teach the essential Dharma;
Those other teachings have no ascetics."

376. The Buddha told Subhadra, "If the monks keep themselves collected, then this world won't be empty of arhats."

377. Subhadra said to Ananda, "Those who have practiced the religious life under the ascetic Gautama, who are practicing it, and who will practice it obtain a great benefit from it. Ananda, you've practiced the religious life under the ascetic Gautama and obtained great benefit from it. Having gotten a personal meeting with the Tathagata to ask about my doubts, I've also obtained great benefit from it. Now, the Tathagata has given his assurance about his disciples in discerning this for me!"

378. He then said to the Buddha, "I'd better leave home now and accept the full precepts in the Tathagata's Dharma."

379. The Buddha told Subhadra, "If a wanderer from another training [wishes to] cultivate the religious life in my Dharma, they are tested for four months to observe their conduct and scrutinize their temperament. Someone whose observances are complete without omission is then given the full precepts in my Dharma. Subhadra, it's simply to know how a person acts."

380. Subhadra again said, "Those from other religions and trainings will be tested for four months in the Buddha's Dharma to observe their conduct and scrutinize their temperament. Those whose observances are complete without omission are given the full precepts. I would wait for four years in the Buddha's Dharma with my observances complete and without any omissions to receive the full precepts."

The Buddha told Subhadra, "As I said before, it's simply to know how a person acts."

381. That night, Subhadra left home, accepted the precepts, and purely cultivated the religious life. In the present life, he personally realized: "Birth and death have ended, the religious life has been established, and the task has been accomplished. I've obtained true knowledge that I'll not be subject to another existence." It wasn't long after that night that he became an arhat. He was the last of the Tathagata's disciples to be extinguished before the Buddha was.

The Consolation of Ananda

382. Ananda was leaning against his seat behind the Buddha and crying uncontrollably. Weeping, he said, "How quick the Tathagata's extinguishment is! How swift the Bhagavan's extinguishment is! How fast the great Dharma falls into obscurity! The multitude of beings will decline for a long time! The world will go blind! Why is that? I've benefited from the Buddha's favor and obtained this ground of training, but I have yet to accomplish the task, and the Buddha is going to be extinguished!"

383. The Bhagavan knew this, so he asked, "Where is the monk Ananda?"

The monks told the Tathagata, "The monk Ananda is leaning against his seat behind the Buddha and crying uncontrollably. Weeping, he says, 'How quick the Tathagata's extinguishment is! How swift the Bhagavan's extinguishment is! How fast the great Dharma falls into obscurity! The multitude of beings will decline for a long time! The world will go blind! Why is that? I've benefited from the Buddha's favor and obtained this ground of training, but I have yet to accomplish the task, and the Buddha is going to be extinguished!'"

384. The Buddha told Ananda, "Stop, stop! Don't be sad! Don't cry! Since you've been serving me, your physical conduct has been kind, peerless, and measureless. Your verbal conduct has been kind … Your mental conduct has been kind, peerless, and measureless. Ananda, you've given these offering to me, the merits of which are enormous. The offerings given to gods like Mara and Brahma or to ascetics and priests aren't comparable to yours. If you simply make an effort, it won't be long before you achieve awakening."

385. The Bhagavan told the monks, "Buddhas of the past were served by disciples like Ananda, and Buddhas in the future will be served by disciples like Ananda. But the disciples who served Buddhas in the past understood them only after they were told. Now, my Ananda understands when I raise my gaze: 'The Tathagata needs this. the Bhagavan needs that.' This is Ananda's unprecedented quality. All of you, remember that.

386. "A noble wheel-turning king has four exceptional and unprecedented qualities. What are the four? When the noble king travels, he uplifts the multitude of people, who look up to him. They rejoice when they see him, and they're glad to hear his instruction. They look up at his majestic countenance without tiring of seeing it. When the noble wheel-turning king stands … sits … lies down, the country's ministers and people all come to the King. They rejoice when they see him, they're glad to hear his instruction. They look at his majestic countenance without tiring of seeing it. These are four exceptional qualities of a noble wheel-turning king.

387. "Now, my Ananda also has these four exceptional qualities. What are the four? Ananda quietly enters a group of monks, and that assembly rejoices. He teaches Dharma for that assembly, and they rejoice when they hear it. They observe his composure and listen to his Dharma teaching without tiring of him. Furthermore, Ananda quietly goes to an assembly of nuns … assembly of laymen … assembly of laywomen, and they rejoice when they see him. If he gives them a Dharma teaching, they rejoice when they hear it. They observe his composure and listen to his Dharma teaching without tiring of him. These are Ananda's four unprecedented and exceptional qualities."

Ananda's Questions

388. Ananda then bared his right shoulder and knelt on his right knee. He said to the Buddha, "Bhagavan, there are presently ascetic elders with much knowledge and who clearly understand the discourses and discipline. When those of pure virtue and exceptional conduct come to meet with the Bhagavan, I receive their reverence and personally meet and exchange greetings with them. After the Buddha's extinguishment, they won't come anymore, and I won't have any meetings with his counterparts. How will it be the same?"

389. The Buddha told Ananda, "Don't be sad! Our kinsmen will always have four things they'll remember. What are the four? First, they'll remember the Buddha's birthplace. Rejoicing and wanting to see it, remembering and not forgetting it, they'll think of it fondly. Second, they'll remember where the Buddha first awakened. Rejoicing and wanting to see it, remembering and not forgetting it, they'll think of it fondly. Third, they'll remember where the Buddha turned the Dharma wheel. Rejoicing and wanting to see it, remembering and not forgetting it, they'll think of it fondly. Fourth, they'll remember where the Buddha parinirvana-ed. Rejoicing and wanting to see it, remembering and not forgetting it, they'll think of it fondly.

390. "Ananda, after I parinirvana, those kinsmen and kinswomen will remember, 'The Buddha's virtue was thus when he was born.' 'His miraculous abilities were thus when the Buddha attained awakening.' 'The people he liberated were thus when the Buddha turned the Dharma wheel.' 'His bestowal of the Dharma was thus when the Buddha was about to be extinguished.' After visiting each of those places and traveling to pay homage at those shrines, they'll all be born in heaven when they die, aside from those who attain awakening."

391. The Buddha told Ananda, "After I parinirvana, those of the Sakya tribe who come seeking awakening should be permitted to leave home. Confer onto them the full precepts. Don't refuse them. When wanderers from different trainings come seeking awakening, permit them to leave home, too. Confer onto them the full precepts, and don't test them for four months. Why is that? They have different theories. If they are delayed a while, they're old views will arise again."

392. Ananda then knelt with his palms together in front of the Buddha. He said, "The monk Chanda is rude and obstinate. How shall we handle it after the Buddha's extinguishment?"

The Buddha told Ananda, "After I parinirvana, if that Chanda's behavior isn't agreeable and he doesn't accept admonishment, then you all should give him the silent treatment. Order the monks not to speak with him, visit him, teach him, or do chores with him."

393. Ananda again asked the Buddha, "After the Buddha parinirvana-s, how should we handle women who come to receive instruction?"

The Buddha told Ananda, "Don't give them a [personal] meeting."

394. Ananda again asked, "Supposing we do meet with them, how should it be handled?"

The Buddha said, "Don't talk with them [more than necessary]."

395. Ananda again asked, "Supposing we do have a conversation with them, how should it be handled?"

The Buddha said, "You should restrain yourself. Ananda, are you saying that after the Buddha parinirvana-s you won't be guarded anymore? That you'll lose what you rely on? Don't form this view. I became a Buddha to teach the discourses and precepts. They will be your guardian and what you rely on.

396. "Ananda, starting today, I permit the monks to dispense with the minor rules. When the senior and junior monks call each other, they should follow the rules of propriety. This way, those who've left home will be dutiful."

The Buddha Parinirvana-s

397. The Buddha told the monks, "If you have any doubts about the Buddha, Dharma, and Sangha or doubts about the path, you should be quick to ask about them. Now is the time to do it. Those who don't may regret it later. While I'm still here, I will explain these things for you."

The monks remained silent and didn't say anything.

398. The Buddha again told them, "If you have any doubts about the Buddha, Dharma, and Sangha or doubts about the path, you should be quick to ask about them. Now is the time to do it. Those who don't may regret it later. While I'm still here, I will explain these things for you."

The monks again remained quiet.

399. The Buddha again said, "If you don't dare ask questions because you're embarrassed, you should have someone you know quickly come and ask for you. Now is the time to do it. Those who don't may regret it later."

Again, the monks remained quiet.

400. Ananda said to the Buddha, "I believe this is an assembly of pure faith. Not one of these monks doubts the Buddha, Dharma, and Sangha or the path."

401. The Buddha told Ananda, "I know it myself, too, that the most junior of monks in this assembly sees the path. They aren't headed for an unpleasant destiny, and they're sure to reach the end of suffering in no more than seven rebirths." It was then that the Bhagavan gave his assurance to 1,200 disciples that they would attain the fruit of the path.

402. The Bhagavan then pulled down his upper garment to expose one of his golden arms. He then told the monks, "You should observe that a tathagata arises in the world only as often as the udumbara flower does!"

403. The Bhagavan then restated his meaning in verse:

• "With his right arm's purple gold,
The Buddha appears like the udumbara.
Past and future actions are impermanent,
They are ceased in the present with care."

404. "Therefore, monks, don't be careless! Because I wasn't careless, I brought about perfect awakening and measureless virtues myself. It was also from carefulness that I realized the impermanent existence of all things. This is the Tathagata's final teaching."

405. The Bhagavan then entered the first dhyana. Emerging from the first dhyana, he entered the second dhyana. Emerging from the second dhyana, he entered the third dhyana. Emerging from the third dhyana, he entered the fourth dhyana. Emerging from the fourth dhyana, he entered the abode of space samadhi. Emerging from the abode of space samadhi, he entered the abode of consciousness samadhi. Emerging from the abode of consciousness samadhi, he entered the abode of nothingness samadhi. Emerging from the abode of nothingness samadhi, he entered the abode with and without conception samadhi. Emerging from the abode with and without conception samadhi, he entered the cessation of conception samadhi.

406. Ananda then asked Aniruddha, "Has the Bhagavan parinirvana-ed?"

Aniruddha said, "Not yet, Ananda. The Bhagavan is now in the samadhi of the cessation of conception. I once heard it personally from the Buddha that one parinirvana-s when emerging from the fourth dhyana."

407. The Bhagavan then emerged from the samadhi of the cessation of conception and entered the samadhi of the abode with and without conception. Emerging from the samadhi of the abode with and without conception, he entered the samadhi of the abode of nothingness. Emerging from the samadhi of the abode of nothingness, he entered the samadhi of the abode of consciousness. Emerging from the samadhi of the abode of consciousness, he entered the samadhi of the abode of space. Emerging from the samadhi of the abode of space, he entered the fourth dhyana. Emerging from the fourth dhyana, he entered the third dhyana. Emerging from the third dhyana, he entered the second dhyana. Emerging from the second dhyana, he entered the first dhyana. Emerging from the first dhyana, he entered the second dhyana. Emerging from the second dhyana, he entered the third dhyana. Emerging from the third dhyana, he entered the fourth dhyana. Emerging from the fourth dhyana, the Buddha parinirvana-ed.

408. At that moment, there was a great earthquake that terrified the gods and the world's people. A radiance brighter than sun or moon's light lit up even places of complete darkness. The beings there each saw each other in that great radiance. They said, "Other people live here! Other people live here!" That light was everywhere and greater than the light of the gods.

409. The Trayastrimsa gods in the sky scattered mandara flowers and udumbara, padma, kumuda, and pundarika flowers on the Tathagata and then on the assembly. The gods also scattered sandalwood powder on the Buddha and on the great assembly.

Eulogies to the Buddha

410. After the Buddha parinirvana-ed, the King of the Brahma Heaven spoke in verse from up in the sky:

• "All benighted living things
Will discard their aggregates.
The Buddha was the unsurpassed sage
Who had no equal in the world.
• The Tathagata, the great noble hero,
Had fearlessness and miraculous power.
The Bhagavan should've remained longer,
But now he has parinirvana-ed."

411. Sakra the Lord of Gods also composed a verse:

• "Aggregates and actions aren't permanent,
They're simply things that arise and pass away.
There's no one born who doesn't die,
The Buddha's cessation of this is happiness."

412. King Vaisravana also composed a verse:

• "Trees of fortune in a great forest,
Unsurpassed is the fortune of the sal.
The Excellent Field accepted offerings
And was extinguished between two trees."

413. Aniruddha also composed a verse:

• "Residing in the unconditioned,
The Buddha breathes no more.
Having come from quiescence,
His spiritual brilliance has disappeared."

414. The monk Upamana also composed a verse:

• "It wasn't with a negligent attitude
That he cultivated the higher wisdom.
Unattached and stained by nothing,
The unsurpassed sage renounced love."

415. The monk Ananda also composed a verse:

• "Gods and humans felt fearful,
Had goosebumps under their clothes.
When all was accomplished,
The Perfectly Awakened was extinguished."

416. The spirit Kumbhira also composed a verse:

• "The world has lost its guardian,
The masses left forever blind in the dark.
No more will they see the Perfectly Awakened,
The hero of humans, and lion of the Sakyas!"

417. Vajrapani also composed a verse:

• "In the present life and the next,
The Brahma world gods and humans
Will never again look upon
The hero of humans and lion of the Sakyas!"

418. The Buddha's mother Maya also composed a verse:

• "The Buddha was born in Lumbini Park,
And his path was wide and flowing.
He returned to his homeland
And discarded this impermanent body forever."

419. The spirit between that pair of trees also composed a verse:

• "What season is this again?
Untimely flowers are scattered on the Buddha!
Possessing the virtue of the ten powers,
The Tathagata chose extinguishment."

420. The spirit of the sal forest also composed a verse:

• "This is a land of marvelous delight,
For this is where the Buddha grew up.
Then, he turned the Dharma wheel
And went on to this extinguishment."

421. The four god kings also composed a verse:

• "The Tathagata with unsurpassed wisdom
Always taught the theory of impermanence.
He freed the masses from their bonds of suffering,
And finally entered quiescence."

422. The King of the Trayastrimsa Heaven also composed a verse:

• "For hundreds of thousands of millions of eons,
He sought to achieve the unsurpassed path.
He freed the masses from their bonds of suffering,
And finally entered quiescence."

423. The King of the Yama Heaven also composed a verse:

• "This was the final robe
Wrapped around the Tathagata's body.
The Buddha has been extinguished,
So where will his robe be donated?"

424. The King of the Tusita Heaven also composed a verse:

• "This was his final body,
His aggregates and elements have ceased.
Without sorrowful or joyful notions,
He's no longer troubled by old age and death."

425. The King of the Nirmanarati Heaven also composed a verse:

• "This was the Buddha's last night
Laying there on his right side.
Here in the sal tree forest,
The lion of the Sakyas is extinguished."

426. The King of the Paranirmitavasavartin also composed a verse:

• "The world is forever decaying in darkness,
The king of stars, the moon, has suddenly set.
Obscured by impermanence,
The great wisdom sun is forever blotted out."

427. A certain monk also composed verses:

• "This body being like a foam bubble,
How will something so fragile be happy?
The Buddha had attained the vajra body,
Which still was impermanent and changing.
• The vajra bodies of buddhas
All return to impermanence, too.
They cease quickly like a little snow;
Why hope for anything else to remain?"

Paying Last Respects

428. The Buddha had parinirvana-ed. The monks lamented his death. They threw themselves to the ground, twisting and crying loudly. They couldn't control themselves. Sobbing, they said, "How quick the Tathagata's extinguishment was! How swift the Bhagavan's extinguishment was! How fast the great Dharma falls into obscurity! The multitude of beings will decline for a long time! The world will go blind!"

429. They were like a large tree pulled up by the roots with its branches chopped off. They were like a cut snake that twists, turns, and writhes in a frenzy, not knowing where to go. The monks were likewise as they lamented his death. They threw themselves to the ground, twisting and crying loudly. They couldn't control themselves. Sobbing, they said, "How quick the Tathagata's extinguishment was! How swift the Bhagavan's extinguishment was! How fast the great Dharma falls into obscurity! The multitude of beings will decline for a long time! The world will go blind!"

430. The elder Aniruddha then told the monks, "Stop, stop! Don't cry! There are gods above us. They might consider it strange and fault you for it!"

The monks asked Aniruddha, "How many gods are there above us?"

431. Aniruddha said, "They fill the sky. Who could count them all? They are roaming around the sky, distraught, crying, and beating their breasts. With tears streaming, they say, 'How quick the Tathagata's extinguishment was! How swift the Bhagavan's extinguishment was! How fast the great Dharma falls into obscurity! The multitude of beings will decline for a long time! The world will go blind!'

432. "They're like a large tree pulled up by the roots with its branches chopped off. They're like a cut snake that twists, turns, and writhes in a frenzy, not knowing where to go. The gods are likewise. They're roaming around the sky, distraught, crying, and beating their breasts. With tears streaming, they say, 'How quick the Tathagata's extinguishment was! How swift the Bhagavan's extinguishment was! How fast the great Dharma falls into obscurity! The multitude of beings will decline for a long time! The world will go blind!'"

433. The monks discussed the teaching throughout the night until daybreak. Aniruddha told Ananda, "Perhaps you should go to the city and tell the Mallas, 'The Buddha has been extinguished. If you'd like to give offerings, now would be a good time to do it.'"

434. Ananda got up, bowed at the Buddha's feet, and then led another monk to the city, crying as they went. They saw a group of 500 Mallas gathered in one place for some minor reason. The Mallas saw Ananda coming and they got up to watch him approached. After bowing at his feet and standing aside, they said to Ananda, "Why have you come this morning?"

Ananda replied, "Now, I've come here to benefit all of you. You should know that the Tathagata was extinguished last night. If you'd like to give offerings, now is a good time to do it."

435. After hearing him say this, all the Mallas lamented loudly. Wiping their tears, they said, "The Buddha parinirvana-ed so fast! The world went blind so swiftly!"

Ananda responded, "Stop, stop! Gentlemen, don't cry! The desire for this conditioned life to not change is impossible. As the Buddha said before, 'What's born has its death, and what comes together also falls apart. All that we love is impermanent.'"

436. The Mallas then said to each other, "We each should return home, pick out fragrant flowers and musical instruments, and then go quickly to that pair of trees to give offerings to the Buddha's remains! After a day, we'll put his remains on a bed. Young Malla men will carry the bed at each corner. We'll carry banners and parasols, burn incense, scatter flowers, and play music as offerings. We'll enter the city's east gate and pass through neighborhood after neighborhood so that people can give offerings. Afterward, we'll exit through the west gate, take the bed to an elevated place, and cremate him there."

437. Once they had had this discussion, the Mallas each returned to their homes and picked out fragrant flowers and musical instruments for their offerings. They then went to that place between a pair of trees to give offerings to the Buddha's remains. After a day, his remains were placed on a bed, but when the Mallas [attempted to] lift the bed, none of them could manage it.

438. Aniruddha then said to the Mallas, "Stop, all of you! Don't exhaust yourselves needlessly. The gods are going to lift the bed."

The Mallas asked, "What do the gods have in mind? They're going to lift this bed?"

439. Aniruddha said, "You were going to give offerings of fragrant flowers and music to the Buddha's remains. After a day, you would place the remains on a bed and have young Malla men carry it at each corner. You would carry banners and parasols, burn incense, scatter flowers, and play music as offerings. You then would enter the city's east gate and pass through neighborhood after neighborhood so that people can make offerings. Afterward, you would exit through the west gate, take the bed to an elevated place, and cremate him there.

440. "But the gods wish to leave his remains here for seven days to give offerings of incense, flowers, and music and to pay our respects. Afterward, the Buddha's remains will be placed on a bed. Young Malla men will carry the bed at each corner. You'll carry banners and parasols, scatter flowers, burn incense, and play music as offerings to his remains. You'll enter the city's east gate and go through neighborhood after neighborhood so that people can give offerings. Afterward, you'll exit through the north gate, ford the Nairanjana River, and go to the Heavenly Crown Temple. He'll be cremated there. This is what gods above want, so they are not allowing the bed to be moved."

The Mallas said, "Oh, that sounds good! We'll follow the wishes of the gods."

441. The Mallas then said to each other, "We should go to the city first and put the streets in the neighborhoods in order. We'll sweep them and burn incense. Then, we can come back here to give offerings to his remains for seven days."

442. The Mallas then went together to the city and put the streets in order, going from neighborhood to neighborhood. They swept up refuse and burned incense. When they were finished, they left the city and returned to the place between a pair of trees. They gave offerings of incense, flowers, and music to the Buddha's remains. When the sun set after seven days had passed, they placed the Buddha's remains on a bed. Young Malla men carried it at each corner. A crowd of Mallas carried banners and parasols, burned incense, scattered flowers, and played music. They followed the bed bearers in front and back, walking peacefully as they went.

443. The Trayastrimsa gods scattered mandara flowers, utpala flowers, padma flowers, kumuda flowers, pundarika flowers, and heavenly sandalwood powder onto the Buddha's remains, such that it filled up the roadway. The gods played music, and yaksa spirits sang songs.

444. The Mallas said to each other, "Let's set aside our human music in favor of the music the gods are playing as offerings to the Buddha's remains."

445. The Mallas carrying the bed made their way to the city and entered the east gate. They stopped at intersections, where they burned incense, scattered flowers, and played music as offerings. There was then the Malla woman *Royi who was a believer in the Buddha's path. She carried a gold flower in her hand as large as a cartwheel, which she gave as an offering to his remains.

446. There was an elderly grandmother who raised her voice in praise, "These Mallas will get a great reward! For the whole nation delights in giving the final offerings to the Tathagata after his extinguishment!"

Interment of the Buddha

447. After the Mallas had given their offerings, they left through the north gate, forded the Nairanjana River, and went to Heavenly Crown Temple. They placed the bed on the ground and told Ananda, "What else should we give as an offering?"

Ananda responded, "I personally heard this from the Buddha, personally received this instruction from the Buddha: When we inter his remains, it should be as a noble wheel-turning king is interred."

448. Again, they asked Ananda, "How is a noble wheel-turning king interred?"

449. He replied, "'This is the way of interring a noble [wheel-turning] king: First, his body is bathed in fragrant water. He's wrapped all around with fresh cotton. Next, he's wrapped in 500 layers of cloth. His body is placed in a gold coffin and sesame oil is poured onto it. The gold coffin is lifted and placed in a second larger iron coffin. Sandalwood incense is next layered outside of that coffin. Firewood of many fragrances is piled on top of fine robes, and then he is cremated. When it's done, his remains are placed in a shrine built at a crossroads. It's exterior is hung with silks, and people from the country travel to see the Dharma king's shrine. They think longingly about the correct teaching that benefited many people.

450. "'Ananda, when you inter me, first bathe my body in fragrant water and then wrap it all around with fresh cotton. Wrap it in 500 layers of cloth, place my body inside a gold coffin and pour sesame oil on it. Lift the gold coffin and place it in a second larger iron coffin. Next, layer sandalwood incense on the outside of that coffin. Pile firewood of many fragrances on top of fine robes, and then cremate me. When it's done, place my remains in a shrine built at a crossroads. Hang its exterior with silks, and have people from the country travel to see the Buddha's shrine. They'll think longingly about the Tathagata, the Dharma king, and his awakened teaching. While they're alive, they will get merits and rewards, and they'll be born up in heaven when they die, aside from those who attain awakening.'"

451. The Mallas then said to each other, "Let's go back to the city and fetch the supplies for his interment, such as incense, flowers, cotton, coffins, fragrant oil, and white cloth."

452. The Mallas then went to the city together, arranged the supplies for the interment, and returned to Heavenly Crown Temple. They bathed the Buddha's body in fragrant water and then wrapped it all around with fresh cotton. They wrapped it in 500 layers of cloth, placed his body inside a gold coffin, and poured fragrant oil on it. They lifted the gold coffin and placed it in a second larger iron coffin. Next, they layered sandalwood on the outside of that coffin. They piled firewood of many fragrances on top of it.

Cremation of the Buddha

453. The great minister of the Mallas named *Royi carried a large torch and tried to light the Buddha's firewood, but the fire wouldn't start. Other prominent Mallas came forward to light the wood, but again the fire wouldn't start.

454. Aniruddha then said to the Mallas, "Stop, stop! Gentlemen, you won't be able to light it. The fire goes out and doesn't burn because that's what the gods want."

455. The Mallas asked, "Why are the gods preventing the fire from lighting?"

Aniruddha said, "The gods would like Mahakasyapa to bring 500 disciples from Pava. At the moment, they are halfway here on the road. Don't cremate him yet. They want to look at the Buddha's body. The gods know his wish, so they are preventing the fire from lighting."

456. The Mallas again said, "Please let them get what they want."

457. Mahakasyapa then was leading those 500 disciples from Pava. As they walked on the road, they encountered a Nirgrantha carrying a mandara flower in his hand. When he saw the Nirgrantha, Mahakasyapa stopped him and asked, "Where are you coming from?"

He replied, "I'm coming from Kusinagara."

458. Kasyapa again asked, "Do you know about our teacher?"

"I do."

459. "Do you know where he is?"

"It's been seven days since his extinguishment. I am going there to give this heavenly flower."

460. When Kasyapa heard this, he became depressed and unhappy. When the other 500 monks heard the Buddha was extinguished, they cried loudly, twisting, turning, and wailing. They couldn't control themselves. Wiping their tears, they said, "How quick the Tathagata's extinguishment was! How swift the Bhagavan's extinguishment was! How fast the great Dharma falls into obscurity! The multitude of beings will decline for a long time! The world will go blind!" They were like a large tree pull up by the roots with its branches chopped off. They were like a cut snake that twists, turns, and writhes in a frenzy, not knowing where to go.

461. There was a Sakya man in his assembly named Upananda. He stopped the monks by saying, "Don't be sad! The Bhagavan is extinguished. We're free now! He was always saying, 'You must do this; you mustn't do that.' From now on, we can do as we like."

462. When Kasyapa heard that, he was depressed and unhappy. He told the monks, "Quickly, get your robes and bowls. We'll need to get to that pair of trees before he is cremated if we are to see the Buddha."

463. When they heard what he said, the monks rose from their seats and followed Kasyapa as he went to Kusinagara. They forded the Nairanjana River, arrived at Heavenly Crown Temple, and went to Ananda. After exchanging greetings, they stood to one side. Kasyapa said to Ananda, "We would like to see the remains before he is cremated. Would it be possible to see him?"

464. Ananda answered, "Although he hasn't been cremated yet, it'll be difficult to see him. Why is that? The Buddha's body was bathed in fragrant water and then wrapped all around with fresh cotton. They wrapped it in 500 layers of cloth and placed his body inside a gold coffin, which was placed in an iron coffin. They layered sandalwood on the outside of that coffin. It'll be difficult to view the Buddha's body because of that."

465. Kasyapa made his request three times, and Ananda answered as he did the first time: "… It will be difficult to view the Buddha's body because of that."

466. Mahakasyapa went over to the fragrant firewood. He uncovered the Buddha's feet inside the double casket, and they had changed color. Seeing that, Kasyapa was shocked. He asked Ananda, "The Buddha's body is golden. Why have his feet changed?"

Ananda replied, "There was an elderly mother earlier who was lamenting and touched the Buddha's feet with her hand, and her tears were on them. That's the only reason they changed color."

467. Hearing this, Kasyapa was even more unhappy. He went to the fragrant firewood and bowed to the Buddha's remains. The fourfold assembly and the gods above also bowed together at the same time. Thereupon, the Buddha's feet suddenly disappeared.

468. Mahakasyapa circled the firewood three times and composed these verses:

• "Buddhas are unparalleled,
Their noble wisdom is inestimable.
To the unequalled noble wisdom,
I now bow my head.
• The unparalleled ascetic
Was supreme and flawless.
The Muni who broke the branch of craving,
That great sage is honored by gods and humans.
To the supreme hero of humans,
I now bow my head.
• His ascetic practice had no counterpart,
He taught people to part with attachment.
He was unstained and undirtied;
I bow my head to the Unsurpassed Sage.
• The three defilements being ended,
He was happy practicing in tranquility.
To the Peerless and Companionless,
I bow my head to the Ten-Powered Sage.
• The Well Gone One was the highest,
The sage honored among bipeds.
Awakened to the calm of the four truths,
I bow my head to the Peaceful Sage.
• Unsurpassed among ascetics,
He led the perverse to what's right.
The Bhagavan having been extinguished,
I bow my head to the profound path.
• Without passion and flawless,
His mind was tranquil and settled.
He removed the contaminants,
So I bow my head to the Undefiled Sage.
• The Wisdom Eye had no limit,
And the Immortal had power and fame.
He was extraordinarily hard to conceive;
I bow my head to the Unequalled One.
• Roaring like a lion,
He lived in the forest fearlessly.
He defeated Mara and transcended the four clans,
Therefore, I bow my head to him."

469. Mahakasyapa possessed great majesty and had perfected the four kinds of eloquence. After saying these verses, the Buddha's firewood spontaneously ignited. The Mallas said to each other, "Now, the fire is burning fiercely! The fire grows so much, it'll be difficult to stop; it'll cremate his remains until they disappear! Perhaps we should douse it with water?"

470. Then, the spirit of the sal trees was in the firewood, and it believed in the Buddha's path. It immediately used it's miraculous power to douse the fire burning the Buddha's firewood.

471. The Mallas again said to each other, "There are fragrant flowers for twenty yojanas left and right of Kusinagara. We should collect all of them and offer them to the Buddha's remains!" They immediately went to the city and picked those fragrant flowers to use as offerings.

Division of the Buddha's Remains

472. The Malla people of Pava heard that the Buddha had parinirvana-ed between a pair of trees. They thought to themselves, "Now, we ought to go and get a portion of his remains. Ours was his homeland, after all! We'll build a shrine and give offerings to it."

473. Those Mallas of Pava raised from their vassals a fourfold army consisting of elephant troops, horse troops, chariot troops, and foot troops. They went to Kusinagara and sent an envoy. They said, "We've heard that the Buddha, the Bhagavan, stopped and has been extinguished. He was our teacher, too, and dear to our hearts. We are coming to request a portion of his bones. We will build a shrine in his homeland and give offerings to it."

474. The King of Kusinagara replied, "Yes, yes! Indeed, it's as you say. However, it was in this land that the Bhagavan fell ill, and it was here that he parinirvana-ed. The country's officials and people gave their own offerings. You gentlemen have come from far away, but you cannot have a portion of his remains."

475. Then, an assembly of Bula people from Calakalpa, an assembly of Kraudya people from Ramagrama, an assembly of Brahmana people from Visnudvipa, an assembly of Sakya people from Kapilavastu, an assembly of Licchavi people from Vaisali, and King Ajatasatru from Magadha heard that the Tathagata had chosen to parinirvana between a pair of trees near Kusinagara. They thought to themselves, "Now, we ought to go and seek a portion of his remains."

476. The kings of these countries like Ajatasatru then raised from their vassals fourfold armies consisting of elephant troops, horse troops, chariot troops, and foot troops, and they advanced to cross the Ganga River. They ordered the priest Dhumragotra, "Go to Kusinagara in my name and put this question to the Mallas: 'Has life been easy? Have your travels been difficult? We extend every respect to you gentlemen. We're friendly neighbors who're never in conflict. We've heard that the Tathagata chose to parinirvana in your country, sir. Only the unsurpassed sage was our true deity, so we've traveled from far away to request a portion of his bones. We'll take them back to our homelands and build shrines for giving offerings to them. If you were to give this to us, it would enrich the whole country, and we'd share that with you, sir.'"

477. Accepting the king's instruction, the priest Dhumragotra went to that city and said to the Mallas, "The great king of Magadha asks immeasurably: 'Has life been easy? Have your travels been difficult? We extend every respect to you gentlemen. We're friendly neighbors who're never in conflict. We've heard that the Tathagata chose to parinirvana in your country, sir. Only the unsurpassed sage was our true deity, so we've traveled from far away to request a portion of his bones. We'll take them back to our homelands and build shrines for giving offerings to them. If you were to give this to us, it would enrich the whole country, and we'd share that with you, sir.'"

478. The Mallas replied to Dhumragotra, "Yes, yes! Indeed, it's as you say, sir. However, it was in this land that the Bhagavan fell ill, and it was here that he parinirvana-ed. The country's officials and people gave their own offerings. You gentlemen have come from far away, but you cannot have a portion of his remains."

479. The kings of those countries then assembled their ministers, and held a discussion. They composed these verses:

• "We've spoken peacefully,
Having traveled far and bowed.
We humbly asked for our portion,
But you won't share them.
• Our fourfold army is here;
They don't begrudge their lives.
If we can't get it with reason,
We'll take it by force."

480. The ministers of Kusinagara assembled and held a discussion on the matter. They composed these verses in answer:

• "You gentleman have traveled far,
And you've bowed in humility.
The Tathagata's remains,
We can't bring ourselves grant you.
• Those armies that you've raised
Are possessed by us as well.
They'll fight to the death
Before they'll have any fear."

481. The priest Dhumragotra announced to the assembly, "Gentlemen, we've accepted the Buddha's instruction for so long. We've recited the Dharma's words and our hearts follow his humane education. All sentient beings are constantly mindful of him and desire peace. Would they rather us fight over the Buddha's remains and hurt each other? They would want the Tathagata's remains to be of broad benefit. We should simply divide his remains now."

482. The assembly all hailed this as good, and they immediately discussed this: "Who is qualified to divide them up?"

483. They said, "The priest Dhumragotra is a humane sage and balanced. We could have him divide them up."

484. The kings then commanded Dhumragotra, "You will divide up the Buddha's remains equally into eight portions."

485. Dhumragotra heard the kings say this and went to the remains. He bowed his head to them deeply, and then picked up the Buddha's upper teeth. He divided them and put them aside. He sent someone to deliver the Buddha's upper teeth to King Ajatasatru.

486. He told the courier, "Using my name, go up to the great king and say, 'Has life been easy? Have your travels been difficult? Is the wait for the Buddha's remains taking forever? Now, I've dispatched his courier to deliver the Tathagata's upper teeth. They are worthy of offerings. I hope that the dividing of the remains will be completed by the time the morning star rises. I will present them myself.'"

487. The messenger accepted Dhumragotra's statement and went to king Ajatasatru. He said, "The priest Dhumragotra has sent me to ask immeasurably, 'Has life been easy? Have your travels been difficult? Is the wait for the Buddha's remains taking forever? Now, I've been dispatched to deliver the Tathagata's upper teeth. They are worthy of offerings. I hope that the dividing of the remains will be completed by the time the morning star rises. I will present them myself.'"

488. Dhumragotra then received one stone [weight of remains] and divided them with a jar. Once the eight portions were equal, he told the assembled people, "Using this vase, please see that the remains are being given out fairly. You can build your own shrines to house them and give offerings to them."

489. They said, "That's wise! When the time comes, we'll permit the distribution together."

490. Someone from the village of Pippala said to the assembled people, "I beg to have the charcoal from the ground. We'll build a shrine and give offerings to it!"

"We'll give it to you."

The Eleven Shrines to the Buddha

491. The people of Kusinagara received their share of the remains. They then built a shrine in their land and gave offerings to it.

492. The people of Pava, Calakalpa, Ramagrama, Visnudvipa, Kapilavastu, Vaisali, and King Ajatasatru of Magadha received their shares of the remains. They each returned to their country, built a shrine, and gave offerings to it. The priest Dhumragotra brought the vase for building a shrine. The person from Pippala took their portion to their land. They built a shrine to the charcoal of the cremation.

493. At the time, eight shrines were built for the Tathagata's remains, a ninth shrine for the vase, a tenth shrine for the charcoal, and an eleventh shrine for hair from the Buddha's birth.

Final Eulogy

494. On what day was the Buddha born? On what day did he achieved awakening? On what day did he parinirvana? He was born when the star Pusya rose. He left home when the star Pusya rose. He achieved awakening when the star Pusya rose. He parinirvana-ed when the star Pusya rose.

• When was the sage of bipeds born?
When did he escape the jungle of suffering?
When did he find the unsurpassed path?
When did he enter the city of nirvana?
• The sage of bipeds was born when Pusya rose.
He escaped the jungle when Pusya rose.
He found the unsurpassed path when Pusya rose.
He entered the city of Nirvana when Pusya rose.
• On the eighth day, the Tathagata was born.
On the eighth day, the Buddha left home.
On the eighth day, he achieved awakening.
On the eighth day, he chose to parinirvana.
• On the eighth day, the sage of bipeds was born.
On the eighth day, he escaped the jungle.
On the eighth day, he found the unsurpassed path.
On the eighth day, he entered the city of nirvana.
• In the second month, the Tathagata was born.
In the second month, the Buddha left home.
In the second month, he achieved awakening.
On the eighth day, he chose to parinirvana.
• In the second month, the sage of bipeds was born.
In the second month, he escaped the jungle.
In the second month, he found the unsurpassed path.
On the eighth day, he entered the city of nirvana.
• The sal flowers were blooming,
Shining with a all sorts of light.
In his original birthplace,
The Tathagata chose to parinirvana.
• The Great Compassionate One's parinirvana
Is praised and honored by many people.
Having entirely forded terrible things,
He decided to parinirvana.

DA 3 GOVINDA

(DN 19) [T 1.30b11]

(The direct parallel for this sutra is DN 19. There's also an alternate version found in the Mahavastu and a later Chinese translation (T 8).)

(A gandharva pays the Buddha a visit to relate to him some happenings in the Trayastrimsa Heaven, and he tells the legend of Govinda through Great Brahma Kumara, who told the story at a meeting of gods. Great Govinda, who left home to live the religious life with a huge entourage, is revealed to have been a past life of the Buddha.)

1. Thus I have heard: One time, the Buddha was staying on Mount Grdhrakuta near Rajagrha. He was accompanied by a large assembly of 1,250 monks.

Pancasikha Visits the Buddha

2. During the quiet of the night when there are no people, the gandharva Pancasikha came to the Buddha, illuminating Mount Grdhrakuta with his radiance. After bowing his head at the Buddha's feet, he stood to one side. Pancasikha then said to the Buddha, "Yesterday, the king of the Brahma Heaven went to the Trayastrimsa Heaven and had a conversation with Lord Sakra. I personally overheard them. Shall I tell the Bhagavan what they said?"

The Buddha said, "You may tell me if you like."

3. Pancasikha said, "One time, the Trayastrimsa gods gathered in the Dharma Meeting Hall and held a meeting. The four god kings were each sitting in their places. God king Dhrtarastra sat to the east and faced west with Lord Sakra in front of him. God king Virudhaka sat to the south and faced north with Lord Sakra in front of him. God king Virupaksa sat to the west and faced east with Lord Sakra in front of him. God king Vaisravana sat to the north and faced south with Lord Sakra in front of him. The four god kings were seated first, and then I was seated after them.

4. "There were other great gods present who had purely cultivated the religious life with the Buddha. They had been born in the Trayastrimsa Heaven when their lives ended, which caused the five virtues of those gods to increase. These were 1. the lifespan of gods, 2. the form of gods, 3. the fame of gods, 4. the pleasure of gods, and 5. the majesty of gods.

5. "The Trayastrimsa gods danced and rejoiced, saying, 'The host of gods increases, and the host of asuras decreases!' Sakra the Lord of Gods noticed the Trayastrimsa gods were rejoicing, so he composed these verses:

• "'The gods of the Trayastrimsa
And Lord Sakra are celebrating!
Homage to the Tathagata,
The king of the highest teaching!
• The gods get their shape and fortunes
Of life, form, name, pleasure, and majesty.
They trained in the Buddha's religious life,
So they've been reborn in this place.
• Again, there are all these gods
With radiant forms so glorious.
The Buddha's wise disciples
Born here are the most excellent.
• The Trayastrimsa gods and their lord
Consider their own happiness here.
Homage to the Tathagata,
The king of the highest teaching!'

The Buddha's Eight Unequalled Qualities

6. "After the Trayastrimsa gods heard these verses, their rejoicing was redoubled. They couldn't control themselves. 'The host of gods is increasing, and the host of asuras is decreasing!' Sakra the Lord of Gods saw the Trayastrimsa gods rejoicing and being merry, so he addressed them, 'Gentlemen, would you like to hear about the Tathagata's eight unequalled qualities?'

"The Trayastrimsa gods said, 'We would like to hear it!'

7. "Lord Sakra replied, "Listen closely, listen closely! Consider it well.

8. "'Gentlemen, the Tathagata, Arhat, and Completely Awakened One has perfected the ten epithets. I've not seen a Tathagata, Arhat, and Completely Awakened One in the past, future, or present perfect the ten epithets like the Buddha has.

9. "'The Buddha's Dharma is sublime and a good exposition of the wise person's training. I've not seen a Tathagata, Arhat, and Completely Awakened One in the past, future, or present with a sublime teaching like that of the Buddha.

10. "'The Buddha awakened himself as a result of this teaching. Without any obstacle to his understanding, he enjoys himself. I've not seen a Tathagata, Arhat, and Completely Awakened One in the past, future, or present awaken themselves with this teaching and have no obstacle to their understanding like the Buddha has.

11. "'Gentlemen, after awakening himself with this teaching, the Buddha reveals the way to Nirvana and the gradual approach and entry into extinguishment. It's like the Ganga River and the Yamuna River. Those two rivers flow into each other and then enter the ocean. The Buddha is likewise. He reveals the way to Nirvana and the gradual approach and entry into extinguishment. I've not seen a Tathagata, Arhat, and Completely Awakened One in the past, future, or present reveal the way to Nirvana like the Buddha does.

12. "'Gentlemen, the Tathagata has achieved a following of warriors, priests, householders, and ascetics. Wise is the following achieved by the Tathagata. I've not seen a Tathagata, Arhat, and Completely Awakened One in the past, future, or present achieve a following like the Buddha has.

13. "'Gentlemen, the Tathagata has achieved a great assembly known as monks, nuns, laymen, and laywomen. I've not seen a Tathagata, Arhat, and Completely Awakened One in the past, future, or present accomplish a great assembly like the Buddha has.

14. "'Gentlemen, the Tathagata's words and actions correspond. He does what he says, and he says what he does. Thus, he has achieved one teaching and the next. I've not seen a Tathagata, Arhat, and Completely Awakened One in the past, future, or present whose words and actions correspond and achieve one teaching and the next like the Buddha.

15. "'Gentlemen, the Tathagata has benefited many and made many happy. He bestows these blessings to gods and humans out of compassion. I've not seen a Tathagata, Arhat, and Completely Awakened One in the past, future, or present benefit many and made many happy like the Buddha has.

16. "'Gentlemen, these are the Tathagata's eight unequalled qualities.'

17. "The Trayastrimsa gods then said, 'Whenever there are eight Buddhas who arise in the world, the host of gods would increase greatly, and the host of asuras would diminish!'

18. "The Trayastrimsa gods also said, 'Setting aside eight Buddhas, even if seven, six … two Buddhas were to arise in the world, the host of gods would increase greatly, and the host of asuras would diminish. How would it be if there were eight Buddhas?'

19. "Sakra the Lord of Gods told the Trayastrimsa gods, 'I've heard it from the Buddha, personally received it from him, that it's impossible for two Buddhas to arise in the world at the same time. If the Tathagata simply remained in the world for a long time, he would have compassion for many and benefit many. Gods and humans would win their peace. The host of gods would increase greatly, and the host of asuras would diminish.'"

Great Brahma Kumara Arrives

20. Pancasikha said to the Buddha, "Bhagavan, having gathered up in the Dharma Meeting Hall, the Trayastrimsa gods conversed, considered, weighed, and investigated what instructions to issue. Afterward, the four god kings were given their orders. When each accepted their instructions, four god kings took their seats. Not long after they sat down, there was a very unusual light that shined in the four directions.

21. "The Trayastrimsa gods saw this light and were bewildered by it. 'Now, this is an unusual light! Isn't this strange?'

22. "Those great spirits and gods who possessed majesty were also surprised. 'Now, this is an unusual light! Isn't this strange?'

23. "'King Great Brahma then appeared in the form of a child. His head had a five-pointed topknot, and he stood in the air above the assembly of gods. His handsomeness was far beyond that of the assembly. His body was purple gold in color, and his radiance outshined that of the gods.

24. "'The Trayastrimsa gods didn't get up to greet him, nor did they pay their respects. They didn't invite him to sit, either. When Brahma Kumara went and took a seat, [the god at that] seat was delighted like a warrior of a water-anointed lineage celebrating and rejoicing when he ascends to the throne. Soon after sitting, Brahma again transformed himself into the shape of a child whose head was crowned with a five-pointed topknot, and he sat in the sky above the great assembly. He was like a hero sitting securely on his throne, lofty and unmoving.

25. "'Then he spoke in verse:

• "'The gods of the Trayastrimsa
And Lord Sakra are celebrating!
Homage to the Tathagata,
The king of the highest teaching!
• The gods get their shape and fortunes
Of life, form, name, pleasure, and majesty.
They trained in the Buddha's religious life,
So they've been reborn in this place.
• Again, there are all these gods
With radiant forms so glorious.
The Buddha's wise disciples
Born here are still more excellent.
• The Trayastrimsa gods and their lord
Consider their own happiness here.
Homage to the Tathagata,
The king of the highest teaching!'

26. "The Trayastrimsa gods said to [Great Brahma] Kumara, 'When we heard Lord Sakra declare the eight unequalled qualities of the Tathagata, we rejoiced and danced. We couldn't control ourselves!'

27. "Brahma Kumara said to the Trayastrimsa gods, 'What are the eight unequalled qualities of the Tathagata? I'd also like to hear it!'

28. "The gods and Lord Sakra then explained the eight unequalled qualities of the Tathagata for Kumara. After the Trayastrimsa gods and Kumara had listened to that teaching, their rejoicing was redoubled. They couldn't control themselves. 'The host of gods increases, and the host of asuras decreases!'

The Legend of Great Govinda

29. "Kumara then saw the gods' rejoicing and merry-making increase. He then told the Trayastrimsa gods, 'Would you like to hear about one unequalled quality [of the Tathagata]?'

"The gods said, 'Excellent! We'd like to hear it.'

30. "Kumara told them, 'Those of you who'd like to hear it: Listen closely, Listen closely! I'll tell it to you.'

31. "He told the gods, 'In the past when he was a bodhisattva, the Tathagata was born intelligent and quite knowledgeable. Gentlemen, you should know that long ago in the distant past, there was a king in the world named Disampati, and his first prince was named Renu. The king also had a minister named Govinda, and that minister had a son named Jyotipala. Prince Renu was his friend, and they were accompanied by six warrior ministers who were also friends.

32. "'When King Disampati wanted to retreat to his palace and have fun and frolic there, he entrusted the affairs of state to his minister Govinda. He would then go into the palace and enjoy the festivities and partake of the five desires.

33. "'Wanting to put the affairs of state in order, the minister Govinda would first consult his son about it, and afterward he'd make his decision. He would also consult his son when there was a disciplinary matter.

34. "'Later, Govinda's life suddenly ended. When King Disampati heard that his life had ended, he felt sorry and saddened. Upset, he said, "Oh! How could I lose such a skilled administrator?"

35. "'The prince Renu thought to himself, "The loss of Govinda has made the king miserable. Now's a good time for me to go and console the king. I can't let the funeral make him more depressed. Why is that? Govinda had a son named Jyotipala who's intelligence and learning go beyond his father's. He can take over managing the affairs of state now."

36. "'Prince Renu visited the king and presented the above idea to his father. After listening to what the prince had to say, he entrusted [the affairs of state] to Jyotipala. "Now, I place you in your father's stead and transfer his office to you." After that office was transferred to Jyotipala, the king retired to the palace, again entrusting the affairs of state [to his minister].

37. "'The indications of Jyotipala's governance were bright. He knew what his father had known before, and he also knew things his father hadn't known. His renown spread until it was heard across the ocean. Everyone under heaven called him "The Great Govinda."

38. "'Great Govinda thought afterward, "Now, King Disampati is getting on in years. There isn't much left of his life. If the prince succeeded the king, there wouldn't be difficulties. I'd better first go tell the six warrior ministers, 'Now, King Disampati is getting on in years. There isn't much left of his life. If the prince were to succeed the king, there wouldn't be difficulties. The king's land would also be divided between you gentlemen. Don't forget each other on the day of his ascension.'"

39. "'Great Govinda then went to the six warrior ministers and told them, 'Gentlemen, you should know that King Disampati is getting on in years. There isn't much left of his life. If the prince succeeded the king, there wouldn't be difficulties. You noble men may go and tell the prince this plan. "We've known Your Majesty since he was small. When Your Majesty suffers, we suffer, and when he's happy, we're happy. Now, the king is declining with old age. There isn't much left of his life. If the prince were to succeed the king, there wouldn't be difficulties. Should Your Majesty ascend the throne, we'll also be given his lands."

40. "'After they heard what he said, the six warrior ministers visited the prince and told him the above. The prince replied, "If I were to ascend the throne, how will the kingdom's lands be distributed?"

41. "'Not long after that, the king suddenly passed away, and the ministers sought the prince to install a king on the throne.

42. "'Once he was enthroned, the king quietly considered this: "Now, it would be fitting to rule the way the previous king did." He also thought, "Who is capable of this promotion? Great Govinda is the right person for it." King Renu then told Great Govinda, "Now, I assign you to manage the affairs of state in my place. I place my trust in you. Be diligent and serious about it."

43. "'After he heard the king's instructions, Great Govinda accepted his trust, and the king retired to the palace. Great Govinda was then entrusted with managing future affairs of state.

44. "'Great Govinda again thought to himself, "Would it be fitting to visit those six warriors now and ask them what they remember of what we discussed before?"

45. "'He immediately visited the warriors and said to them, "Now, do you remember about what we discussed before? The prince has ascended the throne and hid himself deep in the palace to enjoy the five desires. You could go and ask: 'The king dwells on the heavenly throne and enjoying the five desires. Do you recall what we discussed before?'"

46. "'Hearing this said, the six warriors then visited the king. They said to the great king, "The king dwells on the heavenly throne and enjoys the five desires. Do you recall what we discussed before? How shall the land and cities be divided, and who shall rule where?"

47. "'The king said, "I haven't forgotten what we discussed before. I'll divide the lands and the cities. If it were not you, then who [would it be to receive them]?"

48. "'The king also thought to himself, "The lands of Jambudvipa are wide internally and narrow externally. Who could divide it into seven parts?" Then he thought, "Only Great Govinda can divide it up."

49. "'The king then told Great Govinda, "You may divide the lands of Jambudvipa. Divide them into seven parts."

50. "'Great Govinda then quickly divided the continent. The king ruled from a province containing the capital city, and the remainder was divided into provinces and given to the six warriors.

51. "'The king was delighted and said, "It's exactly as I wanted!"

52. "'The six warriors were also delighted. "It's exactly as we wanted, achieved by the ability of Great Govinda!"

53. "'The six warriors and the king also each thought to themselves, "Now that my kingdom is established, I need a prime minister, but who would be qualified? Someone like Great Govinda! I will employ him to manage the kingdom's affairs."

54. "'The six warrior kings then summoned Govinda and told him, "My kingdom needs a prime minister. You shall manage its affairs for me." The six kingdoms then each were given the prime minister's seal.

55. "'After Great Govinda received the prime minister's seals, the six kings went to their palaces to enjoy their leisure time, and the affairs of their kingdoms were entrusted to him. He managed the affairs of the seven kingdoms, and there was nothing he couldn't handle.

56. "'There were at the time seven great householders in the kingdom to whom Govinda delegated his duties. He also instructed 700 priests who chanted the scriptures. The seven kings regarded Prime Minister Great Govinda with respect, just as they would a god. The seven householders in each kingdom regarded him like a great king, and the 700 priests regarded him like Brahma.

57. "'The seven kings, seven great householders, and 700 priests all thought to themselves, "Prime Minister Great Govinda often meets with Brahma, talking, sitting, and getting up with him as friends."

58. "'Great Govinda was silently aware, "The seven kings, seven householders, and [700] priests think that I often meet with Brahma, talking, sitting, and getting up with him as friends, but I don't really see Brahma, nor do I speak with him. I shouldn't feed this with silence; it would be dishonest to accept this praise. Also, I've heard from past generations that when someone dwells in a secluded place during the four months of summer and cultivates the four immeasurables, Brahma will come down and meet with him."

59. "'Govinda then went to each of the seven kings and said, "Great king, please attend to the kingdom's affairs. I'm going to cultivate the four immeasurables during the four months of summer."

"'The seven kings told him, "Do what you think is fitting."

60. "'Great Govinda in turn told the seven householders, "You will each need to work on your own. I'm going to cultivate the four immeasurables during the four months of summer."

"'The householders said, "Yes, do what you think is fitting."

61. "'He also told the 700 priests, "All of you must endeavor in your recitations and instruct one another. I'm going to cultivate the four immeasurables during the four months of summer."

"'The priests said, "Yes, great teacher, do what you think is fitting today."

62. "'Great Govinda then had a secluded abode built near his city and retired there to cultivate the four immeasurables during the four months of summer. Afterward, Brahma didn't come down to him. Govinda thought to himself, "I've heard ancient sayings from previous generations that when someone cultivates the four immeasurables during the four months of summer, Brahma comes down and appears. It's tranquil now, but there's not even a momentary blur of him to be seen."

63. "'Great Govinda emerged from his quiet abode on the 15th-day full moon to sit on open ground. Only a moment after sitting, a bright light appeared. Govinda thought to himself, "Now, this is a strange light! Perhaps this is a sign that Brahma is going to come down?"

64. "'King Brahma then appeared as a child with a five-pointed topknot, sitting in the air above Govinda. Seeing him, Govinda then spoke in verse:

• "'What form of god is this,
Sitting in the air and Illuminating the four directions
Like a blazing wood fire?'

65. "'Brahma Kumara then replied with a verse:

• "'Only the gods of the Brahma world
Know me as Brahma Kumara.
Everyone else call me 'Self'
And make sacrifices to the great spirit.'

66. "'Great Govinda replied with a verse:

• "'Now, I have a request to make;
Please accept my salute and instruct me!
I offer a variety of delicacies;
Please, god, know my thought.'

67. "'Brahma Kumara replied with a verse:

• "'What did you intend to get from
What you've been cultivating, Govinda?
You provide these offerings now;
I will accept them from you.'

68. "'He also told Great Govinda, "If you have a question, feel free to ask it. I will explain it for you."

69. "'Great Govinda thought to himself, "Now, shall I ask about present matters, or do I ask about future matters?" Then he thought, "What use would there be to ask about matters of the present life? I will ask about mysterious matters yet to come."

70. "'He then asked Brahma Kumara with a verse:

• "'Now, I ask Brahma Kumara
To resolve my doubts, so I will have none.
What abode and what teaching
Attains birth in the Brahma Heaven?'

71. "'Brahma Kumara replied with a verse:

• "'Discard concepts of self and person,
Dwell alone and cultivate kindness,
Remove desires, and be unpolluted,
Then you'll be born in the Brahma Heaven.'

72. "'After hearing this verse, Great Govinda then thought to himself, "Brahma Kumara said in verse that it's fitting to remove pollutants, but I don't understand it. Now, it would be best to ask another question."

73. "'Great Govinda then asked in verse:

• "'Brahma's verse mentions pollution.
Please explain this for me now:
Who opens the worldly door,
Falls to evil, and isn't born in heaven?'

74. "'Brahma Kumara then replied with a verse:

• "'Deceitful and harboring jealousy,
Habitually proud and arrogant,
Greedy, angry, and deluded,
They freely hide their thoughts.'
• This world is polluted,
I've now explained it for you.
This is what opens the worldly door,
Falls to evil, and isn't born in heaven.'

75. "'After hearing this verse, Great Govinda again thought to himself, "The meaning of pollution that Brahma Kumara has explained for me can't be removed by someone living at home. Now, I'd better renounce the world, leave home, cut off my hair and beard, put on the Dharma clothes, and cultivate the path!"

76. "'Brahma Kumara then knew his intent and told him in verse:

• "'You are someone with courage,
For this intent is supreme.
Wise people who do that
Are surely born in the Brahma Heaven.'

77. "'At that moment, Brahma Kumara instantly disappeared.

78. "'Great Govinda returned to the seven kings and told each of them, "Great king, please do me the favor of well managing the kingdom's affairs. Now, I plan to leave home, renounce the world, put on Dharma clothes, and cultivate the path. Why is that? I met with Brahma Kumara and listened to his explanation of pollution. My heart dislikes it very much. If I remain at home, there'll be no way to be rid of it.'

79. "'Those seven kings then each thought to themselves, "All the priests are greedy for treasure. I'd better open wide the treasury and let him take what he needs so he won't leave home like this." The seven kings then summoned Govinda and told him, "Supposing we had what you need, we would give whatever would be sufficient for you not to leave home."

"'Great Govinda immediately replied, "Now, whatever the king might award to me, I have great wealth of my own. Today, I would leave behind the great king's offer above. Please permit me to leave home and pursue my aspiration."

80. "'The seven kings again thought, "All the priests are greedy for beautiful forms. Now, I'd better bring attractive women from the palace that will do his bidding. That will keep him from leaving home." The kings then summoned Govinda and told him, "If you need an attractive woman, I will give you all my women if that would be enough for you not to leave home."

"'Govinda replied, "The king might grant that to me, but I have a harem of many attractive women of my own. I will be divorcing all of them to pursue seclusion from passion, leaving home, and cultivating the path. Why is that? I met Brahma Kumara and heard his explanation of pollution. My heart dislikes it very much. If I remain at home, there'll be no way to be rid of it."

81. "'Great Govinda then went to King Renu and spoke this verse:

• "'The king must listen to what I say:
The king is the most honored of people,
Who bestows wealth and beautiful women,
But these valuables aren't what makes happiness.'

82. "'King Renu replied in verse:

• "'The cities Dantapura and Kalinga,
Asmaka, Potana,
Avanti, Mahismati,
Anga, Campa,
Sauvira, Salva,
Daradas, Roruka,
Baranasi, and Kasi
Were all built by you, Govinda.
• What little of the five desires I have,
I will grant all of them to you.
Stay and manage the kingdom's affairs,
Or leave home and go if it's not enough.'

83. "'Great Govinda replied with verse:

• "'The five desires are not little to me,
I'm just not happy with the world.
I've heard what that god said
And think no more of remaining at home.'

84. "'King Renu replied with verse:

• "'So Great Govinda has said,
But what did he hear from that god
That he renounces the five desires.
Now, I ask for you to answer me.'

85. "'Govinda the great answered in verse:

• "'Before, I was in a quiet place
And sat alone in contemplation.
It was then that King Brahma came;
He shined with a great radiance.
After hearing what he said,
I'm not happy with the worldly life.'

86. "'King Renu then told him in verse:

• "'Wait a while, Great Govinda,
Share your good teaching with me.
Afterward, we'll both leave home,
And you'll be my teacher.
• Just as the sky
Is full of pure lapis lazuli,
Now am I of pure faith,
Full of the Buddha's teaching.'

87. "'Great Govinda composed another verse:

• "'The gods and worldly people
Should all renounce the five desires.
Removing the pollutants,
They purely cultivate the religious life.'

88. "'The seven kings said to Great Govinda, "You could stay for a period of seven years. Enjoy the best of the world's five desires, and share in their enjoyment. Afterward, we'll renounce the kingdom. We'll each be your disciple, and we'll leave home together. Wouldn't that also be good? You would get what you want, and we'll also get something equal."

"'Great Govinda replied to the seven kings, "The world is impermanent, and people's lives end quickly. Even the span of a cough or a sigh is hard to safeguard. Wouldn't seven years be far away?"

89. "'The seven kings also said, "Seven years is far away. Wait in the quiet of the palace for six years … five years … one year. Enjoy the best of the world's five desires, and share in their enjoyment. Afterward, we'll renounce the kingdom. We'll each be your disciple, and we'll leave home together. Wouldn't that also be good? You would get what you want, and we'll also get something equal."

"'Great Govinda again replied to the kings, "The world is impermanent, and people's lives end quickly. Even the span of a cough or a sigh is hard to safeguard. Wouldn't seven years be far away. Thus, seven months … one month would still not be possible."

90. "'The kings said, "You could wait hidden in the palace for up to seven days. Enjoy the best of the world's five desires, and share in their enjoyment. Afterward, renounce the world. We'll each become your disciple, and we'll leave home together. Wouldn't that also be good? …"

"'Great Govinda answered, "Seven days isn't far away. One could wait that long. Please, great king, don't break your promise. After seven days, if the king doesn't leave, I will leave home by myself."

91. "'Great Govinda then went to the seven householders and said, "Each of you must manage your own work. I'm going to leave home to cultivate the unconditioned path. Why is that? I met Brahma and heard his explanation of pollution. My heart dislikes it very much. If I remain at home, there'll be no way to be rid of it."

"'The seven householders replied to Govinda, "This intent is good! Do so when you think is right. We were also going to leave home together. Whatever you obtain will be fitting for us, too."

92. "'Great Govinda then went to the 700 priests and told them, "Be diligent in your recitations, inquire into the meaning of the path, and pass on the teachings. I'm going to leave home to cultivate the unconditioned path. Why is that? I met Brahma and heard his explanation of pollution. My heart dislikes it very much. If I remain at home, there'll be no way to be rid of it."

"'The 700 priests said to Govinda, "Great teacher, don't leave home! A man who lives at home can be happy and enjoy the five desires. With many people serving him, his mind has no sorrow or suffering. People who leave home live alone in the wilderness without anything that they desire and no way to get when they love."

93. "'Govinda replied, "If I would be happy staying at home and would suffer upon leaving home, then I would never leave home. But staying at home is suffering, and leaving home is happiness, so I will be leaving home."

"'The priests answered, "If the great teacher leaves home, we will leave home, too. Whatever the great teacher does, we'll all do that."

94. "'Great Govinda went to his wives and told them, "Do what you think is fitting. If it's to stay here, then stay. If it's to take refuge, then take refuge. I'm going to leave home to pursue the unconditioned path. Having discussed higher matters, the idea of leaving home became clear to me."

"'His wives answered, "Great Govinda, stay here. In one way, you are like our husband, and in other way you are like our father. If you leave home now, we'll follow you. Whatever Govinda does, we'll do it, too."

95. "'After seven days had passed, Great Govinda cut off his hair and beard, put on the three Dharma robes, renounced his home, and departed. The seven kings, seven great householders, 700 priests, and his forty wives did the same in their turn. 84,000 people left home at the same time and followed Great Govinda.

96. "'Great Govinda toured the kingdoms with these great assemblies and widely educated people about the path, benefiting many.'

97. "King Brahma then addressed the host of gods, 'Was this Prime Minister Govinda a different person? Don't make this observation. Today, the Buddha Sakyamuni is his body. After seven days, the Bhagavan left home to cultivate the path, leading a great assembly to tour the kingdoms and broadly educate people about the path, benefiting many. If you have any other doubts for me, the Bhagavan is presently staying on Mount Grdhrakuta. You may go and ask him. Remember well what words the Buddha says.'"

Teaching the Ultimate Path

98. Pancasikha said, "It was for this reason that I came here. Indeed, Bhagavan! Was that Great Govinda the Bhagavan? Did the Bhagavan leave home to cultivate the path after seven days accompanied by seven kings … 84,000 people who left home at the same time, and they toured the kingdoms broadly educating people about the path, benefiting many?"

99. The Buddha asked Pancasikha, "Was Great Govinda a different person at that time? Don't make this observation. It was me then. At the time that I lifted up a kingdom, men and women walked towards me. Whenever they were injured, they immediately raised their voices, saying, 'Hail, Great Govinda, the prime minister of the seven kings! Hail, Great Govinda, the prime minister of the seven kings!' They would say this three times.

100. "Pancasikha, Great Govinda possessed the power of great virtue, but he couldn't teach the ultimate path for his disciples, couldn't make them attain the ultimate religious life, and couldn't make them reach the abode of peace. He taught the Dharma, and his disciples accepted and practiced it until their bodies broke up and their lives ended. They were born in the Brahma Heaven. Next, those whose practice was shallow were born in the Paranirmitavasavartin Heaven. Next were those born in the Nirmanarati Heaven … Tusita Heaven … Yama Heaven … Trayastrimsa Heaven … with the Four God Kings … into great families of warriors … priests … householders who could enjoy their desires freely.

101. "Pancasikha, that Great Govinda's disciples left home without doubts, and their rewards and teachings were still not the ultimate path. He couldn't make them attain the ultimate religious life or reach the abode of peace. The best of them were born as high as the Brahma Heaven.

102. "In the present, I teach the Dharma for my disciples, and I'm able to make them attain the ultimate path, ultimate religious life, and ultimate peace. They end up in Nirvana. Of those disciples to whom I teach the Dharma and who accept its practice, those who discard the contaminants and become uncontaminated are liberated at heart and liberated in wisdom. In the present life, they themselves realize: 'Birth and death have been ended, the religious life has been established, and the task has been accomplished. I'm not subject to another existence.'

103. "Next are those whose practice is shallow and end the five lower bonds. They Parinirvana in the heavens and don't return here again. Next are those who end the three bonds and weaken lust, hate, and delusion. They're reborn in the world once and Parinirvana. Next are those who end the three bonds and attain stream entry. They don't fall to bad destinies and are reborn not more than seven times. They are sure to attain Nirvana.

104. "Pancasikha, my disciples leave home without doubts, and they possess the rewards and teachings of the ultimate path, ultimate religious life, and ultimate peace. They end up at Nirvana."

105. When Pancasikha heard what the Buddha taught, he rejoiced and approved.

(An episode from the Parinirvana Sutra (DA 2) is taken up in this sutra, giving more background story. Ananda wonders why the Buddha hasn't described the rebirths of devotees from Magadha who've passed away, especially the late King Bimbisara. He urges the Buddha to do so. Afterward, the Buddha encounters a yaksa spirit named Janavrsabha who claims to be have been a former disciple and a king. He tells the Buddha a series of stories about the gods, which the Buddha recounts to Ananda later.)

1. Thus I have heard: One time, the Buddha traveled to Ginjaka's Residence of Nadika. He was accompanied by a large assembly of 1,250 monks.

Ananda's Request

2. At the time, the Venerable Ananda was sitting in a quiet room and thought to himself, "It's amazing! Extraordinary! The Tathagata gives his assurances to people that are beneficial to many. When that minister Kakkhata's life ended, the Tathagata described it: 'This person's life has ended. Having cut the five lower bonds, he was born up in the heavens and obtained complete cessation. He won't return to this world.' Second was Kadangara, third was Vikata, fourth was Katyarsabha, fifth was Caru, sixth was Upacaru, seventh was Bhadra, eighth was Subhadra, ninth was Trisanku, tenth was Sutrisanku, eleventh was Yasas, and twelfth was Yasottara. When those ministers' lives ended, the Buddha also described them: 'Having ended the five lower bonds, he was born up in the heavens and obtained complete cessation. He didn't return [to this world].'

3. "Again, there were another fifty people whose lives ended. The Buddha described them: 'They ended the three bonds of lust, anger, and delusion and became once-returners. They returned once to this world and then reached the end of suffering.'

4. "Again, there were 500 people whose lives ended. The Buddha described them: 'They ended the three bonds and became stream entrants. They won't fall to bad destinies and will reach the end of suffering in no more than seven rebirths.'

5. "There were disciples of the Buddha in many places whose lives ended. The Buddha described them all as having had 'a certain birth in a certain place, a certain birth in a certain place.' The Buddha described it of those whose lives ended in the sixteen countries, namely Anga, Magadha, Kasi, Kosala, Vrji, Malla, Cedi, Vatsa, Kuru, Pancala, Asvaka, Avanti, Maccha, Surasena, Gandhara, and Kamboja. When people from Magadha died who were from the royal family or friends of the king, the Buddha didn't describe [their birth places]."

6. Ananda then emerged from his quiet room and went to the Bhagavan. He bowed his head at his feet, sat to one side, and said, "I was in a quiet room and thought to myself, 'It's amazing! Extraordinary! The Tathagata gives his assurances to people that are beneficial to many. … The Buddha described it of those whose lives ended in the sixteen countries … When people from Magadha died who were from the royal family or friends of the king, the Buddha didn't describe [their birth places].

7. "Please describe them, Bhagavan! Please describe them, Bhagavan! It would be beneficial to all; gods and humans would be put at ease.

8. "Moreover, the Buddha attained his awakening in Magadha, yet it's only people there whose lives have ended that he hasn't provided an account [of their rebirth]. Please describe them, Bhagavan! Please describe them, Bhagavan!

9. "Moreover, King Bimbisara of Magadha was a layman, a devotee of the Buddha who provided much support. Since his life ended, many people are confident and support the three treasures because of the king, yet now the Tathagata hasn't provided a description [of his rebirth]. Please describe it, Bhagavan! It would be beneficial to sentient beings, and gods and humans would be put at ease."

After he had requested this of the Bhagavan on behalf of the people of Magadha, Ananda rose from his seat, bowed to the Buddha, and departed.

The Buddha Encounters the Yaksa Janavrsabha

10. The Bhagavan then put on his robes and took his bowl and went to Nadika. After soliciting alms, he went to a place in the Great Forest and sat under a tree. There, he contemplated the birthplaces of people from Magadha whose lives had ended. It was then that there was a yaksa spirit not far away from the Buddha that announced its name, saying to the Bhagavan, "I am Janavrsabha! I am Janavrsabha!"

11. The Buddha said, "What's the reason you are announcing your name to be Janavrsabha? What's your reason for using this wondrous word that claims you see the steps of the path?"

12. Janavrsabha said, "I'm not from some other place. I was once a human king, a layman in the Tathagata's teaching. I whole-heartedly recollected the Buddha when my life ended, and I was born a prince of the god king Vaisravana as a result. From then until now, I've always clearly known the teachings, attained stream entry, and haven't fallen to a bad destiny. For seven births, my name has always been Janavrsabha."

Janavrsabha's Story

13. After staying for as long as was fitting in the Great Forest, the Bhagavan then returned to Ginjaka's Residence of Nadika. There, he prepared a seat, sat down, and addressed a monk, "Go tell Ananda for me that I've summoned him." He replied, "Very well." He accepted the Buddha's instruction and summoned Ananda.

14. Ananda quickly came to the Bhagavan. He bowed his head at his feet, stood to one side, and said, "I see that the Bhagavan is looking better than usual. His faculties are peaceful and settled. What has he been contemplating for his appearance to be like this?"

15. The Bhagavan told Ananda, "Shortly after you had come to me and requested a description of [the destinies] of people from Magadha, I put on my robe and took my bowl to Nadika to solicit alms. When I was done soliciting alms, I went to the Great Forest and sat under a tree to contemplate the birthplaces of people from Magadha whose lives have ended. Not far from me, there was a yaksa spirit that announced its name, saying to me, 'I am Janavrsabha! I am Janavrsabha!" Ananda, have you heard the name Janavrsabha before?"

16. Ananda said to the Buddha, "I've never heard it before. Now that I hear that name, it frightens me; my hair is standing on end. Bhagavan, this yaksa spirit must have great majesty for it to be named Janavrsabha!"

17. The Buddha said, "I first asked it, 'What's the reason you've used this wondrous word that claims you see the steps of the path?'

18. "Janavrsabha said, 'I'm not from somewhere else where there was some other teaching. I was once a human king who was a disciple of the Bhagavan, a devoted layman. I had whole-heartedly recollected the Buddha when my life ended, and afterward I became a son of god king Vaisravana. I attained stream entry and didn't fall to a bad destiny. In no more than seven rebirths, I'll reach the end of suffering, and I'll always be named Janavrsabha during those seven births.

19. "'Once, the Buddha was in the Great Forest sitting under a tree, and I was riding a heavenly thousand-spoked treasure chariot for some minor reason. I was about to return to the god king Vaisravana when I spotted the Bhagavan under a tree in the distance. He looked handsome, and his faculties were peaceful and settled like a deep pond that's clear, tranquil, clean, and reflective. Seeing him, I thought, 'Now, I better go ask the Bhagavan about where the people of Magadha have been born after their lives ended.'

20. "'There was another time when King Vaisravana spoke this verse to his assembly:

• "'We don't remember ourselves
The things we've done in the past.
Now, go meet the Bhagavan,
And your lives will be lengthened.'

The Council of Gods

21. "'Moreover, once the Trayastrimsa gods were gathered in one place for some minor reason. The four god kings were each seated in their places. Dhrtarastra sat to the east and faced west with Lord Sakra in front of him. Virudhaka sat to the south and faced north with Lord Sakra in front of him. Virupaksa sat to the west and faced east with Lord Sakra in front of him. Vaisravana sat to the north and faced south with Lord Sakra in front of him. The four god kings had already been seated, and afterward I was seated.

22. "Again, there were other great spirits and gods who had purely cultivated the religious life with the Buddha and had been born in the Trayastrimsa Heaven when their lives ended. The gods increased, and they received the five heavenly merits: 1. The lifespan of gods, 2. the form of gods, 3. the names of gods, 4. the pleasure of gods, and 5. the majesty of gods.

23. "The Trayastrimsa gods celebrated and rejoiced, saying, 'The host of gods increases, and the host of asuras decreases!' Sakra the Lord of Gods knew the Trayastrimsa gods were rejoicing, so he spoke in verse:

• "'The gods of the Trayastrimsa
And Lord Sakra are celebrating!
Homage to the Tathagata,
For his is the highest teaching!
• The gods get their shape and their merits:
Life, form, name, pleasure, and majesty.
They trained in the Buddha's religious life,
So they've been reborn here with us.
• Again, there are all these gods
With radiant forms so glorious;
That the Buddha's wise disciples
Are born here is still more excellent.
• The Trayastrimsa gods and their lord
Contemplate their own pleasure here.
Homage to the Tathagata,
For his teaching is the highest!'"

24. "The spirit Janavrsabha also said, 'The Trayastrimsa gods had gathered in the Dharma Hall to discuss and contemplate together, making observations and determining what instructions to issue. Afterward, they gave the four god kings their orders. Accepting their instructions, the four god kings didn't remain long in each of their positions. The light that shined in the four directions changed, and when the Trayastrimsa gods saw it change, they were shocked. "How strange that the light has changed!" The other great spirits and gods that were majestic were also surprised: "How strange that the light has changed!"

Great Brahma Kumara

25. "'Great Brahma then appeared in the form of a child. His head had a five-pointed topknot, and he stood in the air above the assembly of gods. His handsomeness was far beyond that of the assembly. His body was purple gold in color, and his radiance outshined that of the gods.

26. "'The Trayastrimsa gods didn't get up or look, nor did they pay their respects. They didn't ask him to sit, either. Brahma Kumara then went and took his seat. [The god at that] seat was delighted like a warrior of a water-anointed lineage celebrating and rejoicing when he ascends to the throne. Soon after he sat, Brahma transformed into the shape of a child whose head was crowned with a five-pointed topknot sitting in the sky above that great assembly. He was like a hero sitting on his secure throne, lofty and unmoving.

27. "'Then he spoke in verse:

• "'The disciplined and unsurpassed sage
Instructs the world on birth here in radiance.
The Great Light declares the radiant teaching;
The religious life is an unequalled companion.
It purifies the sentient beings
Born in the pure and wondrous heavens!'

28. "'After he spoke this verse, Brahma Kumara addressed the Trayastrimsa gods, "When someone's voice is pure in five ways, it comes to be called Brahma's voice. What are the five? 1. Their voice is genuine, 2. their voice is gentle, 3. their voice is clear, 4. their voice is sonorous, and 5. it's heard all around and far away. A voice that has these five qualities is called Brahma's voice.

29. """Now, I will speak further. All of you, listen well! The Tathagata's disciples and laymen of Magadha who've become non-returners, once-returners, or stream-entrants when their lives ended have been born in the Paranirmitavasavartin Heaven, Nirmanarati Heaven, Tusita Heaven, Yama Heaven, Trayastrimsa Heaven, and Heaven of the Four God Kings. They've been born to great clans of warriors, priests, and householders to whom the five desires come naturally."

30. "'Brahma Kumara then spoke in verse:

• """Of those laymen of Magadha
Whose lives have ended,
Eighty-four thousand people,
I've heard, have attained the path.
• They achieved stream entry,
Fell no more to bad destinies;
They rode on the even, straight road
And attained the path's salvation.
• All these crowds of people
Were sustained by virtue:
Wise, detached from affection,
Conscientious, and without deception."
• In that assembly of gods,
Brahma Kumara described them,
Saying they attained stream entry,
And all the gods rejoiced.

31. "'Upon hearing these verses, King Vaisravana rejoiced and said, "The Bhagavan has appeared in the world and teaches the true Dharma. It's amazing, extraordinary, and unprecedented! I didn't know a Tathagata arose in the world and taught such a Dharma in the past, and there will again be a Buddha in the future who teaches such a Dharma that will cause the Trayastrimsa gods to rejoice at heart."

32. "'Brahma Kumara told King Vaisravana, "Why do you say, 'The Tathagata appeared in the world and teaches such a Dharma. It's amazing, extraordinary, and unprecedented!'? The Tathagata teaches what's good and not good with the power of skillful means. The fully expressed Dharma doesn't attain anything, but the empty and pure Dharma does attain something. This Dharma is sublime like ghee."

The Abodes of Mindfulness

33. "'Brahma Kumara then told the Trayastrimsa gods, "All of you, listen closely, and consider it well! I will speak further for you. The Tathagata, the Arhat, skillfully discerns and teaches the four abodes of mindfulness. What are the four? 1. Observe the body internally with diligence and not lazily, with focused attention that's not lost, and by removing worldly greed and sorrow. Observe the body externally with diligence and not lazily, with focused attention that's not lost, and by removing worldly greed and sorrow. [2-4.] Observe feelings, mind, and teachings in the same way with diligence and not lazily, with focused attention that's not lost, and by removing worldly greed and sorrow.

34. """After observing the body internally, the knowledge of other bodies arises. After observing feelings internally, the knowledge of other feelings arises. After observing the mind internally, knowledge of other minds arises. After observing the teachings internally, the knowledge of other teachings arises. This is how the Tathagata skillfully discerns and teaches the four abodes of mindfulness.

The Seven Requisites of Samadhi

35. """Furthermore, gods: All of you, listen well! I will speak further for you. The Tathagata skillfully discerns and teaches seven requisites for samadhi. What are the seven? Right view, right intent, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right method, and right mindfulness. These are the seven requisites of samadhi that the Tathagata skillfully discerns and teaches.

The Four Bases of Miraculous Power

36. """Furthermore, gods, the Tathagata skillfully discerns and teaches four bases of miraculous power. What are the four? 1. The miraculous basis developed by accomplishing the samadhi of desire and cessation. 2. The miraculous basis developed by accomplishing the samadhi of effort and cessation. 3. The miraculous basis developed by accomplishing the samadhi of mind and cessation. 4. The miraculous basis developed by accomplishing the samadhi of contemplation and cessation."

37. "'He also told the gods, "Ascetics and priests in the past used countless methods and displayed measureless miraculous abilities that arose from these four bases of miraculous power. Even future ascetics and priests will use countless methods and display measureless miraculous abilities that will also arise from these four bases of miraculous power. They're like ascetics and priests of the present who use countless methods and display measureless spiritual abilities that also arise from these four bases of miraculous power."

38. "'Brahma Kumara then transformed his shape into thirty-three bodies, which sat with each of the Trayastrimsa gods, and each said, "Now, do you see my powers of transformation?"

"'The gods answered, "Yes, we see them."

39. "'Brahma Kumara said, "I'm capable of such countless transformations because I've cultivated these four bases of miraculous power, too."

40. "'The Trayastrimsa gods each thought, "Now, Brahma Kumara is only sitting with and saying this to me, yet as this single conjured body of Brahma Kumara speaks, the other conjured bodies speak, too. When this one body is silent, the other conjured bodies are also silent."

The Three Pathways

41. "'That Brahma Kumara withdrew his miraculous ability and moved to where Lord Sakra was sitting. He told the Trayastrimsa gods, "Now, I will speak. All of you, listen well! The Tathagata, the Arhat, opens three pathways with his own power, which brought about his own right awakening.

42. """What are the three? Sometimes, there are sentient beings that are friends of greed and perform unskillful practices. Later, those people are close to good friends, hear the words of the teachings, and accomplish each teaching. Thereupon, they part with desire for those unskillful practices and abandon them. They attain a joyous heart, peacefulness, and happiness. In that happiness, they again feel great joy.

43. """They are like someone who abandons crude food for food with a hundred flavors. They're satisfied after eating it, but they again seek something greater. The practitioner is like this who parts with unskillful teachings. They attain a joyous heart and happiness. In that happiness, they again feel great joy. This is the first pathway opened by the Tathagata with his own power, which achieved the supreme and correct awakening.

44. """There are also sentient beings with much anger. They don't abandon evil deeds of body, mouth, and mind. Later, those people meet good friends, hear the words of the teachings, and accomplish each teaching. They part with evil physical actions and evil verbal and mental actions. They attain a joyous heart, peacefulness, and happiness. In that happiness, they again feel great joy.

45. """They are like someone who abandons crude food for food with a hundred flavors. They're satisfied after eating it, but they again seek something greater. The practitioner is like this who parts with unskillful teachings. They attain a joyous heart and happiness. In that happiness, they again feel great joy. This is the second pathway opened by the Tathagata.

46. """There are also sentient beings that are foolish, benighted, and uneducated. They don't recognise good and evil and aren't able to truly know suffering, its formation, its cessation, and the path. Later, those people meet good friends, hear the words of the teachings, and accomplish each teaching. They recognise what's good and not good, can truly know suffering, its formation, its cessation, and the path, and they abandon unskillful practices. They attain a joyous heart, peacefulness, and happiness. In that happiness, they again feel great joy.

47. """They are like someone who abandons crude food for food with a hundred flavors. They're satisfied after eating it, but they again seek something greater. The practitioner is like this who parts with unskillful teachings. They attain a joyous heart and happiness. In that happiness, they again feel great joy. This is the third pathway opened by the Tathagata."""

48. Brahma Kumara then went up to the Trayastrimsa Heaven to teach this correct Dharma. The god king Vaisravana and his followers also taught this correct Dharma. The spirit Janavrsabha also taught this correct Dharma before the Buddha. The Bhagavan also taught this correct Dharma for Ananda. Ananda also taught this correct Dharma for the monks, nuns, laymen, and laywomen.

49. When Ananda heard what the Buddha taught, he rejoiced and approved.

DA 5 SMALLER TEACHING ON ORIGINATION

(The direct parallel for this sutra is DN 27, MA 154, and T 10.)

(Two priests who converted to the Buddha's teaching pay him a visit and detail the verbal abuse they'd endured from the other priests. The Buddha agrees that the priests as quite arrogant, then gives the two a teaching on the dependent origination of human civilisation and the four castes of ancient India.)

1. Thus I have heard: One time, the Buddha was staying at Mrgaramatu Meeting Hall in the Believer's Park of Sravasti. He was accompanied by a large assembly of 1,250 monks.

Vasistha and Bharadvaja

2. It was then that there was a pair of priests who had gone to visit the Buddha with firm faith and left home for the path. One was named Vasistha, and the other was named Bharadvaja.

3. The Buddha had emerged from his quiet abode and was walking back and forth up in the meeting hall, and Vasistha saw him while out walking. He quickly went to Bharadvaja and said to him, "Did you know? The Tathagata has emerged from his quiet abode, and he's walking about up in the meeting hall! We could go together and pay the Bhagavan a visit. Perhaps we could hear a teaching from the Tathagata!" When he heard this, Bharadvaja went with Vasistha to visit the Buddha. They bowed their heads at his feet and then walked alongside the Buddha.

4. The Bhagavan then asked Vasistha , "Didn't the two of you abandon the priest caste and leave home to cultivate the path with firm faith in my teaching?"

He replied, "So it is!"

5. The Buddha asked, "Priest, now that you've left home to cultivate the path in my teaching, have the other priests not reproached you for doing so?" He replied, "Indeed! We left home to cultivate the path on account of our great love of the Buddha, but it's true we've been reproached by the other priests who see us."

6. The Buddha asked, "In what ways have they reproached you?" He quickly replied, "They say, 'Our caste of priests is the best; the others are inferior. Our caste is pure white; the others are dark. Our caste of priests came out of Brahma's own mouth. Being born from Brahma's mouth, we can purify our understanding in the present, and it'll also be pure in later [lives]. Why have you abandoned the pure caste and entered that other teaching of Gautama's?' Bhagavan, when they see that we've left home to cultivate the path in the Buddha's teaching, they reproach us with these words."

The Arrogance of the Priests

7. The Buddha told Vasistha, "Observe these people who are ignorant and without awareness like animals. They falsely claim of themselves, 'The caste of priests is the best; the others are inferior. Our caste is pure white; the others are dark. Our caste of priests came out of Brahma's own mouth. Being born from Brahma's mouth, we can be purified in the present and will be pure in later [lives], too.'

8. "Vasistha, this unsurpassed and true path of mine doesn't require a caste, nor does it rely on a feeling of self-conceitedness. Worldly teachings require these things, but my teaching doesn't. If there's an ascetic or priest who relies on his own caste and feels conceited about it, then they'll never achieve the unsurpassed realization that's in my teaching. If they can abandon their caste and eliminate feelings of conceitedness, then they can achieve the realization of the path, being capable of accepting the correct teaching. People dislike those below them, but my teaching isn't like that."

9. The Buddha told Vasistha, "There are four castes that have good and bad people who are praised and criticized by the wise. What are the four? 1. The warrior caste, 2. priest caste, 3. householder caste, and 4. worker caste.

10. "Vasistha, if you pay attention to those in the warrior caste, some kill beings, some steal, some are lustful, some are deceptive, some are duplicitous, some speak harshly, some speak frivolously, some are greedy, some are jealous, and some have wrong views. The priest caste, householder caste, and worker caste are also like this. They practice mixtures of the ten bad deeds.

11. "Vasistha, actions that aren't good have rewards that aren't good, and actions that are dark have dark results. Suppose these results were only present in the warrior, householder, and worker castes and not present in the priest caste. The priests then could say of themselves, 'Our priest caste is the best; the others are inferior. Our caste is pure white; the others are dark. Our caste of priests came out of Brahma's own mouth. Being born from Brahma's mouth, we can be purified in the present and will be pure in later [lives], too.' If actions that aren't good and have results that aren't good and actions that are dark and have dark results are surely present in the priest caste and the warrior, householder, and worker castes, then the priests cannot be the only ones to declare: 'Our caste is pure and the best!'

12. "Vasistha, if there are some among the warrior caste who don't kill and some who don't steal, aren't lustful, don't speak falsely, aren't duplicitous, don't speak harshly, don't speak frivolously, aren't greedy, aren't jealous, and don't have wrong views, then it's likewise for the priest caste and the householder and worker castes. They equally cultivate the ten good actions.

13. "Actions that are good surely have good results. Actions that are pure white surely have pure white results. If these results were only present among priests and not among warriors, householders, and workers, then the priest caste could say of themselves, 'Our caste is pure and the best!' If the four castes equally have these results, then the priests cannot be the only ones to declare, 'Our caste is pure and the best!'

14. The Buddha told Vasistha, "Today, it's obvious that those in the priest caste marry, are born from wombs like the rest of the world, and fraudulently declare, 'We are the caste of Brahma. Being born from Brahma's mouth, we can be purified in the present and will be pure in later [lives], too.'

The Buddha's Teaching Is Egalitarian

15. "Now, Vasistha, you should know that my disciples are not all from the same caste but came from different castes before they left home to cultivate the path. Suppose someone asked them, 'To which caste do you belong?' They would answer, 'I am an ascetic son of the Sakya clan.' They also can declare of themselves, 'I am from the priest caste. My kin were born from [Brahma's] mouth and spontaneously born from Dharma. I can be purified in the present and will be pure in later [lives], too.'

16. "Why is that? The name Maha-Brahma is an epithet of the Tathagata. The Tathagata is eyes for worldly beings, wisdom for worldly beings, the teaching for worldly beings, Brahma for worldly beings, the Dharma wheel for worldly beings, the nectar of immortality for worldly beings, and the Dharma lord for worldly beings.

17. "Vasistha, suppose some among the warrior caste are devoted to the Buddha, the Tathagata, Arhat, and Completely Awakened One, who has perfected the ten epithets. Suppose they are devoted to the Dharma, believe the Tathagata's teaching that's sublime and pure, that can be cultivated in the present, and that's taught without occasion to make plain the goal of Nirvana. It's known by the wise, but ordinary fools aren't capable of being taught it.

18. "Suppose they are devoted to the Sangha whose nature is good and honest, who accomplish the fruits of the path, being accomplished followers, and accomplish the teachings of the Buddha and his true disciples. That is, it's an assembly that accomplishes its precepts and accomplishes its samadhi, wisdom, liberation, and knowledge and vision of liberation.

19. "Headed for stream-entry, they attain stream-entry. Headed for once-returning, they attain once-returning. Headed for non-returning, they attain non-returning. Headed for becoming arhats, they become arhats. These eight ranks of four pairs and are the Tathagata's assembly of disciples. They're respectable and honorable fields of merit for the world that should get people's offerings. They're devoted to the precepts and perfect the noble precepts without any defect or contamination. Being without defect and immaculate, they are commended by the wise for perfecting what's good and peaceful.

20. "Vasistha, the priest, householder, and worker castes should thus devote themselves to the Buddha, the Dharma, and the Sangha and accomplish the noble precepts.

21. "Vasistha, there are also some among the warrior caste who make offerings to the arhats, and they honor and venerate them. The priests, householders, and workers should make offerings to the arhats and honor and venerate them, too.

22. The Buddha told Vasistha, "My kin from the Sakya clan also serve King Prasenajit and honor tradition. King Prasenajit also comes to give offerings and honors to me, but he doesn't think, 'The ascetic Gautama left his clan, and my clan is inferior. The ascetic Gautama left a family of great wealth and majesty, and I was born to a poor and unimpressive family. Therefore, I will give offerings and honors to the Tathagata.' King Prasenajit examined the principles of the teaching with a clear awareness of what's genuine and fake. As a result, he became a believer who respects the Tathagata.

The Origin of Human Society

23. "Vasistha, now I will explain the dependent origination of the four castes for you.

24. "When the eons from the beginning to the end of heaven and earth came to an end, the lives of sentient beings ended, and they were born in the Abhasvara Heaven. They were born there spontaneously. Thought served as their food, they were naturally radiant, and they had the miraculous ability of flying in the air.

25. "After that, the Earth was destroyed, changing into water which became ubiquitous. At that point, there was no longer a sun, moon, or stars. There were no days, nights, months, or years, only a great darkness.

26. "After that, the water formed into an Earth. The merits of the Abhasvara gods came to an end, and they were born here when their lives ended. Although they were born here, thought still served as their food, they had the miraculous ability to fly, and their bodies were naturally radiant. After a long time, they called each other 'sentient being, sentient being.'

27. "After that, a sweet spring welled up from the Earth, which was like yoghurt or honey in form. Those gods who first arrived had shallow dispositions. When they saw this spring, they thought to themselves, 'What substance is this? I'll give it a taste.' They dipped a finger into the spring and tasted it. They did this three times until they realized that it was delicious. They indulgently consumed it in this way, and thus became attached to enjoying it without tire.

28. "The other sentient beings emulated them by consuming it three times in this way, and they also realized it was delicious. They didn't stop consuming it, and their bodies became crude with skin, flesh, and hard parts. They lost their sublime heavenly forms and no longer had miraculous abilities. They walked on the ground, the radiance of their bodies gradually disappeared, and then heaven and the earth fell into total darkness.

29. "Vasistha, you should know that heaven and earth was always dark after that, and a sun, moon, and stars appeared in the sky, as a rule. Afterward, the regions [of the Earth] had day and night, gloom and brightness, and the days, months, and years could be counted.

30. "At that point, sentient beings only ate the Earth's juice, and this continued in the world for a long time. Those that ate a great deal of it became crude and ugly in appearance. Those that ate a little of it were still delightful in appearance. That was when attractiveness, ugliness, and handsomeness first came to be. Those who were handsome became arrogant and slighted those who were ugly. Those who were ugly became spiteful and hated those who were handsome. Sentient beings became angry and fought with each other. At that point, the sweet spring naturally dried up.

31. "After that, the Earth naturally grew earth fat, which was complete in appearance and flavor, fragrant, and edible. Sentient beings also took this and ate it, and it continued in the world for a long time. Those who ate a great deal of it had a crude and ugly appearance, and those who ate a little of it still had a delightful appearance. Those who were handsome became arrogant and slighted those who were ugly. Those who were ugly became spiteful and hated those who were handsome. Sentient beings then fought with each other. At that point, the earth fat didn't grow anymore.

32. "After that, the Earth again grew a crude form of earth fat, which was also fragrant, delicious, and edible, but not as much as before. The sentient beings again took and ate it, and it continued in the world for a long time. Those who ate a great deal of it had a crude and ugly appearance, and those who ate a little of it still had a delightful appearance. The handsome and the ugly beings disagreed with each other, which caused them to fight. At that point, the earth fat didn't grow anymore.

33. "After that, the Earth grew naturally polished rice that lacked any chaff. It was perfect in appearance and flavor, fragrant, and edible. Sentient beings again took and ate it, and it continued in the world for a long time. Thereupon, male and female beings appeared who were mutually attracted to each other, and slowly their affection developed into intimacy. The other sentient beings saw this and said, 'You are wrongdoers! You are wrongdoers!' They then chased and drove those people away, but they returned after three months."

34. The Buddha told Vasistha, "Those wrongdoers in the past are like those today. At the time, those sentient beings learned wrong customs, and felt strongly about doing what they wanted without any moderation. They built homes because they were ashamed of it. This was when homes first appeared in the world. They learned wrong customs that increased lust, and then the womb appeared, which was the cause of impure birth. This was when wombs first appeared in the world.

35. "Those sentient beings then ate the naturally polished rice, and it grew where they took it without any end. The sentient beings who were lazy thought to themselves, 'I work hard eating in the morning what I take in the morning and eating in the evening what I take in the evening. Now, I'll take enough to last a whole day.'

36. "They then would combine what they took [for the day]. Afterward, when a friend called them to go collect rice together, they replied, 'I've already combined my takings to make provisions for the day. If you want to take some, you can do as you like.'

37. "The friend again thought, 'This person is smart! They were the first to stock up on [rice]. Now, I'll store up food, too, making provisions for three days!'

38. "That person then stored three days' worth of food. Other sentient beings again came and asked, 'Can we go collect rice together?'

"They replied, 'I've already stored three days' worth of food. You can go and collect some yourself if you want.'

39. "Those other people again thought, 'This person is smart! They were the first to store up food to make provisions for three days. I'll emulate them by storing food to make provisions for five days.' They then went to collect [that much food].

40. "After those sentient beings emulated each other storing up food, the polished rice became wild and began to grow with chaff, and it stopped growing after it was harvested.

41. "When those sentient beings saw this, they weren't pleased. They became dejected, and they each thought, 'When I was first born, thought served as my food, I had the miraculous ability to fly, and my body was naturally radiant. That continued for a long time in the world.

42. "'After that, a sweet spring welled up from the Earth that was like yoghurt or honey in form. It was fragrant, delicious, and edible, and then we consumed it together. We continued consuming it for a long time. Those who ate a great deal of it became crude and ugly in appearance. Those who ate a little of it were still delightful in appearance. Because of this food, our appearances became different. Sentient beings harbored disagreements about this, disliking and feeling jealous of each other. At that point, the sweet spring naturally dried up.

43. "'After that, the Earth naturally grew earth fat, which was complete in appearance and flavor, fragrant, and edible. Again, we took this and ate it. Those who ate a great deal of it had a crude and ugly appearance, and those who ate a little of it still had a delightful appearance. Sentient beings each harbored disagreements about this, disliking and feeling jealous of each other. At that point, the earth fat didn't grow anymore.

44. "'After that, a crude form of earth fat grew, which was also fragrant, delicious, and edible. We again took and ate it. Those who ate a great deal of it had a crude and ugly appearance, and those who ate a little of it had a delightful appearance. Again, disagreements arose, and we felt dislike and jealousy for each other. At that point, the earth fat didn't grow anymore.

45. "'Then, there was naturally polished rice grew that didn't have any chaff. We again took and ate it, and it continued in the world for a long time. Those who were lazy emulated each other in storing it up. As a result, the polished rice became wild and began to grow with chaff, and it stopped growing after it was harvested. Now what will happen?'

46. "They also said to each other, 'Let's divide the land and establish different flags.' Straightaway, they divided the land and established different flags.

47. "Vasistha, the name 'farmland' first came to be as a result of these circumstances. At the time, the sentient beings were allotted separate farmland, and they each established their boundaries.

The Origin of the Four Castes

48. "Eventually, the notion of stealing arose to rob another of their crop. When the other sentient being saw this, they said, 'You are a wrongdoer! You are a wrongdoer! You have your own farmland, but you took another's property. Don't ever do that again!'

49. "Still, the sentient being didn't stop stealing. The other sentient being again rebuked them seriously, but they still didn't stop. The other sentient being then struck them with their hand and said, 'This person has their own land and crops, but they stole another's property.'

"The [thief] also said, 'This person struck me!'

50. "The people who saw these two people fighting were saddened and displeased. Aggrieved, they said, 'Sentient beings have become evil, and the world as it has come to exist is not good. It creates defilement, evil, and impurity. This is the origin of birth, old age, illness, and death. The affliction and pain results in falling to the three bad destinies. As a result of there being farmland, this fighting has come to pass. Now, we would rather designate one man as chief to govern properly, safeguard what should be safeguarded, and censure what should be censured. Let everyone share a portion of rice to provide for this and manage to this fighting.'

51. "A man was then selected from that assembly who was physically large and appeared handsome. Being someone with authority, he said to them, 'Now, you have made me the chief of the peace to safeguard what should be safeguarded, censure what should be censured, and banish what should be banished. We'll collect rice together to provide for each other.'

52. "That man then listened to what people had to say, they provided for this chief to judge disputes, and they collected rice to provide for each other.

53. "That man again offered skillful words to console the people. When the people heard him, they rejoiced and together praised him: 'Good, great king! Good, great king!' This was when the title 'king' appeared in the world. In order to govern the populace with the correct teaching, he was called a warrior. This was when that the name 'warrior' first arose in the world.

54. "There then was a solitary man among the people who had this thought: 'A family is such trouble. A family is a poison thorn. Now, I'd rather renounce this family life and live alone in the mountains and forests. In the quiet tranquility there, I'll cultivate the path.' So, he renounced the family life and went to the mountains and forests where he quietly contemplated. A time came when he took a bowl into a town to ask for food.

55. "When people saw him, they were happy to give him their support. They praised him joyfully: 'Excellent! This person renounced family life and dwells alone in the mountains and forests where he quietly cultivates the path and abandons the myriad evils.' This was the first time the title 'priest' arose in the world.

56. "Among those priests, there was one who wasn't happy quietly sitting in meditation and contemplating, so he went among the people and chanted [scripture] as his profession. He also declared of himself, 'I am not a meditator!' This was when worldly people claimed to be non-meditating priests. As a result of being among people, they were called priests among people. This was when the worldly priest caste came to be.

57. "Among those sentient beings, there were people skilled at conducting business from a home and accumulated many treasures. As a result, these many people were called 'householders.' Among those sentient beings, some possessed many skills and could make many things. This was when the name 'artisan' first appeared in the world.

The Fifth Caste of Ascetics

58. "Vasistha, the world today has the names of these four castes. The name of the fifth community is 'ascetic.' Why is that? Vasistha, at some point there was a person in the warrior assembly who was disillusioned with his own teaching. He shaved his hair and beard and put on Dharma robes. This was when the name 'ascetic' first appeared. At some point, people from in the priest caste, householder caste, and worker caste had was disillusioned with their own teaching. They shaved their hair and beard and put on the Dharma robe. They were called 'ascetics.'

59. "Vasistha, there are those in the warrior caste whose physical conduct is unskillful, verbal conduct is unskillful, and mental conduct is unskillful. When their bodies break up and their lives end, they're surely subject to painful results. There are those in the priest caste, householder caste, and worker caste whose physical conduct is unskillful, verbal conduct is unskillful, and mental conduct is unskillful. When their bodies break up and their lives end, they'll surely be subject to painful results.

60. "Vasistha, there are those in the warrior caste whose physical conduct is skillful, verbal conduct is skillful, and mental conduct is skillful. When their bodies break up and their lives end, they'll surely be subject to pleasant results. There are those in the priest caste, householder caste, and worker caste whose physical conduct is skillful, verbal conduct is skillful, and mental conduct is skillful. When their bodies break up and their lives end, they'll surely be subject to pleasant results.

61. "Vasistha, there are those in the warrior caste whose physical conduct is of both kinds and whose verbal and mental conduct is of both kinds. When their bodies break up and their lives end, they'll be subject to painful and pleasant results. There are those in priest caste, householder caste, and worker caste whose physical conduct is of both kinds and whose verbal and mental conduct of is both kinds. When their bodies break up and their lives end, they'll be subject to painful and pleasant results.

62. "Vasistha, there are those in the warrior caste who some shave their hair and beard, wear the Dharma clothes, and cultivate the path. They cultivate the seven factors of awakening and soon achieve the path. Why is that? The sons of those clans leave home wearing Dharma clothes and cultivate the unsurpassed religious practice. In the present life, they realize for themselves, 'Birth and death has been ended, the religious practice has been established, and the task has been accomplished. I'm no longer subject to existence.' There are those in the priest, householder, and worker castes who shave their hair and beard, wear the Dharma clothes, and cultivate the path. They cultivate the seven factors of awakening and soon achieve the path. Why is that? The sons of those clans leave home wearing Dharma clothes and cultivate the unsurpassed religious practice. In the present life, they realize for themselves, 'Birth and death has been ended, the religious practice has been established, and the task has been accomplished. I'm no longer subject to existence.'

63. "Vasistha, there are those in these four castes who produce the accomplished wisdom and conduct of arhats, but those in the fifth caste are the best of them."

Brahma's Declaration

64. The Buddha told Vasistha, "The Brahma King spoke this verse:

• "'Among births, the warriors are best
At renouncing caste and departing.
Those accomplished in wisdom and conduct,
Are the best of the whole world.'"

65. The Buddha told Vasistha, "This was well said by Brahma; it wasn't not well said. It was well received by Brahma; it wasn't not well received. I endorsed his words at the time. Why was that? Today, I am the Tathagata, the Arhat, and I also declare this meaning:

• "Among births, the warriors are best
At renouncing caste and departing.
Those accomplished in wisdom and conduct,
Are the best of the whole world."

66. When the Bhagavan spoke this sutra, Vasistha and Bharadvaja's uncontaminated minds were liberated. Hearing what the Buddha taught, they rejoiced and approved.

DA 6 THE NOBLE WHEEL-TURNING KING'S CULTIVATION

(The direct parallels for this sutra are DN 26 and MA 70.)

(The Buddha tells the monks to light themselves with the Dharma and make it their refuge. He then relates an elaborate story describing the way the noble wheel-turning kings cultivate the correct teaching that allows them to conquer the world peacefully and maintain that peace in the way they rule. When that teaching is lost, the world descends into immorality and barbarism because the wheel-turning kings forget how to rule properly. After a cycle ending in a genocidal war, people reverse course and rediscover morality and civilization. The story ends with a brief description of the Buddha Maitreya (Hindu: Mitra, Zoroastrian: Mithra, Roman: Mithras) arising. All of this is then revealed as a metaphor for a monk's spiritual cultivation, which conquers Mara.)

1. Thus I have heard: One time, the Buddha was traveling among the people of [Magadha]. Accompanied by a large assembly of 1,250 monks, he eventually arrived in [Matula].

2. It was then that the Bhagavan addressed the monks, "You must light yourself and burn the Dharma. Don't burn something else. You must take refuge in yourself and take refuge in the Dharma. Don't take refuge in something else. How must a monk light himself, burn the Dharma, and not burn something else? How must he take refuge in himself, take refuge in the Dharma, and not take refuge in something else?

3. "Here, a monk observes the internal body as body diligently and without negligence. His attention to it isn't lost, and he removes worldly craving and sorrow. He observes the external body as body … observes internal and external body as body diligently and without negligence. His attention to it isn't lost, and he removes worldly craving and sorrow. He likewise observes feeling, mind, and principles.

4. "This is a monk who lights himself, burns the Dharma, and doesn't burn something else. He takes refuge in himself, takes refuge in the Dharma, and doesn't take refuge in something else.

The Correct Teaching of the Wheel-Turning King

5. "Such a practitioner can't be harassed by Mara, and his virtue will increase daily. Why is that? There was time long ago when there was a king named Drdhasamadana. He was a water-anointed warrior who became a noble wheel-turning king and ruled the four continents under heaven.

6. "That king freely governed with the Dharma. He was exceptional among people, replete with the seven treasures. They were 1. the golden wheel treasure, 2. white elephant treasure, 3. blue horse treasure, 4. miraculous jewel treasure, 5. beautiful woman treasure, 6. householder treasure, and 7. general of the army treasure. He also had a thousand sons who were courageous and powerful. He defeated his adversaries without using weapons but with a natural peace.

7. "After King Drdhasamadana ruled the world for a long time, the golden wheel treasure suddenly departed from its place in the sky. The administrator of the wheel went to the king quickly and told him, 'Great king, you should know that just now the wheel treasure departed from its place!'

8. "When he heard this, Drdhasamadana thought, 'I've heard from the elders in the past that if a noble wheel-turning king's wheel treasure goes away, that king's life won't last much longer. Now, I've experienced the pleasures of merit among humans. It would be fitting to pursue the way to experience the pleasures of merit in heaven. I'll install a crown prince to oversee the four continents under heaven. I'll bestow a town to a barber and have him cut my hair and beard. Then, I'll put on the three Dharma robes and leave home to cultivate the path.'

9. "King Drdhasamadana then summoned the crown prince and told him, 'Did you know? I've heard from the elders of the past that if a noble wheel-turning king's golden wheel departs from its place, the king's life won't last much longer. Now, I've experienced the pleasures of merit among humans, and I'll pursue the way to experience the merits of heaven. I'm going to cut off my hair and beard, put on the three Dharma robes, and leave home for the path. I will bequeath the four continents under heaven to you. You should apply yourself to caring for its people.'

10. "The crown prince accepted the king's instruction, and King Drdhasamadana then cut off his hair, put on the three Dharma robes, and left home to cultivate the path.

11. "Seven days after Drdhasamadana left home, the king's golden wheel treasure suddenly disappeared. The administrator of the wheel went to the king and said, 'Great king, you should know that the wheel treasure has suddenly disappeared!'

12. "The king was displeased and went to Drdhasamadana. After arriving, he said to [the former] king, 'Father king, you should know that the wheel treasure has suddenly disappeared.'

13. "King Drdhasamadana replied to his son, 'Don't feel sad or displeased by it. The golden wheel treasure wasn't your father's property. Simply endeavor to enact the correct teaching of a noble king. After practicing that correct teaching, then bathe yourself in fragrant water surrounded by your concubines on the fifteenth-day full moon and ascend the Hall of the Correct Teaching. The miraculous treasure of the golden wheel will spontaneously appear. The wheel will have a thousand spokes and possess a radiant color. It's made by a heavenly craftsman. It isn't something that belongs to this world.'

14. "His son said to his father king, 'What is the correct teaching of the noble wheel-turning king? How do I enact it?'

15. "The king told his son, 'You must rely on the teaching, establish the teaching, and complete the teaching. Respect, honor, and investigate the teaching. Consider the teaching your leader, and safeguard the correct teaching. Moreover, you must instruct your concubines with the teaching. You must protect, look after, and admonish the princes, ministers, officials, administrators, populace, ascetics, and priests, down to the animals with the teaching. You must watch over them.'

16. "He also told his son, 'Moreover, the ascetics and priests present in your domain should be pure and genuine in behavior. They should perfect virtue, be diligent and not negligent, abandon arrogance, and be patient and humane. They should cultivate themselves in quietude, calm themselves in seclusion, and reach Nirvana in seclusion. They should rid themselves of craving and teach others to rid themselves of craving. They should rid themselves of anger and teach others to rid themselves of anger. They should rid themselves of delusion and teach others to rid themselves of delusion. They shouldn't be defiled by defilements, made evil by evils, fooled by foolishness, attached to attachments, abide in abodes, or live in dwellings.

17. "Their physical conduct should be genuine, verbal [conduct] genuine, and mental [conduct] genuine. Their physical conduct should be pure, verbal [conduct] pure, and mental [conduct] pure. Their correct livelihood is purity. They're kind, wise, tireless, satisfied with their food, and take bowls to solicit alms for the merit of sentient beings.

18. "When such people exist, you should visit them often and inquire about all manner of cultivation at the appropriate time: 'What's good, and what's evil? What's a transgression, and what's not a transgression? Who shall I befriend and who shouldn't be befriended? What's appropriate to do, and what can't be done? Giving donations to what teaching will bring happiness for a long time?' After you ask such questions, use your mind to investigate what ought to be practiced and practice it. Abandon what ought to be abandoned.

19. "The elderly and orphans in the country should be provided aid. Don't turn away the impoverished who come begging. The country has its ancient traditions; don't be quick to reform them. This is the teaching that's cultivated by a noble wheel-turning king. You should put it into practice.'"

How the Correct Teaching Is Lost

20. The Buddha told the monks, "The noble wheel-turning king accepted his father's instruction and cultivated it as he'd explained. On the fifteenth-day full moon, he bathed in incense water and ascended the high hall while surrounded by his concubines, and the wheel treasure spontaneously appeared before him. The wheel had a thousand spokes and possessed a radiant color. It was made by a heavenly craftsman and wasn't something that belongs to this world. It was made of pure gold and had a diameter of forty feet.

21. "The wheel-turning king then thought to himself, 'I've heard from elders in the past that if a water-anointed warrior king bathes in incense water and ascends the treasure hall on the fifteenth-day full moon while surrounded by his concubines, then the golden wheel will suddenly appear before him. The wheel will have a thousand spokes and possess a radiant color. It'll be made by a heavenly craftsman and won't be something that belongs to this world. It'll be made of pure gold and have a diameter of forty feet. He will then be called a noble wheel-turning king. Now, this appears to be the wheel, but perhaps this isn't it? Now, I'd should like to test this wheel treasure.'

22. "The wheel-turning king then summoned the four armies and bared his right shoulder toward the golden wheel treasure. He knelt on his right knee, touched the golden wheel with his right hand, and said: 'Go east. Turn according to the Dharma, and don't go contrary to the eternal law.' The wheel then turned east.

23. "The king then led his four armies and followed after it. Ahead of the golden wheel, there were four spirits guiding it, and the king stopped his horses where the wheel dwelled. At that point, the lesser kings of the east saw the great king arrive, and they came to the king with gold bowls holding silver barley and silver bowls holding gold barley. They present them to their chief, saying, 'Welcome, great king! The lands in this eastern region are plentiful now. Please, noble king, rule them properly! We'll serve you, right and left, and accept what you will.'

24. "The great wheel-turning king told the lesser kings, 'Stop, stop! Good men, you have made offerings to me, but I will simply rule with the correct Dharma. Don't bend yourselves to serve me. Let none in the country act contrary to the Dharma. This I call my way of ruling.'

25. "When the lesser kings heard this instruction, they then followed the great king, who toured their countries. He went east until the ocean was in sight, and next traveled south, west, and north, following where the wheel went. The kings there each presented their countries in comparable ways as the lesser countries in the east did.

26. "The wheel-turning king followed the golden wheel as it traveled around the four oceans, revealing the way and consoling the populace. He then returned to his home country. The golden wheel treasure hovered in the sky while he was in his palace. The wheel-turning king celebrated, saying, 'This golden wheel treasure is a true sign for me that I truly am a noble wheel-turning king who has accomplished this golden wheel treasure.'

27. "After that king had ruled the world for a long time, the golden wheel treasure then suddenly departed from its place in the sky. The administrator of the wheel quickly went to the king and said, 'Great king, you should know that the wheel treasure just left its place!'

28. "Upon hearing this, the king then thought to himself, 'I've heard from the elders in the past that if the wheel treasure goes away, the king's life won't last much longer. Now, I've experienced the pleasures of merit among humans. It would be fitting to pursue the way to experience the pleasure of merits in heaven. I'll install a crowned prince to receive the four continents under heaven. I'll bestow a particular town to a barber and have him cut my hair and beard. Then, I'll put on the three Dharma robes, and leave home to cultivate the path.'

29. "The king then summoned the crown prince and told him, 'Did you know? I heard from the elders in the past that if a noble wheel-turning king's golden wheel departs from its place, the king's life won't last much longer. Now, I've experienced the pleasures of merit among humans, and I'll pursue the way to experience the merits of heaven. I'm going to cut my hair and beard, put on the three Dharma robes, and leave home to cultivate the path. I will bequeath the four continents under heaven to you. You should apply yourself to caring for its people.'

30. "The crown prince accepted the king's instruction, and the king cut off his hair and beard, put on the three Dharma robes, and left home to cultivate the path.

31. "Seven days after he had left home, the golden wheel treasure suddenly disappeared. The administrator of the wheel went to the king and said, 'Great king, you should know that the wheel treasure has suddenly disappeared!'

32. "The king wasn't saddened when he heard this, nor did he go to ask for his father king's thoughts about it. His father king's life then suddenly ended.

33. "Before that time, six wheel-turning kings had successively accepted the signs and ruled with the correct teaching. It was only this one king who enacted his own rule of the country and didn't continue the ancient teaching. This brought disharmony and there were recriminations under heaven. His territory was reduced, and the people dwindled.

Poor Governance Causes Decline in Morality

34. "There was a priest minister at the time who went to the king and said, "Great king, you should know that your territory today is reduced, and the people have dwindled, but these changes are not permanent. Now, the king has many friends inside the kingdom who are intelligent and learned and understand what's ancient and what's modern. They fully know the teaching by which previous kings ruled. Why don't you summon them together and ask them about what they know? They will give you their answers.'

35. "The king then called a meeting of ministers and asked them about the way that previous kings had ruled. The wise ministers provided him with answers on the subject, and the king listened to what they said. He put the ancient ways into practice. He protected the world with the Dharma, but he couldn't offer aid to the elderly and orphans or give donations to the poor.

36. "The kingdom's people then became impoverished and began to steal from each other, and the thieves multiplied. An officer searched for them and captured one. He brought him to the king and said, 'This man is a thief. Please, King, deal with him.'

37. "The king asked the thief, 'Is it true that you are a thief?'

"He answered, 'It's true. I am destitute and starving. I can't provide for myself, so I just steal from others.'

38. "The king then took what the man needed from his storehouse and supplied it to him. He said, 'Use this to provide for your parents and care for your relatives. Don't steal from others again!'

39. "When other people heard about this and took up thievery, the king provided them with treasure. At that point, they returned to robbing others of their possessions. Again, an officer searched for them and captured one. He brought him to the king and said, 'This man is a thief. Please, King, deal with him.'

40. "The king again asked the thief, 'Is it true that you are a thief?'

"He answered, 'It's true. I'm destitute and starving. Being unable to support myself, so I just steal from others.'

41. "The king again took treasure from his storehouse and provided it, telling the thief, 'Use this to provide for your parents and care for your relatives. Don't steal from others again.'

42. Again, people heard that someone had become a thief and the king provided him with treasure, so they continued robbing others of their possessions. An officer searched for them again and captured one. He brought him to the king and said, 'This man is a thief. Please, King, deal with him.'

43. The king again asked the thief, 'Is it true that you are a thief?'

He answered, 'It's true. I'm destitute and starving. Being unable to support myself, so I just steal from others.'

44. "The king then thought, 'I saw that the thief before was poor and provided him with treasure so that he would stop, but then other people heard about it and emulated him. The thieves are multiplying, so nothing has come of it. Now, I should like to display this man in chains on a thoroughfare. Afterward, I'll have him carried out of the city and executed in the wilderness. Wouldn't that be a warning to people after that?'

45. "The king then ordered his servants to his left and right, 'Servants, bind him and take him throughout the city to the sound of drums. When you're done, carry him out of the city and execute him in the wilderness.' Everyone in the kingdom knew that he was a thief and that the king had ordered him bound, taken throughout the city, and executed in the wilderness.

46. "People then in turn told each other, 'Supposing that we were to become thieves, the same would happen to us that did to him!' People in the kingdom then began protecting themselves. They proceeded to make weapons like swords and bows and arrows, which they used to hurt each other as they looted, robbed, and cheated one another.

The Descent into Barbarism

47. "From the beginning of this king's reign, there was poverty. Once there was poverty, stealing began. Once there was stealing, then weapons began. Once there were weapons, then killing and hurting beings began. Once there was killing and hurting beings, people's appearance became emaciated, and their lifespans were shortened.

48. "People lived for exactly 40,000 years at that time, but their lifespans were gradually reduced to 20,000 years afterward. Those sentient beings still had long lives, untimely deaths, suffering, and happiness. Those who suffered had thoughts of sexual misconduct and greedy clinging. They devised many methods to get another's possessions.

49. "Sentient beings who were poor, thieves, had weapons, and injured others multiplied in turn. A person's life was gradually reduced to a lifespan of 10,000 years.

50. "When they lived for 10,000 years, sentient beings continued to rob each other. An officer searched for them and captured one. He brought him to the king and said, 'This man is a thief. Please, King, deal with him.'

51. "The king asked the thief, 'Is it true that you are a thief?'

"He replied, 'I didn't do it!' As a result, false speech began among the people.

52. "Those sentient beings then practiced stealing because of poverty, possessed weapons because of stealing, were killed and injured because of weapons, were greedy and committed sexual misconduct because of killing and injuring, and spoke falsely because of greediness and sexual misconduct. Their lifespans were gradually reduced because of false speech to a thousand years.

53. "When they lived a thousand years, the three bad verbal actions began to arise in the world, which were 1. duplicity, 2. harsh speech, and 3. frivolous speech. These three bad actions developed and prospered, and people's lifespans were reduced to five hundred years.

54. "When they lived five hundred years, sentient beings again produced three bad actions, which were 1. lust and 2. greed that go against Dharma and 3. wrong views. As these three bad actions developed and prospered, people's lifespans were reduced to three hundred and then two hundred years. During our time, people reach a hundred years, with a few going beyond that and many living for less than that. Thus they evolved, and their evils didn't stop, so their lifespans were reduced until they reached ten years.

55. "When they lived for ten years, women were married five months after they were born. In that time, the names of delicious flavors like ghee, rock honey, and black rock honey weren't heard in the world any longer. Rice plants changed into grass and weeds. Present-day names of cloth like silk, brocades, twilled cloth, cotton, and white muslin clothing didn't exist in that time. The best clothing was woven from coarse wool thread. During that time, many brambles, biting insects, flies, snakes, stinging insects, venomous insects, and other poisonous creatures arose. The names of treasures like gold, silver, agate, and pearls disappeared from the Earth. There was only clay, stone, sand, and rocks that covered the land.

56. "It was during that time that those sentient beings would never again hear the names of the ten good deeds. The world was just filled with the ten evil deeds. How could people cultivate good actions from the names of things that were devoid of goodness? It was a time when sentient beings could do extreme evils, weren't dutiful to their parents, didn't respect their teachers, and weren't sincere or righteous. Wayward people who went against the path became respected as people are today who cultivate good conduct, are dutiful to their parents, respectfully follow their teachers, are sincere and righteous, and who follow the path of cultivation.

57. "Sentient beings often cultivated the ten evil deeds and often fell to the bad destinies. Sentient beings would look at each other with a constant desire to kill each other like hunters looking at a herd of deer. The land had many ditches, gullies, and deep valleys. The lands were desolate and people sparse, so they were afraid of traveling. At that point, a period of warfare arose. Picking up grass and wood, they fashioned them into spears and lances and killed more and more each day for a week.

58. "Then, wise people fled into a forest and hid in pits, feeling terrified during those seven days. They began to say kind and good things like 'If you don't hurt me, I won't hurt you.' They ate vegetation to sustain themselves. After seven days passed, they emerged from the mountain forest.

The Return to Civilization

59. "Those who survived looked at each other and rejoiced and celebrated. They said, 'You didn't die? You didn't die?' They were like parents who see their only child after being separated from them for a long time. Their joy was measureless. Those people thus each felt joyful and celebrated together. Afterward, they searched for their families, and there were many corpses among their families, friends, and followers. They lamented, wept, and cried aloud for another seven days.

60. "After the second week, the people again congratulated each other for seven days. Happy and joyous, they wondered to themselves, 'We've piled up such extremely evil deeds that we've been beset with these troubles. The corpses of our friends, relatives, families, and followers are gone. We ought to cultivate a little good together now. What good should we cultivate? We should not kill beings.'

61. "At that point, sentient beings all felt kindness and didn't hurt each other. Thereupon, the form and lifespan of sentient beings improved from ten years to a lifespan of twenty years.

62. "When they lived for twenty years, the people again thought, 'As a result of cultivating a little good conduct and not hurting each other, our lifespans have lengthened to twenty years. Now, we should like to increase this little goodness. What good shall we cultivate? We've stopped killing beings, so let's not steal from each other.' After they cultivated not stealing, their lifespans lengthened to forty years.

63. "When they lived for forty years, the people again thought, 'As a result of cultivating a little goodness, our lifespans have lengthened. Now, we should like to increase this little goodness. What good can we cultivate? We should not commit sexual misconduct.' Those people then stopped sexual misconduct, and their lifespans lengthened to eighty years.

64. "When they lived for eighty years, the people again thought, 'As a result of cultivating a little goodness, our lifespans have lengthened. Now, we should like to increase this little goodness. What good can we cultivate? We should not speak falsely.' Those people then all stopped speaking falsely, and their lifespans lengthened to 160 years.

65. "When they lived for 160 years, the people again thought, 'As a result of cultivating a little goodness, our lifespans have lengthened. Now, we should like to increase this little goodness. What good can we cultivate? We should not be duplicitous.' Those people then all stopped being duplicitous, and their lifespans lengthened to 320 years.

66. "When they lived for 320 years, the people again thought, 'As a result of cultivating a little goodness, our lifespans have lengthened. Now, we should like to increase this little goodness. What good can we cultivate? We should not speak harshly.' Thereupon, those people all stopped speaking harshly, and their lifespans lengthened to 640 years.

67. "When they lived for 640 years, the people again thought, 'As a result of cultivating a little goodness, our lifespans have lengthened. Now, we should like to increase this little goodness. What good can we cultivate? We should not speak frivolously.' Thereupon, those people all stopped speaking frivolously, and their lifespans lengthened to 2,000 years.

68. "When they lived for 2,000 years, the people again thought, 'As a result of cultivating a little goodness, our lifespans have lengthened. Now, we should like to increase this little goodness. What good can we cultivate? We should not be greedy.' Thereupon, those people all stopped being greedy, and their lifespans lengthened to 5,000 years.

69. "When they lived for 5,000 years, the people again thought, 'As a result of cultivating a little goodness, our lifespans have lengthened. Now, we should like to increase this little goodness. What good can we cultivate? We should not be envious and cultivate the good of kindness.' Thereupon, those people all stopped being envious and cultivated the good of kindness, and their lifespans lengthened to 10,000 years.

70. "When they lived for 10,000 years, the people again thought, 'As a result of cultivating a little goodness, our lifespans have lengthened. Now, we should like to increase this little goodness. What good can we cultivate? We should practice right view and not create delusion.' Thereupon, those people all practiced right view and didn't give rise to delusion, and their lifespans lengthened to 20,000 years.

71. "When they lived for 20,000 years, the people again thought, 'As a result of cultivating a little goodness, our lifespans have lengthened. Now, we should like to increase this little goodness. What good can we cultivate? We should desist from three unskillful qualities, which are 1. lust and 2. greed that go against Dharma and 3. wrong view.' Thereupon, those people all desisted from these three unskillful qualities, and their lifespans lengthened to 40,000 years.

72. "When they lived for 40,000 years, the people again thought, 'As a result of cultivating a little goodness, our lifespans have lengthened. Now, we should like to increase this little goodness. What good can we cultivate? We should dutifully support our parents and respectfully serve our teachers.' Thereupon, those people then dutifully supported their parents and respectfully served their teachers, and their lifespans lengthened to 80,000 years.

73. "When they lived for 80,000 years, women would go out to be married starting at 500 years of age. During that time, people had nine types of illness: 1. chills, 2. fevers, 3. hunger, 4. thirst, 5. defecation, 6. urination, 7. desire, 8. greed, and 9. old age. The Earth was relaxing and level. There weren't any ditches, wastelands, or brambles. Nor were there biting insects, snakes, or other poisonous creatures. Clay, stone, sand, and rocks changed into agate, the people were prosperous, and the five crops were consistently bountiful without end.

The Future Buddha Maitreya and Noble King Sankha

74. "There will be a time when 80,000 great cities arise, and the sound of chickens can be heard in the neighboring towns and cities. At that point, a Buddha will arise in the world named Maitreya, who will be a Tathagata, Arhat, and Completely Awakened One. He'll perfect the ten epithets just as the present Tathagata perfected the ten epithets. Among the gods like Sakra, Brahma, and Mara, demons, gods, ascetics, and priests, or spirits and worldly men, he will be self-realized, as I am self-realized today among those assemblies.

75. "He will teach the Dharma that's good in the beginning and good in the middle and end. It'll be complete in content and expression and purify the religious practice. His assembly of disciples will have countless hundreds of thousands just as my disciples today number in the hundreds. The populace will call his disciples 'sons of Maitreya' in the same way my disciples are as known as 'sons of the Sakya.'

76. "During his time, there will be a king named Sankha who will be a water-anointed warrior caste noble wheel-turning king. He'll be the administrator for the four continents under heaven and rule with the correct Dharma. There'll be no enemy he doesn't subjugate. He'll be replete with the seven treasures, which are the golden wheel treasure, white elephant treasure, blue horse treasure, miraculous jewel treasure, beautiful woman treasure, householder treasure, and general treasure. That king will have a thousand sons who are courageous and fierce. He'll be able to drive out foreign adversaries and the four quarters will respectfully follow him without using weapons but with a natural peace.

77. "At that time, the noble king will raise a great treasure banner, which will be sixteen fathoms around and a thousand fathoms tall. That banner will be decorated with a thousand different colors. The banner will have a hundred corners, and the corners will have a hundred sticks made of a mixture of many embroidered jewels.

78. "Thereupon, after the noble king breaks this banner, he'll give it to the ascetics, priests, and poor people of the country. Afterward, he'll cut off his hair and beard, put on the three Dharma robes, and leave home to cultivate the path. He'll cultivate the unsurpassed practice and realize for himself in the present life: 'Birth and death have been ended, the religious life has been established, and the task has been accomplished. I won't be subject to a later existence.'"

The Parable of the Noble King

79. The Buddha told the monks, "You must diligently cultivate good conduct. By cultivating good conduct, your lifespan will be lengthened, your appearance will improve, and your well-being and happiness, wealth and prosperity, and power will be perfected, just like the kings who follow the noble wheel-turning king's ancient teaching. Their lifespans lengthened, their appearances improved, and they perfected their well-being and happiness, wealth and prosperity, and power. A monk is likewise. He must cultivate good conduct for his lifespan to lengthen, his appearance to improve, and to perfect his well-being and happiness, wealth and prosperity, and power.

80. "How is a monk's lifespan lengthened? Thus, a monk cultivates the samadhi of desire [for good conduct] diligently and not negligently. He accomplishes the practice of cessation [of unskillful qualities] by cultivating the miraculous abilities. He cultivates the samadhi of effort … samadhi of mind … samadhi of contemplation diligently and not negligently. He accomplishes the practice of cessation by cultivating the spiritual abilities. This lengthens his lifespan.

81. "How is a monk's appearance improved? Here, a monk perfects the discipline and accomplishes proper behavior. He notices small misdeeds and fears them greatly. He fully learns the precepts and puts all of them into practice. This improves a monk's appearance.

82. "What is a monk's well-being and happiness? Here, a monk abandons lust and departs from unskillful qualities. With perception and examination, his seclusion gives rise to joy and happiness, and he practices the first dhyana. Without perception or examination, his samadhi gives rise to joy and happiness, and he practices the second dhyana. He abandons joy, remains mindful, focuses his mind, and isn't distracted. He knows his own happiness is what's sought by noble people. He's mindful and lives happily, practicing the third dhyana. He abandons and ceases pain and pleasure, ridding himself of his earlier sadness and joy. Not discomforted or pleased, he's carefully mindful and pure and practices the fourth dhyana. This is a monk's well-being and happiness.

83. "What is a monk's wealth and prosperity? Here, a monk cultivates kindness, filling one direction with it and the other directions as well. It's pervasive, universal, non-dual, and measureless. He eliminates the many bonds of resentment, and his mind has no hatred. He's quiet, kind, and gentle. He leisurely does the same with compassion, joy, and equanimity. This is a monk's wealth and prosperity.

84. "How does a monk perfect his power? Here, a monk truly knows the noble truth of suffering … formation … cessation … and truly knows the noble truth of the path. This is the monk's perfection of his power."

85. The Buddha told the monks, "Now, I've surveyed all those who possess power, and none surpass the power of Mara. Still, the power of a monk who ends the contaminants can defeat him."

86. The monks who heard what the Buddha taught rejoiced and approved.

DA 7 PADASVA

(This sutra's parallels include DN 23, MA 71, and T45.)

(The Buddha's disciple Kaumara (or Kumara) Kasyapa has an encounter with an unusual priest who holds nihilistic views and engages him in a colorful debate consisting of dueling stories. The priest at the end reveals that he was only testing Kasyapa and becomes a layman. He assigns a subordinate to arrange for a large donation to the Samgha, but gets a dressing down by both Kasyapa and his subordinate about relying on the merit of alms while still living an immoral life or giving low quality gifts. This sutra is unusual in admitting that it takes place after the Buddha's Nirvana and lacks the traditional "Thus I have heard" introduction.)

1. Once, Kaumara Kasyapa traveled with five hundred monks to Kosala. They made their way to the priest town of Svetika. Kaumara Kasyapa then stopped at the rosewood grove to the north of town.

The Priest Padasva's Wrong Views

2. There was a priest named Padasva who lived in Svetika. The town was bountiful and happy, the people were numerous, and trees grew abundantly there. King Prasenajit had awarded this town to the priest Padasva as his priestly due. This priest Padasva constantly harbored unorthodox views, telling people, "There's no other world, nor is their rebirth or the results of good and bad actions."

3. When the people in Svetika heard that Kaumara Kasyapa had made his way with 500 monks from Kosala to the rosewood grove nearby, they said to each other, "This Kaumara Kasyapa is quite famous. He's a senior elder who became an arhat. He's widely educated, intelligent, and wise. He's as eloquent as the situation requires and skilled in holding discussions. Wouldn't it be good to meet him now?"

4. The townspeople visited Kasyapa daily. At the time, Padasva was up in his high tower. He saw droves of townspeople following each other but didn't know where they were going. He asked his parasol-holders, "Why are those crowds of people following each other?"

5. His servants answered, "We've heard that Kaumara Kasyapa has made his way with 500 monks from Kosala to the rosewood grove nearby. We've also heard that he is quite famous. He's a senior elder who became an arhat. He's widely educated, intelligent, and wise. He's as eloquent as the situation requires and skilled in holding discussions. Those people following each other in droves are going to see Kasyapa."

6. The priest Padasva then gave a servant this order: "Quick, go tell those people, 'Wait a minute! We'll all go visit him together!' Why is that? Those people are foolish, and he tricks the world. He says there's another world, claims there's rebirth, and says there are results of good and bad actions. Really, there's no other world, no rebirth, and no results of good and bad actions."

7. Accepting his instructions, the servant went and told the people of Svetika: 'The priest says, 'Wait a minute! We'll all go visit him together!'"

The townspeople replied, "Good, good! If he's coming, we'll go with him!"

The servant returned quickly and said, "The people are waiting to go with you."

8. The priest descended from his high tower and ordered his servant to ready horses. He then accompanied the townspeople, who surrounded him in front and back, to the rosewood grove. When they arrived, his dismounted from his chariot and proceeded on foot to Kasyapa. After they exchanged greetings, he sat to one side. Some of the priests and householders of the town venerated Kasyapa and sat down. Some of them exchanged greetings with him and sat down. Some of them told him their names and sat down. Some of them saluted him and sat down. Some of them remained silent and sat down.

Parable of the Sun and Moon

9. The priest Padasva then said to Kaumara Kasyapa, "Now, if you have a moment, I'd like to ask a question. May I?"

Kasyapa replied, "I'll listen to whatever questions you have and explain it."

10. The priest asked, "Now, I have the position that there's no other world, no rebirth, and no results of misdeeds and merits. What's your position on this?"

11. Kasyapa answered, "I'll ask you a question. Tell me what you think. Now, are the sun and moon of this world or another world? Are they humans or gods?"

The priest answered, "The sun and moon are of another world, not this world. They are gods, not humans."

12. Kasyapa said, "We know in this way there's surely another world, there's rebirth, and there's good and bad results of actions."

The priest said, "Although you say how there's another world, rebirth, and good and bad results of actions, none of these exist in my way of thinking."

Parable of the Thief

13. Kasyapa asked, "Are there any causes and conditions by which we can know there isn't another world, no rebirth, and no good and bad results of actions?"

The priest answered, "There is."

14. Kasyapa asked, "What's the cause or condition for you say, 'There isn't another world'?

15. The priest said, "Kasyapa, I had a relative who fell seriously ill. I went and said to him, 'Ascetics and priests each hold unorthodox views. They say that someone who kills beings, steals, engages in wrong sex, speaks duplicitously, uses harsh words, speaks falsely, speaks frivolously, or is greedy, jealous, and has wrong views will go to Hell when their body breaks up and their life ends. From the start, I haven't believed this. Why is that? To begin with, I've never seen anyone return after dying, though it's claimed they fall somewhere. If someone were to come back and say where they fell, I would certainly believe it. Now, you are a friend of mine who has done the ten bad deeds. If it's as the ascetics say, you'll surely go to a great Hell when you die. We trust each other, and I'd certainly accept what I heard from you. If you discover there is a hell, you should return and tell me about it. Then, I'll believe it.'

"Kasyapa, my relative hasn't come back to me since their life ended. They were my friend; they wouldn't have lied to me. They agreed, but they didn't come back. Surely, there's no afterlife."

16. Kasyapa responded, "Those who are wise explain things with parables. Now, I'll explain this for you with a story. Once, there was a thief who was constantly making schemes and breaking the king's laws. He was hunted down, and an officer brought him to the king. 'This man is a thief. Please let the king judge him.'

17. "The king ordered his men, 'Tie that man up and announce his crime throughout the city. After that, carry him out of the city and execute him.'

18. "The thief spoke to his guards in a gentle voice, 'You could let me go see my relatives and bid them farewell. I'll return after I'm done.' How would it be, priest? Would those guards let him go?"

The priest replied, "They couldn't!"

19. Kasyapa continued, "The same type of person exists in the present world, but they aren't released. How could your friend who had done the ten evil deeds return? He surely went to Hell when his body broke up and his life ended. The demons in Hell have no mercy. They're inhuman, and the dead are born in a different world. Suppose someone spoke to those demons of Hell with gentle words, 'Please let me go for a little while to return to the world and say farewell to my friend. I'll return after I'm done.' Would they release him?"

The priest answered, "They couldn't!"

20. Kasyapa also said, "In this way, there's enough for us to know [there's another world]. How can you hold to this delusion and create these wrong views for yourself?"

The priest said, "Although you've told this story to show there's another world, I still say there isn't one."

Parable of the Latrine

21. Kasyapa again asked, "Do you have some other reason for knowing there isn't another world?"

The priest responded, "I have another reason that I know there isn't another world."

22. Kasyapa asked, "What's the reason you know this?"

23. He answered, "Kasyapa, I had a relative who fell seriously ill. I went and said to him, 'Ascetics and priests each hold unorthodox views. They say that someone who doesn't kill beings, steal, or engage in sex, doesn't speak duplicitously, use harsh words, speak falsely, or speak frivolously, and isn't greedy, jealous, or have wrong views will be born in Heaven when their body breaks up and their life ends. From the start, I haven't believed this. Why is that? To begin with, I've never seen anyone return after dying, though it's claimed they fall somewhere. If someone were to come back and say where they fell, I would certainly believe it. Now, you are a friend of mine who has done the ten good deeds. If it's as the ascetics say, you'll surely be born in Heaven when your life ends. We trust each other, and I'd certainly accept what I heard from you. If you discover there is a heaven, you should return and tell me about it. Then, I'll believe it.'

"Kasyapa, my relative hasn't come back to me since their life ended. They were my friend; they wouldn't have lied to me. They agreed, but they didn't come back. Surely, there isn't another world."

24. Kasyapa also said, "Those who are wise explain things with parables. Now, I'll explain this for you with a story. Once, there was a man who fell into a deep latrine, and he was submerged in it up to his head. The king ordered his men, 'Pull this man out. Clean him off with bamboo, scrub his body three times, and cleanse him with beans and ash. Once he's been washed, anoint him with incense and bathe his body. Then dust him with fine incense powder and order a barber to cut and wash his hair.'

25. "He also ordered his servants to take him to a bath. They did this three times, washing him with incense water and dusting him with incense power. They adorned him with fine clothes and fed him a sumptuous meal, letting him eat what he liked. He was then led to a high hall where he could enjoy the five desires. Would that man go back to the latrine?"

He answered, "He couldn't! That's such a disgusting place, how could he reenter it?"

26. Kasyapa said, "The gods are likewise. The lands of Jambudvipa are polluted and impure to those in the heavens above. They can smell people's bad odor from more than a hundred leagues away like it's a horrible latrine. Priest, that relative you knew who completed the ten good deeds was surely born in a heaven where they enjoy the five desires. Their happiness is unsurpassable. Would they return to this latrine of Jambudvipa?"

He answered, "No."

27. Kasyapa also said, "In this way, there's enough for us to know [there's another world]. How can you hold to this delusion and create these wrong views for yourself?"

The priest said, "Although you've told this story to show there's another world, I still say there isn't one."

The Life Span of Gods

28. Kasyapa again asked, "Do you have some other reason for knowing there isn't another world?"

The priest responded, "I have another reason that I know there isn't another world."

29. Kasyapa asked, "What's the reason you know this?"

30. He answered, "Kasyapa, I had a relative who fell seriously ill. I went and said to him, 'Ascetics and priests each hold unorthodox views. They say that someone who doesn't kill beings, steal, engage in sex, lie, or drink alcohol will be born in Heaven when their body breaks up and their life ends. I don't believe this, either. Why is that? To begin with, I've never seen anyone return after dying, though it's claimed they fall somewhere. If someone were to come back and say where they fell, I would certainly believe it. Now, you are a friend of mine who has completed the five precepts … you'd surely be born in Heaven when your body breaks up and your life ends. We trust each other, and I'd certainly accept what I heard from you. If you discover there is a heaven, you should return and tell me about it. Then, I'll believe it.'

"Kasyapa, my relative hasn't come back since their life ended. They were my friend; they wouldn't have lied to me. They agreed, but they didn't come back. Surely, there isn't another world."

31. Kasyapa answered, "A century here is exactly one day and night in the Trayastrimsa Heaven. Thirty days makes one month, and twelve months makes a year there. Thus, those gods live for thousands of years. How is it, priest? That relative you knew who completed the five precepts was surely born up in the Trayastrimsa Heaven when their body broke up and their life ended. After being born there, they would have thought, 'It's only been two or three days since I was born here. I'll enjoy it and entertain myself. Afterward, I'll go down and tell him about it.' Would they see you?"

He answered, "No. I would be long since dead. How could we see each other again?"

Parable of Being Blind from Birth

32. The priest said, "But I don't believe this. Who came and told you that there was a Trayastrimsa Heaven and their life spans are like that there?"

33. Kasyapa said, "Those who are wise explain things with parables. Now, I'll explain this for you with a story. Once, there was a person who was blind from birth. They didn't know the five colors, such as blue, yellow, red, and white, or coarse, fine, long, and short. They hadn't seen the sun, moon, stars, hills, or valleys. Someone asked them, 'What are the five colors, such as blue, yellow, red, and white?'

34. "The blind person answered, 'There are no five colors.' It was the same with coarse, fine, long, and short or the moon, sun, stars, hills, and valleys. The blind person said they didn't exist. How is it, priest? Did that blind person answer correctly?"

He answered, "No."

35. "Why is that? The world obviously has five colors, such as blue, yellow, red, or white, coarse, fine, long, and short, and the sun, moon, stars, hills, and valleys, but that person said they don't exist. Priest, you are the same. The life span of the Trayastrimsa gods is real and not false. You haven't witnessed it yourself, so you say it doesn't exist."

The priest said, "Although you say it exists, I still don't believe it."

Parable of Dreaming

36. Kasyapa then said, "Do you have another reason for knowing it doesn't exist?"

37. He answered, "Kasyapa, there was a thief in the town that I was given. He was hunted down, and an officer brought him to me. He said, 'This man is a thief. Please judge him.'

38. "I answered, 'Tie him up and put him in a large cauldron. Cover it in leather and thick mud to seal him inside. Don't let him escape. Have people surround the cauldron and heat it with a fire.'

39. "At the time, I wanted to watch his spirit escape from that container. I directed my servants to surround the cauldron and watch it. None of them saw his spirit leave that place. Also, when we opened the cauldron and looked in, we didn't see his spirit being reborn anywhere. For this reason, I know there isn't another world."

40. Kasyapa said, "Now, I'll ask you a question. If you can answer it, tell me what you think. Priest, when you're sleeping in a high tower, do you ever dream of mountains, forests, rivers, parks, lakes, cities, or streets?"

He answered, "I do dream of them."

41. He then asked, "Priest, when you are dreaming of them, are your family and servants guarding you?"

He answered, "They guard me."

42. He further asked, "Priest, do your servants see your spirit leaving and returning?"

He answered, "They don't see it."

43. Kasyapa said, "Now, your spirit leaves and returns while you're alive, but it can't be seen. Would it be different for someone who dies? It isn't possible to directly witness it with your eyes while watching a sentient being.

44. "Priest, suppose there's a monk who doesn't get sleepy from the beginning to the end of the night. He's diligent and not negligent, focusing on the factors of the path. With the power of samadhi, he cultivates the pure heavenly eye. With the power of the heavenly eye, he watches sentient beings. They die here and are born there, and they're born here from there. Their life spans are long and short, and their appearances are beautiful and ugly. According to the results of their actions, they arrive in good and bad destinations. He fully knows and sees this. You cannot witness the good and bad destinations of sentient beings with the polluted flesh eye, so you say they don't exist. Priest, we know in this way there's surely another world."

The priest said, "Although you've told this story showing that there's another world, my view is still that it doesn't exist."

Parable of the Fire-Worshipper

45. Kasyapa again asked, "Do you have another reason for knowing that there isn't another world?"

The priest said, "I do."

46. Kasyapa said, "What's the reason you know this?"

47. The priest said, "There was a thief in the town that I was given. He was hunted down, and an officer brought him to me. He said, 'This man is a thief. Please judge him.'

48. "I ordered my men, 'Tie him up, peel off his skin, and look for his spirit.' None of them saw it. I instructed them to cut away his flesh and look for his spirit. Again, they didn't see it. I instructed them to cut his sinews, arteries, and bones while looking for his spirit. Again, they didn't see it. I instructed them to crush his bones, extract the marrow, and look for his spirit in the marrow. Again, they didn't see it. Kasyapa, I know there isn't another world for this reason."

49. Kasyapa again said, "Those who are wise explain things with parables. Now, I'll explain this for you with a story. Long, long ago, there was a country that was destroyed. It had yet to recover from the devastation when a merchant caravan of five hundred carts passed through that land.

50. "There was a wanderer who worshipped the fire spirit who always stayed in the grove where those merchants stopped for the night. When they departed the next morning, the fire-worshipping wanderer thought, 'Those merchants who were staying in this grove may have left some effluent as they departed. I'll go check to see.' He quickly went to where they had stayed, but he saw nothing but a one-year-old child sitting there by himself.

51. "The wanderer then thought, 'Now, how could I bear to see this small child die in front of me? It would be better to take the child to my home and nurture him!' The wanderer picked up the child and took it to his abode where he raised him. The child grew up and was over ten years old.

52. "It was then that the wanderer was going to travel to a community for some minor reason. He said to the child, 'I will be out traveling for a minor reason. Guard this fire well. Be careful not to let it go out! If the fire goes out, rub wood together to rekindle it.' After giving the child these instructions, he left the grove and went on his trip.

53. "After the wanderer was gone, the child spent his time playing and didn't check the fire often, so the fire did go out. When the child returned from playing, he saw that the fire had gone out and felt terrible. He said, 'I've made a mistake. When my father left, he gave me instructions to guard this fire and not let it go out. But I spent my time playing, and now the fire is out. What shall I do?'

54. "The child blew on the ashes looking for the fire, but he couldn't find it. He chopped firewood looking for the fire, but again he couldn't find it. He also ground the firewood after cutting it up, pounding it in a mortar looking for the fire, but he still couldn't find it.

55. "The wanderer returned from the community and arrived at his grove. He asked the child, 'Didn't I instruct you before to guard the fire and keep it from going out?'

"The child responded, 'I went out to play and didn't spend the day watching over it. Now, the fire has gone out.'

56. "He again asked the child, 'What was your method of looking for the fire?'

"The child responded, 'The fire came out of the wood, so I chopped wood looking for fire, but I didn't find any. I also chopped it up and ground it in a mortar looking for the fire. I didn't find any that way, either.'

57. "The wanderer then rubbed wood together to make a fire and set a pile of firewood alight. He told the child, 'Someone who's looking for fire should use this method. They shouldn't chop or grind wood to find it.'

58. "Priest, you likewise didn't use the right method when you peeled the skin off the dead man looking for his spirit. It's not something that can be seen directly with your eyes when you examine sentient beings.

59. "Priest, suppose there's a monk who doesn't become sleepy from the start to the end of the night. He's diligent and not negligent, focusing on the factors of the path. He cultivates the pure heavenly eye with the power of samadhi, and he watches sentient beings with the power of the heavenly eye. They die here and are born there, and they're born here from there. Their life spans are long and short, and their appearances are beautiful and ugly. According to the results of their actions, they have good and bad destinations. He fully knows and sees this. You cannot witness the good and bad destinies of sentient beings with the polluted flesh eye, so you say they don't exist. Priest, we know in this way there's surely another world."

The priest said, "Although you've told this story showing that there's another world, my view is still that there isn't one."

Parable of Iron

60. Kasyapa again said, "Do you have another reason for knowing there isn't another world?"

The priest said, "I do."

61. Kasyapa asked, "What's the reason you know this?"

62. The priest said, "There was a thief in the town that I was given. He was hunted down, and an officer brought him to me. He said, 'This man is a thief. Please judge him.'

63. "I ordered my men, 'Take this man and weigh him on a scale.' My servants accepted this order and weighed him with a scale.

64. "I then told my servants, 'Take this man and kill him in a non-violent way that won't damage his skin or flesh.' They accepted my instruction and killed him in a non-violent way.

65. "Again, I ordered my servants, 'Weigh him again.' They then weighed his body.

66. "Kasyapa, when they initially weighed that man, his spirit was still present. He looked relaxed, he could still talk, and his body was lighter. After he was dead, he was weighed again when his spirit had passed away. He had no expression, he couldn't talk, and his body was heavier. I know there isn't another world for this reason."

67. Kasyapa said to the priest, "Now, I'll ask you a question and you tell me what you think. Suppose someone weighs iron. First, they weigh it while it's cold, and later they weigh it while it's hot. When would it be glowing with color, flexible, and lighter? When would it not be glowing, solid, and heavier?"

The priest said, "Hot iron has color, and it's soft and light. Cold iron has no color, and it's hard and heavy."

68. Kasyapa said, "A man is likewise. While alive, he has color, and he's soft and light. When he's dead, he has no color, and he's hard and heavy. In this way, we know there's surely another world."

The priest said, "Although you've used this analogy to show there's another world, my view is still that there surely isn't one."

Parable of the Horn-Blower

69. Kasyapa said, "Do you have another reason for knowing there isn't another world?"

70. The priest answered, "I have a friend who fell seriously ill. I went to him and said [to myself], 'It would help this sick man to turn him onto his right side.' He looked, turned, and spoke as usual. I tried turning him onto his left side and moved him back again. He turned, looked, and spoke as usual. His life soon ended. Again, I had someone help turn him onto his left and right side, and then we moved him back again. He didn't turn, look, or speak again. For this reason, I know there surely isn't another world."

71. Kasyapa again said, "Those who are wise explain things with parables. Now, I'll explain this for you with a story. Once, there was a country where the sound of the conch hadn't been heard before. A man who was skilled at blowing conch horns traveled to that country. The men and women of the town were shocked when they heard this sound. They went and asked him, 'What is that sound that's so melancholic and clear?'

"The man pointed to his conch and said, 'That's the sound that this makes.'

72. "Those villagers touched the conch with their hands and said, 'You may make that sound! You may make that sound!'

"The conch didn't make a sound. Then its owner picked it up, blew it three times, and put it down.

73. "The villagers then said, 'It wasn't a power of the conch that made that beautiful sound before. It was his hand, mouth, and breath blowing through it. Then, it makes that sound!'

74. "People are likewise. When they are alive, conscious, and breathing, then they can turn, look, and speak. Without life, without consciousness, and without breathing, they don't turn, look, or speak."

75. He also said to the priest, "Now, it would be right for you to abandon this pernicious view. Don't increase your own suffering for a long time."

Parable of the Wise Man and the Fool

76. The priest said, "I'm not going to abandon it. Why is that? I've been saying it for a long time, and I've become set in it ways. How could I abandon it?'

77. Kasyapa again said, "Those who are wise explain things with parables. Now, I'll explain this for you with a story. Long ago, there was a country that was bordered by barbarians. In that country, there were two people. One was wise, and one was foolish. They said to each other, 'I'm your friend. I'll leave the city with you to look for riches.'

78. "They soon went together to an empty village. Seeing the land there had hemp, the wise man said to the foolish one, 'Let's collect it and take it home.'

79. "They each took a bushel. When they passed another village ahead of them, they saw hemp thread there. The wise man said, 'Hemp thread is a finished good that's light and fine. It's worth taking.'

"The other man said, 'I've already got this hemp tied up and secured. I can't discard it.'

80. The wise man then took the hemp thread and added it to his burden. Again, they continued and saw some hemp cloth. The wise man said, 'Hemp cloth is a finished good that's light and fine. It's worth taking.'

"The other man said, 'I've already got this hemp tied up and secured. I can't discard it.'

81. "The wise man discarded the hemp thread and carried the hemp cloth himself. Again, they continued and saw some cotton. The wise man said, 'Cotton is valuable, light, and fine. It's worth taking.'

"The other man said, 'I've already got this hemp tied up and secured, and I've carried it a long distance on the road. I can't discard it.'

82. "The wise man then discarded the hemp cloth and took the cotton. Thus, they continued and saw cotton thread … After that, they saw white muslin … they saw cupronickel … they saw silver … they saw gold. The wise man said, "If there were no gold, then we should take the silver. If there were no silver, we should take the cupronickel … If there were no hemp thread, we should just take the hemp. Now, this village has a great deal of gold and many superior treasures. It would be right for you to discard your hemp. I'll take the silver, and you take the gold. We'll carry it home ourselves.'

"That other man said, 'I've already got this hemp tied up and secured, and I've carried it a long distance on the road. I can't discard it. If you want to take those things, then do what you like.'

83. "The wise man discarded the silver and took the gold, carrying the burden back home to his family. When his relatives saw him in the distance with a treasure of gold, they rejoiced and looked up to him. When the man who brought the gold saw his relatives looking up to him, he rejoiced as well. The ignorant man carried only hemp when he returned home. His relatives weren't happy or proud of him when they saw him. The hemp he carried had doubled his sorrow and trouble.

84. "Priest, it would be right for you to abandon that pernicious view now. Don't increase your own suffering for a long time like the man who carried the hemp. Attached to his stubborn thinking, he didn't take the treasure of gold, and the hemp he carried home was a useless burden to him. His relatives weren't happy, and he remained poor for a long time. It increased his own sorrow and suffering."

Parable of the Two Caravans

85. The priest said, 'I'll never abandon this view. Why is that? I've taught this view to many people, and many have profited by it. The kings in the four directions hear my name, and they all know I'm the philosopher of nihilism."

86. Kasyapa again said, "Those who are wise explain things with parables. Now, I'll explain this for you with a story. Long ago, there was a country far away bordering a land of barbarians. At the time, there was a merchant who traveled through that land with a caravan of a thousand carts. They didn't have enough water, grain, firewood, and grass. The merchant owner thought, 'We brought a great deal, but our water, grain, firewood, and grass aren't enough to supply us. Perhaps it would be best to split into two groups and for one group to head out first.'

87. "The leader of that first group saw a man with a huge body. His eyes were red, his face was black, and his body was covered in mud. Seeing him coming from a distance, the leader called, 'Where have you come from?'

"The man replied, 'I've come from a village that's ahead.'

88. "The leader asked him, 'Is there much water, grain, firewood, and grass where you've come from?'

"The man replied, 'Water, grain, firewood, and grass are bountiful where I've come from. There was a downpour while I was on the road. That place has much water, and there's plenty of firewood and grass.'

89. "He also said to the merchant owner, 'If your carts are carrying grain and grass, they could discard all of it. That place has plenty, so you don't need to burden your carts with it.'

90. "The merchant leader said to his company of merchants, 'Ahead of us, there's a man whose eyes are red, his face is black, and his body is covered in mud. We asked him from a distance, "Where have you come from?"

"'He answered us, "I've come from a village that's ahead."

91. "'We immediately asked, "Are water, grain, firewood, and grass bountiful where you came from?"

"'He answered us, "There's a huge bounty there."

92. "'He also told us, "While I was on the road, there was a downpour. That place has much water, and there's plenty of firewood and grass."

"'He again told us, "Gentlemen, if you have grain and grass on your carts, you can discard all of it. That place has plenty, so you don't need to burden your carts with it."

93. "'Each of you ought to discard your grain and grass. We'll make faster progress with lighter carts.' They did as he said, each of them discarding their grain and grass, and they made faster progress with lighter carts.

94. "Thus, they didn't see water or grass during the first day, nor did they see any on the second day … the third day … the seventh day. At that point, the merchants met their end in the wasteland and were eaten by the demon.

95. "The group that was behind them went down that road, and the merchant leader saw a man ahead who had red eyes, a black face, and a body covered in mud. He asked him from a distance, 'Where did you come from?'

"The man answered, 'I've come from a village that's ahead.'

96. "He also asked, 'Are water, grain, firewood, and grass bountiful where you came from?'

"That man answered, 'There's a huge bounty there.'

97. "He also told the merchant leader, 'While I was on the road, there was a downpour. That place has much water, and there's plenty of firewood and grass.'

"Again, he told the merchant leader, 'Gentlemen, if you have grain and grass on your carts, you can discard it. That place has plenty, so you don't need to burden your carts with it.'

98. "The merchant leader said to his company of merchants, 'Ahead of us, there's a man … [He said,] "Gentlemen, if you have grain and grass on your carts, you can discard all of it. That place has plenty, so you don't need to burden your carts with it."

99. "The merchant leader said, 'Take care not to discard your grain and grass. We'll discard them when we find fresh supplies. Why is that? Once we replace them with fresh supplies, we'll be able to cross this wasteland.'

100. "Those merchants proceeded with heavy carts. Thus, they didn't see water or grass on the first day, nor did they see any on the second day … the third day … the seventh day. All they saw of the people who had been eaten by the demon were their scattered bones.

101. "Priest, that red-eyed and black-faced man was a raksasa demon. Those who follow your teaching will suffer for a long time. They'll be like that first group of merchants who followed what their leader said and lost their lives because they lacked wisdom.

102. "Priest, there are ascetics and priests who are diligent and wise. Those who put into practice the teachings that they declare obtain peace for a long time. They're like the group of merchants who followed the first. They escaped disaster because they were wise. Priest, now you had best abandon this pernicious view. Don't increase your own suffering for a long time."

Parable of the Dung-Carrier

103. The priest said, "I'll never abandon that view. If someone came to scold me about it, it would just make me resentful. I'll never abandon this view."

104. Kasyapa also said, "Those who are wise explain things with parables. Now, I'll explain this for you with a story. Long ago, there was a country far away that was bordered by a land of barbarians. A person there delighted in raising pigs. They went to another empty village and saw dry dung there. They immediately thought, 'This place is rich in dung that my pigs could eat. Now, I'll wrap this dry dung in grass and carry it back home on my head.'

105. "They took grass, wrapped the dung in it, and carried it that way. There was heavy rain while they were on the road, and the dung got wet and ran all the way down to the heels of their feet. People who saw that person all said, 'You're crazy! You're covered in dung and reek of it! Even if it stops raining, you shouldn't continue carrying that. Certainly don't carry it while you're walking in the rain!'

106. "That person was offended by this and yelled back at those people: 'You're all fools! You don't know that I have pigs at home to feed! If you knew that, you wouldn't say I'm foolish!'

107. "Priest, it would be best for you to abandon this pernicious view. Don't guard this delusion and subject yourself to suffering for a long time. You'd be like that foolish person who carried dung as they walked and got offended by a ridiculing crowd, saying they don't understand."

Parable of the Two Wives

108. The priest said to Kasyapa, "If all of you say someone who does good is born in Heaven, then dying would be better than being alive. You ought to slit your throats with a knife or die in some other way. Maybe tie up your arms and legs and toss yourselves off a high cliff. Yet, you crave life and can't kill yourselves, so I know that death isn't better than birth."

109. Kasyapa again said, "Those who are wise explain things with parables. Now, I'll explain this for you with a story. Once, this town of Svetika had an elder wanderer who was 120 years old. He had two wives. One already had a child, and the other had just become pregnant.

110. "Soon after that, the wanderer died. His older wife's son said to the younger wife, 'I should inherit all the wealth that he had. You'll get no share of it.'

The younger wife said, 'Wait a minute, I need a share for my unborn child. If I give birth to a son, then he would inherit a share of the wealth. If I give birth to a daughter, then you'll marry her, and I'll get some of his property.'

111. "The son demanded the father's wealth politely three times, and the younger mother answered as before. The son attempted to compel her, but he wasn't successful. The younger mother then used a sharp knife on her lower abdomen to see if she carried a boy or a girl."

112. Kasyapa told the priest, "That mother killed herself and hurt the child in her womb. You, priest, are likewise. You would kill yourself, and you're going to kill others, too. If an ascetic or priest is diligent, cultivates virtue, and perfects the virtue of the precepts, they'll remain in the world for a long time. They benefit many people, and gods and humans find peace.

Parable of the Jugglers

113. "Now, I'll tell you one last story so that you'll know the disaster of evil views. Once, there were two entertainers here in the town of Svetika. They were both skilled at juggling, but one was better than the other.

114. "The one who wasn't as good said, 'Let's take a break today, but we should have a competition tomorrow.'

115. "The lesser juggler went home and picked up his juggling balls. He coated them with a poisonous plant, then set them out to dry. In the morning, he took these balls to the better juggler. He said, 'We can juggle with these.'

116. "Then they juggled in front of each other, but first he passed the poisoned balls to the better juggler, saying, 'The better juggler swallows them.' The lesser juggler passed the poison balls to him again, which the better juggler swallowed when he caught them. The poison traveled throughout his body and caused a seizure.

117. "The lesser juggler then scolded him with this verse:

- 'I coated the balls with poison,

But you swallowed them and didn't notice.
When a lesser performer swallows it,
It takes a while for him to realize it.'"

Padasva Takes Refuge

118. Kasyapa said to the priest, "Now, you should quickly abandon this evil view. Don't focus on this delusion and increase your own suffering like that entertainer who swallowed poison without noticing it."

119. The priest said to Kasyapa, "Venerable, I had understood you when we discussed that first parable about the moon. I didn't accept it at that point because I wanted to witness the eloquence and wisdom of Kasyapa and solidify my belief. Now, I believe and accept [that there's another world]. I take refuge in Kasyapa."

Kasyapa replied, "Don't take refuge in me. You should take refuge in the unsurpassed sage that's my refuge."

120. The priest said, "I'm not sure about that unsurpassed sage who's your refuge. Where is he now?"

Kasyapa replied, "It hasn't been long now since the final liberation of my teacher, the Bhagavan."

121. The priest said, "If the Bhagavan still existed, I wouldn't avoid him, whether he was far or near. He would be a friend to visit. I'd take refuge and venerate him. Now that I hear Kasyapa speak of the Tathagata's final liberation, I'll take refuge in the completely liberated Tathagata, Dharma, and Samgha. Kasyapa, permit me to become a layman in the correct teaching. From this day forward, I won't kill, steal, engage in sex, lie, or drink alcohol for my whole life, and right now I'll make a large donation."

Madhuka's Pure Donation

122. Kasyapa said, "If you slaughter sentient beings and beat your servants yet hold a [donor's] meeting, this is not pure merit. It's like barren and meager land where weeds and brambles grow. Nothing is gained by planting such land with seed. If you slaughter sentient beings and beat your servants yet hold a meeting and give donations to assemblies with wrong views, this is not pure merit. If you're going to give a large donation, don't harm sentient beings and don't discipline your servants with the cane. If you rejoice, arrange meetings, and give to a pure assembly, you'll obtain great merit. It's like excellent farmland that's sure to yield substantial fruit whenever seed is planted in it."

"Kasyapa, from now on, I'll always give purely to the assembly, and I won't allow the donations to be discontinued."

123. There was a junior wanderer named Madhuka who was standing behind Padasva. Padasva looked at him and said, "I want to arrange a large donation of everything. You'll plan and manage it for me."

124. That junior wanderer heard what Padasva said and planned it. Once that large donation was planned, he said, "Please don't let Padasva obtain a meritorious reward for this in the present or the afterlife."

Padasva heard that that wanderer had planned the donation and then said, "Please don't let Padasva obtain a meritorious reward for this in the present or the afterlife." He summoned the wanderer and asked him, "Is that what you said?"

125. He answered, "Yes. I really did say that. Why was that? Now, this food that's been prepared as a gift to the Samgha is coarse and vile. If it were shown to a king, the king wouldn't touch it for a moment. How could he eat it? What's presently arranged isn't enjoyable. How would it be possible to get a pure reward in a later life as a result of it? The king gives the Samgha clothing that's entirely made of hemp cloth. If it were shown to the king, the king wouldn't touch it with his foot for a moment. How could he wear it? This presently arranged gift isn't enjoyable, so how could you get a pure reward in a later life as a result of it?"

The priest then told the wanderer, "From this day forward, give the Samgha the same food that I eat and the clothes that I wear."

126. The wanderer accepted his instruction and provided royal food and clothing as offerings to the Samgha. The priest arranged these pure gifts. When his body broke up and his life ended, he was born in one of the lesser heavens. The wanderer who planned the donations was born in the Trayastrimsa Heaven when his body broke up and his life ended.

127. The priest Padasva, the junior wanderer, the priests of Svetika, and the householders who heard what Kaumara Kasyapa taught rejoiced and approved.

DA 8 SANDHANA

(The direct parallels for this sutra are DN 25 and MA 104.)

(The layman Sandhana decides to visit the non-Buddhist wanderers at a nearby grove before paying a visit to the Buddha and asks them why they are so noisy and talk about non-spiritual topics. When their leader insults the Buddha, the Buddha overhears it with his heavenly ear and decides to intervene. He gives the wanderers an talk on the good and bad of their various ascetic practices. When they are about to be converted, Mara intervenes to prevent it.)

1. Thus I have heard: One time, the Buddha was staying at Saptaparna Cave near Mount Vaibhara of Rajagrha. He was accompanied by a large assembly of 1,250 monks.

Sandhana Visits Udumbarika's Grove

2. At the time, there was a householder of Rajagrha named Sandhana who liked to go for walks. Every day, he would leave the city to visit the Bhagavan. On this occasion, that householder looked up at the sun and thought to himself, "Now is not the time to go meet the Buddha. The Bhagavan is surely in contemplative samadhi in a quiet place right now, and the assembly of monks will be meditating quietly as well. It would be better to go to Udumbarika's Grove and wait until the right time of day. Then, I'll visit the Bhagavan, pay homage to him, exchange greetings with him, and do the same with the monks."

3. There was a wanderer at Udumbarika's Grove named Nigrodha. He was accompanied by 500 wanderers who were staying at that grove. At the time, this assembly of wanderers had gathered in one place and were engaged in a loud and boisterous conversation using speech that obstructed the path with confusing words. They would do this until the end of the day. Sometimes, they discussed affairs of state. Sometimes, it was warfare and weapons. Sometimes, it was the harmony of countries. Sometimes, it was ministers and common people. Sometimes, it was riding chariots and horses through parks and forests. Sometimes, it was sitting mats, clothing, meals, and women. Sometimes, they discussed tortoises and sea turtles. They would only discuss such things that obstructed the path until the end of the day.

4. When that wanderer saw the householder Sandhana coming from a distance, he ordered his followers, "Be quiet! What's the reason? A disciple of the ascetic Gautama is coming from outside. He's the best of the ascetic Gautama's lay disciples. He'll surely come here, so you ought to be quiet!" The wanderers then fell silent.

5. Sandhana went to the wanderer and exchanged greetings with him. He then sat to one side and said, "My teacher, the Bhagavan, always enjoys quiet solitude and doesn't like noisy places. He's not like you and your disciples here who engage in loud and boisterous conversations and just discuss things that obstruct the path with useless words."

6. The wanderer said to the householder, "Hasn't the ascetic Gautama had conversations with people? How else could his assembly know that the ascetic possesses great wisdom? Your teacher always likes living alone in remote places. He's like the one-eyed cow that eats grass and chases what it sees in only one direction. Your teacher Gautama is like that. He prefers solitude and enjoys uninhabited places. If your teacher were to come here, we would call him a one-eyed cow. He always says that he possesses great wisdom, but I could finish him with a single word. He'd fall silent like a turtle hiding in its shell. It'd be no trouble to take away his escape with a single arrow."

The Buddha Goes to Udumbarika's Grove

7. At that moment, the Bhagavan was in a quiet room and overheard the conversation between that wanderer and householder with his heavenly ear. He emerged from the Saptaparna Cave and went to Udumbarika's Grove. When that wanderer saw the Buddha coming from a distance, he ordered his disciples: "All of you, be quiet! The ascetic Gautama is coming here! Please don't rise, greet him, or respectfully worship him. Don't ask him to sit, either. Choose a particular seat and set it aside for him. Once he sits down, you should ask, 'Ascetic Gautama, up until now, what teaching do you give your disciples so that they attain peaceful samadhi and purely cultivate the religious life?"

8. The Bhagavan gradually made his way to the park. The wanderers inadvertently rose, and they eventually greeted the Bhagavan, saying, "Welcome, Gautama! Welcome, ascetic! It's been a long time since we've seen you. What has brought you here today? You can have that small seat in the front."

9. The Bhagavan then prepared his seat, delighted and smiling. He thought to himself, "These fools aren't capable of staying focused. They were given a command, but they couldn't follow it. Why was that? The Buddha's miraculous power caused their bad thoughts to disintegrate naturally."

10. The householder Sandhana then bowed at the Bhagavan's feet and sat to one side. The wanderer Nigrodha exchanged greetings with the Buddha, and then he also sat to one side. He said to the Buddha, "Ascetic Gautama, up until now, what teaching have you given your disciples so that they attain peaceful samadhi and purely cultivate the religious life?"

11. The Bhagavan told him, "Enough, wanderer! My teaching is profound and broad. Up until now, I've taught my disciples, and they dwell peacefully and purely cultivate the religious life. It isn't comparable to your [teaching]."

The Ascetic Practice

12. He also told the wanderer, "Even if your teacher and your disciples were to practice the path, some would be pure and some would be impure. I could fully explain this for you."

The wanderer's 500 disciples all raised their voices, telling each other, "The ascetic Gautama possesses great might and great power! When someone asks about his doctrine, he instead discusses their doctrine!"

The wanderer Nigrodha then said to the Buddha, "Excellent, Gautama! Please explain it."

13. The Buddha told the wanderer, "Listen closely, listen closely! I'll explain it for you."

The wanderer replied, "I'd be glad to listen."

14. The Buddha told the wanderer, "Your practices are crude. You go naked without clothes and cover yourselves with your hands. You don't accept food in pots or bowls. You don't accept food while between two walls, between two people, between two blades, or between two bowls. You don't accept food when a family is eating together, when there's a pregnancy in the household, when you see a dog at the door, or when a home has lots of flies. You don't accept invitations to meals or food from someone who says they know you. You don't eat fish or meat and don't drink wine. You don't take two bowls of food, considering one swallow to be a meal … seven meals and stopping. When you accept a person's beneficial food, you don't do so more than seven times. Sometimes, you eat one meal a day or one every two days, three days, four days, five days, six days, or seven days. Sometimes, you eat fruit or weeds and drink juice. You eat flax seed, rice, long-grain rice, cow dung, deer dung, tree roots, branches, leaves, and fruit, or only fruit that has fallen naturally.

15. "Sometimes, you wear clothes, throw on sedge as clothes, wear tree bark, curtain yourselves in grass, or wear deerskin. Sometimes, you fasten head hair to yourselves, wear plaited hair, or wear clothes from a charnel ground.

16. "Sometimes, you keep your arms raised all the time, don't sit on couches or mats, or crouch all the time. Sometimes, you cut your hair and fasten it to your beard, lie on thorns, lie on fruits and berries, or lie naked in cow dung. Sometimes, you bath three times a day or three times a night. You torment your bodies with these countless hardships. How is it, Nigrodha? Can such practices be called a pure teaching?"

17. The wanderer answered, "This teaching is pure. It isn't impure."

Defilements in the Ascetic Practice

18. The Buddha told the wanderer, "You call it pure, but I will explain the defilements that are in your pure teaching."

The wanderer said, "Good, Gautama! Explain it now. I'd be glad to listen."

19. The Buddha told the ascetic, "Those practitioners of asceticism often think to themselves, 'Practicing in this way, I'll obtain offerings, respect, and veneration.' This is a defilement. After they obtain offerings, that practitioner's attachment to pleasure is made firm, and the stains of craving aren't abandoned. They don't realize how to distance themselves from it or know how to escape it. This is a defilement.

20. "Those practitioners of asceticism see someone coming from a distance, and they all sit together in meditation. When no one else is present, they sit and lie down as they like. This is a defilement.

21. "Those practitioners of asceticism hear correct doctrines from others, but they refuse to accept them. This is a defilement.

22. "When those practitioners of asceticism are asked correct questions by others, they are stingy and don't answer. This is a defilement.

23. "If those practitioners of asceticism see someone giving offerings to ascetics and priests, they rebuke them for it. This is a defilement.

24. "If those practitioners of asceticism see ascetics and priests eating living things, they rebuke them. This is a defilement.

25. "When those practitioners of asceticism have impure food, they refuse a pure meal from a donor. If there's pure food, they are attached to desire for their own food. They don't see this is a mistake and don't know how to escape from it. This is a defilement.

26. "Those practitioners of asceticism declare their own goodness and slander other people. This is a defilement.

27. "Those practitioners of asceticism kill, steal, engage in sex, speak duplicitously, harshly, falsely, and frivolously. They are greedy, jealous, have wrong views, and they are deluded. This is a defilement.

28. "Those practitioners of asceticism are lazy, forgetful, and don't train in meditative concentration. They lack wisdom like animals. This is a defilement.

29. "Those practitioners of asceticism are conceited, proud, and arrogant. This is a defilement.

30. "Those practitioners of asceticism lack trustworthiness, nor do they repay favors. They don't observe pure precepts and aren't able to diligently accept other's instruction. They associate with bad people, consider them comrades, and don't stop doing bad things. This is a defilement.

31. "Those practitioners of asceticism often harbor resentment, favor being deceitful, depend on their own views, look for the faults of others, and harbor long-standing wrong and extreme views. This is a defilement.

32. "How is it, Nigrodha? Can these practices be called pure and not wrong?"

He replied, "They are impure. They aren't pure."

Undefiled Things in the Ascetic Practice

33. The Buddha said, "Now, I'll explain the things that are pure and undefiled in your defiled teaching."

The wanderer said, "Please explain them."

34. The Buddha said, "Those ascetic practitioners don't think to themselves, 'Practicing in this way, I'll obtain offerings, respect, and veneration.' This is an ascetic practice that's undefiled.

35. "Once those ascetic practitioners obtain offerings, their minds aren't attached to desire for them. They understand how to distance themselves from it and know how to escape it. This is an ascetic practice that's undefiled.

36. "Those ascetic practitioners are always meditating whether people are present or not. It makes no difference to them. This is an ascetic practice that's undefiled.

37. "Those ascetic practitioners hear correct doctrines from others, and they are happy to accept them. This is an ascetic practice that's undefiled.

38. "When those ascetic practitioners are asked correct questions, they are happy to give explanations. This is an ascetic practice that's undefiled.

39. "If those ascetic practitioners see someone give offerings to ascetics and priests, they are happy for them and don't tell rebuke the person. This is an ascetic practice that's undefiled.

40. "When those ascetic practitioners see ascetics and priests eat living things, they don't rebuke them. This is an ascetic practice that's undefiled.

41. "When those ascetic practitioners have impure food, they don't feel stingy. If they have pure food, then they aren't attached to it. They can see their own defects and know how to escape them. This is an ascetic practice that's undefiled.

42. "Those ascetic practitioners don't praise themselves and criticize other people. This is an ascetic practice that's undefiled.

43. "Those ascetic practitioners don't kill, steal, engage in sex, speak duplicitously, harshly, or frivolously, nor are they greedy, jealous, or have wrong views. This is an ascetic practice that's undefiled.

44. "Those ascetic practitioners are diligent, not forgetful, prefer the practice of meditation, and often cultivate wisdom. They aren't foolish like animals. This is an ascetic practice that's undefiled.

45. "Those ascetic practitioners aren't conceited, proud, or arrogant. This is an ascetic practice that's undefiled.

46. "Those ascetic practitioners are always trustworthy and cultivate the practice of repaying favors. They can observe pure precepts and diligently accept instruction. They associate with good people, consider them comrades, and don't stop accumulating goodness. This is an ascetic practice that's undefiled.

47. "Those ascetic practitioners don't harbor resentment, aren't deceptive, don't rely on their own views, don't look for other people's shortcomings, and don't harbor wrong or extreme views. This is an ascetic practice that's undefiled.

48. "How is it, wanderer? Is such an ascetic practice pure and undefiled?"

He answered, "So it is! It really is pure and undefiled."

The Best and Essential Ascetic Practices

49. The wanderer said to the Buddha, "That's the extent of these ascetic practices, but are they called the best and essential practice?"

The Buddha said, "Not yet. We've just begun with the bark."

50. The wanderer said, "Please explain the tree's knot!"

The Buddha told the wanderer, "You should listen well. I will explain it now."

The wanderer said, "Very well! I'd be glad to listen."

51. "Wanderer, those ascetic practitioners don't themselves kill beings and don't instruct others to kill. They don't themselves steal and don't instruct others to steal. They don't themselves engage in wrong sex and don't instruct others to engage in sex. They don't themselves speak falsely and don't instruct others to do so.

52. "They completely fill one direction with kindness and the other directions as well. Their kindness is vast, without duality, measureless, and lacking resentments. They completely fill the world with compassion, joy, and equanimity in the same way. That's the extent of the ascetic practice that's called the tree's knot."

53. The wanderer said to the Buddha, "Please explain the essential meaning of ascetic practice."

The Buddha told the ascetic, "Listen closely, listen closely! I will explain it."

The ascetic said, "Very well, Bhagavan. I'd be glad to listen."

54. The Buddha said, "Those ascetic practitioners don't themselves kill beings and don't instruct others to kill. They don't themselves steal and don't instruct others to steal. They don't themselves engage in wrong sex and don't instruct others to engage in sex. They don't themselves speak falsely and don't instruct others to speak falsely.

55. "They completely fill one direction with kindness and the other directions as well. Their kindness is vast, without duality, measureless, and lacking resentments. They completely fill the world with compassion, joy, and equanimity in the same way.

56. "Those ascetic practitioners are themselves aware of the events of countless eons in the past, whether it's one, two … countless births, the formation and destruction of countries, or the numerous eons from beginning to end [of the world]. They fully see and fully know them.

57. "Furthermore, they themselves know, 'I once was born in that clan with such a name, had such meals, such a life span, and such pleasant and painful experiences. I was born there from and from there to here.' They fully remember such events of countless eons. This is the ascetic practice of wanderers that's essential and undestroyed."

58. The wanderer said to the Buddha, "What is the best?"

The Buddha said, "Wanderer, listen closely, listen closely! I will explain it."

The wanderer said, "Very well, Bhagavan. I'd be glad to listen."

59. The Buddha said, "Those ascetic practitioners don't themselves kill beings and don't instruct others to kill. They don't themselves steal and don't instruct others to steal. They don't themselves engage in wrong sex and don't instruct others to engage in sex. They don't themselves speak falsely and don't instruct others to speak falsely.

60. "They completely fill one direction with kindness and the other directions as well. Their kindness is vast, without duality, measureless, and lacking resentments. They completely fill the world with compassion, joy, and equanimity in the same way.

61. "Those ascetic practitioners are themselves aware of the events of countless eons in the past, whether it's one, two … countless births, the formation and destruction of countries, and the numerous eons from beginning to end [of the world]. They fully see and fully know them.

62. "Furthermore, they themselves see and know, 'I once was born in that clan with such a name, had such meals, such a life span, and such pleasant and painful experiences. I was born there from here and from there to here.' They full remember such events of countless eons.

63. "They clearly observe sentient beings with the heavenly eye as they die here and are born there. They appear beautiful and ugly and fall into good and bad destinations according to their deeds. They fully see and fully know them.

64. 'Furthermore, they know the unskillful physical, verbal, and mental deeds of sentient beings who slander noble people, believe deluded views, and fall to the three bad destinies when their bodies break up and their lives end. They also know the skillful physical, verbal, and mental deeds of sentient beings who don't slander noble people, see what's correct and practice it faithfully, and who are born in Heaven or among humans when their bodies break up and their lives end. The practitioner's heavenly eye is purified and observes sentient beings … falling into [good and bad] destinations according to their deeds. There's none whom they don't see and know. This is the supreme ascetic practice."

The Superior Teaching of the Buddha

65. The Buddha told the wanderer, "Among these teachings, there is another that's superior. I always teach disciples this teaching, and they are able to cultivate the religious life with it."

The wanderer's 500 disciples all raised their voices, saying to each other, "Now look! The Bhagavan is the Most Exalted One. Our teacher doesn't compare to him."

66. The householder Sandhana then said to the wanderer, "You yourself had said, 'If Gautama were to come here, we would call him a one-eyed cow.' The Bhagavan is here now. Why don't you call him that? You also said, 'I'd finish that Gautama with a single word. He'd fall silent like a turtle hiding in its shell. It'd be no trouble to take away his escape with a single arrow.' Why don't you finish the Tathagata with a single word now?"

67. The Buddha asked the wanderer, "Do you recall saying that before?"

He replied, "It's true, I did."

68. The Buddha told the wanderer, "Haven't you heard from wanderers in the past that buddhas and tathagatas dwell alone in mountains and forests and enjoy quiet places? They enjoyed seclusion just I do today. How could they enjoy noisy discussions of useless subjects lasting until the end of the day the way you do?"

The wanderer said, "I have heard that buddhas in the past enjoyed peace and dwelled alone in mountains and forests as the Bhagavan does today. How could they enjoy noisy discussions of useless subjects lasting until the end of the day the way we do?"

69. The Buddha told the wanderer, "Don't you think, 'The ascetic Gautama teaches awakening. Having disciplined himself, he disciplines others. He could stop his breath and makes it possible for others to stop their breath. He crossed over to the other shore and makes it possible for others to cross over. He attained liberation and makes it possible for others to attain liberation. He attained extinguishment and makes it possible for others to attain extinguishment'?"

70. That wanderer then rose from his seat and bowed his head with his hands touching the Buddha's feet. He declared of himself, "I am Nigrodha the Wanderer! I am Nigrodha the Wanderer! I bow to the Bhagavan's feet!"

71. The Buddha addressed the wanderer, "Stop, stop! You ought to stand up. You can bow to me when your mind is freed."

The wanderer bowed deeply at the Buddha's feet and sat to one side.

72. The Buddha told the wanderer, "Did you think the Buddha teaches the Dharma for no reason other than gain? Don't have such a thought. If there's gain, it'll all be yours. The Dharma I teach is sublime and supreme. It ceases what's unskillful and increases skillful qualities."

73. He also told the wanderer, "Did you think the Buddha teaches the Dharma for no reason other than being honored … being a leader … having followers … having a great assembly? Don't have such a thought. Now, your followers are all your own. The Dharma I teach is for ceasing what's unskillful and increasing skillful qualities."

74. He also told the wanderer, "Did you think the Buddha would put you in the unskillful category or the category of darkness for no reason? Don't have such a thought. You should simply abandon those categories of unskillfulness and darkness. I'll teach you the skillful and pure teaching."

75. He also told the wanderer, "Were you thinking the Buddha would drive you away from the category of skillful things and the category of clean things for no reason? Don't have such a thought. Simply cultivate the categories of skillful and clean things with diligence. I'll teach you the skillful and pure teaching that ceases unskillful practices and increases skillful qualities."

76. The wanderer's 500 disciples then rectified their hearts and corrected their thinking as they listened to what the Buddha taught. Mara the Evil One then thought, "These 500 disciples of the wanderer have rectified their hearts and corrected their thinking as they listened to what the Buddha taught. I better go destroy that thinking now!"

Evil Mara then confounded their thinking with his own power.

77. The Bhagavan then told Sandhana, "These 500 disciples of the wanderer had rectified their hearts and corrected their thinking as they listened to what I taught, but Mara the Evil One has confounded their thinking. Now, I'd like to go. Let's you and I leave together."

78. The Bhagavan then offered his right hand to the householder Sandhana, who took it in his palm, and they flew back through the sky.

79. The householder Sandhana, the wanderer Nigrodha, and the 500 wanderer disciples who heard what the Buddha taught rejoiced and approved.

DA 9 THE GATHERED SANGHA

(The direct parallels for this sutra are DN 33 and T12. We should also note that there's substantial overlap with DN 34, DA 10, DA 11, and T13. All of these sutras collect teachings into a numerically organised list.)

(On a full moon day, the Sangha gathers around the Buddha after he tours the land of the Mallas and stops at a grove near Pava. He teaches this large gathering well into the night until he's forced to retire because of a backache. The audience hasn't become sleepy, though, so he asks Sariputra to continue teaching them and lies down nearby. Sariputra proceeds to recite a long collection of the Buddha's teachings in numerical order.)

1. Thus I have heard: One time, the Buddha was travelling among the Mallas. Accompanied by a large assembly of 1,250 monks, he eventually arrived at Cunda's Mango Grove of Papa.

2. It was the fifteenth-day full moon when the Bhagavan sat in an open area with the assembly of monks both in front and behind him. After he had given them many discourses on the Dharma that evening, the Bhagavan addressed Sariputra, "The monks have gathered today from the four directions to diligently apply themselves together. They aren't sleepy yet, but I'm suffering from back pain. I'd like to take a break for a while. Perhaps you can explain the Dharma for the monks now?"

Sariputra replied, "Very well. I'll explain the noble teaching."

3. The Bhagavan folded his outer robe four times and laid on his right side like a lion with his feet together.

4. Sariputra then told the monks, "Now, here in this city of Papa, it hasn't been long since Nirgrantha Jnataputra's life ended. Since then, his disciples have split into two factions that constantly argue and look for shortcomings to reproach each other. They contradict each other, saying: 'I know this teaching.' 'You don't know this.' 'You hold wrong views.' 'I hold to the right teaching.' Their words are confused and without proper order. They consider statements praising themselves to be true, saying: 'My statement is the winner; your words are defeated. I'm the one who gives discourses now. Come and ask me when you have questions.'

5. "Monks, the people of the country who make offerings to the Nirgranthas are weary and troubled by the noise of their fighting. As a result, they consider their teaching to be untrue. A teaching that's untrue has no way to escape, just as a ruined shrine cannot be repainted. It's not the teaching of a completely awakened one. Monks, only we Sakyans have the unsurpassed, noble teaching that's truest and can lead to the escape, just as a newly built shrine is easily decorated. It's the teaching of a completely awakened one.

6. "Monks, today, we ought to collect the Dharma and Vinaya to safeguard them from disputes, establish the religious life for a long time, and benefit many people so that gods and humans will obtain peace.

Sets of One

7. "Monks, the Tathagata teaches one correct thing: All sentient beings look to food for their sustenance.

8. "There's another thing taught by the Tathagata: All sentient beings are reborn as a result of their actions.

9. "These are the single things taught by the Tathagata that we ought to collect to safeguard them from dispute, establish the religious life for a long time, and benefit many people so that gods and people will obtain peace.

Sets of Two

10. "Monks, the Tathagata has taught two correct things: One is name, and the second is form.

11. "There are another two things: One is delusion, and the second is craving.

12. "There are another two things: The view of existence and view of non-existence.

13. "There are another two things: One is lacking conscience, and the second is lacking modesty.

14. "There are another two things: One is having conscience, and the second is having modesty.

15. "There are another two things: One is knowledge of the end [of contaminants], and the second is knowledge of no more birth.

16. "There are another two things, which are two causes and two conditions that give rise to craving: One is pure and sublime form, and the second is inattention.

17. "There are another two things, which are two causes and two conditions that give rise to anger: One is hatred, and the second is inattention.

18. "There are another two things, which are two causes and two conditions that give rise to wrong view: One is hearing it from others, and the second is wrong thought.

19. "There are another two things, which are two causes and two conditions that give rise to right view: One is hearing it from others, and the second is right thought.

20. "There are another two things, which are two causes and two conditions: One is learning about liberation, and the second is having nothing more to learn about liberation.

21. "There are another two things, which are two causes and two conditions: One is the conditioned element, and the second is the unconditioned element.

22. "Monks, these are the sets of two taught by the Tathagata that we ought to collect to safeguard them from dispute, establish the religious life for a long time, and benefit many people so that gods and people will obtain peace.

Sets of Three

23. "Monks, the Tathagata has taught three correct things, which are known as three roots of what's not good: First is craving, second is anger, and third is delusion.

24. "There are another three things, which are known as three roots of goodness: First is not craving, second is not being angry, and third is not being deluded.

25. "There are another three things, which are known as unskillful practices: First is unskillful physical conduct, second is unskillful verbal conduct, and third is unskillful mental conduct.

26. "There are another three things, which are known as three unskillful practices: First is physical unskillful conduct, second is verbal unskillful conduct, and third is mental unskillful conduct.

27. "There are another three things, which are three bad practices: Physical bad conduct, verbal bad conduct, and mental bad conduct.

28. "There are another three things, which are three good practices: Physical good conduct, verbal good conduct, and mental good conduct.

29. "There are another three things, which are three unskillful notions: Notions of desire, Notions of anger, and notions of harmfulness.

30. "There are another three things, which are three good notions: Notions without desire, notions without anger, and notions without harmfulness.

31. "There are another three things, which are three unskillful intentions: Intentions of desire, intentions of anger, and intentions of harmfulness.

32. "There are another three things, which are three good intentions: Intentions without desire, intentions without anger, and intentions without harmfulness.

33. "There are another three things, which are three meritorious acts: The act of giving, act of impartiality, and act of contemplation.

34. "There are another three things, which are three feelings: Pleasant feelings, painful feelings, and neither pleasant nor painful feelings.

35. "There are another three things, which are three cravings: Craving for desires, craving for existence, and craving for non-existence.

36. "There are another three things, which are three contaminations: Contaminants of desire, contaminants of existence, and contaminants of ignorance.

37. "There are another three things, which are three fires: The fire of desire, fire of anger, and fire of delusion.

38. "There are another three things, which are three pursuits: The pursuit of desire, pursuit of existence, and pursuit of the religious life.

39. "There are another three things, which are three growths: The growth of self, growth of the world, and growth of Dharma.

40. "There are another three things, which are three elements: The element of desire, element of anger, and element of harmfulness.

41. "There are another three things, which are three elements: The element of escape, element lacking anger, and element lacking harmfulness.

42. "There are another three things, which are three elements: The element of form, element of formlessness, and element of cessation.

43. "There are another three things, which are three categories: The category of precepts, category of samadhi, and category of wisdom.

44. "There are another three things, which are three precepts: The growth of precepts, growth of mind, and growth of wisdom.

45. "There are another three things, which are three samadhis: The samadhi of emptiness, samadhi without aspirations, and samadhi without attributes.

46. "There are another three things, which are three attributes: The attribute of calm, attribute of diligence, and attribute of equanimity.

47. "There are another three things, which are three insights: The insight that's the knowledge of one's own past lives, the insight that's the knowledge of the heavenly eye, and the insight that's the knowledge of the contaminants being ended.

48. "There are another three things, which are three transformations: First is the spiritual ability of transformation, second is knowing another's mind and explaining the teaching as they wish, and third is teaching.

49. "There are another three things, which are three roots of desiring birth: First is being born as a human or god as a result of present desire, second is being born in the Nirmanarati Heaven as a result of desiring transformation, and third is being born in the Paranirmitavasavartin Heaven because of desiring the transformation of others.

50. "There are another three things, which are three things that create comfort: First is happiness that arises from the natural accomplishments of sentient beings, such as when the Abhasvara gods are first born. Second is that some sentient beings consider thought to be pleasant and declare it 'Good!' like the Abhasvara gods. Third is the pleasure that's attained from calmness like the Subhakrtsna gods.

51. "There are another three things, which are three pains: The pain of conditioning, pain of pain, and pain of change.

52. "There are another three things, which are three faculties: The faculty of wanting to know what's yet to be known, faculty of knowing, and faculty of having known.

53. "There are another three things, which are three temples: The noble temple, heavenly temple, and Brahma temple.

54. "There are another three things, which are three issuances [of rebuke]: Issuance regarding what's seen, issuance regarding what's heard, and issuance regarding doubts.

55. "There are another three things, which are three discussions: There are discussions such as: 'The past had such events as these.' There are discussions such as: 'The future will have such events as these.' There are discussions such as: 'The present has such events as these.'

56. "There are another three things, which are three categories: The category of right samadhi, category of wrong samadhi, and the category of what's not samadhi.

57. "There are another three things, which are three sorrows: Physical sorrow, verbal sorrow, and mental sorrow.

58. "There are another three things, which are three seniorities: Seniority in years, seniority in Dharma, and seniority in accomplishment.

59. "There are another three things, which are three eyes: The flesh eye, heavenly eye, and wisdom eye.

60. "Monks, these are the correct teachings taught by the Tathagata that we ought to compile together to safeguard them from dispute, establish the religious life for a long time, and benefit many people so that gods and people will obtain peace.

Sets of Four

61. "Monks, the Tathagata has taught four correct things, which are four verbal bad practices: First is false speech, second is duplicity, third is harsh speech, and fourth is frivolous speech.

62. "There are another four things, which are four verbal good practices: First is truthful speech, second is gentle speech, third is speech that isn't frivolous, and fourth is speech that isn't duplicitous.

63. "There are another four things, which are four ignoble kinds of speech: Claiming to have seen what wasn't seen, claiming to have heard what wasn't heard, claiming to have perceived what wasn't perceived, and claiming to have known what wasn't known.

64. "There are another four things, which are four noble kinds of speech: Claiming to have seen what was seen, claiming to have heard what was heard, claiming to have perceived what was perceived, and claiming to have known what was known.

65. "There are another four things, which are four kinds of food: physical food, food of contact, food of thought, and food of consciousness.

66. "There are another four things, which are four feelings: Doing something painful in the present and later feeling pain as a result. Doing something painful in the present and later feeling pleasure as a result. Doing something pleasant in the present and later feeling pain as a result. Doing something pleasant in the present and feeling pleasure as a result.

67. "There are another four things, which are four acquisitions: Acquisition of desire, acquisition of self, acquisition of precepts, and acquisition of views.

68. "There are another four things, which are four fetters: Fettering oneself with craving, fettering oneself with anger, fettering oneself with misapplied precepts, and fettering oneself with self view.

69. "There are another four things, which are four thorns: The thorn of desire, thorn of anger, thorn of views, and thorn of arrogance.

70. "There are another four things, which are four births: Birth from an egg, birth from a womb, birth from moisture, and spontaneous birth.

71. "There are another four things, which are four abodes of mindfulness: Here, a monk observes internal body as body diligently and not negligently. He's mindful, not forgetful, and casts off worldly craving and sadness … observes external body as body diligently and not negligently. He's mindful, not forgetful, and casts off worldly craving and sadness … observes internal and external body as body diligently and not negligently. He's mindful, not forgetful, and casts off worldly craving and sadness. He observes feelings, mind, and principles in the same way.

72. "There are another four things, which are four mental abandonments: Here, a monk applies effort to make bad qualities that have yet to arise to not arise … applies effort to make bad qualities that have arisen to cease … applies effort to make good qualities that have yet to arise to arise … applies effort to make good qualities that have arisen to increase.

73. "There are another four things, which are four miraculous abilities: Here, a monk contemplates the samadhi of desire and accomplishes the practice of cessation. The samadhi of effort, samadhi of mind, and samadhi of contemplation are likewise.

74. "There are another four things, which are the four dhyanas: Here, a monk rids himself of desire and bad and unskillful things. With perception and examination, this seclusion gives rise to joy and happiness, and he enters the first dhyana. He ceases having perception and examination. With inner belief and unified mind, he has no perception or examination. His samadhi gives rise to joy and happiness, and he enters the second dhyana. Parting with joy, he cultivates equanimity, mindfulness, and effort, knowing his own happiness is what's sought by the noble ones. Mindful, detached, and happy, he enters the third dhyana. Parting with painful and pleasant formations, his previous sorrow and joy ceases. Neither discomforted nor happy, he's detached, mindful, and pure, and he enters the fourth dhyana.

75. "There are another four things, which are four Brahma temples: First is kindness, second is compassion, third is joy, and fourth is equanimity.

76. "There are another four things, which are four formless samadhis: Here, a monk goes beyond all notions of form, and all his previous notions of anger. Not being mindful of different notions, he contemplates the abode of measureless space. Abandoning the abode of space, he enters the abode of consciousness. Abandoning the abode of consciousness, he enters the abode of nothingness. Abandoning the abode of nothingness, he enters the abode with and without conception.

77. "There are another four things, which are four foundations of Dharma: The Dharma foundation of not craving, Dharma foundation of not being angry, Dharma foundation of right mindfulness, and Dharma foundation of right samadhi.

78. "There are another four things, which are four noble clans: Here, a monk is satisfied with his clothing. He isn't pleased with obtaining fine clothes and isn't saddened when having ugly clothes. He isn't defiled or attached, knows what shouldn't be done, and knows the way to the escape. He's diligent and not negligent about these rules and accomplishes these things without fault or loss. He also teaches people to accomplish these things. This is the first of the noble clan's way of satisfied living. From the past until the present, he's never troubled. It's impossible for gods like Mara or Brahma, ascetics and priests, or spirits and worldly people to reproach him. He's satisfied in the same way regarding meals, bedding, and medicines for illness.

79. "There are another four things, which are four principles of cooperation: Bestowing gifts, affectionate speech, benefiting others, and sharing benefits equally.

80. "There are another four things, which are four factors of stream entry: A monk attains an unbreakable faith in the Buddha … in the Dharma … in the Sangha … attains an unbreakable faith in the precepts.

81. "There are another four things, which are four proofs: The proof of seeing forms, proof of the body's cessation, proof of recollecting past lives, and proof of knowing the contaminants are ended.

82. "There are another four things, which are four paths: That obtained slowly with hardship, that obtained quickly with hardship, that obtained slowly and pleasantly, and that obtained quickly and pleasantly.

83. "There are another four things, which are four noble truths: The noble truth of suffering, noble truth of suffering's formation, noble truth of suffering's cessation, and noble truth of the escape from suffering.

84. "There are another four things, which are four fruits of an ascetic: The fruit of stream entry, fruit of once-returning, fruit of non-returning, and fruit of the arhat.

85. "There are another four things, which are four bases: The basis of truth, basis of generosity, basis of knowledge, and basis of calm.

86. "There are another four things, which are four knowledges: Dharma knowledge, knowledge not yet known, full knowledge, and knowledge of other people's minds.

87. "There are another four things, which are four eloquences: Dharma eloquence, eloquence of meaning, eloquence of admonishment, and eloquence of advice.

88. "There are another four things, which are four abiding places of consciousness: Consciousness abides in form, is conditioned by form, remains in form, and grows together with craving. Feeling, conception, and volition are likewise.

89. "There are another four things, which are four yokes: The yoke of desire, yoke of existence, yoke of views, and yoke of ignorance.

90. "There are another four things, which are four absent yokes: The absence of the yoke of desire, absence of the yoke of existence, absence of the yoke of views, and absence of the yoke of ignorance.

91. "There are another four things, which are four purities: Purity of precepts, purity of mind, purity of views, and purity of going beyond doubt.

92. "There are another four things, which are four recognitions: Recognising what's acceptable and accepting it, recognising what's practicable and practicing it, recognising what's enjoyable and enjoying it, and recognising what's rejectable and rejecting it.

93. "There are another four things, which are four postures: Recognising what's walkable and walking, recognising where one can stand and standing, recognising what can be sat on and sitting, and recognising what can be laid upon and lying down.

94. "There are another four things, which are four contemplations: Contemplation of a little, contemplation of what's broad, contemplation of what's measureless, and contemplation of nothingness.

95. "There are another four things, which are four explanations: Definite explanation, analytical explanation, explanation by questioning, and explanation by setting it aside.

96. "There are another four things, which are four things the Buddha doesn't guard against: The Tathagata's physical conduct is pure and lacking any contamination he could guard himself against. His verbal conduct is pure, mental conduct is pure, and his livelihood is pure in the same way.

97. "Monks, these are the correct teachings taught by the Tathagata that we ought to compile together to safeguard them from dispute, establish the religious life for a long time, and benefit many people so that gods and people will obtain peace.

Sets of Five

98. "Moreover, monks, the Tathagata has taught five correct things, which are five senses: The eye and images, ear and sounds, nose and odors, tongue and flavors, and body and touches.

99. "There are another five things, which are five acquired aggregates: The acquired aggregate of form … feeling … conception … volition, and the acquired aggregate of consciousness.

100. "There are another five things, which are five hindrances: The hindrance of desire, hindrance of anger, hindrance of sleepiness, hindrance of agitation, and hindrance of doubt.

101. "There are another five things, which are five lower bonds: The bond of personality view, bond of misapplied precepts, bond of doubt, bond of desire, and bond of anger.

102. "There are another five things, which are five higher bonds: Craving of form, craving of formlessness, ignorance, pride, and agitation.

103. "There are another five things, which are five faculties: The faculty of faith, faculty of effort, faculty of mindfulness, faculty of samadhi, and faculty of wisdom.

104. "There are another five things, which are five powers: Power of faith, power of effort, power of mindfulness, power of samadhi, and power of wisdom.

105. "There are another five things, which are the five factors of complete cessation: First, a monk believes in the Buddha, Tathagata, Arhat, and Completely Awakened One who perfected the ten epithets. Second, he lacks illness and is physically healthy. Third, he is honest, lacks any deception, and heads down the Tathagata's clear path to nirvana. Fourth, he focuses his mind so that he's not confused, retains the recitations, and doesn't forget them. Fifth, he is skilled in observing the arising and perishing of things and ends the root of suffering with the noble practice.

106. "There are another five things, which are five issuances [of rebuke]: Untimely issuance, false issuance, meaningless issuance, issuance of vain words, and unkind issuance.

107. "There are another five things, which are five skillful issuances [of rebuke]: timely issuance, true issuance, meaningful issuance, issuance with gentle words, and kind issuance.

108. "There are another five things, which are five hatreds: Hatred of a residence, hatred of a donor, hatred of profit, hatred of form, and hatred of teachings.

109. "There are another five things, which are five ways to head for liberation: First is the concept that the body is impure, second is the concept that food is impure, third is the concept that all formations are impermanent, fourth is the concept that all worlds are unpleasing, and first is the concept of death.

110. "There are another five things, which are five spheres of escape: A monk doesn't enjoy, isn't moved by, and doesn't stay near desires. He's only mindful of escaping them, enjoys seclusion, and befriends those who aren't indolent. His mind is flexible, leaving and parting with desire and what causes the desires that produce the web of contaminants. He also ends, abandons, and ceases them to attain liberation. This is the escape from desire. The escape from anger, escape from jealousy, escape from form, and escape from personality view are likewise.

111. "There are another five things, which are five kinds of joy from entering liberation: If a monk is diligent and not negligent, happily lives in seclusion, focuses his attention, and unifies his mind, he'll understand what he doesn't yet understand, end what he hasn't yet ended, and become peaceful where he isn't yet peaceful. What are the five? Here, a monk hears the Tathagata teach the Dharma, hears a religious practitioner teach it, or hears a senior teacher teach the Dharma. He contemplates, investigates, and discerns the meaning of that Dharma, and his mind becomes joyous. After his mind becomes joyous, he attains the love of Dharma. After he attains the love of Dharma, he's comfortable in body and mind. After he's comfortable in body and mind, then he attains the samadhi of dhyana. After he attains the samadhi of dhyana, he attains true knowing and seeing. This is the first way to enter liberation.

112. " Here, after a monk hears Dharma and rejoices, he accepts, retains, and recites it, rejoices and teaches it for other people, rejoices, contemplates, and discerns it, rejoices and attains samadhi regarding the Dharma in the same way.

113. "There are another five things, which are five people: Those whose parinirvana is in the interim, whose parinirvana is at birth, whose parinirvana is without practice, whose parinirvana is with practice, and whose parinirvana is upstream in Akanistha.

114. "Monks, these are the correct teachings taught by the Tathagata that we ought to compile together to safeguard them from dispute, establish the religious life for a long time, and benefit many people so that gods and people will obtain peace.

Sets of Six

115. "Moreover, monks, the Tathagata has taught six correct things, which are six internal senses: The eye sense, ear sense, nose sense, tongue sense, body sense, and mind sense.

116. "There are another six things, which are six external senses: The sense of images, sense of sounds, sense of odors, sense of flavors, sense of touches, and sense of notions.

117. "There are another six things, which are the six groups of consciousness: The group of visual consciousness … auditory … olfactory … gustatory … somatic … group of mental consciousness.

118. "There are another six things, which are six groups of contact: The group of visual contact … auditory … olfactory … gustatory … somatic … group of mental contact.

119. "There are another six things, which are six groups of feeling: The group of visual feeling … auditory … olfactory … gustatory … somatic … group of mental feeling.

120. "There are another six things, which are six groups of conception: [The group of] image conception … sound conception … odor conception … flavor conception … touch conception, and [group of] idea conception.

121. "There are another six things, which are six groups of intention: [The group of] image intention … sound intention … odor intention … flavor intention … touch intention, and [group of] idea intention.

122. "There are another six things, which are six groups of craving: The group of image craving … sound … odor … flavor … touch … group of notion craving.

123. "There are another six things, which are six sources of conflict: If a monk is extremely angry and doesn't let it go, he doesn't respect the Tathagata, doesn't respect the Dharma, and doesn't respect the Sangha. His precepts are breached, and he's defiled and impure. When he creates many conflicts in the Sangha, he's disliked by people, disrupts the pure assembly, and gods and people don't attain peace.

124. "Monks, you must look within yourselves. If you find resentments like those that are disruptive, you must gather as a unified assembly and employ broad methods to root out these sources of conflict. Moreover, you must focus your attention and observe yourselves. If the bond of resentment has ceased, you should employ methods to restrain your minds. Don't let it arise again.

125. "Monks, wayward dishonesty, stingy jealousy, fraud and falsehoods, not abandoning mistakes because of one's own views, and being deluded by wrong and extreme views are likewise.

126. "There are another six things, which are six elements: The earth element, fire element, water element, air element, space element, and consciousness element.

127. "There are another six things, which are six observations: The eye observing forms, ear observing sounds, nose … odors … tongue … flavors … body … touches … mind observing notions.

128. "There are another six things, which are six spheres of escape: Suppose a monk says, 'I'd cultivate kindness, but then I become angry.' The other monks say, 'Don't say that! Don't misrepresent the Tathagata. The Tathagata doesn't say, "I'd like to cultivate the liberation of kindness, but then notions of anger arise." That's impossible. The Buddha says, "Once anger is gone, then one becomes kind afterward."'

129. "Suppose a monk says, 'I'd practice the liberation of compassion, but then I have hateful thoughts.'… 'practice the liberation of joy, but then I have sorrowful thoughts.' … 'practice the liberation of equanimity, but then I have thoughts of like or dislike.' … 'cultivate the practice of non-self, but then I have suspicious thoughts' … 'cultivate the practice without conception, but then I have many distracting notions.' Those cases are likewise.

130. "There are another six things, which are six unsurpassed things: Vision that's unsurpassed, learning that's unsurpassed, support that's unsurpassed, precepts that are unsurpassed, respect that's unsurpassed, and memory that's unsurpassed.

131. "There are another six things, which are six recollections: Recollection of the Buddha, recollection of the Dharma, recollection of the Sangha, recollection of precepts, recollection of generosity, and recollection of the gods.

132. "Monks, these are the correct teachings taught by the Tathagata that we ought to compile together to safeguard them from dispute, establish the religious life for a long time, and benefit many people so that gods and people will obtain peace.

Sets of Seven

133. "Monks, the Tathagata has taught seven correct things, which are seven things that aren't Dharma: Lack of faith, lack of conscience, lack of modesty, little learning, negligence, forgetfulness, and lack of knowledge.

134. "There are another seven things, which are seven correct Dharmas: Having faith, having conscience, having modesty, being well-versed, making effort, good memory, and being knowledgeable.

135. "There are another seven things, which are seven abodes of consciousness: Sometimes, sentient beings have either diverse bodies or diverse notions. These gods and humans are the first abode of consciousness. Sometimes, sentient beings might have diverse bodies but the same notions. When the Brahmas of the Abhasvara Heaven are first born there, that's the second abode of consciousness. Sometimes, sentient beings have the same bodies but might have diverse notions. These Abhasvara gods are the third abode of consciousness. Sometimes, sentient beings have the same bodies and the same notions. These Subhakrtsna gods are the fourth abode of consciousness. Sometimes, sentient beings dwell in the abode of space … dwell in the abode of consciousness … dwell in the abode of nothingness …

136. "There are another seven things, which are seven ways of diligence: First, a monk is diligent in practicing the precepts. Second, he diligently ceases his desires. Third, he diligently refutes wrong views. Fourth, he diligently learns much. Fifth, he diligently makes effort. Sixth, he is diligent in correct mindfulness. Seventh, he is diligent in meditation.

137. "There are another seven things, which are seven concepts: The concept of impurity, concept that food is impure, concept that all the world is not pleasing, concept of death, concept of impermanence, concept of the pain of impermanence, and concept of the lack of self in pain.

138. "There are another seven things, which are seven requisites of samadhi: Right view, right intention, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right method, and right mindfulness.

139. "There are another seven things, which are seven factors of awakening: The awakening factor of mindfulness, awakening factor of teachings, awakening factor of effort, awakening factor of joy, awakening factor of calm, awakening factor of samadhi, and awakening factor of equanimity.

140. "Monks, these are the correct teachings taught by the Tathagata that we ought to compile together to safeguard them from dispute, establish the religious life for a long time, and benefit many people so that gods and people will obtain peace.

Sets of Eight

141. "Monks, the Tathagata has taught eight correct things, which are eight rules of the world: Profit, decline, censure, praise, admiration, blame, pain, and pleasure.

142. "There are another eight things, which are the eight liberations: Form observed as form is the first liberation. Observing external form without internal perceptions of form is the second liberation. The liberation of purity is the third liberation. Going beyond notions of form, ceasing notions of anger, and abiding in the abode of space is the fourth liberation. Going beyond the abode of space and abiding in the abode of consciousness is the fifth liberation. Going beyond the abode of consciousness and abiding in the abode of nothingness is the sixth liberation. Going beyond the abode of nothingness and abiding the abode with and without conception is the seventh liberation. Going beyond the abode with and without conception and abiding in the cessation of concepts and perceptions is the eighth liberation.

143. "There are another eight things which are the noble eightfold path: Right view, right intention, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right method, right mindfulness, and right samadhi.

144. "There are another eight things, which are the eight persons: Those headed for stream entry and stream entrants, those headed for once-returning and once-returners, those headed for non-returning and non-returners, and those headed to becoming arhats and arhats.

145. "Monks, these are the correct teachings taught by the Tathagata that we ought to compile together to safeguard them from dispute, establish the religious life for a long time, and benefit many people so that gods and people will obtain peace.

A Set of Nine

146. "There's another nine things, which are nine abodes of sentient beings: Some sentient beings have diverse bodies and diverse notions. These gods and humans are the first abode of sentient beings. Some sentient beings have diverse bodies but the same notions. When the Brahmas of the Abhasvara Heaven are first born there, that's the second abode of sentient beings. Some sentient beings have the same bodies but diverse notions. This Abhasvara Heaven is the third abode of sentient beings. Some sentient beings have the same bodies and the same notions. This Subhakrtsna Heaven is the fourth abode of sentient beings. Some sentient beings lack conception or anything to perceive. This Asamjnika Heaven is the fifth abode of sentient beings. Some sentient beings dwell in the abode of space, which is the sixth abode of sentient beings. Some sentient beings dwell in the abode of consciousness, which is the seventh abode of sentient beings. Some sentient beings dwell in the abode of nothingness, which is the eighth abode of sentient beings. Some sentient beings dwell in the abode with and without conception, which is the ninth abode of sentient beings.

147. "Monks, these are the correct teachings taught by the Tathagata that we ought to compile together to safeguard them from dispute, establish the religious life for a long time, and benefit many people so that gods and people will obtain peace.

A Set of Ten

149. "Monks, these are the correct teachings taught by the Tathagata that we ought to compile together to safeguard them from dispute, establish the religious life for a long time, and benefit many people so that gods and people will obtain peace.

150. At that point, the Bhagavan gave his approval of what Sariputra had taught. When the monks heard what Sariputra taught, they rejoiced and approved.

DA 10 GOING UP TO TEN

(Direct parallels include DN 34, DA 9, and T13.)

(In a similar vein to the previous sutra, the Buddha grows tired after teaching a large assembly of monks well into the night and asks Sariputra to continue in his stead while he takes a break. What follows is a structured matrka sutra that lists groups of teachings from one to ten items in ascending order. For each numerical group of lists, a set of ten questions are asked, for which the list is an answer.)

1. Thus I have heard: One time, the Buddha traveled to Anga accompanied by a large group of 1,250 monks. They went to the city of Campa and stayed near Lake Gargara.

2. On the fifteenth-day full moon, the Bhagavan sat in an open area with a large assembly surrounding him. After teaching the Dharma all night, he addressed Sariputra, "The monks have gathered today from the four directions. They each have diligently shaken off their sleepiness and want to listen to a Dharma teaching, but I'm suffering from back pain and going to take a break. You can teach the Dharma for the monks now."

3. Sariputra accepted the Buddha's instruction. The Bhagavan then folded his outer robe four times and laid on his right side like a lion with his feet together.

4. The senior Sariputra then addressed the monks, "Now, I will teach the Dharma. Its words are true in the beginning, middle, and ending, its content and meaning are complete, and it purifies the religious life. All of you, listen closely, and well consider it. I will teach it for you." The monks accepted his instructions and listened.

5. Sariputra told the monks, "There are teachings that go up to ten which remove the manifold bonds, reach Nirvana, and completely end suffering. They also perfect 550 things. Now, I will discern them. All of you, listen well!

The Ones

6. "Monks, there's one thing to be achieved, one thing to be cultivated, one thing to be recognised, one thing to be ceased, one thing that retreats, one thing that advances, one thing that's difficult to understand, one thing to produce, one thing to know, and one thing to be realized.

7. "What's one thing to be achieved? Not being careless about good qualities. What's one thing to be cultivated? Constant mindfulness of oneself. What's one thing to be recognised? Contaminated contact. What's one thing to be ceased? The conceit of self. What's one thing that retreats? Not contemplating the foul discharges. What's one thing that advances? Contemplation of the foul discharges. What's one thing that's difficult to understand? Uninterrupted samadhi. What's one thing to know? Sentient beings look to food for their subsistence. What's one thing to be realized? The freedom of an unobstructed mind.

The Twos

8. "Monks, there are two things to be achieved, two things to be cultivated, two things to be recognised, two things to be ceased, two things that retreat, two things that advance, two things that are difficult to understand, two things to produce, two things to know, and two things to be realized.

9. "What are two things to be achieved? Knowing conscience and knowing modesty. What are two things to be cultivated? Calm and contemplation. What are two things to be recognised? Name and form. What are two things to be ceased? Ignorance and craving. What are two things that retreat? Violating precepts and breaking with [right] view. What are two things that advance? Being complete in precepts and complete in view. What are two things that are hard to understand? The causes and conditions for sentient beings to be defiled and the causes and conditions for sentient beings to be purified. What are two things to produce? Knowledge of ending [the contaminants] and knowledge of no birth. What are two things to know? What's possible and what's impossible. What are two things to be realized? Insight and liberation.

The Threes

10. "There are also three things to be achieved, three things to be cultivated, three things to be recognised, three things to be ceased, three things that retreat, three things that advance, three things that are hard to understand, three things to produce, three things to know, and three things to be realized.

11. "What are three things to be achieved? Making good friends, listening to the voice of Dharma, and accomplishing [consecutive] teachings.

12. "What are three things to be cultivated? The three samadhis: The samadhi of emptiness, the samadhi without attributes, and the samadhi without actions.

13. "What are three things to be recognised? The three feelings: Painful feelings, pleasant feelings, and feelings that are neither painful nor pleasant.

14. "What are three things to be ceased? The three cravings: Craving for desires, craving for existence, and craving to not exist.

15. "What are three things that retreat? The three roots of unskillfulness: The unskillful root of greed, unskillful root of anger, and the unskillful root of delusion.

16. "What are three things that advance? The three roots of skillfulness: The skillful root of having no greed, skillful root of having no anger, and the skillful root of having no delusion.

17. "What are three things that are hard to understand? Three difficult understandings: Noble people are difficult to understand, learning teachings that are difficult to understand, and the Tathagata is difficult to understand.

18. "What are three things to produce? Three modes: The mode of calm, mode of diligence, and mode of detachment.

19. "What are three things to know? Three realms of escape: Escaping desire to the realm of form, escaping the realm of form to the formless realm, and detaching from all conditioned things, which is called the end [of realms].

20. "What are the three things to be realized? The three insights: The knowledge of past lives, the knowledge of the heavenly eye, and the knowledge that the contaminants are ended.

21. "Monks, these thirty things are true and not false. They've been known by the Tathagata who teaches the Dharma equally.

The Fours

22. "There are also four things to be achieved, four things to be cultivated, four things to be recognised, four things to be ceased, four things that retreat, four things that advance, four things that are difficult to understand, four things to produce, four things to know, and four things to be realized.

23. "What are four things to be achieved? The four wheels: Living in a central country, being close to good friends, guarding oneself, and having planted roots of goodness in the past.

24. "What are four things to be cultivated? The four abodes of mindfulness: A monk observes internal body as body, diligently and not negligently. He doesn't lose that recollection and abandons worldly greed and sorrow. He observes external body as body, diligently and not negligently. He doesn't lose that recollection and abandons worldly greed and sorrow. He observes internal and external body as body, diligently and not negligently. He doesn't lose that recollection and abandons worldly greed and sorrow. He likewise observes feelings, mind, and teachings.

25. "What are four things to be recognised? The four foods: Physical food, food of contact, food of thought, and food of consciousness.

26. "What are four things to be ceased? The four acquisitions: the acquisition of desires, acquisition of self, acquisition of precepts, and acquisition of views.

27. "What are four things that retreat? The four yokes: The yoke of desire, yoke of existence, yoke of views, and yoke of ignorance.

28. "What are four things that advance? The absence of four yokes: The absence of the yoke of desire, yoke of existence, yoke of views, and yoke of ignorance.

29. "What are four things that are hard to understand? The four noble truths: The truth of suffering, truth of its formation, truth of its cessation, and truth of the path.

30. "What are four things to be produced? The four knowledges: Knowledge of principles, knowledge of what's yet to be known, knowledge of equality, and knowledge of other minds.

31. "What are four things to know? The four kinds of eloquence: Eloquence of teachings, eloquence of meaning, eloquence of expression, and eloquence of responses.

32. "What are four things to be realized? The four fruits of the ascetic: The fruit of stream-entry, fruit of once-returning, fruit of non-returning, and fruit of the arhat.

33. "Monks, these forty things are true and not false. They've been known by the Tathagata who teaches Dharma equally.

The Fives

34. "There are also five things to be achieved, five things to be cultivated, five things to be recognised, five things to be ceased, five things that retreat, five things that advance, five things that are difficult to understand, five things to produce, five things to know, and five things to be realized.

35. "What are five things to be achieved? The five factors of complete cessation: 1. Faith in the Buddha, Tathagata, and Arhat who perfected the ten epithets, 2. having no illness and being at peace, 3. being honest and not deceptive about heading straight down the Tathagata's road to Nirvana, 4. mental focus that's not confused and doesn't forget the recitations, and 5. skill in investigating the arising and cessation of things and ending the root of suffering with the noble practice.

36. "What are five things to be cultivated? The five faculties: the faculty of faith, faculty of effort, faculty of mindfulness, faculty of samadhi, and faculty of wisdom.

37. "What are five things to be recognised? The five acquired aggregates: the acquired aggregate of form …

feeling … conception … volition … and the acquired aggregate of consciousness.

38. "What are five things to be ceased? The five hindrances: The hindrance of greed, hindrance of anger, hindrance of drowsiness, hindrance of restlessness, and hindrance of doubt.

39. "What are five things that retreat? The five mental obstructions: 1. A monk doubts the Buddha. Doubting the Buddha, he doesn't befriend him. Not befriending him, he doesn't respect him. This is the first mental obstruction. 2. A monk has practices that are penetrated by contaminants, practices that aren't true, and practices that are defiled regarding the teaching … 3. samgha … 4. precepts. He doesn't befriend the precepts and doesn't respect them. This is the fourth mental obstruction. 5. A monk produces bad inclinations toward religious practitioners. His mind doesn't delight in them, his words are harsh, and he criticizes them. This is the fifth mental obstruction.

40. "What are five things that advance? The five roots of joy: delight, mindfulness, calm, happiness, and samadhi.

41. "What are five things that are difficult to understand? The five entries to liberation: If a monk is diligent and not negligent, is happy living in seclusion, focus his attention, and unifies his mind, he'll free what's yet to be freed, end what's yet to be ended, and calm what's yet to be calmed. What are the five? If a monk hears the Buddha teach Dharma, hears a teaching by a religious practitioner, or hears a teaching by a senior teacher, he considers, investigates, and discerns the teaching and its meaning, and his heart rejoices. Once he rejoices, he gains a love of Dharma. Once he gains a love of Dharma, his body and mind become peaceful. Once his body and mind are peaceful, he attains samadhi. Once he attains samadhi, he attains true knowledge. This is the first entry to liberation.

42. " Likewise, a monk who rejoices upon hearing the teaching does so when accepting, retaining, and reciting it. He rejoices when explaining it for other people. He rejoices when considering and discerning it. He also rejoices when he attains samadhi with the teaching.

43. "What are five things to produce? The noble person's five knowledges regarding samadhi: The internal and external knowledge that arises from the present and future happiness of cultivating samadhi. The internal and external knowledge that arises from the noble person's lack of craving. The internal and external knowledge that arises from the practices cultivated by Buddhas and noble people. The internal and external knowledge that arises from the state of tranquility while alone and without a companion. The internal and external knowledge that arises from entering and emerging from samadhi with a unified mind.

44. "What are five things to know? The five spheres of escape: 1. A monk doesn't enjoy, give attention to, or befriend desires. He's only mindful of escaping them, enjoys being far from them. He befriends non-negligence and disciplines his mind. Escaping and being free of desires, the arising of contaminants caused by those desires are also entirely abandoned and ceased, and he becomes liberated. This is the escape from desire. The escape from anger, escape from jealousy, escape from form, and escape from belief in the individual are likewise.

45. "What are five things to be realized? The five collections of the adept: The adept's collection of precepts, collection of samadhi, collection of wisdom, collection of liberation, and collection of knowing and seeing liberation.

46. "These fifty things are true and not false. They've been known by the Tathagata who teaches Dharma equally.

The Sixes

47. "There are also six things to be achieved, six things to be cultivated, six things to be recognised, six things to be ceased, six things that retreat, six things that advance, six things that are difficult to understand, six things to know, and six things to be realized.

48. "What are six things to be achieved? The six honored things: If a monk cultivates six honored things that are respectable and honorable, he'll be unified with the community without quarrels, and he'll practice alone without mixing [with others].

49. "What are the six? A monk's physical conduct is always kind, respecting religious practitioners and abiding with benevolence. This is called an honored thing that's respectable and honorable. It unifies him with the community without any quarrels, and he practices alone without mixing with others.

50. "Furthermore, a monk is verbally kind … mentally kind … shares with other people the leftover alms in his bowl that were gotten according to the Dharma. He doesn't favor certain people when doing so …

51. "Furthermore, a monk doesn't violate, criticize, or defile the precepts that are practiced by noble people. He's commended by wise people for skillfully perfecting the observance of precepts, and he achieves a settled mind …

52. "Furthermore, a monk accomplishes the noble escape, completely ends suffering, and attains various religious practices with right view. This is called an honored thing that's respectable and honorable. It unifies him with the community without any quarrels, and he practices alone without mixing with others.

53. "What are six things to be cultivated? The six recollections: recollection of the Buddha, recollection of the Dharma, recollection of the Sangha, recollection of the precepts, recollection of generosity, and recollection of the gods.

54. "What are six things to be recognised? They are the six internal senses: The eye sense, ear sense, nose sense, tongue sense, body sense, and mental sense.

55. "What are six things to be ceased? The six cravings: craving for sights, craving for sounds, craving for odors, craving for flavors, craving for touches, and craving for notions.

56. "What are six things that retreat? The six disrespects: disrespecting the Buddha, disrespecting the Dharma, disrespecting the Sangha, disrespecting the precepts, disrespecting samadhi, and disrespecting one's parents.

57. "What are six things that advance? The six respects: respecting the Buddha, respecting the Dharma, respecting the Sangha, respecting the precepts, respecting samadhi, and respecting one's parents.

58. "What are the six things difficult to understand? The six unsurpassed things: unsurpassed view, unsurpassed learning, unsurpassed support, unsurpassed precepts, unsurpassed respect, and unsurpassed memory.

59. "What are six things to produce? The six equanimities: Here, a monk sees form without sorrow or joy and abides detached with focused attention. Hearing sounds … smelling odors … tasting flavors … cognizing notions, he's neither joyous nor sorrowful and abides detached with focused attention.

60. "What are six things to know? The six spheres of escape: Suppose a monk says, 'I'd cultivate kindness, but then I become angry.' The other monks say, 'Don't say that! Don't misrepresent the Tathagata. The Tathagata doesn't say, "I'd like to cultivate the liberation of kindness, but then notions of anger arise." That's impossible. The Buddha says, "Once anger is gone, then one becomes kind afterward."'

61. "Suppose a monk says, 'I'd practice the liberation of compassion, but then I have hateful thoughts.'… 'practice the liberation of joy, but then I have sorrowful thoughts.' … 'practice the liberation of equanimity, but then I either thoughts of like or dislike.' … 'cultivate the practice of non-self, but then I have suspicious thoughts' … 'cultivate the practice without conception, but then I have many distracting notions.' Those cases are likewise.

62. "What are six things to be realized? The six spiritual penetrations: Realization of miraculous abilities, realization of the heavenly ear, realization of knowing others' minds, realization of perceiving past lives, realization of the heavenly eye, and realization of perceiving the end of the contaminants.

63. "These sixty things, monks, are true and not false. They've been known by the Tathagata who teaches Dharma equally.

The Sevens

64. "There are also seven things to be achieved, seven things to be cultivated, seven things to be recognised, seven things to be ceased, seven things that retreat, seven things that advance, seven things that are difficult to understand, seven things to produce, seven things to know, and seven things to be realized.

65. "What are seven things to be achieved? The seven kinds of wealth: Wealth in faith, wealth in precepts, wealth in conscience, wealth in modesty, wealth in learning, wealth in generosity, and wealth in wisdom are the seven kinds of wealth.

66. "What are seven things to be cultivated? The seven awakenings: Here, a monk cultivates the awakening of mindfulness, which depends on being desireless, tranquil, and secluded … cultivates the teaching … cultivates effort … cultivates joy … cultivates mildness … cultivates samadhi … cultivates equanimity, which depends on being desireless, tranquil, and secluded.

67. "What are seven things to be recognised? The seven dwelling places of consciousness: There are sentient beings of diverse bodies and diverse notions. These gods and humans are the first abode of consciousness. Again, there are sentient beings of diverse bodies but the same notions. When the Brahmas of the Abhasvara Heaven are first born there, that's the second abode of consciousness. Again, there are sentient beings of the same body but diverse notions. These Abhasvara gods are the third abode of consciousness. Again, there are sentient beings of the same body and the same notions. These Subhakrtsna gods are the fourth abode of consciousness. Again, there are sentient beings that dwell in the abode of space. This is the fifth abode of consciousness. Some dwell in the abode of consciousness. This is the sixth abode of consciousness. Some are in the abode of nothingness. This is the seventh abode of consciousness.

68. "What are seven things to be ceased? The seven tendencies: The tendency of craving desires, tendency of craving existence, tendency of views, tendency of pride, tendency of anger, tendency of ignorance, and tendency of doubt.

69. "What are seven things that retreat? The seven wrong things: Here, a monk has no faith, no conscience, no modesty, little learning, he falls into laziness, and he forgets much and lacks wisdom.

70. "What are seven things that advance? The seven proper things: Here, a monk has faith, conscience, modesty, much learning, he doesn't fall into laziness, and he has a good memory and wisdom.

71. "What are seven things that are difficult to understand? The seven right and skillful things: Here, a monk likes meaning, likes Dharma, likes knowing the occasion, likes knowing what's enough, likes being composed, likes gathering with assemblies, and likes discerning people.

72. "What are seven things to produce? The seven concepts: The concept of impurity, concept that food is impure, concept that nothing in the world is enjoyable, concept of death, concept of impermanence, concept of the pain of impermanence, and concept of the lack of self in pain.

73. "What are seven things to know? The seven diligences: diligence in practicing precepts, diligence in ceasing craving, diligence in destroying wrong views, diligence in learning much, diligence in effort, diligence in right mindfulness, and diligence in meditation.

74. "What are seven things to be realized? The seven powers of ending the contaminants: Here, a monk who has ended the contaminants really knows and sees all kinds of suffering and their formation, cessation, enjoyment, defect, and escape. He observes desire to be like a fire pit or a sword. He knows desire and sees desire. He isn't greedy for desires, and his mind doesn't dwell on desire. Again, skillfully examining it, having really known and really seen it, worldly lust and bad and unskillful things don't arise and defile him. He cultivates the four abodes of mindfulness, often cultivating and practicing them … the five faculties and five powers … the seven awakenings … the noble eightfold path, often cultivating and practicing it.

75. "Monks, these seventy things are true and not false. They've been known by the Tathagata, who teaches Dharma equally.

The Eights

76. "There are also eight things to be achieved, eight things to be cultivated, eight things to be recognised, eight things to be ceased, eight things that retreat, eight things that advance, eight things that are difficult to understand, eight things to produce, eight things to know, and eight things to be realized.

77. "What are eight things to be achieved? The eight causes and conditions that gain knowledge before the religious life is attained and that increase knowledge once it has been attained.

78. "What are the eight? Here, a monk lives according to the Bhagavan, or he might live according to a teacher, elder, or a wise religious practitioner. He becomes conscientious and modest, and he possesses affection and respect for them. This is the first cause and condition that gains knowledge before the religious life is attained and that increases knowledge once it has been attained.

79. "Furthermore, living according to the Bhagavan … he asks questions at the appropriate time: 'What does this teaching mean? What's the aim of it?' The venerable elders immediately disclose its profound meaning. This is the second cause and condition …

80. "Once he has heard this, both his body and mind are pleasant and calm. This is the third cause and condition …

81. "He doesn't engage in unbeneficial discussions that obstruct the path. When he goes into a community, he either discusses the teaching himself or asks another to discuss it, but he doesn't otherwise abandon the noble silence. This is the fourth cause and condition …

82. "His learning becomes extensive, and he retains and doesn't lose the profundities of the teaching. It's good in the beginning, middle, and end, genuine in content and expression, and perfects the religious life. Having heard it, it enters his mind, and his [right] view doesn't waver. This is the fifth cause and condition …

83. "He trains diligently, desisting from unskillful conduct and increasing his skillful conduct daily. He exerts himself to be worthy and doesn't abandon this teaching. This is the sixth cause and condition …

84. "Also, he recognises the law of arising and cessation with wisdom and heads for the noble end of suffering. This is the seventh cause and condition …

85. "Also, he observes the arising and ceasing nature of the five acquired aggregates: 'This is form, form's coming together, and form's cessation. This is feeling … conception … volition … consciousness, consciousness's coming together, and consciousness's cessation.' This is the eighth cause and condition that gains knowledge before the religious life is attained and that increases knowledge once it has been attained.

86. "What are eight things to be cultivated? The noble eightfold path: right view, right intention, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right method, right mindfulness, and right samadhi.

87. "What are eight things to be recognised? The eight ways of the world: profit and decline, criticism and praise, admiration and censure, and pain and pleasure.

88. "What are eight things to be ceased? The eightfold wrong [path]: wrong view, wrong intent, wrong speech, wrong action, wrong livelihood, wrong method, wrong mindfulness, and wrong samadhi.

89. "What are eight things that retreat? The eight kinds of indolence: What are the eight kinds of indolence? A monk soliciting alms doesn't get alms. He then thinks, 'Today, I went to town to solicit alms and didn't get any. My body feels weak and incapable of sitting in meditation or walking back and forth. Now, I ought to lie down and rest.' That indolent monk then lies down to rest, refusing to diligently attempt to attain what he has yet to attain, obtain what he has yet to obtain, and realize what he has yet to realize. This is the first indolence.

90. "An indolent monk gets too much food. Again, he thinks, 'This morning, I went to town to solicit alms, and I got too much food. My body feels heavy and incapable of sitting in meditation or walking back and forth. Now, I ought to lie down to rest.' That indolent monk then lies down to rest. He can't diligently attempt to attain what he has yet to attain, obtain what he has yet to obtain, and realize what he has yet to realize. [This is the second indolence.]

91. "An indolent monk thinks about some minor attachment, 'Today, I'm attached to something. My body is weak and incapable of sitting in meditation or walking back and forth. Now, I ought to lie down to rest.' That indolent monk lies down to rest … [This is the third indolence.]

92. "An indolent monk thinks about some attachment he's going to have, 'Clearly, I'll be attached to this. Surely, I'll be weak, so I won't be able sit in meditation or walk back and forth. I'll lie down to rest.' That indolent monk then lies down to rest … [This is the fourth indolence.]

93. "An indolent monk thinks about some minor trip, 'In the morning, I'll be traveling. My body will be weak and incapable of sitting in meditation or walking back and forth. Now, I ought to lie down and rest.' That indolent monk then lies down to rest … [This is the fifth indolence.]

94. "An indolent monk thinks about some trip he's going to take, 'Clearly, I will be traveling. Surely, I'll be weak, so I can't sit in meditation or walk back and forth now. I'll lie down to rest.' That indolent monk lies down to rest. He can't diligently attempt to attain what he has yet to attain, obtain what he has yet to obtain, and realize what he has yet to realize. This is the sixth indolence.

95. "[An indolent monk] encounters some minor pain, and then he thinks, 'I've become seriously ill. I'm feeble and weak, incapable of sitting in meditation or walking back and forth. I need to lie down and rest.' That indolent monk then lies down to rest. He can't diligently attempt to attain what he has yet to attain, obtain what he has yet to obtain, and realize what he has yet to realize. [This is the seventh indolence.]

96. "An indolent monk recovers from some pain and then he thinks, 'I've only recently recovered from that illness. My body is weak, and I can't sit in meditation or walk back and forth. I ought to lie down and rest.' That indolent monk then lies down to rest. He can't diligently attempt to attain what he has yet to attain, obtain what he has yet to obtain, and realize what he has yet to realize. [This is the eighth indolence.]

97. "What are eight things that advance? The eight ways of not being indolent. What are these eight efforts? A monk goes to town to solicit alms, doesn't get any food, and returns. He then thinks, 'Today, my body is weak, and I'm a little sleepy. Now, I ought to make effort by sitting in meditation and walking back and forth.' He attains what he has yet to attain, obtains what he has yet to obtain, and realizes what he has yet to realize. That monk then immediately makes effort. This is the first effort.

98. "[A monk] solicits alms and gets enough. He then thinks, 'Now, I went to town to solicit alms, and the food I got was filling. My strength is restored, so I ought to make effort by sitting in meditation and walking back and forth.' He attains what he has yet to attain, obtains what he has yet to obtain, and realizes what he has yet to realize. That monk then immediately makes effort. [This is the second effort.]

99. "If a diligent monk has a task to do, he thinks, 'I have this task to do that will interrupt my practice. I ought to make effort by sitting in meditation and walking back and forth now.' He will attain what he has yet to attain, obtain what he has yet to obtain, and realize what he has yet to realize. That monk then immediately makes effort. [This is the third effort.]

100. "If a diligent monk has a task to do, he thinks, 'I have this task to do tomorrow that will interrupt my practice. I ought to make effort by sitting in meditation and walking back and forth now.' He will attain what he has yet to attain, obtain what he has yet to obtain, and realize what he has yet to realize. That monk then immediately makes effort. [This is the fourth effort.]

101. "If a diligent monk has somewhere to go, he thinks, 'I have somewhere to go this morning, which will interrupt my practice. I ought to make effort by sitting in meditation and walking back and forth now.' He will attain what he has yet to attain, obtain what he has yet to obtain, and realize what he has yet to realize. That monk then immediately makes effort. [This is the fifth effort.]

102. "If a diligent monk has somewhere to go, he thinks, 'I will be traveling tomorrow, which will interrupt my practice. I ought to make effort by sitting in meditation and walking back and forth.' He will attain what he has yet to attain, obtain what he has yet to obtain, and realize what he has yet to realize. That monk then immediately makes effort. [This is the sixth effort.]

103. "When a diligent monk becomes ill, he thinks, 'I've become seriously ill. Maybe my life will end! I ought to make effort[by sitting in meditation and walking back and forth now.]' He will attain what he has yet to attain, obtain what he has yet to obtain, and realize what he has yet to realize. That monk then immediately makes effort. [This is the seventh effort.]

104. "If a diligent monk recovers a little from an illness, he thinks, 'I've begun to recover from that illness. It might get worse, which would interrupt my practice. I ought to make effort by sitting in meditation and walking back and forth now.' He will attain what he has yet to attain, obtain what he has yet to obtain, and realize what he has yet to realize. Thereupon, that monk then immediately makes effort by sitting in meditation and walking. [This is the eighth effort.]

105. "What are eight things that are difficult to understand? The eight cases of having no opportunity to cultivate the religious practice. What are the eight? The Tathagata, the Arhat, arises in the world and teaches the sublime teaching that's quiescent, unconditioned, and leads to the path of awakening. A person who's born in Hell has no opportunity there to cultivate the religious practice.

106. " The Tathagata, the Arhat, arises in the world and teaches the sublime teaching that's quiescent, unconditioned, and leads to the path of awakening. There are sentient beings born among animals … among hungry ghosts … among long-lived gods … in border lands where they are unaware of it. The Buddha's teaching doesn't exist in such places, so there's no opportunity to cultivate the religious practice.

107. " The Tathagata, the Arhat, arises in the world and teaches the sublime teaching that's quiescent, unconditioned, and leads to the path of awakening. Some sentient beings are born in a central country, but they have wrong views, harbor deluded thoughts, and commit evil actions. They'll surely go to Hell where there's no opportunity to cultivate the religious practice.

108. " The Tathagata, the Arhat, arises in the world and teaches the sublime teaching that's quiescent and unconditioned and leads to the path of awakening. Some sentient beings are born in a central country, but they're deaf, blind, or mute and can't learn the teaching. They have no opportunity to cultivate the religious practice.

109. " The Tathagata, the Arhat, doesn't arise in the world, and no one teaches the sublime teaching that's quiescent, unconditioned, and leads to the path of awakening. Some sentient beings are born in a central country, and their faculties are complete. They are worthy of the noble teaching, but they don't meet a Buddha, so they can't cultivate the religious practice. This is the eighth case of having no opportunity.

110. "What are eight things to produce? The eight awakenings of the great person: The path should have few desires; having many desires is not the path. The path should be satisfying; being unsatisfied is not the path. The path should be secluded; enjoying company is not the path. The path should be to restrain oneself; playing around is not the path. The path should be diligent; indolence is not the path. The path should be focused attention; forgetfulness is not the path. The path should be a focused mind; a distracted mind is not the path. The path should be wise; foolishness is not the path.

111. "What are eight things to know? The eight changes to the senses. Having an inner perception of form, one observes external form to be small. Whether it's beautiful or ugly, they continuously observe and attend to it. This is the first change to the senses.

112. "Having an inner perception of form, one observes external form to be measureless. Whether it's beautiful or ugly, they continuously observe and attend to it. This is the second change to the senses.

113. "Without an inner perception of form, one observes external form to be small. Whether it's beautiful or ugly, they continuously observe and attend to it. This is the third change to the senses.

114. "Without an inner perception of form, one observes external form to be measureless. Whether it's beautiful or ugly, they continuously observe and attend to it. This is the fourth change to the senses.

115. "Without an inner perception of form, one observes external form to be blue. The blue form, blue reflection, and blue sight are like a blue lotus flower or a blue Varanasi cloth. They are completely blue forms, blue reflections, and blue sights. Creating such a perception, one continuously observes and attends to it. This is the fifth change to the senses.

116. "Without an inner perception of form, one observes external form to be yellow. The yellow form, yellow reflection, and yellow sight are like a yellow flower or a yellow Varanasi cloth. They are completely yellow forms, yellow reflections, and yellow sights. Creating such a perception, one continuously observes and attends to it. This is the sixth change to the senses.

117. "Without an inner perception of form, one observes external form that's red. The red form, red reflection, and red sight are like a red flower or a red Varanasi cloth. They are completely red forms, red reflections, and red sights. Creating such a perception, one continuously observes and attends to it. This is the seventh change to the senses.

118. "Without an inner perception of form, one observes external form to be white. The white form, white reflection, and white sight are like a white flower or a white Varanasi cloth. They are completely white forms, white reflections, and white sights. Creating such a perception, one continuously observes and attends to it. This is the eighth change to the senses.

119. "What are eight things to be realized? They are the eight liberations. Form observed to be form is the first liberation. Observing external form without an internal perception of form is the second liberation. The liberation of purity is the third liberation. Going beyond notions of form, ceasing notions of anger, and abiding in the abode of space is the fourth liberation. Going beyond the abode of space and abiding in the abode of consciousness is the fifth liberation. Going beyond the abode of consciousness and abiding in the abode of nothingness is the sixth liberation. Going beyond the abode of nothingness and abiding the abode with and without conception is the seventh liberation. Going beyond the abode with and without conception and abiding in the cessation of concepts and perceptions is the eighth liberation.

120. "Monks, these eighty things are true and not false. They've been known by the Tathagata, who teaches Dharma equally.

The Nines

121. "There are also nine things to be achieved, nine things to be cultivated, nine things to be recognised, nine things to be ceased, nine things that retreat, nine things that advance, nine things that are difficult to understand, nine things to produce, nine things to know, and nine things to be realized.

122. "What are the nine things to be achieved? The nine factors of purified cessation: the precepts as a factor of purified cessation, the mind as a factor of purified cessation, views as a factor of purified cessation, going beyond doubt as a factor of purified cessation, discernment as a factor of purified cessation, the path as a factor of purified cessation, elimination as a factor of purified cessation, being desireless as a factor of purified cessation, and liberation as a factor of purified cessation.

123. "What are the nine things to be cultivated? They are the nine sources of joy: 1. joy, 2. love, 3. delight, 4. pleasure, 5. samadhi, 6. real knowledge, 7. indifference, 8. being without desire, and 9. liberation.

124. "What are the nine things to be recognised? They are the nine abodes of sentient beings. Some sentient beings have diverse bodies and diverse notions. These gods and humans are the first abode of sentient beings. Some sentient beings have diverse bodies but the same notions. When the Brahmas of the Abhasvara Heaven are first born there, that's the second abode of sentient beings. Some sentient beings have the same body but diverse notions. This Abhasvara Heaven is the third abode of sentient beings. Some sentient beings have the same body and the same notions. This Subhakrtsna Heaven is the fourth abode of sentient beings. Some sentient beings lack conception or anything to perceive. This Asamjnika Heaven is the fifth abode of sentient beings. Again, some sentient beings dwell in the abode of space, which is the sixth abode of sentient beings. Again, some sentient beings dwell in the abode of consciousness, which is the seventh abode of sentient beings. Again, some sentient beings dwell in the abode of nothingness, which is the eighth abode of sentient beings. Again, some sentient beings dwell in the abode with and without conception, which is the ninth abode of sentient beings.

125. "What are the nine things to be ceased? They are nine sources of craving: Because of craving, there's pursuit. Because of pursuit, there's gain. Because of gain, there's use. Because of use, there's desire. Because of desire, there's attachment. Because of attachment, there's jealousy. Because of jealousy, there's clinging. Because of clinging, there's guarding.

126. "What are the nine things that retreat? They are the nine vexations: A person once troubled me, is troubling me, or will trouble me. Someone dear to me has been troubled, is being troubled, or will be troubled. Someone I dislike has been loved and respected, is being loved and respected, or will be loved and respected.

127. "What are the nine things that advance? They are the nine non-vexations: That person has harassed me, but what benefit is there in being troubled by it? It didn't trouble me then, doesn't trouble me now, and won't trouble me in the future. Someone dear to me has been harassed, but what benefit is there in my being troubled by it? It didn't trouble me then, doesn't trouble me now, and won't trouble me in the future. Someone I dislike has been loved and respected, but what benefit is there in my being troubled by it? It didn't trouble me then, doesn't trouble me now, and won't trouble me in the future.

128. "What are the nine things that are difficult to understand? They are nine religious practices: If a monk has faith but doesn't observe the precepts, then his religious practice is incomplete. When a monk has faith and the precepts, then his religious practice is complete.

129. " If a monk has faith and precepts but doesn't learn much, then his religious practice is incomplete. When a monk has faith, precepts, and much learning, then his religious practice is complete.

130. " If a monk has faith, precepts, and much learning but can't teach Dharma, then his religious practice is incomplete. When a monk has faith, precepts, much learning, and can teach Dharma, then his religious practice is complete.

131. " If a monk has faith, precepts, much learning, and can teach Dharma but can't train the assembly, then his religious practice is incomplete. When a monk has faith, precepts, much learning, can teach Dharma, and can train the assembly, then his religious practice is complete.

132. " If a monk has faith, precepts, much learning, can teach Dharma, and can train the assembly but can't explain the Dharma's words in detail to a large assembly, then his religious practice is incomplete. When a monk has faith, precepts, much learning, can teach Dharma, can train the assembly, and can explain the Dharma's words in detail to a large assembly, then his religious practice is complete.

133. " If a monk has faith, precepts, much learning, can teach Dharma, can train the community, and can explain the Dharma's words in detail to a large assembly but hasn't attained the four dhyanas, then his religious practice is incomplete. When a monk has faith, precepts, much learning, can teach Dharma, can train the assembly, can explain the Dharma's words in detail to a large assembly, and has attained the four dhyanas, then his religious practice is complete.

134. " If a monk has faith, precepts, much learning, can teach Dharma, can train the assembly, can explain the Dharma's words in detail to a large assembly and has attained the four dhyanas but hasn't traversed the eight liberations forward and backward, then his religious practice is incomplete. when a monk has faith, precepts, much learning, can teach Dharma, can train the assembly, can explain the Dharma's words in detail to a large assembly, has attained the four dhyanas, and has traversed the eight liberations forward and backward, then his religious practice is complete.

135. " Suppose a monk has faith, precepts, much learning, can teach Dharma, can train the assembly, can explain the Dharma's words in detail to a large assembly, has attained the four dhyanas, and has traversed the eight liberations forward and backward. Still, he can't end being contaminated, become uncontaminated, liberate his mind and wisdom, and personally realize in the present life, 'Birth has been ended, the religious practice has been established, and the task has been accomplished. I won't be subject to another existence.' His religious practice is incomplete. Suppose a monk has faith, precepts, much learning, can teach Dharma, can train the assembly, can explain the Dharma's words in detail to a large assembly, has attained the four dhyanas, and has traversed the eight liberations forward and backward. He also has abandoned being contaminated, become uncontaminated, liberated his mind and wisdom, and personally realized in the present life, 'Birth has been ended, the religious practice has been established, and the task has been accomplished. I won't be subject to another existence.' His religious practice is complete.

136. "What are the nine things to produce? Nine concepts: The concept of impurity, concept that food is impure, concept that nothing in the world is enjoyable, concept of death, concept of impermanence, concept of the pain of impermanence, concept of the lack of self in pain, concept of the end [of suffering], and concept of having no desire.

137. "What are nine things to know? The nine various things: Various contacts arise because of various [sensory] elements. Various feelings arise because of various contacts. Various concepts arise because of various feelings. Various formations arise because of various concepts.[] Various desires arise because of various formations. Various profits arise because of various desires. Various pursuits arise because of various profits. Various afflictions arise because of various pursuits.

138. "What are the nine things to be realized? The nine kinds of cessation: When the first dhyana is entered, the thorn of sound is ceased. When the second dhyana is entered, the thorns of perception and examination are ceased. When the third dhyana is entered, the thorn of joy is ceased. When the fourth dhyana is entered, the thorn of breathing is ceased. When the abode of space is entered, the thorn of perceiving form is ceased. When the abode of consciousness is entered, the thorn of perceiving space is ceased. When the abode of nothingness is entered, the thorn of perceiving consciousness is ceased. When the abode with and without conception is entered, the thorn of perceiving nothingness is ceased. When the samadhi of complete cessation is entered, the thorns of conception and feeling are ceased.

139. "Monks, these 90 things are true and not false. They've been known by the Tathagata, who teaches Dharma equally.

The Tens

140. "There are also ten things to be achieved, ten things to be cultivated, ten things to be recognised, ten things to be ceased, ten things that retreat, ten things that advance, ten things that are difficult to understand, ten things to produce, ten things to know, and ten things to be realized.

141. "What are the ten things to be achieved? The ten ways of salvation: 1. A monk is perfect regarding the 250 precepts and perfect in his behavior. He feels great anxiety when he sees a small infraction. He fully learns the precepts, and he doesn't have any inclination to corruption. 2. He makes good friends. 3. His language is proper, and he has a great deal of patience. 4. He prefers to pursue the good teaching and disseminates it generously. 5. When religious practitioners undertake a task, he immediately goes to help them. He doesn't regard it as troublesome, deals with difficulties, and instructs others to do the same. 6. He's well-versed, able to retain what he learns, and isn't ever forgetful. 7. He's diligent in desisting from unskillful qualities and developing skillful qualities. 8. He constantly focuses on his own mindfulness without any other ideas, recalling his previous good conduct as though it were right in front of his eyes. 9. His wisdom is accomplished. He observes the law of arising and cessation and stops the source of suffering with the noble discipline. 10. He's happy in a secluded dwelling focusing his attention and contemplating, and he isn't agitated while he meditates.

142. "What are the ten things to be cultivated? The ten right practices: right view, right intent, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right method, right samadhi, right liberation, and right knowledge.

143. "What are the ten things to be recognised? The ten physical senses: the eye sense, ear sense, nose sense, tongue sense, body sense, sight sense, sound sense, odor sense, flavor sense, and touch sense.

144. "What are the ten things to be ceased? The ten wrong practices: wrong view, wrong intent, wrong speech, wrong action, wrong livelihood, wrong method, wrong samadhi, wrong liberation, and wrong knowledge.

145. "What are the ten things that retreat? The path of ten unskillful actions: Physical killing, stealing, and engaging in sex; verbal divisiveness, abusiveness, false speech, and fancy speech; and mental greed, jealousy, and wrong view.

146. "What are the ten things that advance? The ten skillful actions: Physical not killing, stealing, or engaging in sex; verbal non-divisiveness, abusiveness, false speech, or fancy speech; and mental non-greed, jealousy, or wrong view.

147. "What are the ten things that are difficult to understand? The ten noble dwellings: A monk 1. eliminates five limbs, 2. achieves six limbs, 3. guards one, 4. supports four, 5. ceases heterodox truths, 6. has a surpassing and marvelous pursuit, 7. perceives the unmuddied, 8. has stopped physical conduct, 9. his mind is liberated, and 10. his wisdom is liberated.

148. "What are the ten things to be produced? The ten points of praise: When a monk has himself attained faith, he teaches it to other people, and commends those who've attained faith. When he has himself observed precepts, he teaches them to other people, and he commends those who observe precepts. When he has few desires himself, he teaches it to other people, and he commends those with few desires. When he is himself satisfied, he teaches it to other people, and he commends those who are satisfied. When he himself enjoys seclusion, he teaches it to other people, and he commends those who enjoy seclusion. When he himself has learned much, he teaches it to other people, and he commends those who learn much. When he has himself made effort, he teaches it to other people, and he commends those who make effort. When he has himself focused his attention, he teaches it to other people, and he commends those who focus their attention. When he has himself attained samadhi, he teaches it to other people, and he commends those who attain samadhi. When he has himself attained wisdom, he teaches it to other people, and he commends those who attain wisdom.

151. "Monks, these hundred things are true and not false. They've been known by the Tathagata, who teaches Dharma equally."

152. The Buddha then approved of what Sariputra said. When the monks heard what Sariputra taught, they rejoiced and approved.

DA 11 INCREASING ONE BY ONE

[T 1.57b25]

(While this sutra does not have a direct parallel in Pali or other sources, it's essentially an abbreviated version of the Dasuttara Sutta, including the first four and last set of items found in DA 10 and DN 34.)

(This matrka sutra is an abbreviated version of the Going Up to Ten Sutra (Sanskrit Dasottara, P. Dasuttara), listing five sets of items (instead of ten) that number from one to ten items each.)

1. Thus I have heard: One time, the Buddha was staying at Anathapindada's Park in Jeta's Grove of Sravasti. He was accompanied by a large assembly of 1,250 monks.

2. It was then that the Bhagavan addressed the monks, "I will give you a discourse on the sublime teaching in which all the words in the beginning, middle, and end are true, the content and expression are pure, and the religious life is perfected. It's called the teaching that increases one by one. All of you, listen closely and consider it well. I will teach it for you." The monks then accepted the teaching and listened.

3. The Buddha told the monks, "This is the teaching that increases one by one: There's one thing to be achieved, one thing to be cultivated, one thing to be recognised, one thing to be ceased, and one thing to be realized.

4. "What's the one thing to be achieved? It's not abandoning the good Dharma. What's the one thing to be cultivated? It's constant mindfulness of one's body. What's the one thing to be recognised? It's contaminated contact. What's the one thing to be ceased? It's the conceit of having a self. What's the one thing to be realized? It's the freedom of an unobstructed mind.

5. "There are also two things to be achieved, two things to be cultivated, two things to be recognised, two things to be ceased, and two things to be realized.

6. "What are the two things to be achieved? They are knowing conscience and modesty. What are the two things to be cultivated? They are calm and contemplation. What are the two things to be recognised? They are name and form. What are two things to be ceased? They are ignorance and craving for existence. What are two things to be realized? They are insight and liberation.

7. "There are also three things to be achieved, three things to be cultivated, three things to be recognised, three things to be ceased, and three things to be realized.

8. "What are the three things to be achieved? They are 1. making good friends, 2. listening to the voice of Dharma, and 3. accomplishing [consecutive] teachings.

9. "What are the three things to be cultivated? They are the three samadhis: The samadhi of emptiness, the samadhi without appearances, and the samadhi without action.

10. "What are the three things to be recognised? They are the three feelings: Painful feelings, pleasant feelings, and feelings that are not painful or pleasant.

11. "What are the three things to be ceased? They are three cravings: Craving of desires, craving for existence, and craving to not exist.

12. "What are the three things to be realized? They are the three insights: The knowledge of past lives, the knowledge of the heavenly eye, and the knowledge that the contaminants are ended.

13. "There are also four things to be achieved, four things to be cultivated, four things to be recognised, four things to be ceased, and four things to be realized.

14. "What are the four things to be achieved? They are 1. living in a central country, 2. staying close to good friends, 3. guarding oneself, and 4. having planted good roots in the past.

15. "What are the four things to be cultivated? They are abiding in the four abodes of mindfulness: A monk observes internal body as body diligently and not negligently. He doesn't lose that recollection and abandons worldly greed and sorrow. He observes internal and external body as body, diligently and not negligently. He doesn't lose that recollection and abandons worldly greed and sorrow. He likewise observes feelings, mind, and teachings …

16. "What are the four things to be recognised? They are the four foods: Physical food, food of contact, food of thought, and food of consciousness.

17. "What are the four things to be ceased? They are four acquisitions: the acquisition of desires, acquisition of self, acquisition of precepts, and acquisition of views.

18. "What are the four things to be realized? They are the four fruits of the ascetic: The fruit of stream-entry, fruit of once-returning, fruit of non-returning, and fruit of the arhat.

19. "There are also five things to be achieved, five things to be cultivated, five things to be recognised, five things to be ceased, and five things to be realized.

20. "What are the five things to be achieved? They are the five factors of complete cessation: 1. faith in the Buddha, Tathagata, and Arhat who perfected the ten epithets, 2. lacking illness and being at peace, 3. honesty and lack of deception about heading directly down the Tathagata's road to nirvana, 4. mental focus that's not confused and doesn't forget the recitations, and 5. skill in investigating the arising and cessation of things and ending the root of suffering with the noble practice.

21. "What are the five things to be cultivated? They are the five faculties: faculty of faith, faculty of effort, faculty of mindfulness, faculty of samadhi, and faculty of wisdom.

22. "What are the five things to be recognised? They are the five acquired aggregates: the acquired aggregate of form … feeling … conception … volition … and the acquired aggregate of consciousness.

23. "What are the five things to be ceased? They are the five hindrances: The hindrance of greed, hindrance of anger, hindrance of drowsiness, hindrance of restlessness, and hindrance of doubt.

24. "What are the five things to be realized? They are the five collections of those who've finished learning: their collection of precepts, their collection of samadhi, their collection of wisdom, their collection of liberation, and their collection of the knowing and seeing of liberation.

25. "There are also six things to be achieved, six things to be cultivated, six things to be recognised, six things to be ceased, and six things to be realized.

26. "What are the six things to be achieved? They are the six honored things. If a monk cultivates six honored things that are respectable and honorable, it will unify him with the community without quarrels, and he'll practice alone without mixing [with others].

27. "What are the six? A monk's physical conduct is always kind, respecting religious practitioners and abiding with benevolence. This is called an honored thing that's respectable and honorable. It unifies him with the community without any quarrels, and he practices alone without mixing with others.

28. "Furthermore, a monk is verbally kind … mentally kind … shares his own leftover alms with other people from his bowl. He doesn't favor certain people when doing so …

29. "Furthermore, a monk doesn't violate, criticize, or defile the precepts that are practiced by noble people. He's commended by wise people for skillfully perfecting the observance of precepts, and he achieves a settled mind …

30. "[Furthermore, a monk] accomplishes the noble escape, completely ends suffering, and attains various religious practices with right view. This is called an honored thing that's respectable and honorable. It unifies him with the community without any quarrels, and he practices alone without mixing with others.

31. "What are the six things to be cultivated? They are the six recollections: recollection of the Buddha, recollection of the Dharma, recollection of the Sangha, recollection of the precepts, recollection of generosity, and recollection of gods.

32. "What are the six things to be recognised? They are the six internal senses: the eye sense, ear sense, nose sense, tongue sense, body sense, and mental sense.

33. "What are the six things to be ceased? They are the six cravings: craving for sights, craving for sounds, craving for odors, craving for flavors, craving for touches, and craving for notions.

34. "What are the six things to be realized? They are the six spiritual penetrations: 1. the realization of miraculous abilities, 2. realization of the heavenly ear, 3. realization of knowing others' minds, 4. realization of perceiving past lives, 5. realization of the heavenly eye, and 6. realization of perceiving the end of the contaminants.

35. "There are also seven things to be achieved, seven things to be cultivated, seven things to be recognised, seven things to be ceased, and seven things to be realized.

36. "What are the seven things to be achieved? They are the seven kinds of wealth: wealth in faith, wealth in precepts, wealth in conscience, wealth in modesty, wealth in learning, wealth in generosity, and wealth in wisdom. These are the seven kinds of wealth.

37. "What are the seven things to be cultivated? They are the seven awakenings. Here, a monk cultivates the awakening of mindfulness, which depends on being desireless, tranquil, and secluded. He … cultivates the teaching … cultivates effort … cultivates joy … cultivates mildness … cultivates samadhi … cultivates equanimity, which depends on being desireless, tranquil, and secluded.

38. "What are the seven things to be recognised? They are the seven dwelling places of consciousness. If there are sentient beings of diverse bodies and diverse notions, these gods and humans are the first abode of consciousness. Again, there are sentient beings of diverse bodies but the same notions. When the Brahmas of the Abhasvara Heaven are first born there, that's the second abode of consciousness. Again, there are sentient beings of the same body but diverse notions. These Abhasvara gods are the third abode of consciousness. Again, there are sentient beings of the same body and the same notions. These Subhakrtsna gods are the fourth abode of consciousness. Again, there are sentient beings that dwell in the abode of space. This is the fifth abode of consciousness. Some dwell in the abode of consciousness. This is the sixth abode of consciousness. Some are in the abode of nothingness. This is the seventh abode of consciousness.

39. "What are the seven things to be ceased? They are the seven tendencies: the tendency of craving for desires, tendency of craving for existence, tendency of views, tendency of pride, tendency of anger, tendency of ignorance, and tendency of doubt.

40. "What are the seven things to be realized? They are the seven powers of ending the contaminants. Here, a monk who has ended the contaminants really knows and sees all kinds of suffering and their formation, cessation, enjoyment, defect, and escape. He observes desire to be like a fire pit or a sword. He knows desire and sees desire. He isn't greedy for desires, and his mind doesn't dwell on desire. Again, skillfully examining it, having really known and really seen it, worldly lust and bad and unskillful things don't arise and defile him. He cultivates the four abodes of mindfulness, often cultivating and practicing it … the five faculties … five powers … seven awakenings … noble eightfold path, often cultivating and practicing it.

41. "There are also eight things to be achieved, eight things to be cultivated, eight things to be recognised, eight things to be ceased, and eight things to be realized.

42. "What are the eight things to be achieved? They are the eight causes and conditions that gain knowledge before the religious life is attained and increase knowledge once it is attained.

43. "What are the eight? Here, a monk lives according to the Bhagavan, or he might live according to a teacher, elder, or a wise religious practitioner. He becomes conscientious and modest and possesses affection and respect. This is the first cause and condition that gains knowledge before the religious life is attained and increases knowledge once it is attained.

44. "Furthermore, living according to the Bhagavan, he asks questions at the appropriate time: 'What does this teaching mean? What's the aim of it?' The Honored One immediately discloses its profound meaning. This is the second cause and condition …

45. "Once he has heard this, his body and mind are pleasant and calm. This is the third cause and condition …

46. "He doesn't engage in unbeneficial discussions that obstruct the path. When he goes into a community, he either discusses the teaching himself or asks another to discuss it, but he doesn't abandon the noble silence. This is the fourth cause and condition …

47. "His learning becomes extensive, and he retains and doesn't lose the profundities of the teaching that's good in the beginning, middle, and end, that's genuine in content and expression, and perfects the religious life. Having heard it, it enters his mind and doesn't drift away. This is the fifth cause and condition …

48. "He trains diligently, desisting from unskillful conduct and increasing daily his skillful conduct. He exerts himself to be worthy and doesn't abandon this teaching. This is the sixth cause and condition …

49. "Also, he recognises the law of arising and cessation with wisdom and heads for the noble's end of suffering. This is the seventh cause and condition …

50. "Also, he observes the arising and ceasing nature of the five acquired aggregates: 'This is form, form's coming together, and form's cessation. This is feeling … conception … volition … consciousness, consciousness's coming together, and consciousness's cessation.' This is the eighth cause and condition that gains knowledge before the religious life is attained and increases knowledge once it is attained.

51. "What are the eight things to be cultivated? It's the noble eightfold path: right view, right intention, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right method, right mindfulness, and right samadhi.

52. "What are the eight things to be recognised? They are eight worldly ways: profit and decline, criticism and compliments, praise and censure, and pain and pleasure.

53. "What are the eight things to be ceased? It's the eightfold wrong [path]: wrong view, wrong intent, wrong speech, wrong action, wrong livelihood, wrong method, wrong mindfulness, and wrong samadhi.

54. "What are the eight things to be realized? They are the eight liberations. Form observed as form is the first liberation. Observing form externally without an internal perception of form is the second liberation. The liberation of purity is the third liberation. Going beyond notions of form, ceasing notions of anger, and abiding in the abode of space is the fourth liberation. Going beyond the abode of space and abiding in the abode of consciousness is the fifth liberation. Going beyond the abode of consciousness and abiding in the abode of nothingness is the sixth liberation. Going beyond the abode of nothingness and abiding the abode with and without conception is the seventh liberation. Going beyond the abode with and without conception and abiding in the cessation of concepts and perceptions is the eighth liberation.

55. "There are also nine things to be achieved, nine things to be cultivated, nine things to be recognised, nine things to be ceased, and nine things to be realized.

56. "What are the nine things to be achieved? They are the nine factors of purified cessation: the precepts as a factor of purified cessation, the mind as a factor of purified cessation, views as a factor of purified cessation, going beyond doubt as a factor of purified cessation, discernment as a factor of purified cessation, the path as a factor of purified cessation, elimination as a factor of purified cessation, being desireless as a factor of purified cessation, and liberation as a factor of purified cessation.

57. "What are the nine things to be cultivated? They are the nine sources of joy: 1. joy, 2. love, 3. delight, 4. pleasure, 5. samadhi, 6. real knowledge, 7. indifference, 8. being without desire, and 9. liberation.

58. "What are the nine things to be recognised? They are the nine abodes of sentient beings. Some sentient beings have diverse bodies and diverse notions. These gods and humans are the first abode of sentient beings. Some sentient beings have diverse bodies but the same notions. When the Brahmas of the Abhasvara Heaven are first born there, that's the second abode of sentient beings. Some sentient beings have the same body but diverse notions. This Abhasvara Heaven is the third abode of sentient beings. Some sentient beings have the same body and the same notions. This Subhakrtsna Heaven is the fourth abode of sentient beings. Some sentient beings lack conception or anything to perceive. This Asamjnika Heaven is the fifth abode of sentient beings. Again, some sentient beings dwell in the abode of space, which is the sixth abode of sentient beings. Again, some sentient beings dwell in the abode of consciousness, which is the seventh abode of sentient beings. Again, some sentient beings dwell in the abode of nothingness, which is the eighth abode of sentient beings. Again, some sentient beings dwell in the abode with and without conception, which is the ninth abode of sentient beings.

59. "What are the nine things to be ceased? They are nine sources of craving: Because of craving, there's pursuit. Because of pursuit, there's gain. Because of gain, there's use. Because of use, there's desire. Because of desire, there's attachment. Because of attachment, there's jealousy. Because of jealousy, there's clinging. Because of clinging, there's guarding.

60. "What are the nine things to be realized? They are the nine cessations. If one enters the first dhyana, then the thorn of sound is ceased. If one enters the second dhyana, then the thorns of perception and examination is ceased. If one enters the third dhyana, then the thorn of joy is ceased. If one enters the fourth dhyana, then the thorn of breathing in and out is ceased. If one enters the abode of space, then the thorn of perceived form is ceased. If one enters the abode of consciousness, then the thorn of perceived emptiness is ceased. If one enters the abode of nothingness, then the thorn of perceived consciousness is ceased. If one enters the abode with and without conception, then the thorn of perceived nothingness is ceased. If one enters the samadhi of complete cessation, then the thorn of conception and feeling is ceased.

61. "There are also ten things to be achieved, ten things to be cultivated, ten things to be recognised, ten things to be ceased, and ten things to be realized.

62. "What are the ten things to be achieved? They are the ten kinds of salvation: 1. A monk is perfect regarding the 250 precepts and perfect in his manner. He feels great anxiety when he sees a small infraction. He fully learns the precepts, and he doesn't have any inclination to corruption. 2. He makes good friends. 3. His language is proper, and he has a great deal of patience. 4. He enjoys pursuing the good teaching and disseminates it generously. 5. When religious practitioners undertake a task, he immediately goes to help them. He doesn't regard it as wearisome, can deal with difficulties, and he also instructs others to do the same. 6. He's well-versed and able to retain what he learns, never being forgetful. 7. He's diligent in desisting from unskillful qualities and developing skillful qualities. 8. He constantly focuses on mindfulness of himself without any other ideas, recalling his previous good conduct as though it were right in front of his eyes. 9. His wisdom is accomplished as he observes the law of arising and cessation, and he stops the source of suffering with the noble discipline. 10. He's happy focusing on contemplation in a quiet dwelling and isn't agitated while he meditates.

63. "What are the ten things to be cultivated? They are the ten right practices: right view, right intent, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right method, right samadhi, right liberation, and right knowledge.

64. "What are the ten things to be recognised? They are the ten physical senses: the eye sense, ear sense, nose sense, tongue sense, body sense, sight sense, sound sense, odor sense, flavor sense, and touch sense.

65. "What are the ten things to be ceased? They are the ten wrong practices: wrong view, wrong intent, wrong speech, wrong action, wrong livelihood, wrong method, wrong samadhi, wrong liberation, and wrong knowledge.

66. "What are the ten things to be realized? They are the ten teachings of those who've finished learning: their right view, right intent, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right method, right samadhi, right liberation, and right knowledge.

67. "Monks, this is called the teaching that increases one by one. Now, I've thus explained that teaching for you. I'm the Tathagata; I've provided all that I should for you. Having compassionately and courteously instructed you, you ought to endeavor to put it into practice.

68. "Monks, you should go to a quiet place under a tree or in an empty dwelling and diligently sit in meditation. Don't be self-indulgent. What profit is there in not exerting yourself today and regretting it later? This is my teaching; be diligent in accepting and maintaining it."

69. When the monks heard what the Buddha taught, they rejoiced and approved.

DA 12 THREE CATEGORIES

[T 1.59b14]

(This is another matrka sutra that lists three sets of items that ascend from one to ten items each. The three categories are things that lead to bad destinies, things that lead to good destinies, and things that lead to Nirvana.)

1. Thus I have heard: One time, the Buddha was staying at Anathapindada's Park in Jeta's Grove of Sravasti. He was accompanied by a large group of 1,250 monks.

2. It was then that the Bhagavan addressed the monks, "I will give all of you a discourse on the sublime teaching, the content and expression of which is pure and perfects the religious life. It's the teaching in three categories. All of you, listen closely and consider it. I will teach this for you."

The monks then accepted the teaching and listened.

3. The Buddha addressed the monks, "These three categories are one thing that leads to bad destinies, one thing that leads to good destinies, and one thing that leads to Nirvana.

4. "What's one thing that leads to bad destinies? It's the absence of kindness that harbors harmful thoughts. This is one thing that leads to bad destinies.

5. "What's one thing that leads to good destinies? It's not inflicting bad intent on sentient beings. This is one thing that leads to good destinies.

6. "What's one thing that leads to Nirvana? It's making effort to cultivate the abodes of mindfulness. This is one thing that leads to Nirvana.

7. "Again, there are two things that lead to bad destinies, two things that lead to good destinies, and two things that lead to Nirvana.

8. "What are two things that lead to bad destinies? One is violating the precepts, and the second is breaking [right] view.

9. "What are two things that lead to good destinies? One is perfecting the precepts, and the second is perfecting [right] view.

10. "What are the two things that lead to Nirvana? One is calmness, and the second in contemplation.

11. "Again, there are three things that lead to bad destinies, three things that lead to good destinies, and three things that lead to Nirvana.

12. "What are three things that lead to bad destinies? They are the three unskillful roots: The unskillful root of greed, unskillful root of anger, and unskillful root of delusion.

13. "What are three things that lead to good destinies? They are the three skillful roots: The skillful root of having no greed, skillful root of having no anger, and skillful root of having no delusion.

14. "What are three things that lead to Nirvana? They are the three samadhis: The samadhi of emptiness, the samadhi of no appearances, and the samadhi of no action.

15. "Again, there are four things that lead to bad destinies, four things that lead to good destinies, and four things that lead to Nirvana.

16. "What are four things that lead to bad destinies? They are lustful speech, angry speech, fearful speech, and deluded speech.

17. "What are four things that lead to good destinies? Speech without lust, speech without anger, speech without fear, and speech without delusion.

18. "What are four things that lead to Nirvana? The mindful abode of body, mindful abode of feelings, mindful abode of mind, and mindful abode of teachings.

19. "Again, there are five things that lead to bad destinies, five things that lead to good destinies, and five things that lead to Nirvana.

20. "What are five things that lead to bad destinies? They are breaking the five precepts: killing, stealing, adultery, lying, and drinking alcohol.

21. "What are five things that lead to good destinies? They are observing the five precepts: Not killing, not stealing, not committing adultery, not being deceptive, and not drinking alcohol.

22. "What are five things that lead to Nirvana? They are the five faculties: the faculty of faith, faculty of effort, faculty of mindfulness, faculty of samadhi, and faculty of wisdom.

23. "Again, there are six things that lead to bad destinies, six things that lead to good destinies, and six things that lead to Nirvana.

24. "What are six things that lead to bad destinies? They are the six disrespects: Disrespecting the Buddha, disrespecting the Dharma, disrespecting the Sangha, disrespecting the precepts, disrespecting samadhi, and disrespecting father and mother.

25. "What are six things that lead to good destinies? They are the six respects: Respecting the Buddha, respecting the Dharma, respecting the Sangha, respecting the precepts, respecting samadhi, and respecting father and mother.

26. "What are six things that lead to Nirvana? They are the six recollections: Recollecting the Buddha, recollecting the Dharma, recollecting the Sangha, recollecting generosity, and recollecting the gods.

27. "Again, there are seven things that lead to bad destinies, seven things that lead to good destinies, and seven things that lead to Nirvana.

28. "What are seven things that lead to bad destinies? They are killing beings, taking what's not given, adultery, lying, divisiveness, harsh speech, and flattery.

29. "What are seven things that lead to good destinies? Not killing beings, not stealing, not committing adultery, not being deceptive, not being divisive, not speaking harshly, and not flattering.

30. "What are seven things that lead to Nirvana? They are the seven awakenings: The awakening of mindfulness, awakening of discriminating teachings, awakening of effort, awakening of mildness, awakening of samadhi, awakening of joy, and awakening of equanimity.

31. "Again, there are eight things that lead to bad destinies, eight things that lead to good destinies, and eight things that lead to Nirvana.

32. "What are eight things that lead to bad destinies? They are the eight wrong practices: wrong view, wrong intent, wrong speech, wrong action, wrong livelihood, wrong method, wrong mindfulness, and wrong samadhi.

34. "What are eight things that lead to Nirvana? They are the noble eightfold path: right view, right intent, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right method, right mindfulness, and right samadhi.

35. "Again, there are nine things that lead to bad destinies, nine things that lead to good destinies, and nine things that lead to Nirvana.

36. "What are nine things that lead to bad destinies? 'Someone has harassed me, is harassing me, and will harass me.' 'My loved ones have been harassed, are being harassed, and will be harassed.' 'My enemies have been respected, are being respected, and will be respected.'

37. "What are nine things that lead to good destinies? 'What good is there to my being troubled by others who harass me? The past won't trouble me, the present won't trouble me, and the future won't trouble me.' 'What good is there to my being troubled about my loved ones being harassed? The past won't trouble me, the present won't trouble me, and the future won't trouble me.' 'What good is there to my being troubled about my enemies being respected? The past won't trouble me, the present won't trouble me, and the future won't trouble me.'

38. "What are nine things that lead to Nirvana? They are the nine good qualities: 1) joy, 2) love, 3) delight, 4) pleasure, 5) samadhi, 6) real knowledge, 7) indifference, 8) being without desire, and 9) liberation.

39. "Again, there are ten things that lead to bad destinies, ten things that lead to good destinies, and ten things that lead to Nirvana.

40. "What are ten things that lead to bad destinies? They are the ten unskillful [actions]: Physically killing, stealing, and committing adultery, verbally being divisive, abusive, lying, and flattering, and mentally being covetous, jealous, and having wrong views.

41. "What are ten things that lead to good destinies? They are the ten skillful actions: Physically not killing, stealing, or committing adultery, verbally not being divisive, abusive, lying, or flattering, and mentally not being covetous, jealous, or having wrong views.

43. "Monks, thus are the ten things that make arriving at Nirvana possible. This is called the sublime and correct teaching in three categories. I'm the Tathagata; I've provided all that I should for you. Taking pity on you, I've lectured on the sutras and the path. You should also take pity on yourselves and go to a quiet place under a tree or in an empty dwelling to contemplate. Don't be negligent. Nothing's gained by not exerting yourselves today and regretting it later."

44. The monks who heard what the Buddha taught rejoiced and approved.

DA 13 THE GREAT METHOD OF CONDITIONALITY

(Parallels for this sutra include DN 15, MA 97, T14, and T52.)

(Ananda has an epiphany about the profundity of the Buddha's teaching of dependent origination and asks the Buddha about it. The Buddha gives him a lengthy discourse that covers the classic chain of twelve dependent originations and also three other chains of dependent origination. Liberation by wisdom and in both ways is also discussed using the topics of views about self, the abodes of consciousness, and the eight liberations.)

1. Thus I have heard: One time, the Buddha was staying in Kuru at Kalmasa's Residence. He was accompanied by a large assembly of 1,250 monks.

Ananda's Question

2. It was then that Ananda was staying in a quiet place and thought, "Amazing! Extraordinary! The twelve dependent originations that are taught by the Bhagavan are the light of the teaching! They are profound and difficult to understand, but my mind observes them as though they were right in front of my eyes. Why are they so profound?"

3. Ananda then emerged from his quiet room, went to the Bhagavan, bowed his head at his feet, and sat to one side. He said to the Bhagavan, "I was in a quiet room and thought to myself, 'Amazing! Extraordinary! The twelve dependent originations that are taught by the Bhagavan are the light of the teaching! They are profound and difficult to understand, but my mind observes them as though they were right in front of my eyes. Why are they so profound?'"

4. The Bhagavan then told Ananda, "Stop, stop! Don't say, 'The twelve dependent originations are the light of the teaching. They are profound and difficult to understand.' Ananda, these twelve dependent originations are difficult to see and difficult to know. Dependent origination is unknown to the gods, Mara, Brahma, ascetics, and priests. If they were to ponder, investigate, and discern its meaning, they would become confused, being unable to see it.

The Dependent Origination of Suffering

5. "Ananda, I'll discuss it with you now. There's a condition for old age and death. Suppose someone were to ask, 'What's the condition for old age and death?' They should be answered, 'Birth is the condition for old age and death.'

6. "Suppose they also ask, 'What's the condition for birth?' They should be answered, 'Existence is the condition for birth.'

7. "Suppose they also ask, 'What's the condition for existence?' They should be answered, 'Grasping is the condition for existence.'

8. "Suppose they also ask, 'What's the condition for grasping?' They should be answered, 'Craving is the condition for grasping.'

9. "Suppose they also ask, 'What's the condition for craving?' They should be answered, 'Feeling is the condition for craving.'

10. "Suppose they also asked, 'What's the condition for feeling?' They should be answered, 'Contact is the condition for feeling.'

11. "Suppose they also ask, 'What's the condition for contact?' They should be answered, 'The six sense fields are the condition for contact.'

12. "Suppose they also ask, 'What's the condition for the six sense fields?' They should be answered, 'Name and form are the condition for the six sense fields.'

13. "Suppose they also ask, 'What's the condition for name and form?' They should be answered, 'Consciousness is the condition for name and form.'

Copyright © 2018 by Lord Henfield, Guildford Scientific Press

14. "Suppose they also ask, 'What's the condition for consciousness?' They should be answered, 'Action is the condition for consciousness.'

15. "Suppose they also ask, 'What's the condition for action?' They should be answered, 'Delusion is the condition for action.'

16. "Thus, Ananda, action exists conditioned by delusion. Consciousness exists conditioned by action. Name and form exist conditioned by consciousness. The six sense fields exist conditioned by name and form. Contact exists conditioned by the six sense fields. Feeling exists conditioned by contact. Craving exists conditioned by feeling. Grasping exists conditioned by craving. Existence exists conditioned by grasping. Birth exists conditioned by existence. The formation of the great calamity of old age, death, grief, sorrow, pain, and trouble exists conditioned by birth. These are the conditions for this great mass of suffering."

The Dependent Origination of Old Age and Death

17. The Buddha told Ananda, "'Old age and death exist conditioned by birth.' What does this mean? Suppose that no sentient being was subject to birth. Would there be old age and death?"

Ananda replied, "There wouldn't be."

18. "Therefore, Ananda, it's for this reason that we know old age and death comes from birth. 'Old age and death exist conditioned by birth.' That's the meaning of what I said.

19. He also told Ananda, "'Birth exists conditioned by existence.' What does this mean? Suppose that no sentient being had any existence in the desire realm or in the form or formless realms. Would there be birth?"

"There wouldn't be."

20. "Ananda, it's for this reason that we know birth comes from existence. 'Birth exists conditioned by existence.' That's the meaning of what I said.

21. He also told Ananda, "'Existence exists conditioned by grasping.' What does this mean? Suppose that no sentient being had any grasping of desires, views, precepts, or self. Would there be existence?"

"There wouldn't be."

22. "Ananda, it's for this reason that we know existence comes from grasping. 'Existence exists conditioned by grasping.' That's the meaning of what I said.

23. He also told Ananda, "'Grasping exists conditioned by craving.' What does this mean? Suppose that no sentient being had any craving for desires, existences, or non-existence. Would there be clinging?"

"There wouldn't be."

24. "Ananda, it's for this reason that we know grasping comes from craving. 'Grasping exists conditioned by craving.' That's the meaning of what I said.

25. He also told Ananda, "'Craving exists conditioned by feeling.' What does this mean? Suppose that no sentient being had any pleasant, painful, or neither pleasant nor painful feelings. Would there be craving?"

"There wouldn't be."

26. "Ananda, it's for this reason that we know craving comes from feeling. 'Craving exists conditioned by feeling.' That's the meaning of what I said.

Dependent Origination of Weapons and Fighting

27. "Ananda, you should know that seeking exists because of craving. Profit exists because of seeking. Use exists because of profit. Desire exists because of use. Attachment exists because of desire. Jealousy exists because of attachment. Guarding exists because of jealousy. Safeguards exist because of guarding. Ananda, weapons, fighting, and the making of countless evils come from the existence of safeguards. That's the meaning of what I said.

28. "Ananda, what does this mean? Suppose that no sentient being had any safeguards. Would there be weapons, fighting, and the arising of countless evils?"

"There wouldn't be."

29. "Therefore, Ananda, it's for this reason that we know weapons and fighting are produced from safeguards. 'Weapons and fighting exist conditioned by safeguards.' Ananda, that's the meaning of what I said.

30. He also told Ananda, "'Safeguards exist conditioned by guarding.' What does this mean? Suppose that no sentient being had anything to guard. Would there be safeguards?"

"There wouldn't be."

31. "Ananda, it's for this reason that we know safeguards come from guarding. 'Safeguards exist conditioned by guarding.' That's the meaning of what I said.

32. "Ananda, 'guarding exists conditioned by jealousy.' What does this mean? Suppose that no sentient being had any jealousy. Would there be guarding?"

"There wouldn't be."

33. "Ananda, it's for this reason that we know guarding comes from jealousy. 'Guarding exists conditioned by jealousy.' That's the meaning of what I said.

34. "Ananda, 'jealousy exists conditioned by attachment.' What does this mean? Suppose that no sentient being had any attachments. Would there be jealousy?"

"There wouldn't be."

35. "Ananda, it's for this reason that we know jealousy comes from attachment. 'Jealousy exists conditioned by attachment.' That's the meaning of what I said.

36. "Ananda, 'attachment exists conditioned by desire.' What does this mean? Suppose that no sentient being had any desire. Would there be attachment?"

"There wouldn't be."

37. "Ananda, it's for this reason that we know attachment comes from desire. 'Attachment exists conditioned by desire.' That's the meaning of what I said.

38. "Ananda, 'desire exists conditioned by use.' What does this mean? Suppose that no sentient being had use [for anything]. Would there be desire?"

"There wouldn't be."

39. "Ananda, it's for this reason that we know desire comes from use. 'Desire exists conditioned by use.' That's the meaning of what I said.

40. "Ananda, 'use exists conditioned by profit.' What does this mean? Suppose that no sentient being had any profit. Would there be something to use?"

"There wouldn't be."

41. "Ananda, it's for this reason that we know use comes from profit. 'Use exists conditioned by profit.' That's the meaning of what I said.

42. "Ananda, 'profit exists conditioned by seeking.' What does this mean? Suppose that no sentient being had [anything to] seeking. Would there be profit?"

"There wouldn't be."

43. "Ananda, it's for this reason that we know profit comes from seeking. 'Profit exists conditioned by seeking.' That's the meaning of what I said.

44. He also told Ananda, "'Seeking exists conditioned by craving.' What does this mean? Suppose that no sentient being had any craving. Would there be seeking?"

"There wouldn't be."

45. "Ananda, it's for this reason that we know seeking comes from craving. 'Seeking exists conditioned by craving.' That's the meaning of what I said.

46. He also told Ananda, "Seeking exists conditioned by craving up to guarding and safeguards. Feeling is likewise. Seeking exists because of feeling up to guarding and safeguards.

Dependent Origination of Feeling

47. The Buddha told Ananda, "'Feeling exists conditioned by contact.' What does this mean? Suppose that there were no eye, form, and visual consciousness. Would there be contact?"

"There wouldn't be."

48. "Suppose that there were no ear, sound, or auditory consciousness … no nose, odor, or olfactory consciousness … no tongue, flavor, or gustatory consciousness … no body, touch, or somatic consciousness … no mind, notion, or cognitive consciousness. Would there be contact?"

"There wouldn't be."

49. "Ananda, suppose that no sentient being had any contact. Would there be feeling?"

"There wouldn't be."

50. "Ananda, it's for this reason that we know feeling comes from contact. 'Feeling exists conditioned by contact.' That's the meaning of what I said.

51. "Ananda, 'contact exists conditioned by name and form.' What does this mean? Suppose that no sentient being had any name and form. Would there be mental contact?"

"There wouldn't be."

52. "Suppose that no sentient being had any physical form or appearance. Would there be physical contact?

"There wouldn't be."

53. "Ananda, suppose that there were no name and form. Would there be contact?

"There wouldn't be."

54. "Ananda, it's for this reason that we know contact comes from name and form. 'Contact exists conditioned by name and form.' That's the meaning of what I said.

55. "Ananda, 'name and form exist conditioned by consciousness.' What does this mean? Suppose that consciousness didn't enter the mother's womb. Would there be name and form?"

"There wouldn't be."

56. "Suppose that consciousness entered the womb but didn't come out. Would there be name and form?"

"There wouldn't be."

57. "Suppose that consciousness left the womb, but the infant perished. Would name and form grow?"

"It wouldn't."

58. "Ananda, suppose there was no consciousness. Would there be name and form?"

"There wouldn't be."

59. "Ananda, it's for this reason that we know name and form comes from consciousness. 'Name and form exist conditioned by consciousness.' That's the meaning of what I said.

60. "Ananda, "'Consciousness exists conditioned by name and form.' What does this mean? If consciousness didn't abide in name and form, then consciousness would have nowhere to reside. If it had nowhere to reside, would there be birth, old age, illness, death, grief, sorrow, pain, and trouble?"

"There wouldn't be."

61. "Ananda, if there were no name and form, would there be consciousness?"

"There wouldn't be."

62. "Ananda, it's for this reason that we know consciousness comes from name and form. 'Consciousness exists conditioned by name and form.' That's the meaning of what I said.

63. "Therefore, Ananda, name and form conditions consciousness. Consciousness conditions name and form. Name and form conditions the six sense fields. The six sense fields condition contact. Contact conditions feeling. Feeling conditions craving. Craving conditions grasping. Grasping conditions existence. Existence conditions birth. Birth conditions old age, death, grief, sorrow, pain, and trouble, which forms the great mass of suffering.

Liberation by Wisdom

64. "Ananda, this is the extent of language, the extent of answers, the extent of limits, the extent of explanations, the extent of wise observation, and the extent of sentient beings.

65. "Ananda, when monks truly and correctly observe this [series of] principles, their minds will be uncontaminated and liberated. Ananda, these monks should be called 'those liberated by wisdom.' Such a liberated monk also knows that the Tathagata has an end, knows that the Tathagata doesn't have an end, knows that the Tathagata has and doesn't have an end, and knows that the Tathagata neither has nor doesn't have an end. Why?

66. "Ananda, this is the extent of language, the extent of answers, the extent of limits, the extent of explanations, the extent of wise observation, and the extent of sentient beings. Thus, having fully known it, a liberated monk whose mind is uncontaminated doesn't know or see such knowing and seeing [of those four alternatives].

The View That Feeling Is Self

67. "Ananda, how many views are there that postulate a self? Name and form and feeling are both taken to be the self.

68. "Some people say, 'Feeling is not self, but the self is feeling.' Others say, 'Feeling is not self, the self is not feeling, but what feels is the self.' Others say, 'Feeling is not self, the self is not feeling, and what feels is not self. Only craving [for feeling] is the self.'

69. "Ananda, someone who has a view of self and says that feeling is self should be told, 'The Tathagata teaches that there are three feelings: Pleasant feelings, painful feelings, and feelings that are neither pleasant nor painful. When there's pleasant feeling, there isn't any feeling that's painful or neither pleasant nor painful. When there's painful feeling, there isn't any feeling that's pleasant or neither pleasant nor painful. When there's feeling that's neither pleasant nor painful, there isn't any feeling that's painful or pleasant.'

70. "Why is that? Ananda, pleasant contact is the condition that gives rise to pleasant feeling. If pleasant contact ceases, the feeling also ceases. Ananda, painful contact is the condition that gives rise to painful feeling. If painful contact ceases, the feeling also ceases. Contact that's neither pleasant nor painful is the condition that gives rise to feeling that's neither pleasant nor painful. If contact that's neither pleasant nor painful ceases, the feeling also ceases.

71. "Ananda, it's like rubbing a pair of sticks together to start a fire. When each stick is put in a different place, there won't be any fire. This is likewise. Because of the condition of pleasant contact, pleasant feeling arises. If pleasant contact ceases, both it and the feeling cease. Because of the condition of painful contact, painful feeling arises. If painful contact ceases, both it and the feeling cease. Because of the condition of contact that's neither pleasant nor painful, feeling that's neither pleasant nor painful arises. If contact that's neither pleasant nor painful ceases, both it and the feeling cease.

72. "Ananda, these three feelings are created and impermanent. They are things that arise from causes and conditions, that end, that cease, and that disintegrate. When truly examined with right knowledge, they are not possessed by self, and the self isn't possessed by them. Ananda, the view that takes feeling to be the self is incorrect.

The View That Self Is Feeling

73. "Ananda, some have a view of self and say feeling is not self, but self is feeling. They should be told, 'The Tathagata teaches that there are three feelings: Painful feeling, pleasant feeling, and feeling that's neither pleasant nor painful. If pleasant feeling were the self, then there would be a second self when that pleasant feeling ceases. This then is in error. If painful feeling were the self, then there would be a second self when that painful feeling ceases. This then is in error. If feeling that's neither pleasant nor painful were the self, then there would be a second self when that feeling that's neither pleasant nor painful ceases. This then is in error.' Ananda, some have a view of a self that says feeling is not self, but self is feeling. It's not correct.

The View That Self Is What Feels

74. Ananda, some who postulate a self make this statement: 'Feeling is not self, and the self is not feeling, but what feels is the self.' They should be told, 'If everything is without feeling, how can you say there's something that feels? Are you the thing that feels?' The answer would be, 'No.'

75. "Therefore, Ananda, some postulate a self and say feeling is not self, and self is not feeling, but what feels is self. They are incorrect.

The View That Craving Is Self

76. "Ananda, some postulate a self and make this claim, 'Feel is not self, the self is not feeling, and what feels is not self. Only the craving is the self.' They should be told, 'If everything is without feeling, how would there be craving? Are you this craving?' The answer would be, 'No.'

77. "Therefore, Ananda, some postulate a self and say feeling is not self, the self is not feeling, and what feels is not self, but craving is self. They are incorrect.

78. "Ananda, this is the extent of language, the extent of answers, the extent of limits, the extent of explanations, the extent of wise observation, and the extent of sentient beings.

79. "Ananda, when monks truly and correctly observe this [series of] principles, their minds will be uncontaminated and liberated. Ananda, these monks should be called 'those liberated by wisdom.' Such a liberated monk will know the existence of the self, the non-existence of the self, both the existence and non-existence of the self, and neither the existence nor non-existence of the self. Why?

80. "Ananda, this is the extent of language, the extent of answers, the extent of limits, the extent of explanations, the extent of wise observation, and the extent of sentient beings. Thus, having fully known it, a liberated monk whose mind is uncontaminated doesn't know or see such knowing and seeing [of those four alternatives]."

Views That Self Is Form and Formless

81. The Buddha told Ananda, "Some who postulate a self have reached the extent of certainty. Postulating a self, they might say, 'Self is a little bit of form.' They might say, 'Self is a large amount of form.' They might say, 'Self is something little and formless.' They might say, 'Self is something large and formless.'

82. "Ananda, those who say self is a little bit of form are certain that the self is a little bit of form: 'This is my view of it; anything else is incorrect.' [Those who say] the self is a large amount of form are certain that the self is a large amount of form: 'This is my view of it; anything else is incorrect.' [Those who say] the self is something little and formless are certain the self is something little and formless: 'This is my view of it; anything else is incorrect.' [Those who say] the self is something large and formless are certain the self is something large and formless: 'This is my view of it; anything else is incorrect.'"

The Seven Abodes of Consciousness

83. The Buddha told Ananda, "There are seven abodes of consciousness and two spheres. Ascetics and priests say, 'These abodes are peaceful, saving, protecting, sheltering, lamps, lights, refuges, not false, and not afflicting.' What are the seven?

84. "Some sentient beings have diverse bodies and diverse notions. These gods and humans are the first abode of consciousness. Ascetics and priests say, 'This abode is peaceful, saving, protecting, sheltering, a lamp, a light, a refuge, not false, and not afflicting.'

85. "Ananda, suppose that a monk knows the first abode of consciousness and knows its formation, cessation, enjoyment, trouble, and escape. Truly knowing it, Ananda, that monk would say, 'Truly knowing and seeing it, that's not self, and the self isn't that.'

86. "Some sentient beings have diverse bodies but the same notions. They are Brahmas of the Abhasvara Heaven … Some sentient beings have the same body but diverse notions. They are in the Abhasvara Heaven … Some sentient beings have the same body and the same notions. They are in the Subhakrtsna Heaven … Some sentient beings reside in the abode of space … Some sentient beings reside in the abode of consciousness … Some sentient beings reside in the abode of nothingness. This is the seventh abode of consciousness. Some ascetics and priests say, 'This abode is peaceful, saving, protecting, sheltering, a lamp, a light, a refuge, not false, and not afflicting.'

87. "Ananda, suppose that a monk knows the seventh abode of consciousness and knows its formation, cessation, enjoyment, trouble, and escape. Truly knowing it, Ananda, that monk would say, 'Truly knowing and seeing it, that's not self, and the self isn't that.' These are the seven abodes of consciousness.

The Two Sensory Abodes

88. "What are the two sensory abodes? They are the sense that's without conception and sense that's neither with nor without conception … These are the two sensory abodes, Ananda. Some ascetics and priests say, 'This abode is peaceful, saving, protecting, sheltering, a lamp, a light, a refuge, not false, and not afflicting.'

89. "Ananda, suppose that a monk knows the two sensory abodes and knows their formation, cessation, enjoyment, trouble, and escape. Truly knowing and seeing them, Ananda, that monk would say, 'Truly knowing and seeing it, that's not self, and the self isn't that.' These are the two senses.

The Eight Liberations

90. "Ananda, there are also eight liberations. What are the eight? Form observed as form is the first liberation. Observing form externally without an internal perception of form is the second liberation. The liberation of purity is the third liberation. Going beyond notions of form, ceasing notions of resistance, not attending to diverse notions, and abiding in the abode of space is the fourth liberation. Going beyond the abode of space and abiding in the abode of consciousness is the fifth liberation. Going beyond the abode of consciousness and abiding in the abode of nothingness is the sixth liberation. Going beyond the abode of nothingness and abiding in the abode of with and without conception is the seventh liberation. The samadhi of complete cessation is the eighth liberation.

91. "Ananda, monks who traverse these eight liberations forward and backward, entering and exiting them at will, are monks who've attained liberation in both ways."

92. When Ananda heard what the Buddha taught, he rejoiced and approved.

DA 14 QUESTIONS ASKED BY SAKRA THE LORD OF GODS

(Parallels for this sutra include DN 21, MA 134, T15, and T203.73.)

(The lord of the Trayastrimsa Heaven decides to pay a visit to the Buddha. He sends a gandharva named Pancasikha ahead of his host of gods to greet the Buddha and play music as an offering. After reminiscing about past memories, Sakra asks the Buddha a series of questions about the path to cessation and resolves to become a once-returner. This sutra has the distinction of including a love song sung by a gandharva with a crush on a goddess.)

1. Thus I have heard: One time, the Buddha was staying north of the village of Ambara of Magadha in the Indrasala cave on Mount Vaidehaka.

Lord Sakra Visits the Buddha

2. It was then that Sakra the Lord of Gods had a wonderful thought to come and see the Buddha: "Now, I will go to the Bhagavan!"

3. When the Trayastrimsa gods heard that Sakra the Lord of Gods had a wonderful thought to visit the Buddha, they immediately went to Lord Sakra and said, "Excellent, Lord Sakra! You've had a wonderful thought to visit the Tathagata. We'd also like to go with you to visit the Bhagavan."

4. Sakra the Lord of Gods then told the gandharva Pancasikha, "Now, I'm going to visit the Bhagavan. You can come with me and these Trayastrimsa gods to visit the Buddha."

5. Pancasikha replied, "Very well." Then Pancasikha took his cymophane lute and strummed it at the front of that assembly of Trayastrimsa gods as an offering.

6. Sakra the Lord of Gods, the Trayastrimsa gods, and Pancasikha then suddenly disappeared from up in the Dharma [Meeting] Hall. In the time it takes a strong man to flex his arm, they arrived on Mount Vaidehaka in the north of Magadha.

7. At the time, the Bhagavan had entered the samadhi of blazing fire, and Mount Vaidehaka looked like one giant flame. The people in the countryside saw its appearance and said, "Mount Vaidehaka looks like one giant flame. Is this due to the power of gods that are arriving?"

8. Sakra the Lord of Gods told Pancasikha, "The Tathagata, the Arhat, is so hard to see, but we can go down to this place of seclusion that's quiet without voices, where the animals gather. There, the Bhagavan is constantly attended to by great spirits and gods. You can take the lead and play music with your cymophane lute to delight the Bhagavan. I and the gods will be right behind you!"

9. Pancasikha replied, "Very well." He did as he was instructed, going first to visit the Bhagavan with his cymophane lute in hand. When he was not far away from the Buddha, he played his lute and sang these lyrics:

• "Bhadra, I bow to your father;
Your father is so dignified!
I'm so lucky you were born,
My heart desires you so much!
• For some reason in the past,
The desire to be born here arose in you.
It developed and grew larger,
Like an offering to an arhat!
• The Sakyan son focused on four dhyanas,
Always happy living in seclusion.
He pursued immortality with the right attitude;
My thoughts are focused in the same way!
• Sakyamuni set his heart on enlightenment,
Sure he'd achieve correct awakening.
Now, if I were to pursue that woman,
I'd be sure to join with her, too!
• My heart is stained by attachment;
I haven't renounced the love of beauty.
I'd like to renounce it, but I can't,
I'm like an elephant led by a hook.
• It's like a cool wind when it's hot,
Like finding a cool spring when thirsty,
Like someone choosing Nirvana,
Or like water dousing a fire.
• It's like someone sick finding a doctor
Or a starving person getting a fine meal.
They're filled with happiness
Like an arhat enjoying the Dharma.
• It's like an elephant that's hooked deeply
But still refuses to submit.
Charging around and hard to control,
The reckless don't stop themselves.
• It's like a refreshing lake
Covered by assorted water lilies.
Hot and tired elephants bathe there,
Cooling off their whole bodies.
• I'll give gifts, one after another,
As support for the arhats.
This world's rewards for such merit
Will all be given as gifts to her.
• When you die, I'll die with you.
How could I live on with you gone?
I would rather die myself;
It's impossible to exist without you.
• Lord of the Trayastrimsa Heaven!
Sakra, grant me my wish now!
You've an honorable character;
You'll consider it well."

10. The Bhagavan then roused from his samadhi and told Pancasikha, "Good, Pancasikha, good! You're able to praise the Tathagata with your clear voice and harmonious cymophane lute. The sound of both your lute and voice are neither long or short. Their compassion and gracefulness moves people's hearts. Your song is replete with many meanings and explains the bonds of desire, the religious life, the ascetic, and Nirvana!"

11. Pancasikha then said to the Buddha, "I remember when the Bhagavan became a Buddha sitting beneath the Ajapala Nigrodha tree on the bank of the Nairanjana River in Uruvilva. The great god general's son Sikhaddi and the gandharva king's daughter had a rendezvous just to enjoy themselves. I saw the way they were feeling at the time and composed this song. The lyrics explain the bond of desire, and they explain the religious life, the ascetic, and Nirvana.

12. "After she heard my song, the goddess raised her eyes, smiled, and said to me, 'Pancasikha, I've never seen a Tathagata, but I heard the other gods in the Trayastrimsa Dharma Meeting Hall praising the virtues and abilities possessed by the Tathagata. You've always been faithful and close to the Tathagata. I think I'd like to be friends with you.' Bhagavan, after speaking with her that one time, I never spoke with her again."

13. Sakra the Lord of Gods then had this thought, "Now that Pancasikha has finished playing his music, I'd better keep him in mind." Lord Sakra then remembered him.

14. Pancasikha again thought, "Now Lord Sakra will remember me!" He then took his cymophane lute and went to Lord Sakra.

15. Lord Sakra told him, "Praise the intent of the Trayastrimsa gods in my name. Go exchange these greetings with the Bhagavan, 'Has your daily life been easy? Are you in good health?'"

16. Pancasikha accepted Lord Sakra's instructions and went to the Bhagavan. He bowed his head at his feet and stood to one side. He said to the Bhagavan, "Sakra the Lord of Gods and the Trayastrimsa gods have sent me to exchange greetings with the Bhagavan: 'Has your daily life been easy? Are you in good health?'"

The Bhagavan replied, "May you, Lord Sakra, and the Trayastrimsa gods have long, happy, and untroubled lives. Why is that? The hosts of gods, worldly people, and asuras are all cherish their life spans, happiness, and lack of trouble."

17. Lord Sakra again thought, "We ought to approach the Bhagavan and bow to him." He then went to the Bhagavan with the Trayastrimsa gods. They bowed at the Buddha's feet and withdrew to stand to one side. Lord Sakra then said to the Buddha, "Don't mind us, Bhagavan. Should we sit nearby or at a distance?" The Buddha told Lord Sakra, "Your host of gods is large, but they can sit nearby."

18. The Bhagavan then made the Indrasala Cave enlarge itself so that none of them were obstructed by it. Lord Sakra, the Trayastrimsa gods, and Pancasikha all bowed at the Buddha's feet and sat to one side.

The Story of Gopaka and the Disciples

19. Lord Sakra said to the Buddha, "One time, the Buddha was staying at a priest's residence in Sravasti. At the time, the Bhagavan had entered the samadhi of blazing fire. For some reason, I was riding my thousand-spoked treasure chariot to visit Virudhaka. As I went by in the sky, I saw a goddess standing with her palms together in front of the Bhagavan. I immediately said to that goddess, 'If the Bhagavan rouses from samadhi, you should exchange these greetings with the Bhagavan in my name: "Has your daily life been easy? Are you in good health?"' I wondered later if she had conveyed this thought for me. Bhagavan, do you recall if she did?"

20. The Buddha said, "I do remember it. That goddess immediately put the question to me with her goddess's voice, and I roused from samadhi. It was like the sound of a woman's chariot."

21. Lord Sakra said to the Buddha, "In the past, I held a meeting for some reason with the Trayastrimsa gods in the Dharma [Meeting] Hall. Those gods back then had said, 'If a Tathagata arises in the world, the host of gods will increase and the host of asuras will diminish!' Now that I see the Bhagavan in person, I personally see and know it myself. I've realized it myself: 'The Tathagata, the Arhat, has arisen in the world, and the host of gods are increasing, and the host of asuras are diminishing!'

22. "Here, there was the Sakyan woman Gopika who had purely cultivated the Bhagavan's religious life. She was born in the Trayastrimsa Heaven's palace as my son after her body broke up and her life ended. The Trayastrimsa gods all praised him, 'The great godling Gopaka has great virtue and majesty!'

23. "There were another three monks who had purely cultivated the Bhagavan's religious life. They were born as inferior gandharva spirits after their bodies broke up and their lives ended. Every day, they came to serve us as messengers. When Gopaka saw them, he harassed them with these verses:

• "'Were you disciples of the Buddha
When I was living at home in the past?
I gave offerings of clothing and food,
Bowing, venerating, and paying respect.
• What were your human names when you
Personally received the Buddha's teaching?
Those teachings were of pure vision,
But there's something you didn't observe.
• In the past, I paid respects to you
And heard the higher Dharma from the Buddha.
When born in the Trayastrimsa Heaven,
I became Lord Sakra's son.
• What didn't you observe?
The virtues that I had possessed.
Formerly of a woman's body,
Now I'm Lord Sakra's son.
• All of you were together in the past,
Cultivating the same religious life.
Now, you are alone in inferior places,
Serving all of us here as messengers.
• In the past, you hid bad conduct,
So now you've gotten this reward.
You are alone in inferior places,
Serving all of us here as messengers.
• You're born in this impure place,
That for others is an insult.
Hearing that will trouble you,
For this place of yours is troublesome.
• If you're diligent from now on,
You won't become servants again!'
Two of them diligently made effort,
Thinking of the Tathagata's Dharma.
• Discarding their attachments,
They observed: 'Desire is impure conduct.
The bond of desire isn't real;
It tricks the people of the world.'
• Like elephants free of leg bonds,
They leapt to the Trayastrimsa Heaven
While Sakra and the Trayastrimsa gods
Gathered up in the Dharma Meeting Hall.
• They were courageous and strong,
Leaping to the Trayastrimsa Heaven.
Sakra lauded them as never before,
And the gods also saw them pass away:
• 'These are the Sakya disciples
Who leapt to the Trayastrimsa Heaven!
They tired of being fettered by desire.'
[Gopaka] spoke these words:
• 'There's a Buddha in Magadha
Whose name is Sakyamuni.
Those disciples were disappointing,
But later regained their mindfulness.
• One person out of these three
Therefore became a gandharva.
The other two saw the truth of the path
And leapt to the Trayastrimsa Heaven.
• The Dharma the Bhagavan teaches
Isn't doubted by these disciples.
They heard the same Dharma together,
But two of them were better than one.
• Their vision being much better,
They were born as Abhasvara gods.
When I observed them,
They were going to the Buddha.'"

The Origin of Enmity and Conflict

26. Lord Sakra said to the Buddha, "If you have a moment, I would like to clarify a doubt of mine."

The Buddha said, "Go ahead and ask your questions. I will explain them for you, one by one."

27. Lord Sakra then asked the Buddha, "What bonds do gods, worldly men, gandharvas, asuras, and other sentient beings all associate with that they become enemies and take up arms against each other?"

The Buddha told Sakra, "The arising of the bond of enmity has its origin in greed and jealousy. Therefore, it leads gods, worldly people, asuras, and other sentient beings to take up arms against one another."

28. Lord Sakra then said to the Buddha, "Indeed, it is, Bhagavan! The arising of the bond of enmity has its origin in greed and jealousy. Therefore, it leads gods, worldly people, asuras, and other sentient beings to take up arms against one another. Now that I've heard the Buddha's explanation, a snare of doubt has been removed. I won't wonder about it anymore.

29. "But I don't understand the arising of this greed and jealousy. Where do they come from? What are their causes and conditions? What's their source? From what do they come to exist? From what do they cease to exist?"

The Buddha told Lord Sakra, "The arising of greed and jealousy have their origin in love and hate. Love and hate are their causes and conditions. Love and hate are their source. From them, they come to exist. In their absence, they cease to exist."

30. Lord Sakra then said to the Buddha, "Indeed, it is, Bhagavan! The arising of greed and jealousy have their origin in love and hate. Love and hate are their causes and conditions. Love and hate are their source. From them, they come to exist. In their absence, they cease to exist. Now that I've heard the Buddha's explanation, my confusion is completely removed. I won't wonder about it anymore.

31. "But I don't understand the arising of love and hate. What are their causes and conditions? What is their source? From what do they come to exist? From what do they cease to exist?"

The Buddha told Lord Sakra, "The arising of love and hate has its origin in desire. Desire is their cause and condition. Desire is their source. From this, they come to exist. In its absence, they cease to exist."

32. Lord Sakra then said to the Buddha, "Indeed, it is, Bhagavan! The arising of love and hate has its origin in desire. Desire is their cause and condition. Desire is their source. From this, they come to exist. In its absence, they cease to exist. Now that I've heard the Buddha's explanation, my confusion is completely removed. I won't wonder about it anymore.

33. "But I don't understand the arising of desire. What are its causes and conditions? What is its source? From what does it come to exist? From what does it cease to exist?"

The Buddha told Lord Sakra, "Craving arises from conception. Conception is its cause and condition. Conception is its source. From this, it comes to exist. In its absence, it ceases to exist."

34. Lord Sakra then said to the Buddha, "Indeed, it is, Bhagavan! Craving arises from conception. Conception is its cause and condition. Conception is its source. From this, it comes to exist. In its absence, it ceases to exist. Now that I've heard the Buddha's explanation[, my confusion is completely removed.] I won't wonder about it anymore.

35. "But I don't understand the arising of conception. What is its cause and condition? What it its source? From what does it come to exist? From what does it cease to exist?"

36. The Buddha told Lord Sakra, "The conception that gives rise to it has its origin in error. Error is its cause and condition. Error is its source. From this, it comes to exist. In its absence, it ceases to exist.

37. "Sakra, if there's no error, then there's no conception. Without conception, there's no desire. Without desire, there's no love or hate. Without love or hate, there's no greed or jealousy. If there's no greed and jealousy, then sentient beings wouldn't hurt each other.

38. "Sakra, it's only the condition of error that's the root of this. Error is its cause and condition. Error is its source. From this, there is conception. From conception, there is desire. From desire, there is love and hate. From love and hate, there is greed and jealousy. Because of greed and jealousy, sentient beings are led to hurt each other."

39. Lord Sakra then said to the Buddha, "Indeed, it is, Bhagavan! Error is the origin of conception. Error is its cause and condition. Error is its source. From this, there is conception. Error is the origin of its existence. In the absence of error, it ceases to exist.

40. "If there were no error in the first place, then there wouldn't be conception. Without conception, there wouldn't be desire. Without desire, there wouldn't be love and hate. Without love and hate, there wouldn't be greed and jealousy. If there were no greed and jealousy, then sentient beings wouldn't hurt each other.

41. "It's only because of error that conception arises. Error is its cause and condition. Error is its source. From this, there is conception. From conception, there is desire. From desire, there is love and hate. From love and hate, there is greed and jealousy. It's because of greed and jealousy that all sentient beings are led to hurt each other. Now that I've heard the Buddha's explanation, my confusion is completely removed. I won't wonder about it anymore."

The Nature of Error

42. Lord Sakra again asked the Buddha, "Do all the ascetics and priests on the path to cessation completely eliminate error, or is error not eliminated on the path to cessation?"

The Buddha addressed Lord Sakra, "Not all the ascetics and the priests on the path of cessation completely eliminate error. Why is this? Lord Sakra, the world has a variety of realms, and sentient beings depend on their own realms, firmly defending them. They aren't able to abandon them. They say, 'Mine is true; the rest is false.' Therefore, Lord Sakra, not all the ascetics and priests on the path to cessation entirely eliminate error."

43. Lord Sakra then said to the Buddha, "Indeed, it is, Bhagavan! The world has a variety of sentient beings, and each depends on their own realm, firmly defending it. They aren't able to abandon them. They say, 'Mine is true; the rest is false.' Therefore, not all the ascetics and priests on the path to cessation entirely eliminate error. Hearing the Buddha's words, my confusion is completely eliminated. I won't wonder about it anymore."

44. Lord Sakra again asked the Buddha, "How many kinds of error are there on the path to cessation?"

45. The Buddha told Lord Sakra, "There are three kinds of error: First is speech, second are concepts, and third are pursuits. Speech is words that harm oneself, harm others, and harm both oneself and others. When these words are abandoned, one's words don't harm oneself, don't harm others, and don't harm both oneself and others. When that's known, a monk's words are such that he focuses his attention and isn't distracted.

46. [Some] concepts also harm oneself, harm others, and harm both oneself and others. Abandoning these concepts, one's conception is such that it doesn't harm oneself, don't harm others, and don't harm oneself and others. When he knows this, the monk's conception is such that he focuses his attention and isn't distracted.

47. "Lord Sakra, pursuits also harm oneself, harm others, and harm both oneself and others. Abandoning these pursuits, one's pursuits are such that they don't harm oneself, don't harm others, and don't harm both oneself and others. When he knows this, the monk's pursuits are such that he focuses his attention and isn't distracted."

48. Sakra the Lord of Gods then said, "Having heard the Buddha's explanation, I won't wonder about this anymore."

Noble Detachment

49. He also asked the Buddha, "How many kinds of noble detachment are there?"

50. The Buddha addressed Lord Sakra, "There are three kinds of detachment. One is the body of joy, second is the body of sorrow, and third is the body of equanimity. Lord Sakra, that body of joy harms oneself, harms others, and harms both oneself and others. After becoming detached from this joy, such joy as that doesn't harm oneself, doesn't harm others, and doesn't harm both oneself and others. When he knows this, the monk focuses his attention and doesn't lose it. That's called accepting the complete precepts.

51. "Lord Sakra, that body of sorrow harms oneself, harms others, and harms both oneself and others. After becoming detached from this sorrow, such sorrow as that doesn't harm oneself, doesn't harm others, and doesn't harm oneself and others. When he knows this, the monk focuses his attention and doesn't lose it. That's called accepting the complete precepts.

52. "Furthermore, Lord Sakra, that body of equanimity harms oneself, harms others, and harms both oneself and others. After becoming detached from this equanimity, such equanimity as that doesn't harm oneself, doesn't harm others, and doesn't harm both oneself and others. When he knows this, the monk focuses his attention and doesn't lose it. That's called accepting the complete precepts."

53. Lord Sakra said to the Buddha, "Having heard the Buddha's explanation, I won't wonder about this anymore."

Perfection of the Sense Faculties

54. He also asked the Buddha, "How many things are called 'the noble Vinaya's perfection of the faculties'?"

55. The Buddha told Lord Sakra, "The eye perceives form, which I say are of two kinds: approachable and unapproachable. The ear … sounds … nose … odors … tongue … flavors … body … touches … mind … notions, which I say are of two kinds: approachable and unapproachable."

56. Lord Sakra said to the Buddha, "Bhagavan, without a detailed discernment of this concise statement by the Tathagata, I don't fully understand, 'The eye perceives form, which I say are of two kinds: approachable and unapproachable. The ear … sounds … nose … odors … tongue … flavors … body … touches … mind … notions, which I say are of two kinds: approachable and unapproachable.'

57. "Bhagavan, when skillful qualities decrease and unskillful qualities increase as the eye observes forms, I would say this is the same as the eye perceiving forms that are unapproachable. When skillful qualities decrease and unskillful qualities increase as the ear … sounds … nose … odors … tongue … flavors … body … touches … mind … notions, I would say they are unapproachable.

58. "Bhagavan, when skillful qualities increase and unskillful qualities decrease as the eye sees form, I would say this is the same as the eye perceiving forms are that approachable. When skillful qualities increase and unskillful qualities decrease as the ear … sounds … nose … odors … tongue … flavors … body … touches … mind … notions, I would say they are approachable."

59. The Buddha told Lord Sakra, "Good, good! This is called 'the noble Vinaya's perfection of the faculties'."

60. Lord Sakra said to the Buddha, "Hearing the Buddha's explanation, I won't wonder about this anymore."

The Ultimate Goal

61. Again, he asked the Buddha, "How many things does a monk call 'the ultimate goal, the ultimate goal of the religious life, the ultimate goal of peace, and the ultimate goal that has no remainder'?"

The Buddha told Lord Sakra, "To personally extinguish the suffering caused by craving is the ultimate goal, the ultimate goal of the religious life, the ultimate goal peace, and the ultimate goal without remainder."

62. Lord Sakra said to the Buddha, "In the long night of the past, I was caught in a snare of doubt. Now, the Buddha has released me from that doubt."

The Buddha Questions Lord Sakra

63. The Buddha told Lord Sakra, "Haven't you visited ascetics and priests to ask about this subject?"

64. Lord Sakra said to the Buddha, "I remember that once I visited an ascetic or priest to inquire about this subject. One time, I and the assembly of gods had gathered in the meeting hall and discussed 'Will a Tathagata arise in the world? Has he arisen yet?'

65. "We looked for him, but we didn't see a Tathagata that had arisen in the world. Each of us returned to the palace and entertained ourselves with the five desires. Bhagavan, after that I watched the great spirits and gods freely partake of the five desires, and gradually each of their lives ended.

66. "At that point, Bhagavan, I felt great apprehension, and my hair stood on end. Then I saw an ascetic or priest dwelling in quietude who had left home and parted with desire. I went quickly to him and asked, 'What is called the ultimate goal?'

67. "I asked about this subject, but he couldn't answer me. Since he didn't know, he countered by asking me, 'Who are you?'

"I immediately replied, 'I am Sakra the Lord of Gods.'

68. "Again, he asked, 'How are you Sakra?'

"I then answered, 'I am the Lord God Sakra. I have a doubt in my mind, so I came here to ask you about it.'

69. "Then the two of us came to an understanding, discussing the meaning of being Sakra. He would ask, I would answer, and then he would become my disciple. But I'm a disciple of the Buddha, and I've attained the path of stream entry. I won't fall to other destinies, and I'll surely achieve the fruit of the path in not more than seven rebirths. Please, Bhagavan, describe to me how to become a once-returner!"

70. After describing this conversation, Sakra also spoke these verses:

• "From that defiled notion,
My misgivings arose as a result.
During the long night with the gods,
We went looking for the Tathagata.
• Meeting the renunciants
Always dwelling in quietude,
I said, 'This is the Buddha, the Bhagavan!'
Going and bowing to them, I asked:
• 'I've come to ask a question,
"What is the ultimate goal?"'
Asked that, they can't answer
About the destination of the path.
• This unequalled sage today
Is who I've been seeking for so long.
Already, I've investigated my conduct;
My mind is thinking correctly!
• Indeed, the noble one already knew
The intentions in my mind;
I've cultivated them during the long night.
Please describe it with the pure eye!
• Homage to the highest of humans,
The incomparable sage of three realms!
Cutting the thorns of attachment and craving,
I bow to the sunlight of the sage!"

71. The Buddha asked Lord Sakra, "Do you recall a time in the past when you felt joy and happiness?"

Lord Sakra answered, "Yes, Bhagavan, I recall a time in the past when I felt joy and happiness. Bhagavan, it was when once I did battle with the asuras, and they retreated when I was victorious. When I returned, I rejoiced and was happy. I imagined that joy and happiness to be separate from the defiled joy and happiness of evil weapons or battle, but now I've attained joy and happiness from the Buddha, which lacks any of the pleasures of weaponry and conflict."

72. The Buddha told Lord Sakra, "Now that you've experienced this joy and happiness, what fruits of virtue are you going to pursue?"

Lord Sakra said to the Buddha, "From that joy and happiness, I'm going to pursue five fruits of virtue. What are the five?"

73. He then spoke in verse:

• "After the end of my life
When I discard this life in heaven,
Dwelling in a womb untroubled
Will make me feel glad.
• The Buddha saves those yet to be saved;
He teaches the correct and true path.
In the Completely Awakened One's teaching,
I'll need to cultivate the religious life.
• I will personally live with wisdom;
My heart's view will be the right truth.
I'll comprehend what arose in the past;
Here, I'll be liberated for a long time.
• I'll just cultivate the practice diligently;
I'll develop the Buddha's real knowledge.
Even if I don't obtain realization of the path,
The virtue will still be of a higher heaven.
• There are gods of sublime heavens
Such as those in Akanistha;
When I reach my last incarnation,
It'll surely be in those places.
• Now, I'm here in this place,
Having gotten a heavenly pure body.
But I'll obtain a longer life,
I know it myself using the pure eye."

74. After speaking these verses, he said to the Buddha, "I want to obtain the fruits of these five virtues from this joy and happiness."

Conclusion

75. Lord Sakra then said to the Trayastrimsa gods, "You've venerated in front of Brahma Kumara above the Trayastrimsa heaven before. Wouldn't it be excellent to also venerate in front of the Buddha?"

76. Soon after he said this, Brahma Kumara instantly appeared standing in the sky above the host of gods. He spoke this verse to Lord Sakra:

• "The god king's practice is pure;
It blesses many sentient beings.
Lord Sakra of Magadha
Asked the Tathagata about his meaning."

77. After saying this verse, Brahma Kumara instantly disappeared. Lord Sakra then rose from his seat, bowed at the Buddha's feet, circled him three times, withdrew, and walked away. The Trayastrimsa gods and Pancasikha also bowed at the Buddha's feet, withdrew, and walked away.

78. After they walked a little while, Lord Sakra looked over to Pancasikha and said, "Good, good! Earlier, you went to the Buddha first and played music by strumming your lute, then later I and the gods arrived behind you. Now I know you will succeed your father's place as the highest of gandharvas. You shall marry Bhadra, the gandharva king's daughter!"

79. When the Bhagavan spoke this teaching, 84,000 gods had their dust and defilements removed, and the Dharma vision arose in them.

80. When Sakra the Lord of Gods, the Trayastrimsa gods, and Pancasikha heard what the Buddha taught, they rejoiced and approved.

DA 15 ANOMIYA

(DN 24) [T 1.66a10]

(Parallels for this sutra include DN 24 and a few Sanskrit fragments.)

(At Anomiya (P. Anupiya), the Buddha decides to pay a visit to a wanderer, who tells him about an encounter he had with a former Buddhist monk. The Buddha recounts for him a number of stories about that monk, explaining his stubborn unwillingness to trust the Buddha's instruction. The sutra develops from there into a dramatic comedy, culminating in a story of a wanderer who challenges the Buddha to a duel of miracle-working but can't seem to show up for the event. At the end, the Buddha addresses a series of wrong views held by non-Buddhists about the origin of the world and sentient beings.)

1. Thus I have heard: One time, the Buddha was staying in the land of Anomiya of Maineya. He was accompanied by a large assembly of 1,250 monks.

Why Sunaksatra Returned to the Lay Life

2. It was then that the Bhagavan put on his robe and took his bowl into the city of Anomiya to solicit alms. The Bhagavan then silently thought, "It's too early in the day to solicit alms now. It would be better to visit the Wanderer Bhargava's park. I'll solicit alms when it's the right time for a monk to do so."

3. The Bhagavan then went to that park. The wanderer there saw the Buddha coming from a distance, got up to meet him respectfully, and exchanged greetings with him. "Welcome, Gautama! It's been a while since you've been here. What brings you to visit me? Please, Gautama, make yourself a seat here!" The Bhagavan then prepared a seat for himself.

4. The wanderer sat to one side and said to the Bhagavan, "Last night, the Licchavi monk Sunaksatra visited me. He said, 'Great teacher, I'm not practicing the religious life under the Buddha. Why is that? The Buddha is estranged from me.' That man openly spoke of you as mistaken, though I didn't accept it on his word."

5. The Buddha told the wanderer, "I knew you wouldn't accept what Sunaksatra says. Once when I was staying near Monkey Lake of Vaisali, there was a meeting in the Dharma hall. This Sunaksatra came to me and said, 'The Tathagata is estranged from me. I won't practice the religious life under Gautama.'

6. "I asked him, 'Why do you say, "I won't practice the religious life under the Tathagata because the he is estranged from me"?'

"Sunaksatra replied to me, 'The Tathagata hasn't demonstrated miraculous abilities or miracles for me.'

7. "I said, 'Did I ask that you to purely cultivate the religious life according to my teaching if I demonstrate my miraculous abilities for you? Did you say to me, "I will practice the religious life after the Tathagata demonstrates miraculous abilities and miracles for me"?'

"Sunaksatra replied, 'No, Bhagavan.'

8. "I told Sunaksatra, 'But I didn't say to you, "You practice the religious life under my teaching, and I will demonstrate miraculous abilities and miracles for you." Nor did you say, "I'll cultivate the religious life when you demonstrate miraculous abilities for me."

9. "'How is it, Sunaksatra? What do you think? Can the Tathagata demonstrate miraculous abilities, or can't he? Can one use the Dharma that I teach to escape and reach the end of suffering?'

"Sunaksatra said to me, 'Yes, Bhagavan. The Tathagata can demonstrate miraculous abilities. It's not that he can't. One can use the Dharma that he teaches to escape and reach the end of suffering. It's not that they can't.'

10. "'So, Sunaksatra, someone who cultivates the religious life under my teaching can demonstrate miraculous abilities. It's not that they can't. They can escape from suffering. It's not that they can't escape it. What do you seek from this teaching?'

"'Sunaksatra said, 'Bhagavan, you aren't able to teach me the mystery of my father at the appropriate time. The Bhagavan fully knows it, but he holds back and doesn't teach it to me.'

11. "'I said, 'Sunaksatra, did I say before, "If you practice the religious life under my teaching, I will teach you the mystery of your father?" Did you say, "Teach me the mystery of my father, and I will practice the religious life under the Buddha."'

"He answered, 'No.'

12. "'Therefore, Sunaksatra, I said none of these things before, and you said none of them. Why are you saying this now? How is it, Sunaksatra? Do you think the Tathagata can teach you the mystery of your father, or can't he? Can one use the Dharma he teaches to escape and reach the end of suffering?'

"Sunaksatra replied, 'The Tathagata can teach me the mystery of my father. It's not that he can't. One can use his Dharma to escape and reach the end of suffering. It's not that they can't.'

13. "I asked Sunaksatra, 'If I can teach you the mystery of your father, and one can use the Dharma I teach to escape from suffering, then what more do you seek from my teaching?'

14. "I also told Sunaksatra, 'Back at Vaisali in the land of the Vrji, you praised the Tathagata, the correct Dharma, and the Sangha in countless ways. It was like someone praising the eight ways that a clear pool delights people: "It's cool, light, gentle, clear, sweet, and clean. One can drink it without tire, and it refreshes the body.' You were likewise. At Vaisali in the land of the Vrji, you praised the Tathagata, the correct Dharma, and the Sangha, which made people feel confident about them.

15. "Sunaksatra, you should know that now you've reversed yourself, the world will again say, 'The monk Sunaksatra has many friends. He's close to the Bhagavan, and he's the Bhagavan's disciple, but he can't purely practice the religious life his entire life. He'll abandon the precepts and return to the lay life and inferior practices.'"

16. "Wanderer, you should know that after I had this talk with him, he didn't follow my instruction. He abandoned the precepts and returned to the lay life.

Sunaksatra and the Nirgrantha Disciple Kalara

17. "Wanderer, I was once at the Dharma meeting hall that's beside Monkey Lake. There was a Nirgrantha disciple named Kalara who had stopped there. He was respected by people, and his fame was far-reaching. He had many friends who provided him with offerings. At the time, the monk Sunaksatra had put on his robe and took his bowl into Vaisali to solicit alms. He made his way on the alms round until he met this Nirgrantha disciple.

18. "Sunaksatra then asked the Nirgrantha disciple about a profound subject. He couldn't answer and became angry. Sunaksatra thought to himself, 'I've bothered this man. Won't this lead to a result of suffering that will last a long time?'

19. "Wanderer, you should know that when the monk Sunaksatra was finished soliciting alms, he took his robe and bowl and returned to me. He bowed to my feet and sat to one side. Sunaksatra then told me about what had happened. I said to him, 'You fool! Wouldn't you rather call yourself an ascetic Sakyan disciple?'

"Sunaksatra quickly replied, 'Bhagavan, why call me a fool? Shouldn't I call myself a Sakyan disciple?'

20. "I told him, 'Fool, you've already gone and questioned that Nirgrantha disciple about a profound subject. He couldn't answer it, so he became angry. Then you thought to yourself, 'Now, I've bothered this Nirgrantha disciple. Won't this lead to a result of suffering that will last a long time?' You had that thought, didn't you?'"

"Sunaksatra said to me, 'He was an arhat. What reason was there for him to feel hateful?'

21. "I then answered, 'Fool, what reason is there for an arhat to feel hateful? No arhat of mine has hateful feelings. Now, you say yourself, 'He is an arhat.' He practices the seven kinds of asceticism, which he has upheld for a long time. What are the seven?

22. "First, one doesn't wear clothing for their entire life. Second, one doesn't drink alcohol, eat meat, or eat rice or wheat flour for their entire life. Third, one doesn't violate the religious life for their entire life. Fourth [to seventh], one doesn't go beyond the four shrines of Vaisali, which are the eastern stone shrine called Mourning Park, the southern stone shrine called Elephant, the western stone shrine called Many Children, and the northern stone shrine called Seven Copse. They do this their entire life. This makes four ascetic practices. He'll violate these seven ascetic practices and die while living outside of Vaisali.

23. "'That Nirgrantha disciple will be like a jackal weakened by a skin disease when he dies on a burial mound in a cemetery. He'll violate all his own teaching's rules. He vowed to himself, 'I won't wear clothes for my entire life,' but he'll return to wearing clothes. He vowed to himself, 'I won't drink alcohol, eat meat, or eat rice or wheat flour,' but he'll eat all of them. He vowed to himself, 'I won't violate the religious life,' but he'll violate it. He vowed, 'I won't go beyond the four shrines, the eastern Mourning Park shrine, the southern Elephant shrine, the western Many Children shrine, and the northern Seven Copse shrine.' But far from them and doesn't stay nearby. That man will contradict his own seven vows, leave the city of Vaisali, and his life will end in a cemetery.'

24. "I told Sunaksatra, 'Fool, if you don't believe what I say, go investigate it and realize it for yourself.'

25. The Buddha told the wanderer, "One day, the monk Sunaksatra put on his robe and took his bowl into the city to solicit alms. After soliciting alms, he left the city as he returned. He saw the Nirgrantha disciple's life had ended in an empty cemetery. Seeing that, he came to me, bowed his head at my feet, and sat to one side, but that wasn't what he spoke to me about.

26. "Wanderer, you should know, I said to Sunaksatra, 'How is it, Sunaksatra? Did my prediction about that Nirgrantha disciple turn out to be true?'

"He replied, 'Yes, it was as the Bhagavan said.'

27. "Wanderer, you should know, I had demonstrated evidence of my miraculous abilities to Sunaksatra, yet he said, 'The Bhagavan didn't demonstrate them for me.'

Sunaksatra and the Nirgrantha Disciple Khoradattika

28. "Another time, I was at a town of the White Land in Maineya. A Nirgrantha disciple named Khoradattika was living there at the time. He was respected by people, his fame was far-reaching, and he received many offerings. I put on my robe and took my bowl into town to solicit alms, and the monk Sunaksatra followed me. We saw the Nirgrantha disciple Khoradattika on a mound of refuse licking up coarse food.

29. "Wanderer, you should know that when the monk Sunaksatra saw this Nirgrantha disciple doing that, he thought, 'Whether or not there are arhats in the world who follow the arhat's path, this Nirgrantha disciple's path is supreme. Why is that? This man's asceticism is such that he abandons his pride and squats on a mound of refuse licking up coarse food."

30. "Wanderer, when he was walking on my right, I told Sunaksatra, 'You fool, wouldn't you rather call yourself a Sakyan disciple?'

"Sunaksatra said to me, 'Why do you call me a fool, Bhagavan? Shouldn't I call myself a Sakyan disciple?'

31. "I told Sunaksatra, 'You fool, look at this Khoradattika squatting on a mound of refuse eating coarse food. Seeing that, you thought, "Whether the world has arhats and those who follow the arhat's path, this Khoradattika is supreme. Why is that? Now, this Khoradattika's asceticism can abandon pride and squat on a mound of refuse licking up coarse food." Didn't you have that thought?'

"He answered me, 'That's true.'

32. "Sunaksatra also said, 'Why does the Bhagavan feel jealous of an arhat?'

"I told that fool, 'It's not that I feel jealous of an arhat. How could I be jealous of an arhat? You're a fool, taking that Khoradattika to be a real arhat. In seven days, that man's belly will swell up, and his life will end. He'll be born as a corporeal hungry ghost that constantly suffers from hunger and thirst. After his life ends, he'll be dragged to the cemetery with a reed cord. If you don't believe me, you can go and tell him beforehand.'

33. "Sunaksatra then visited Khoradattika and told him, 'The ascetic Gautama has predicted that in seven days your belly will swell up, and you'll die. You'll be born as a corporeal hungry ghost, and you'll be dragged to a cemetery with a reed cord after you die.'

"Sunaksatra also said, 'You should examine your food to prevent what he says from happening.'

34. "Wanderer, you should know that when seven days had passed, Khoradattika's belly swelled up, and he died. He was then born as a corporeal hungry ghost. When that corpse died, he was dragged to the cemetery with a reed cord.

35. "After Sunaksatra heard what I said, he counted the days on his fingers. When the seventh days arrived, the monk Sunaksatra went to the naked ascetic's village. Upon arriving, he asked the villagers, 'Good men, where is Khoradattika?'

"They replied, 'His life has ended.'

36. "He asked, 'What trouble caused his life to end?'

"They answered, 'His belly swelled up.'

37. "He asked, 'How was his body moved?'

"They answered, 'He was dragged to the cemetery with a reed cord.'

38. "Wanderer, when he learned that, Sunaksatra went to the cemetery. Before he reached it, that corpse moved its legs at the knee and suddenly squatted. Sunaksatra then approached the corpse and said, 'Khoradattika, has your life ended?'

"The corpse said, 'My life has ended.'

39. "He asked, 'What trouble caused your life to end?'

"The corpse answered, 'Gautama predicted that in seven days my belly would swell up, and my life would end. It was as he said. When the seventh day arrived, my belly swelled up, and my life ended.'

40. "Sunaksatra also asked, 'Where were you born?'

"The corpse replied, 'Just as Gautama predicted that I would be born among corporeal hungry ghosts, I was born today as a corporeal hungry ghost.'

41. "Sunaksatra asked, 'When your life ended, how was your body moved?'

"The corpse answered, 'Just as Gautama predicted, it was dragged to the cemetery with a reed cord. It really was as he said. I was dragged to the cemetery with a reed cord.'

42. "The corpse said to Sunaksatra, 'Even though you left home, you've gotten no good benefit from it. The ascetic Gautama predicted these events, but you constantly disbelieve him.' After saying that, the corpse laid back down.

43. "Wanderer, the monk Sunaksatra then came to me, bowed his head at my feet, and sat to one side, but that wasn't what he spoke to me about. I quickly said, 'My prediction about Khoradattika turned out to be true, didn't it?'

"He answered, 'It really was as the Bhagavan said.'

44. "Wanderer, thus did I demonstrate evidence of my miraculous abilities to the monk Sunaksatra on numerous occasions, yet he still says, 'The Bhagavan didn't demonstrate miraculous abilities for me.'"

Sunaksatra and the Wanderer Patiputra

45. The Buddha told the wanderer, "I was once in the Dharma meeting hall that's beside Monkey Lake. At the time, a wanderer named Patiputra had stopped there. He was respected by people, his fame was far-reaching, and he received many offerings. In a large crowd of Vaisalis, he made this statement: 'The ascetic Gautama says he is wise. I am wise, too. The ascetic Gautama says he has miraculous abilities. I have miraculous abilities, too. The ascetic Gautama has achieved the transcendental path. I have achieved the transcendental path, too. He and I will demonstrate miraculous abilities together. The ascetic will demonstrate one ability, and then I will demonstrate two. When the ascetic demonstrates two, I will demonstrate four. When the ascetic demonstrates eight, I will demonstrate 16. When the ascetic demonstrates 16, I will demonstrate 32. When the ascetic demonstrates 32, I will demonstrate 64. However many that that ascetic demonstrates, I will demonstrate twice as many.'

46. "Wanderer, when the monk Sunaksatra put on his robe and took his bowl into the city to solicit alms, he saw the wanderer Patiputra in that large crowd making this statement, 'The ascetic Gautama says he is wise. I am wise, too. The ascetic Gautama says he has miraculous abilities. I have miraculous abilities, too. The ascetic Gautama has achieved the transcendental path. I have achieved the transcendental path, too. He and I will demonstrate miraculous abilities together. The ascetic will demonstrate one ability, and then I will demonstrate two … When the ascetic demonstrates four, I will demonstrate eight … However many that that ascetic demonstrates, I will demonstrate twice as many.'

47. "After Sunaksatra had solicited alms, he came to me, bowed his head, and sat to one side. He said to me, 'In the early morning, I put on my robe and took my bowl into the city to solicit alms. I heard the Vaisali Patiputra make this statement in a large crowd: "The ascetic Gautama has great wisdom. I have great wisdom, too. The ascetic Gautama has miraculous abilities. I have miraculous abilities, too. … If the ascetic demonstrates one ability, then I will demonstrate two … However many that that ascetic demonstrates, I will demonstrate twice as many."'

48. "He came to tell me about these events. I said to Sunaksatra, 'That Patiputra didn't abandon this claim, didn't abandon this view, and didn't abandon this arrogance in a large crowd. He will never come to me. If he were to think, 'I won't abandon this claim, this view, or this arrogance, but I'll go to the ascetic Gautama,' his head would split into seven pieces. It isn't possible for such a person to come to me who doesn't abandon such a claim, view, and arrogance.'

49. "Sunaksatra said, 'Bhagavan, watch what you say! Tathagata, watch what you say!'

50. "I asked Sunaksatra, 'Why do you say, "Bhagavan, watch what you say! Tathagata, watch what you say!"'?

"Sunaksatra said, 'That Patiputra has great power and great virtue. If he were free to come here, mightn't he demonstrate that the Bhagavan is false?'

51. "I told Sunaksatra, 'Has the Tathagata said that there could be two [Buddhas]?'

"He responded, 'He hasn't.'

52. "I told Sunaksatra, 'If there couldn't be two [Buddhas], why are you saying, "Bhagavan, watch what you say! Tathagata, watch what you say!"'?

"Sunaksatra said to the Buddha, 'The Bhagavan knows and sees himself that the gods come and talk to Patiputra.'

53. "I said, 'I know for myself, and I also know because gods come and talk to me. When the great Vaisali general Ajita's body broke up and his life ended, he was born in the Trayastrimsa Heaven. He came to me and said, "The wanderer Patiputra knows no modesty and violates the precept against false speech. In a large crowd at Vaisali, he thus slandered me, 'When the great general Ajita's body broke up and his life ended, he was born as a corporeal demon.' But when my body broke up and my life ended, I was actually born in the Trayastrimsa Heaven." I already knew about Patiputra, and I knew because the gods came to tell me about him.'

"I told the fool Sunaksatra, 'If you don't believe me, then go to Vaisali and make an announcement to them that I'll visit Patiputra after I've eaten.'

54. The Buddha told the wanderer, "After the night had passed, Sunaksatra put on his robe and took his bowl into the city to solicit alms. When Sunaksatra reached the centre of Vaisali, there were many priests, ascetics, and wanderers. He told them all this, 'The wanderer Patiputra has made this claim in a large crowd: "The ascetic Gautama has great wisdom. I have great wisdom, too. The ascetic Gautama has great power. I have great power, too. The ascetic Gautama has great miraculous abilities. I have great miraculous abilities, too … The ascetic will demonstrate one ability, and then I will demonstrate two … However many abilities that ascetic demonstrates, I will always demonstrate twice as many." Now, the ascetic Gautama is going visit Patiputra. Everyone here can visit him, too!'

55. "The wanderer Patiputra was walking on the road. When Sunaksatra saw him, he hurried to Patiputra and said, 'You made this claim in a large crowd at Vaisali: "The ascetic Gautama has great wisdom … However many abilities that ascetic demonstrates, I will always demonstrate twice as many." Gautama has heard about it, and now he's coming visit you. You ought to quickly return home.'

56. "He responded, 'I'll return! I'll return!' After saying that, he suddenly felt afraid for himself, and his hair stood on end, so he didn't go back to his home. Instead, he went to the Wanderer Patiputra's Malabar Ebony Grove. There, he sat on a rope seat, feeling miserable and distraught."

57. The Buddha told the wanderer, "After eating, I went to Patiputra's dwelling, accompanied by many Licchavi ascetics, priests, wanderers, and householders. We prepared seats and sat down. There was a wanderer in the assembly named Cala.

58. "A group of people called Cala over to them and told him, 'Go to Malabar Ebony Grove and tell Patiputra this: 'An assembly of many Licchavi ascetics, priests, wanderers, and householders has gathered at your grove. People in that assembly are telling each other, "The wanderer Patiputra had announced in a crowd: 'The ascetic Gautama has great wisdom. I have great wisdom, too … However many miraculous abilities that Gautama demonstrates, I will always demonstrate twice as many.'" The ascetic Gautama has come to your grove as a result. You can come and face him.'

59. "Hearing what they said, Cala went to Malabar Ebony Grove and said to Patiputra, 'An assembly of many Licchavi ascetics, priests, wanderers, and householders has gathered at your grove. People in that assembly are telling each other, "The wanderer Patiputra had announced in a crowd: 'The ascetic Gautama has great wisdom. I have great wisdom, too … However many miraculous abilities that Gautama demonstrates, I will always demonstrate twice as many.'" The ascetic Gautama has come now to your grove as a result. Patiputra, it would be best that you returned.'

60. "The wanderer Patiputra replied to Cala, 'I'll return! I'll return!' After saying this, he fidgeted uneasily on his rope seat. His foot became ensnared in the rope seat, and he couldn't free it. How could he have gone to the Bhagavan?

61. "Cala then said to Patiputra, 'You are ignorant, just saying these empty words, 'I'll return! I'll return!' Still, you can't free yourself from this rope seat. How can you go to that large assembly?'

62. "After chastising Patiputra, Cala returned to the large assembly and reported, 'I carried the assembly's message to Patiputra and told him. His response to me was 'I'll return! I'll return!'" Then, he turned his body on that rope seat, and his foot was snared in the seat. He couldn't free himself from it. He couldn't free himself from the rope seat, so how will he come to this assembly?'

63. "There was then a Licchavi son named Dhuma in the assembly. He rose from his seat, adjusted his robe to bare his right shoulder, and knelt on his knee. With his palms together, he addressed the assembly, 'I'm an insignificant servant to this great assembly. I'll go and bring that man here.'"

64. The Buddha said, "I told that Licchavi son Dhuma, 'That man has made such statements, held such views, and created such pride. It isn't possible to make this man come to the Buddha. Dhuma, even if you tied him tightly with a leather cord and pulled him with a herd of cattle, his body would be torn apart. He'll never abandon such statements, such views, and such pride to come to me. If you don't believe what I say, go and find out for yourself.'

65. "The Licchavi son Dhuma went to Patiputra and said to him, 'An assembly of many Licchavi ascetics, priests, wanderers, and householders has gathered at your grove. People in that assembly are telling each other, "The wanderer Patiputra had announced in a crowd: 'The ascetic Gautama has great wisdom. I have great wisdom, too … However many miraculous abilities that Gautama demonstrates, I will always demonstrate twice as many.'" The ascetic Gautama has come now to your grove. You can return home.'

66. "The wanderer Patiputra replied, 'I'll return! I'll return!' After saying this, he turned uneasily on his rope seat, and it snared his foot. He couldn't free himself from the rope seat, so how could he travel on foot to the Bhagavan?

67. "Dhuma then said to Patiputra, 'You are ignorant, just saying these empty words, 'I'll return! I'll return!' Still, you can't free yourself from this rope seat. How can you go to that large assembly?'

68. Dhuma also said to Patiputra, 'Some wise people use parables to understand things. Far away, there was a lion, a king of beasts, that lived in a deep forest. It came out of its cave at daybreak, surveyed the four directions, and boldly roared three times. Afterward, it would go wandering in search of meat to eat.

69. "'Patiputra, when that lion, that king of beasts, returned to its forest after eating, there would usually be a jackal that followed it to eat the leftovers. When the jackal was at full strength, it would say to itself, "What kind of animal is that forest lion, really? Could it best me? Now, I'd like to find my own forest. I'll emerge from my cave at daybreak, survey the four directions, and roar three times. Afterward, I'll go wandering in search of meat to eat."

70. "'It immediately went to live in a forest. It emerged from its cave at daybreak … boldly roared three times. Afterward, it went wandering, but it's lion's roar was a jackal's bark.

71. "'Patiputra, you are likewise now. As a result of the Buddha's magnanimity arising in the world, you've received people's offerings, but now you compete with the Tathagata.'

72. "That Licchavi son Dhuma then chastised him in verse:

• "'A jackal called itself a lion,
Saying it's a king of beasts.
Wanting to roar the lion's roar,
It could only bark like a jackal.
• Living alone in an empty forest,
It said it was a king of beasts.
Wanting to roar the lion's roar,
It could only bark like a jackal.
• It crouched looking for rat holes,
Dug up graves searching for corpses.
Wanting to roar the lion's roar,
It could only bark like a jackal.'

73. "That Licchavi son Dhuma told him, 'You are likewise. As a result of the Buddha's magnanimity arising in the world, you receive people's offerings, but now you compete with the Tathagata.'

74. "After chastising him with those four kinds of metaphor, the Licchavi son Dhuma returned to the large assembly and reported, 'I carried the assembly's message to Patiputra and told him. His response to me was 'I'll return! I'll return!'" Then, he turned his body on that rope seat, and his foot was snared in the seat. He couldn't free himself from it. He couldn't free himself from the rope seat, so how will he come to this assembly?'

75. "I told Dhuma's son, 'I told you before, it isn't possible to make this man come to the Buddha. Even if you tied a leather cord to him tightly and pulled him with a herd of cattle, his body would be torn apart. He'll never abandon such statements, such views, and pride to come to me.'

76. "Wanderer, I then explained a variety of teachings for that large assembly, instructing, benefiting, and making them rejoice. In that assembly, I roared the lion's roar three times. I then ascended into the sky and returned home."

The Origin of the World and Beings

77. The Buddha told the wanderer, "Sometimes ascetics and priests say, 'The whole world was created by Brahma, the Sovereign God.'

78. "I ask them, 'Was the whole world really created by Brahma, the Sovereign God?'

"They can't answer, so they ask me a counter question: 'Gautama, how is it, then?'

79. "I reply to them, 'Sometimes, soon after this world is destroyed, there are other sentient beings whose life and actions come to an end. Their lives end in the Abhasvara Heaven, and then they are born in some empty Brahma abode. Craving arises in them there, and they become addicted to it. Again, they want other sentient beings to be reborn in that abode. When those other sentient beings' lives and actions come to an end, they are reborn there.

80. "'That sentient being then thinks to itself, "Now I am King Great Brahma. I suddenly came into existence without a creator. I completely comprehend the meaning of everything. I am the supreme sovereign of a thousand worlds. What I make and create is sublime and supreme. I am both father and mother to people. I was the first to arrive here; I was alone without a companion. These sentient beings are here because of my power. I made these sentient beings. Those other sentient beings also followed them, and they call me: 'King Brahma who suddenly came into existence. He completely comprehends the meaning of everything. He's the supreme sovereign of a thousand worlds. What he makes and creates is sublime and supreme. He's both father and mother to people. At first, he was alone, then later there was us. This King Great Brahma created us.'"

81. "'When these sentient beings die, they are reborn here in the world. They slowly grow up, cut off their hair and beards, put on the three Dharma robes, and leave home for the path. They enter a samadhi of mind through which they recall their past births, and then they make the claim, "This god Great Brahma suddenly came into existence without a creator. He completely comprehends the meaning of everything. He's the supreme sovereign of a thousand worlds. What he makes and creates is sublime and supreme. He's both father and mother to people. That god Great Brahma always abides unperturbed, and he isn't subject to change. We were created by that god Brahma, but now we're impermanent, don't last long, and are subject to change."

82. "Thus, wanderer, as a result of these events, those ascetics and priests each say, 'That Brahma, that Sovereign God, created this world.' Wanderer, a creator of this world is something that's only known to a Buddha and not by others. The Buddha also entirely knows what's beyond this subject. Although he knows, he's not attached to it. He truly knows suffering and its formation, cessation, enjoyment, danger, and escape. He's called 'Tathagata' because he was liberated without remainder by his equal observation."

83. The Buddha told the wanderer, "Some ascetics and priests make this claim, 'Frivolity and laziness are the source of sentient beings.'

84. "I say to them, 'Do you really say that frivolity and laziness are the source of sentient beings?'

"They aren't able to answer, so they ask me a counter question, 'Gautama, how is it, then?'

85. "I reply to them, 'Sometimes, the sentient beings of the Abhasvara Heaven are frivolous and lazy. When their bodies break up and their lives end, they're reborn here. They slowly grow up, cut off their hair and beard, put on the three Dharma robes, and leave home for the path. They enter a samadhi of mind through which they recall their past births, and then they make the claim, "Those other sentient beings didn't delight in frivolity, so they always reside in that abode, abiding forever and unchanging. We've come to this impermanence and are subject to change because we often delighted in frivolity."'"

86. "Thus, wanderer, as a result of these events, those ascetics and priests say that frivolity is the source of sentient beings. The Buddha thus entirely knows this, and he also knows about what's beyond it. He knows it but isn't attached to it. He truly knows suffering and its formation, cessation, enjoyment, danger, and escape. He's called 'Tathagata' because he was liberated without remainder by his equal observation."

87. The Buddha told the wanderer, "Some ascetics and priests say, 'Losing mindfulness is the source of sentient beings.'

88. "I say to them, 'Do you really say, 'Losing mindfulness is the source of sentient beings?'

"They aren't able to answer, so they ask me a counter question, 'Gautama, how is it, then?'

89. "I say to them, 'Some sentient beings lose their mindfulness after watching each other, one after the other. As a result, they're born here when their lives end. They slowly grow up, cut off their hair and beards, put on the three Dharma robes, and leave home to cultivate the path. They enter a samadhi of mind through which they became aware of their past births, and then they say, "Those sentient beings that don't lose their mindfulness while watching each other, one after the other, always abide unchanging. We frequently watched each other and lost our mindfulness after doing so. As a result, we've come to this impermanence and are subject to change."'

90. "Thus, wanderer, as a result of these events, those ascetics and priests say that losing mindfulness is the source of sentient beings. Only a Buddha thus knows it, and he knows what's beyond it. He knows it, but he isn't attached to it. He truly knows suffering and its formation, cessation, enjoyment, danger, and escape. He's called 'Tathagata' because he was liberated without remainder by his equal observation."

91. The Buddha told the wanderer, "Some ascetics and priests say, 'I arose without cause.'

92. "I say to them, 'Do you really say, "I arose without cause"?'

"They aren't able to answer, so they ask me a counter question[, 'Gautama, how is it, then?']

93. "Then I reply, 'Some sentient beings lack conception or perception. If those sentient beings give rise to concepts, then they're reborn here when their lives end. They slowly grow up, cut off their hair and beards, put on the three Dharma robes, and leave home to cultivate the path. They enter a samadhi of mind through which they became aware of their past births, and then they say, "I didn't exist in the past, but now I suddenly exist. This world didn't exist in the past, but now it exists. This is true; the rest is false."'

94. "Thus, wanderer, as a result of these events, ascetics and priests say that they arose without cause. Only the Buddha knows it, and he knows what's beyond it. He knows it, but he isn't attached to it. He truly knows suffering and its formation, cessation, enjoyment, danger, and escape. He's called 'Tathagata' because he was liberated without remainder by his equal observation."

95. The Buddha told the wanderer, "I've explained such things, but some ascetics and priests slander me in private. They say, 'The ascetic Gautama himself claims, "My disciples enter pure liberation and accomplish pure practice. They know purity, but they don't completely know purity."'

96. "But I don't make the claim, 'My disciples enter pure liberation and accomplish pure practice. They know purity, but they don't completely know purity.'

97. "Wanderer, I myself say, 'My disciples enter pure liberation and accomplish the pure practice. They know purity, being entirely and completely pure.'

98. The wanderer then said to the Buddha, "They can't obtain good benefits, so they slander the ascetic Gautama by saying, 'The ascetic himself says, 'My disciples enter pure liberation and accomplish pure practice. They know purity, but they don't completely know purity.'

99. "But the Bhagavan doesn't say that. The Bhagavan himself says, 'My disciples enter pure liberation and accomplish the pure practice. They know purity, being entirely and completely pure.'"

100. He also said to the Buddha, "I'll also enter this pure liberation and accomplish pure practice. I'll entirely and completely know it!"

101. The Buddha told the wanderer, "It would be very difficult for you to enter it. Your views are different, your patience is different, and your practice is different. It's very difficult to enter pure liberation while relying on other views. If you keep delighting in the Buddha in your heart, then you'll always be happy for a long time."

102. When the wanderer Bhargava heard what the Buddha taught, he rejoiced and approved.

DA 16 SUJATA

(DN 31) [T 1.70a20]

(The direct parallels for this sutra are DN 31 and MA 135. There are also alternate Chinese translations by An Shigao (T 16) and Zhi Fadu (T 17). As we shall see, DA 16 agrees with DN 31 more than the Sarvâstivada version found in MA.)

(While heading into Rajagrha to solicit alms, the Buddha encounters a man named Sujata performing a ritual of bowing to six different directions. He stops and asks him why he's doing this, and the man explains that his father had asked him to do it from his deathbed. The Buddha proceeds to give him a teaching that uses the six directions to represent various relationships that a householder has in life, which amounts to a detailed outline of ethics for a lay person centreed on reciprocal relationships.)

1. Thus I have heard: One time, the Buddha was staying on Mount Grdhrakuta of Rajagrha. He was accompanied by a large assembly of 1,250 monks.

2. It was then that the Bhagavan put on his robe and took his bowl into the city to solicit alms. At the time, there was a prominent man's son named Sujata in Rajagrha. Early in the morning, he left the city to go for a walk in a park. He bathed first, wetting his entire body. He then bowed in all directions around him: To the east, west, south, north, above, and below.

3. The Bhagavan then saw Sujata bathing before going for his walk in a park, wetting his entire body, and bowing in all directions. Upon seeing this, the Bhagavan went to Sujata and asked him: "Why did you leave the city in the early morning to go to a park, wet your entire body, and bow in all directions?"

Sujata then said to the Buddha, "My father's death is imminent, and he gave me this instruction: 'When you go to bow, you should first bow to the east, south, west, north, above, and below.' I don't dare not carry out my father's instruction, so after I've bathed, I first salute while facing east and then bow to the east. I do this for all the directions to the south, west, north, above, and below."

4. The Bhagavan then told Sujata, "Prominent man's son, these directions are just names. It's not that we don't have this practice, but we don't bow to these six directions to pay respect to them in my noble teaching."

5. Sujata said to the Buddha, "Please, Bhagavan! It would be good if you explained for me the way you bow to the six directions in the noble teaching!"

The Buddha told the prominent man's son, "Listen closely, listen closely! Consider it well, for I will explain this for you."

Sujata replied, "Very well. I'd be glad to hear it."

6. The Buddha told Sujata, "Suppose a prominent man or his son knows four binding actions and doesn't do bad actions on four grounds. Moreover, he's able to know six actions that squander wealth. That's to say, Sujata, this prominent man or his son parts with four bad actions and pays homage to the six directions. It will be good for his present life, and he'll obtain good results in later lives. It will be the source for this in his present life and later lives. In the present life, he be commended by wise people and gain this one worldly reward: When his body breaks up and his life ends, he'll be born in a heavenly good place.

7. "Sujata, you should know, the four binding actions are 1. killing beings, 2. stealing, 3. engaging in sex, and 4. false speech. These are the four binding actions. What are the four grounds? They are 1. desire, 2. anger, 3. fear, and 4. delusion. If a prominent man or his son does bad actions on these four grounds, then he will decline [in reputation]."

8. After saying this, the Buddha restated it in verse:

• "Desire, anger, fear, and delusion:
Someone who has these four qualities
Sees their reputation decline daily,
Like the moon approaching its last day."

9. The Buddha told Sujata, "If a prominent man or his son doesn't do bad actions on these four grounds, then he'll improve [in reputation]."

10. The Bhagavan then restated this in verse:

• "One who doesn't do bad actions
In desire, anger, fear, and delusion
Will improve in reputation daily,
Like the moon approaching fullness."

11. The Buddha told Sujata, "The six actions that squander wealth are 1. indulging in alcohol, 2. gambling, 3. self-indulgence, 4. getting carried away at musical performances, 5. associating with bad friends, and 6. idleness. These are the six acts that squander wealth.

12. "Sujata, suppose a prominent man or his son understands these four binding actions, doesn't do evil actions on these four grounds, and knows the six actions that squander wealth. Doing this, Sujata, he can part with these four grounds and make offerings to the six directions. It will be good for his present life and good in later lives. It'll be the source for this in the present life and in later lives. In the present, he'll be praised by wise people and gain this one worldly reward: When his body breaks up and his life ends, he'll be born in a heavenly good place.

13. "Sujata, you should know that drinking alcohol has six defects: 1. Loss of wealth, 2. becoming ill, 3. fighting, 4. circulation of a bad reputation, 5. sudden outbursts of anger, and 6. a daily loss in wisdom. Sujata, if they drink alcohol, that prominent man or his son's family and property with decrease day by day.

14. "Sujata, gambling has six defects. What are the six? 1. Daily loss of wealth, 2. enemies are made by winning, 3. being rebuked by wise people, 4. not being trusted by people, 5. estrangement from people, and 6. it causes thoughts of stealing. Sujata, engaging in gambling has these six defects. If they gamble, that prominent man or his son's family and property will decrease day by day.

15. "Self-indulgence has six defects: 1. Not protecting oneself, 2. not protecting one's property, 3. not protecting one's children, 4. being in constant fear, 5. being constantly trapped in painful and bad qualities, and 6. delighting in falsehoods. These are the six defects of self-indulgence. If a prominent man or his son engages in self-indulgence, his family and property will decrease day by day.

16. "Sujata, getting carried away at musical performances also has six defects: 1. Seeking singing, 2. seeking dancing and 3. seeking musical instruments, 4. panica, 5. talava, and 6. suhana. These are the six defects of music. If a prominent man or his son doesn't stop indulging in music, his family and property will decrease day by day.

17. "Associating with bad friends also has six defects: 1. One's ways become deceitful, 2. preferring private places, 3. tempting people from other households, 4. scheming to get others' possessions, 5. directing profits to oneself, and 6. liking to publicize the faults of others. These are the six defects of bad friends. If a prominent man or his son doesn't stop associating with bad friends, his family and property will decrease day by day.

18. Idleness has six defects: 1. One doesn't make much effort to cultivate when they're fortunate and happy, 2. not making much effort to cultivate when in poverty, 3. not making much effort to cultivate when it's cold, 4. not making much effort to cultivate when it's hot, 5. not making much effort to cultivate in the morning, and 6. not make much effort to cultivate in the evening. If a prominent man or his son don't stop being idle, his family and property will decrease day by day."

19. After saying this, the Buddha restated it in verse:

• "Someone deluded by alcohol
Will return to his drinking companion.
His rightly accumulated property
Will be squandered selfishly.
• Drinking alcohol excessively,
He regularly delights in song and dance.
Come morning, he wanders to another's house,
Which causes his own downfall.
• Following bad friends and not changing,
He slanders those who leave home.
The world laughs at his wrong views,
And people reject his defiled actions.
• Favoring bad attachments to external form,
He only discusses winning and losing things.
With bad [friends], he doesn't return [to the good],
And people reject his defiled actions.
• Being intoxicated by alcohol,
A poor man doesn't take stock of himself.
With a little wealth, he favors extravagance,
Which breaks the home and brings disaster.
• Gambling, drinking alcohol with crowds,
And pursuing another's attractive woman:
Studying such vulgar practices,
He's like the moon approaching its last day.
• Doing evil, accepting evil,
And associating with bad friends,
In the present life and next life,
One gains nothing from start to finish.
• Preferring to sleep during the day,
One is awake at night with many longings.
Alone in the dark without good friends,
They can't cultivate their household's affairs.
• Not working in the morning or evening,
And idle when it's cold or hot as well,
What one does, they don't do to completion,
And they ruin what they do complete, too.
• Whether the weather seems cold or hot,
Work diligently from morning to night.
When work isn't left incomplete,
You'll never have anything to lament."

20. The Buddha told Sujata, "There are four enemies who resemble friends that you should know and recognise. What are the four? 1. Those who submit out of fear, 2. who use beautiful words, 3. who follow out of respect, and 4. who are bad friends."

21. The Buddha told Sujata, "There are four things about those who submit out of fear. What are the four? 1. They take back when they've given, 2. they give little expecting more [in return], 3. their friendship is forced because of fear, and 4. they make friends for their own gain. These are the four things about those who submit out of fear.

22. The Buddha told Sujata, "There are also four things about friends who use beautiful words. What are the four? 1. They follow others whether they are good or bad, 2. abandon them when there are difficulties, 3. are welcoming in public but stop in private, and 4. refuse to help when misfortune strikes. These are the four things about friends who use beautiful words.

23. "There are four things about friends who follow out of respect. What are the four? 1. They're deceptive at first, 2. they're deceptive later, 3. they're openly deceptive, and 4. they hit you with a cane when they notice a minor fault. These are the four things about friends who follow out of respect.

24. "There are four things about bad friends. What are the four? 1. They're friends when drinking alcohol, 2. they're friends when gambling, 3. they're friends when engaging in sex, and 4. they're friends when singing and dancing. These are the four things about bad friends."

25. After saying this, the Bhagavan restated it in verse:

• "One who submits out of fear is a forced friend;
The friend who uses beautiful words is likewise.
Followers out of respect are false friends,
And bad companions make bad friends.
• These friends aren't reliable;
The wise should know and recognise them.
They ought to be abandoned quickly,
Like avoiding a dangerous road."

26. The Buddha addressed Sujata, "There are four friends who bring many benefits when befriended and who will help and protect a person. What are the four? 1. Those who stop what's wrong, 2. who are merciful, 3. who are beneficial, and 4. who are cooperative. These four friends bring many benefits when befriended and will help and protect a person. They should be befriended.

27. "Sujata, there are four things about those who stop what's wrong, which bring many benefits and help and protect a person. What are the four? 1. They can stop someone who they see are doing evil, 2. they show people what's honest and correct, 3. they're kind, sympathetic, and mindful, and 4. they show a person the road to heaven. These are the four things about those who stop what's wrong, which bring many benefits and help and protect a person.

28. "Furthermore, there are four things about those who are merciful: 1. They are delighted to see another's gain, 2. they are saddened to see a person do evil, 3. they praise others' virtues, and 4. they can restrain others when seeing them speak badly. These are the four things about those who are merciful, which bring many benefits and help and protect a person.

29. "There are four things about those who are beneficial. What are the four? 1. They protect others by preventing them from being self-indulgent, 2. they protect others from squandering their wealth, 3. they protect others by allaying their fears, and 4. they admonish others in private. These are the four things about those who are beneficial, which bring many benefits and help and protect people.

30. "There are four things about those who are cooperative. What are the four? 1. They don't begrudge their own lives for others, 2. they don't begrudge wealth and treasure for others, 3. they allay the fears of others, and 4. they admonish others in private. These are the four things about those who are cooperative, which bring many benefits and help and protect people."

31. After saying this, the Bhagavan restated it in verse:

• "Those who stop what's wrong defend friends from evil,
The merciful put themselves in others' places,
The beneficial person benefits their friends,
And the cooperative treat friends like themselves.
• These are the people to befriend;
Wise people keep them close at hand.
Among friends, they are unparalleled,
Just as a kind mother is her child's friend.
• If someone wants people to befriend,
He'll be friends with substantial friends.
The friend who perfects the precepts
Is like a torch-bearer lighting the way."

32. The Buddha told Sujata, "You should know the six directions. What are the six directions? Parents are to the east, teachers and elders are to the south, wives are to the west, relatives are to the north, servants are below, and ascetics, priests, and noble practitioners are above.

33. "Sujata, someone with parents should respect and follow them in five ways. What are the five? 1. They should provide support, so they are without want, 2. always offer to do things for their parents first, 3. respect and follow their parents without going against them, 4. don't dare to contradict a proper instruction from their parents, and 5. don't end a proper profession pursued by their parents.

34. "Sujata, when someone with parents respects and follows them in these five ways, their parents are respectful friends to their child in five ways, too. What are the five? 1. They govern their child and don't permit them to do evil, 2. they teach and show them what's good, 3. their love for their child goes to the marrow of their bones, 4. they look for an excellent spouse for their child, and 5. they provide support to their child when it's needed.

35. "Sujata, when a child respectfully follows and serves their parents, then that [eastern] direction will be peaceful, without any sorrow or fear.

36. "Sujata, a disciple respectfully serves his teacher in five ways. What are the five? 1. They supply the teacher with their needs, 2. pay homage and offer support to them, 3. honor and look up to their teacher, 4. honor and don't go against their teacher's instructions, and 5. remember and don't forget what their teacher teaches them.

37. "Sujata, when a disciple respectfully serves their teacher in these five ways, their teacher respectfully looks after the disciple in five ways, too. What are the five? 1. They train their disciple to follow their teaching, 2. instruct their disciple in what they've yet to hear, 3. give their disciple sufficient answers when they have questions, 4. demonstrate what a good friend is, and 5. teach their disciple all that they know without holding back.

38. "Sujata, when a disciple respectfully serves their teacher, then that [southern] direction will be peaceful, without sorrow or fear.

39. "Sujata, a husband also respects his wife in five ways. What are the five? 1. He treats her with respect, 2. he's dignified and not indecent, 3. he provides her with clothing and food when it's needed, 4. he provides her with ornaments according to the occasion, and 5. he entrusts the affairs of the household to her.

40. "Sujata, when a husband respects his wife in these five ways, his wife honors her husband in five ways, too. What are the five? 1. She rises before him, 2. sits after him, 3. speaks peacefully, 4. respects and follows him, and 5. anticipates his wishes and accepts them.

41. "Sujata, when a husband treats his wife with respect, then that [western] direction will be peaceful, without sorrow or fear.

42. "Sujata a person is friendly and respectful to their relatives in five ways. What are the five? 1. They give them gifts, 2. Speak to them skillfully, 3. benefit them, 4. benefit them equally, and 5. don't deceive them.

43. "Sujata, when a person is friendly and respectful to their relatives, their relatives are friendly and respectful to them in five ways, too. What are the five? 1. They keep a person from being self-indulgence, 2. keep them from self-indulgently wasting their wealth, 3. keep them from becoming fearful, 4. admonish them in private, and 5. always praise their qualities.

44. "Sujata, when someone is friendly and respectful to their relatives, then that [northern] direction will be peaceful, without sorrow or fear.

45. "Sujata, a master directs his servants in five ways. What are the five? 1. He assigns tasks according to their abilities, 2. provides meals at appropriate times, 3. provides compensation at appropriate times, 4. provides medical care for their illnesses, and 5. permits them to have leisure time.

46. "Sujata, when a master directs his servants in these five ways, his servants perform their duties in five ways, too. What are the five? 1. They rise early in the morning, 2. do their work meticulously, 3. don't take what's not given, 4. do their duties in order, and 5. praise their master's name. When a master treats his servants in this way, then that direction [below] will be peaceful, without sorrow or fear.

47. "Sujata, a benefactor should support and serve ascetics and priests in five ways. What are the five? 1. Their physical conduct is kind, 2. their verbal conduct is kind, 3. their mental conduct is kind, 4. they give according to the occasion, and 5. they don't stop them at the gate.

48. "Sujata, when a benefactor supports and serves ascetics and priests in these five ways, then ascetics and priests also give them instruction in six ways, too. What are the six? 1. They prevent their benefactor from doing evil, 2. guide them to a good place, 3. teach them to harbor good thoughts, 4. ensure that they hear what they haven't heard yet, 5. ensure that they understand well what they have heard, and 6. make the path to heaven clear to them.

49. "Sujata, when a benefactor who thus respects and serves ascetics and priests, then that direction [above] will be peaceful, without any sorrow or fear."

50. After saying this, the Bhagavan restated it in verse:

• "Parents are to the east,
Teachers are to the south,
Wives are to the west,
Relatives are to the north,
Servants are below,
And ascetics are above.
• When sons of prominent men
Pay homage to these directions
By respecting them at all times,
They'll be born in heaven when they die.
• Focused on giving and soft words,
A person is beneficial to many.
Equally benefiting themselves and others,
They share what they have with people.
• These four things carry much
Like a cartwheel does heavy loads.
Without these four things, the world
Would be devoid filial support.
• This teaching exists in the world,
And it's chosen by wise people.
Practicing it has such great results,
One's name spreads far and wide.
• Whether lovely beds or chairs,
Or being served excellent meals,
He provides whatever he obtains,
And his name spreads far and wide.
• Not forgetting relatives and old friends,
He explains to them beneficial subjects.
Those high and low always in harmony,
He obtains a good reputation from it.
• First, he should develop his skills,
Then he obtains wealth afterward.
Once he comes to possess wealth,
He should safeguard it himself.
• To produce wealth with frugality,
He should personally select his recipients.
When grifters and scoundrels solicit him,
He shouldn't offer donations to them.
• He produces wealth in small amounts
Like a bee collecting from many flowers.
His treasury accrues interest day by day
Until finally it never decreases.
• First, he knows when to stop eating.
Second, he cultivates his work and isn't idle.
Third, he first builds his savings
And sets it aside for times of want.
Fourth, he cultivates his fields and business,
Selecting pastures to place his cattle.
Fifth, he constructs relic shrines.
Sixth, he establishes Sangha dwellings
Where residents pursue the six tasks
And skillfully cultivate without lost time.
• When he thus cultivates these tasks,
His household won't decline.
His treasury will accrue interest daily
Like the ocean swelled by many rivers."

51. At that point, Sujata said to the Bhagavan, "Very good, Bhagavan! That was what I hoped to do before, but it goes beyond my father's instruction. The Tathagata's explanation is like turning upright what's overturned, opening up something closed, bringing understanding to what's confused, and a lamp in a dark room to those with eyes to see. He awakens the fool who's in the dark with countless methods that make the clean teaching plain.

52. "Why is that? The Buddha is a Tathagata, Arhat, and Completely Awakened One, so he's able to reveal clear instruction to the world. Now, I take refuge in the Buddha, take refuge in the Dharma, and take refuge in the Sangha. Bhagavan, please permit me to become a layman in the correct teaching! Starting today, I will not kill, steal, commit adultery, lie, or drink alcohol for the rest of my life."

53. Once Sujata had heard what the Buddha taught, he rejoiced and approved.

DA 17 Purification
(DN 29) [T 1.72c13]
(The direct parallel for this sutra are DN 29.)

(While staying at a town near Kapilavastu, a novice monk brings news to the Buddha about the death of the founder of the Jain ascetics and the schism among his disciples. The Buddha gives the monk a discourse on the conditions that lead to the success and failure of religious teachings and the difficulties disciples have after founders pass away. This leads to a general criticism of the unreasonable beliefs of other ascetic traditions and a summary of how such pitfalls are avoided by the Buddha's teaching.

Purification of body and soul through a kind of full bath baptism is also extremely important in Hinduism, the to it related Zoroastrianism, Judaism (mikveh), Mandeaism, Manichaeism, Islam, and, to a lesser extent, to the Roman religion [baptism], now universaly known as Christianity or Christendom. As a matter of fact, Hinduism, Judaism, Buddhism, and early Christianity share more features than issues that divides them. Lithurgy, rituals, many habits, and the sense for righteousness are so similar that all of them could claim to follow the "Laws of Noah.")

1. Thus I have heard: One time, the Buddha was staying at Layman [Vedhanna]'s Grove in the country of Kapilavastu. He was accompanied by a large assembly of 1,250 monks.

News of Nigranthaputra's Death

2. The novice monk Cunda was staying in Papa at the time for the summer retreat. When it was finished, he took his robe and bowl and made his way to Layman [Vedhanna]'s Grove near Kapilavastu. He went to Ananda, bowed his head at his feet, and stood to one side. He then said to Ananda, "In the city of Papa, Nigranthaputra's life ended not long ago, and his disciples are divided into two factions. They fight with each other, scolding each other to their faces. They have no hierarchy and look for each other's shortcomings. They argue about what they know and see: 'I can understand this, but you cannot.' 'My practices are true and correct; yours are wrong views.' 'You put what's first last and what's last first, getting things reversed and confused, and then there isn't any order.' 'What I do is sublime; what you say is wrong.' 'If you have any doubts, feel free to ask me.' Virtuous Ananda, the people of that country who served Nirgrantha are disgusted when they hear their fighting."

3. Ananda said to the novice monk Cunda, "We were going to inform the Bhagavan about something. You can come with us. You ought to tell him about these events. If the Bhagavan has some instructions about it, we'll accept them together."

4. After hearing what Ananda said, the novice monk Cunda went with him to visit the Bhagavan. He bowed his head at the Buddha's feet and then stood to one side.

5. Ananda said to the Bhagavan, "When this novice monk Cunda finished the summer retreat in Papa, he took his robe and bowl and made his way here. He bowed at my feet and said to me: 'In the city of Papa, Nigranthaputra's life ended not long ago, and his disciples are divided into two factions. They fight with each other, scolding each other to their faces. They have no hierarchy and look for each other's shortcomings. They argue about what they know and see: "I can understand this, but you cannot." "My practices are true and correct; yours are wrong views." "You put what's first last and what's last first, getting things reversed and confused, and then there isn't any order." "What I do is sublime; what you say is wrong." "If you have any doubts, feel free to ask me." The people of that country who served Nirgrantha are disgusted when they hear their fighting.'"

Disciples Who Do not Follow a Teaching

6. The Bhagavan told Cunda, "So it is, Cunda. That's not a teaching that's worth hearing, nor is it the teaching of a Completely Awakened One. It's like a crumbling shrine that's difficult to paint. Although they had a teacher, the views he held were all wrong. Although they also have a teaching, none of it is true. It isn't worth hearing and can't escape [suffering]. This isn't the teaching of a Completely Awakened One. It's like an ancient shine that can't be painted. The disciples who didn't follow his teaching and abandoned his different views practiced right view.

7. "Cunda, suppose someone came and said to those disciples, 'Good men, your teacher's Dharma was correct. You ought to put it into practice. Why did you abandon it?' Those disciples who believe it and the speaker will both lose the path and get measureless misdeeds. Why is that? Although they have a teaching, it isn't true.

8. "Cunda, suppose the teacher doesn't have wrong views. His teaching is true, good to hear, and can reach the escape. That's the teaching of a Completely Awakened One. It's like a newly built shrine that's easy to paint. Still, disciples who don't diligently cultivate his teaching can't accomplish it. They abandon the equal path and take up wrong views.

9. "Suppose someone came and said to those disciples, 'Good men, your teacher's Dharma was correct. You ought to put it into practice. Why did you abandon it and take up wrong views?' Those disciples who believe it and the speaker will both see correctly and get measureless merits. Why is that? Their teaching is true."

Disciples Who Accomplish a Teaching

10. The Buddha told Cunda, "Although they had a teacher, he held wrong views. Although they also have a teaching, none of it is true. It isn't worth hearing and can't escape. This isn't the teaching of a Completely Awakened One. It's like a crumbling shine that can't be painted. Those disciples who accomplished his teachings and followed his practice produced wrong views.

11. "Cunda, suppose someone came and said to those disciples, 'Good men, your teacher's Dharma was correct. It's something you ought to practice. Now, your cultivation of asceticism being diligent, you should accomplish the fruit of the path in the present life.' Those disciples who believe it and the speaker will both lose the path and get measureless misdeeds. Why is that? Because the teaching isn't true.

12. "Cunda, suppose the teacher doesn't have wrong views. His teaching is true, good to hear, and can reach the escape. That's the teaching of a Completely Awakened One. It's like a newly built shrine that's easy to paint. Those disciples who accomplish his teachings and follow the cultivation of his practice will produce right view.

13. "Suppose someone said to those disciples, 'Good men, your teacher's Dharma was correct. It's something you ought to practice. Now, your cultivation of asceticism being diligent, you should accomplish the fruit of the path in the present life.' Those disciples who believe it and the speaker will both have right view and obtain measureless merits. Why is that? Because the teaching is true."

Teachers Who Are Grieved and Not Grieved

14. "Cunda, when some teachers leave the world, it makes their disciples grieve. Some teachers leave the world, and it doesn't make their disciples grieve.

15. "How does a teacher leaving the world make his disciples grieve? Cunda, suppose a teacher has recently left the world, and it wasn't long after he achieved awakening. His teaching was complete, his religious practice was pure, and his essentials were true, but these things weren't widely known. The teacher's final liberation was so soon that his disciples can't cultivate his practice. They lament, saying, 'The teacher was first to leave the world, not long after achieving awakening. His teaching was pure, his religious practice was complete, and his essentials were true, but they weren't widely known. Now, the teacher's final liberation was so soon, we disciples can't cultivate his practice!' This is a teacher who leaves the world, and his disciple grieve over it.

16. "How does a teacher leaving the world not make his disciples grieve? Suppose when a teacher leaves the world, his teaching is pure, his religious practice is complete, and his essentials are true. These things are widely known. After the teacher's final liberation, his disciples can cultivate his practice. They don't lament, saying, 'The teacher was first to leave the world, not long after achieving awakening. His teaching was pure, his religious practice was complete, and his essentials were true, but they weren't widely known. Now, the teacher's final liberation was so soon, we disciples can't cultivate his practice!' Thus, Cunda, a teacher leaves the world, and his disciples have no grief over it."

Factors of a Religious Practice

17. The Buddha told Cunda, "These factors achieve the religious life. That is, a teacher leaves the world not long after leaving home. His fame hasn't spread widely. This is a factor of the religious practice being incomplete.

18. "Cunda, a teacher leaves the world a long time after he left home, and his fame has become far-reaching. This is a factor of the religious life being fulfilled.

19. "Cunda, a teacher leaves the world a long time after he left home, and his fame has become far-reaching, but his disciples have yet to receive his instruction or possess his religious practice. They've yet to reach a state of peace, obtain their own reward, or accept his teaching and widely promulgate it. When different interpretations arise, they can't eliminate them according to the teaching. They still can't transform themselves or realize miraculous abilities, either. This is a factor of the religious practice being incomplete.

20. "Cunda, a teacher leaves the world long after he left home, and his fame has become far-reaching. All his disciples receive his instruction and the complete religious practice. They reach a state of peace, obtain their own reward, and accept, discern, and promulgate his teaching. When different interpretations arise, they can eliminate them according to the teaching. They perfect transforming themselves and realize miraculous abilities. This is a factor of the religious practice being fulfilled.

21. "Cunda, a teacher leaves the world long after he left home, and his fame has become far-reaching, but his nuns have yet to receive his instructions. They've yet to reach a state of peace, obtain their own reward, or accept, discern, and promulgate his teaching. When different interpretations arise, they can't eliminate them with the teaching. They still can't transform themselves or realize miraculous abilities, either. This is a factor of the religious life being incomplete.

22. "Cunda, a teacher leaves the world long after he left home, and his fame has become far-reaching. All his nuns receive his instruction and the complete religious practice. They reach a state of peace, obtain their own reward, and accept, discern, and promulgate his teaching. When different interpretations arise, they can eliminate them according to the teaching. They perfect transforming themselves and realize miraculous abilities. This is a factor of the religious practice being completely fulfilled.

23. "Cunda, laymen and laywomen widely cultivate his religious practice … transform themselves and realize miraculous abilities in the same way.

24. "Cunda, suppose a teacher isn't present in the world, they don't have any fame, and offerings are limited. This is a factor of the religious practice being unfulfilled.

25. "Suppose a teacher is present in the world, they're famous, and offerings are fully provided without any limitations. This is a factor of the religious practice being fulfilled.

26. "Suppose a teacher is present in the world, they're famous, and offerings are fully provided, but the monks don't possess fame or offerings. This is a factor of the religious practice being incomplete.

27. "Suppose a teacher is present in the world, they're famous, and offerings are fully provided without limitations, and the assembly of monks also possesses these things. This is a factor of the religious practice being fulfilled. It's the same with the assembly of nuns.

28. "Cunda, I left home long ago, and my fame is widespread. My monks have received my instruction, reached a state of peace, obtained their own reward, and can accept and explain the teaching for other people. When different interpretations arise, they can eliminate them according to the teaching. They transform themselves and fully realize miraculous abilities. The monks, nuns, laymen, and laywomen are the same.

29. "Cunda, I've widely promulgated the religious practice in each way … transforming myself and fully realizing miraculous abilities. Cunda, of all the teachers in the world, I don't see any of them who have attained fame and offerings like myself, the Tathagata, Arhat, and Completely Awakening One.

30. "Cunda, of the followers in the world, I don't see any with fame and offerings like my assembly.

31. "Cunda, to tell the truth, I should say that I see what can't be seen. How do I see what can't be seen? All whose religious practice is pure, complete, plainly explained, and widely known are said to see what can't be seen."

32. The Bhagavan then told the monks, "Udraka Ramaputra made this statement to a large assembly: 'There is what's seen and not seen. What is called the seen and not seen? It's like a knife that can be seen, and a sword that cannot be seen.' Monks, Ramaputra made that metaphor with the ignorant words of ordinary people.

33. "Thus, Cunda, to tell the truth, I should say I see what's not seen. What is seen and not seen? You should correctly say, 'All whose religious practice is pure, complete, plainly explained, and widely known see what can't be seen.'

34. "Cunda, a continuous teaching that's incomplete can be found, but a discontinued teaching that's complete can't be found. Cunda, among teachings, the religious practice is like the ghee that's in butter."

Staying Unified and Resolving Disputes

35. The Bhagavan then told the monks, "I've personally realized this teaching, namely the four abodes of mindfulness, four miraculous abilities, four mental disciplines, four dhyanas, five faculties, five powers, seven factors of awakening, and the noble eightfold path. All of you are united and don't start disputes. You have the same teacher and teaching, the same water and milk. You must light yourselves with the Tathagata's correct teaching and delight in becoming peaceful.

36. "Once you've become peaceful, suppose some monk is teaching Dharma, and another says, 'That statement isn't correct, and his meaning isn't correct.'

37. "A monk who hears him can't say he's right or wrong. He should say to that monk, 'How is it, good man? I would say it this way, and you say it that way. My meaning is this, and your meaning is that. Which is better? Which is worse?'

38. "Suppose that monk replies, 'I say it this way, and my meaning is this. You say it that way, and your meaning is that. Your statement is better, and your meaning is better, too.'

39. "The monk who says this also can't be found to be right or wrong. You should admonish, rebuke, and stop that monk. You should then investigate the matter together. Thus, all of you will be united without starting disputes. You have the same teacher and teaching, the same water and milk. You should light yourselves with the correct teaching of the Tathagata and delight in becoming peaceful.

40. "Once you've become peaceful, suppose a monk is teaching Dharma, and another says, 'That statement isn't correct, but his meaning is correct.'

41. "A monk who hears him can't say he's right or wrong. He should say to that monk, 'How is it, monk? I say it this way, and you say it that way. Which is correct, and which is wrong?'

42. "Suppose that monk replies, 'I say it this way, and you say it that way. Your statement is better.'

43. "A monk who says this also can't be said to be right or wrong. You should admonish, rebuke, and stop that monk. You should investigate the matter together. Thus, all of you will be united without starting disputes. You have the same teacher and teaching, the same water and milk. You should light yourselves with the correct teaching of the Tathagata and delight in becoming peaceful.

44. "Once you've become peaceful, suppose a monk is teaching Dharma, and another monk makes the statement, 'That statement is correct, but his meaning isn't correct.'

45. "A monk who hears him can't say that he's right or wrong. You should say to him, 'How is it, monk? My meaning is this, and your meaning is that. Which is right, and which is wrong?'

46. "Suppose he replies, 'My meaning is this, and your meaning is that. Your meaning is better.'

47. "When a monk says that, he can't be said to be right or wrong. You should admonish, rebuke, and stop that monk. You should investigate the matter together. Thus, all of you will be united without starting disputes. You have the same teacher and teaching, the same water and milk. You should light yourselves with the correct teaching of the Tathagata and delight in becoming peaceful.

48. "Once you've become peaceful, suppose a monk is teaching Dharma, and another monks makes the statement, 'That statement is correct, and his meaning is correct.'

49. "A monk who hears him can't say that he's right or wrong. You should commend him by saying, 'What you say is right! What you say is right!'

50. "Therefore, monks, realize for yourself what's in the twelve divisions of the sutras, and widely promulgate it. They are the sutras, songs, assurances, verses, inspirations, past events, past births, histories, extensive sutras, unprecedented things, parables, and explanations. You should skillfully preserve, assess, investigate, and widely promulgate them.

The Allowance of Requisites

51. "Monks, the robes that I allow are robes from cemeteries, robes from prominent people, or crude robes. These robes are sufficient for warding off cold, heat, and biting insects, and they're enough to cover your four limbs.

52. "Monks, the food that I allow is solicited food or a householder's food. This food is sufficient for your body or troubles. When the myriad ailments become severe, they become a source of anxiety until death, so I permit you this food. Be satisfied with that.

53. "Monks, the abodes that I allow are under a tree, out in the open, in a room, in a hall, or in a cave. If you live in these various abodes, be satisfied with them. They ward off the cold, heat, wind, rain, and biting insects. Abide under them in quiet repose.

54. "Monks, the medicines that I allow are urine, feces, cream, oil, honey, or rock honey. Be satisfied with these medicines. If your body is troubled by pains, then I permit these medicines when the myriad ailments become severe and cause anxiety until death."

Pleasures the Buddha Doesn't Approve

55. The Buddha said, "Some wanderers of other religions come and say, 'The ascetic Sakyans themselves enjoy many pleasures.'

56. "When they say this, you should thus reply, 'You shouldn't say that the ascetic Sakyans themselves enjoy many pleasures. Why is that? When someone enjoys pleasures, the Tathagata rebukes them. When someone enjoys pleasures, the Tathagata commends them.'

57. "Suppose that wanderer from another religion asks, 'The enjoyment of which pleasures does Gautama rebuke?'

58. "If they were to ask that, you should reply, 'The qualities of the five desires are lovely and enjoyable, so people are addicted to them. What are the five? The eye perceives form that's lovely and enjoyable, so people are addicted to it. The ear hears sound … nose smells odor … tongue tastes flavor … body feels contact that's lovely and enjoyable, so people are addicted to it.

59. "'Good men, even though these five desires are conditions for joy and happiness, they are rebuked by the Tathagata, Arhat, and Completely Awakened One. Even though people enjoy killing sentient beings, it's rebuked by the Tathagata, Arhat, and Completely Awakened One. Even though people enjoy robbing and stealing from others, it's rebuked by the Tathagata. Even though people enjoy violating the religious life, it's rebuked by the Tathagata. Even though people enjoy making false statements, it's rebuked by the Tathagata. Even though people are unrestrained and self-indulgent, it's rebuked by the Tathagata. Even though people enjoy practicing the ascetic practices of other religions and not the correct practices taught by the Tathagata, it's rebuked by the Tathagata.'

60. "Monks, I rebuke the qualities of the five desires that make people addicted to them. What are the five? The eye perceives form that's lovely and enjoyable, so people are addicted to it. The ear hears sound … nose smells odor … tongue tastes flavor … body feels contact that's lovely and enjoyable, so people are addicted to it.

61. "The ascetic Sakyans take no pleasures like these. Even though some people enjoy killing sentient beings, the ascetic Sakyans take no such pleasure. Even though some people enjoy stealing from others, the ascetic Sakyans take no such pleasure. Even though some people enjoy violating the religious life, the ascetic Sakyans take no such pleasure. Even though some people enjoy making false statements, the ascetic Sakyans take no such pleasure. Even though some people are unrestrained and self-indulgent, the ascetic Sakyans take no such pleasure. Even though some people enjoy practicing the ascetic practices of other religions, the ascetic Sakyans take no such pleasure.

Pleasures the Buddha Does Approve

62. "Suppose that wanderer of another religion asks this question, 'The enjoyment of which pleasures does the ascetic Gautama commend?'

63. "Monks, if they were to ask this, you should answer them: 'Good men, there are the qualities of the five desires that are lovely and enjoyable, so people are addicted to them. What are the five? The eye perceives form … body feels contact that's lovely and enjoyable, so people are addicted to it.

64. "'Good men, the five desires are conditions that give rise to pleasure and must be quickly eliminated. Even though some people enjoy killing sentient beings, such pleasure should be quickly eliminated. Even though some people enjoy stealing, such pleasure should be quickly eliminated. Even though some people enjoy violating the religious life, such pleasure should be quickly eliminated. Even though some people enjoy making false statements, such pleasure should be quickly eliminated. Even though some people are unrestrained and self-indulgent, such pleasure should be quickly eliminated. Even though some people enjoy practicing the ascetic practices of other religions, such pleasure should be quickly eliminated.

65. "'Some people seclude themselves from desire and aren't subject to any more evil things. With perception and examination, seclusion gives rise to joy and happiness, and they enter the first dhyana. Such pleasure is commended by the Buddha.

66. "'Some people cease their perception and examination. With inner joy, unified mind, and no perception or examination, samadhi gives rise to joy and happiness, and they enter the second dhyana. Such pleasure is commended by the Buddha.

67. "'Some people discard joy and enter equanimity. They personally know their own happiness that's sought by noble people. With equanimity, mindfulness, and unified mind, they enter the third dhyana. Such pleasure is commended by the Buddha.

68. "'Some people's pleasure and pain ends, and their prior sorrow and joy subsides. Not discomforted or happy, they are equanimous, mindful, and pure, and they enter the fourth dhyana. Such pleasure is commended by the Buddha.'

The Benefits of the Pleasures the Buddha Approves

69. "Suppose that wanderer of another religion asks this question, 'How many fruits and virtues do you seek from these pleasures?'

70. "You should answer them, 'These pleasures will have seven fruits and virtues. What are the seven? In the present life, one achieves the realization of awakening. Even if one doesn't achieve it, they will achieve it right before their life ends. If they don't achieve it before their life ends, then they will end the five lower bonds and Parinirvana in the interim, Parinirvana at birth, Parinirvana with practice, Parinirvana without practice, or Parinirvana upstream in Akanistha. Good men, these are the seven virtues of these pleasures.

71. "'Good men, if a monk in training desires to do the above, he'll look for a peaceful place before eliminating five hindrances. What are the five? The hindrances of desire, anger, sleepiness, agitation, and doubt. If a trainee monk seeks the above place of safety before ceasing the five hindrances, he won't be capable of diligently cultivating the four abodes of mindfulness or the seven factors of awakening. Attaining the state of the superior man and developing noble wisdom will be impossible for someone seeking to know and see them.

72. "'Good men, suppose a trainee monk seeks the above place of peace and can cease the five hindrances, which are the hindrances of desire, anger, sleepiness, agitation, and doubt. He can also diligently cultivate the four abodes of mindfulness and seven factors of awakening. Attaining the state of the superior man and developing noble wisdom will then be possible for someone seeking to know and see them.

73. "'Good men, suppose there's a monk, an arhat who's ended the contaminants. He has accomplished the task, put down the heavy burden, won his own reward, and ended the bonds of existence. He's liberated by right knowledge and doesn't do nine things. What are the nine? He doesn't kill, steal, engage in sex, make false statements, abandon the path, follow desire, follow anger, follow fear, or follow delusion.

74. "'Good men, this is an arhat who has ended the contaminants, accomplished the task, put down the heavy burden, won his own reward, and ended the bonds of existence. He's liberated by right knowledge and avoids nine things.'

The Sakyan Teaching Is Always Steady

75. "Some wanderers of other religions make the statement, 'The ascetic Sakyans have an unsteady teaching.'

76. "You should respond to them, 'Good men, don't say that the ascetic Sakyans have a teaching that's unsteady. Why is that? The teaching of ascetic Sakyans is always steady and immovable. It's like a gate's threshold that's always steady and unmoved. The ascetic Sakyans are likewise. Their teaching is always steady without any movement.'

The Buddha's Knowledge of the Future

77. "Some wanderers of other religions make the statement, 'The ascetic Gautama entirely knows about past lives, but he doesn't know the future.'

78. "Monks, the knowledge of those wanderers of different trainings is different, and their examination of knowledge is also different. That statement is false. There's nothing in the past that the Tathagata doesn't know and see like seeing it with his own eyes. His knowledge about future lives arose with the knowledge of awakening.

79. "When past lives are false, unreal, not worth enjoying, or aren't beneficial, the Buddha doesn't relate them. If past lives are real but aren't worth enjoying or beneficial, the Buddha doesn't relate them. If past lives are real and worth enjoying but aren't beneficial, the Buddha doesn't relate them, either. If past lives are real, worth enjoying, and beneficial, the Tathagata entirely knows them and relates them afterward. The future and present are likewise.

80. "The Tathagata's discourses about the past, future, and present are timely, truthful, meaningful, profitable, about Dharma, about discipline, and without any falsehood. From the first night after the Buddha achieved complete awakening to the last night, everything he says in the meantime is true. That's why he's called the Tathagata.

81. "Furthermore, what the Tathagata says is according to the subject, and the subject is as he describes it. Therefore, he's called the Tathagata. What's the meaning of his being called the Completely Awakened One? The Buddha entirely comprehends what he knows and sees, what he ceased, and what he realized. Therefore, he's called the Completely Awakened One.

Views about the Past and Future

82. "Some wanderers of other religions make the statement, 'The world is eternal. Only this is true; the rest is false.' Others say, 'The world is impermanent. Only this is true; the rest is false.' Others say, 'The world is eternal and impermanent. Only this is true; the rest is false.' Others say, 'The world is neither eternal nor impermanent. Only this is true; the rest is false.'

83. "Others say, 'The world is limited. Only this is true; the rest is false.' Others say, 'The world is limitless. Only this is true; the rest is false.' Others say, 'The world is limited and limitless. Only this is true; the rest is false.' Others say, 'The world is neither limited nor limitless. Only this is true; the rest is false.'

84. "Others say, 'The soul is the body. This is true; the rest is false.' Others say, 'This is neither the soul nor the body. This is true; the rest is false.' Others say, 'The soul is different than the body. This is true; the rest is false.' Others say, 'This isn't different than the soul or the body. This is true; the rest is false.'

85. "Others say, 'The Tathagata has an end. This is true; the rest is false.' Others say, 'The Tathagata doesn't end. This is true; the rest is false.' Others say, 'The Tathagata ends and doesn't end. This is true; the rest is false.' Others say, 'The Tathagata neither ends nor doesn't end. This is true; the rest is false.'

86. "Those views are called 'views about the past.' Now, I'll explain this for you: 'This world is eternal … the Tathagata neither ends nor doesn't end. Only this is true; the rest is false.' These are views about the past. I will explain it for you.

87. "There are views about the future that I also explain. Which of these views about the future do I explain? 'The self is form. Its end comes from conception. This is true; the rest is false.' 'The self is formless. Its end comes from conception …' 'The self is form and formless. Its end comes from conception …' 'Self is neither form nor formless. Its end comes from conception …'

88. "'The self is limited …' 'The self is limitless …' 'The self is limited and limitless …' 'The self is neither limited nor limitless. Its end comes from conception …'

89. "'The self is pleasure. Its end comes from conception …' 'The self is without pleasure. Its end comes from conception …' 'The self has pain and pleasure. Its end comes from conception …' The self has no pain or pleasure. Its end comes from conception …'

90. "'The self is a single concept. Its end comes from conception …' 'The self is diverse concepts. Its end comes from conception …' 'The self is conceived as little. Its end comes from conception …' 'The self is conceived as measureless. Its end comes from conception. This is true; the rest is false.' These are the wrong views that are views about the future, which I have explained them.

91. "Some ascetics and priests have such theories and such views: 'This world is eternal. This is true; the rest is false … Self is conceived as measureless. This is true; the rest is false.' Those ascetics and priests also make such statements and such views: 'This is true; the rest is false.'

92. "The response to that should be, 'You really have made this theory? How is this world eternal? How is this true, and the rest is false? Such statements as these aren't permitted by the Buddha.' Why is that? In each of these views, there is bondage. It's reasonable to conclude there are no ascetics or priests that are our equals. How could they surpass us? These wrong views are just words that I don't discuss with you. Each one up to 'Self is conceived as measureless,' is likewise.

Views about the World's Creation

93. "Some ascetics and priests make this statement, 'The world created itself.' Other ascetics and priests say, 'The world was created by another.' Others say, 'It was created by itself and another.' Others say, 'It was neither created by itself nor by another. It spontaneously came into existence.'

94. "There are those ascetics and priests who say, 'The world created itself.' These ascetics and priests do so as a result of the dependent origination of contact. If they were separated from the causes of contact, saying that would be impossible. Why is that? Contact arises from the body of six senses. Feeling arises from contact. Craving arises from feeling. Grasping arises from craving. Existence arises from grasping. Birth arises from existence. Old, death, grief, sorrow, pain, and trouble arise from birth. This is the formation of the great mass of suffering.

95. "If the body of six senses doesn't exist, then there's no contact. If there's no contact, there's no feeling. If there's no feeling, there's no craving. If there's no craving, there's no grasping. If there's no grasping, there's no existence. If there's no existence, there's no birth. If there's no birth, there are no old age, death, grief, sorrow, pain, and trouble, or the formation of that great mass of suffering.

96. "They also say, 'This world is created by another.' They also say, 'This world is created by itself and by another.' They also say, 'This world is neither created by itself nor by another. It comes into existence spontaneously.' These views are the same. They exist because of contact. Without contact, they wouldn't exist."

How to Cease Such Wrong Views

97. The Buddha told the monks, "If you want to cease these wrong and evil views, you should cultivate the four abodes of mindfulness in three ways. In which three ways should a monk cultivate the four abodes of mindfulness to cease these evil things?

98. "A monk observes internal body as body. He's diligent and not negligent. His attention to it isn't lost, and he removes worldly craving and sorrow. He observes external body as body. He's diligent and not negligent. His attention to it isn't lost, and he removes worldly craving and sorrow. He observes internal and external body as body. He's diligent and not negligent. His attention to it isn't lost, and he removes worldly craving and sorrow. He observes feeling, mind, and principles in the same way. This is ceasing the myriad evil things by cultivating the four abodes of mindfulness in three ways.

99. "There are eight liberations. What are the eight? He observes form as form. This is the first liberation. He observes external form without an internal perception of form. This is the second liberation. He's liberated by purity. This is the third liberation. He goes beyond notions of form, ceases notions of resistance, and abides in the abode of space. This is the fourth liberation. He discards the abode of space and abides in the abode of consciousness. This is the fifth liberation. He discards the abode of consciousness and abides in the abode of nothingness. This is the sixth liberation. He discards the abode of nothingness and abides in the abode with and without conception. This is the seventh liberation. The samadhi of complete cessation is the eighth liberation."

100. Ananda was at the time standing behind the Bhagavan holding a fan. He adjusted his robes to bare his right shoulder and knelt on his right knee. With his palms together, he said to the Buddha, "Amazing, Bhagavan! This teaching is pure, sublime, and supreme! What shall be its name? How shall we uphold it?"

101. The Buddha told Ananda, 'This sutra's name is 'Purity.' You should uphold it as 'Purification.'"

102. When Ananda heard what the Buddha taught, he rejoiced and approved.

(While in contemplation, Sariputra realizes that no other ascetic or priest has ever or will ever surpass the Buddha's teaching. When he tells the Buddha about this, the Buddha questions him about how he knows this. Sariputra gives the Buddha a long list of reasons he can surmise that the Buddha's teaching is the best, which serves as a summary of the Dharma.)

1. Thus I have heard: One time, the Buddha was staying at the city of Nalanda in Pravarika's mango grove. He was accompanied by a large assembly of 1,250 monks.

2. It was then that the elder Sariputra was in a quiet dwelling and thought to himself, "I know with certainty that there's no ascetic or priest in the past, future, or present whose powers of wisdom, miraculous ability, virtue, or awakening match those of the Tathagata, Arhat, and Completely Awakened One."

3. Sariputra then emerged from his quiet dwelling and went to the Bhagavan. After bowing his head at the Buddha's feet, he sat to one side and said, "I was in a quiet dwelling and thought to myself, 'There's no ascetic or priest in the past, future, or present whose powers of wisdom, miraculous ability, virtue, or awakening match those of the Tathagata, Arhat, and Completely Awakening One.'"

4. The Buddha told Sariputra, "Good! It's good that you can make such a statement in front of the Buddha. By exclusively upholding the correct lion's roar, no other ascetic or priest will match you. How is it, Sariputra? Do you know the thoughts that were in the minds of Buddhas in the past? Did those Buddhas have such precepts, such teachings, such wisdom, such liberation, and such a hall of liberation?"

He replied, "I don't know them."

5. "How is it, Sariputra? Do you know the thoughts that will be in the minds of Buddhas in the future? Will those Buddhas have such precepts, such teachings, such wisdom, such liberation, and such halls of liberation?"

He replied, "I don't know them."

6. "How is it, Sariputra? What about the thoughts that are in my mind as the present Tathagata, Arhat, and Completely Awakened One? Do I have such precepts, such a teaching, such wisdom, such liberation, and such a hall of liberation?"

He replied, "I don't know them."

7. The Buddha again asked Sariputra, "You aren't able to know the thoughts in the minds of past, future, or present Tathagatas, Arhats, and Completely Awakened Ones, so why are you so certain about this thought you've had? What caused you to have this thought? You've exclusively upheld the lion's roar. If other ascetics and priests hear you say, 'I know with certainty that there's no ascetic or priest of the past, future, or present whose powers of wisdom, miraculous ability, virtue, or awakening match those of the Tathagata, Arhat, and Completely Awakened One,' they won't believe you."

8. Sariputra said to the Buddha, "I can't know the thoughts in the minds of past, future, or present Buddhas, but I do know the general character of the Buddha's teaching. The Tathagata has taught me the Dharma that becomes loftier and more sublime. He taught me the things that are dark and light, things that are conditioned and unconditioned, and things that are illuminating and unilluminating.

9. "The Tathagata's teaching becomes loftier and more sublime. Having heard the Dharma, I know each of its teachings to its endpoint. I believe in the Tathagata, Arhat, and Completely Awakened One. I believe in the Tathagata's skilled discernment of Dharma. I believe in the Tathagata's success in ceasing the myriad forms of suffering. Among good teachings, this one is the highest. The Bhagavan's wisdom is complete, and his miraculous ability is complete. None of the world's ascetics and priests can match the Tathagata. How could any arise who surpass him?

10. "The Dharma that the Bhagavan teaches has another superiority, which is his definition of the teaching. That definition of the teaching is the four abodes of mindfulness, four right efforts, four miraculous abilities, four dhyanas, five faculties, five powers, seven factors of awakening, and the noble eightfold path.

"This is an unsurpassed definition. His wisdom is complete, and his miraculous ability is complete. None of the world's ascetics and priests can match the Tathagata. How could any arise who surpass him?

11. "The Dharma that the Bhagavan teaches has another superiority, which is his definition of the senses. The senses refer to the eye and images, ear and sounds, nose and odors, tongue and flavors, body and touches, and mind and notions. The Tathagatas, Arhats, and Completely Awakened Ones in the past also defined the senses in this way, as the eye and images … mind and notions. Supposing there will be Tathagatas, Arhats, and Completely Awakened Ones in the future, they'll define the senses in this way, as the eye and images … mind and notions. Our present Tathagata, Arhat, and Completely Awakened One defines the senses as the eye and images … mind and notions.

"This teaching is unsurpassed, and nothing goes beyond it. His wisdom is complete, and his miraculous ability is complete. None of the world's ascetics and priests can match the Tathagata. How could any arise who surpass him?

12. "The Dharma that the Bhagavan teaches has another superiority, which is the way consciousness enters the womb. Entering the womb refers to this: The first entry into the womb is when [consciousness] enters the womb confused, remains there confused, and emerges confused. The second is when it enters unconfused but remains there confused and emerges confused. The third is when it enters unconfused, remains there unconfused, and emerges unconfused. When it enters unconfused, remains there unconfused, and emerges unconfused, that entry into the womb is the best.

"This teaching is unsurpassed, and nothing goes beyond it. His wisdom is complete, and his miraculous ability is complete. None of the world's ascetics and priests can match the Tathagata. How could any arise who surpass him?

13. "The Dharma that the Tathagata teaches has another superiority, which is the path. The path refers to this: Ascetics and priests use the various methods to enter a fixed samadhi of mind. Following that samadhi of mind, they cultivate the awakening factor of mindfulness, which relies on [the lack of] desire, relies on seclusion [from desire], relies on extinguishment [of desire], and relies on the escape [from desire] … they cultivate the awakening factor of the teachings … effort … joy … calm … samadhi … equanimity, which relies on [the lack of] desire, relies on seclusion, relies on extinguishment, and relies on the escape.

"This teaching is unsurpassed, and nothing goes beyond it. His wisdom is complete, and his miraculous ability is complete. None of the world's ascetics and priests can match the Tathagata. How could any arise who surpass him?

14. "The Dharma that the Tathagata teaches has another superiority, which is cessation. Cessation refers to this: The painful cessation that's gradually attained and inferior in both ways, painful cessation that's quickly attained and only inferior in that it's painful, pleasant cessation that's gradually attained and only inferior in that it's gradual, pleasant cessation that's quickly attained but doesn't extend far and called inferior because of that. When the present Tathagata quickly attained the pleasant cessation, it did extend far. Even the gods and humans saw his miracles."

15. Sariputra told the Buddha, "The Bhagavan's teaching is sublime and supreme. Down to the women, people can retain it, end the contaminants, and become uncontaminated. Their minds are liberated, and their wisdom is liberated. In the present life, they realize for themselves: 'Birth and death has been ended, the religious life has been established, and the task has been accomplished. I won't be subject to later existence.' "This is the Tathagata's teaching of the unsurpassed cessation. This Dharma is unsurpassed, his wisdom is complete, and his miraculous ability is complete. None of the world's ascetics and priests can match the Tathagata. How could they surpass him?

16. "The Dharma that the Tathagata teaches has another superiority, which is the purity of his words. The purity of his words means the Bhagavan doesn't speak to ascetics and priests with words that are without benefit or pointless. He doesn't speak to be superior and isn't partisan. His words are gentle and don't become immoderate. His words don't miss the target. This is the purity of his words.

"This Dharma is unsurpassed, his wisdom is complete, and his miraculous ability is complete. None of the world's ascetics and priests can match the Tathagata. How could they surpass him?

17. "The Dharma that the Tathagata teaches has another superiority, which is his attainments of vision. The attainments of vision refer to this: Ascetics and priests use various methods to enter a fixed samadhi of mind. Following that samadhi of mind, they visualize their head to their toes and observe their toes to their head. Inside and outside of their skin, there's only impure hair, nails, the five organs of liver, lungs, stomach, spleen, and kidneys, sweat, fat, marrow, brain, feces, urine, tears, and foul-smelling places of impurity. Not one of them is desirable. This is the first attainment of vision.

18. "Ascetics and priests use various methods to enter a fixed samadhi of mind. Following that samadhi of mind, they visualize the removal of the external impurities of skin and muscle and only visualize white bones and teeth. This is the second attainment of vision.

19. "Ascetics and priests use various methods to enter a fixed samadhi of mind. Following that samadhi of mind, they visualize the removal of the external impurities of skin, muscle, and white bones. They only visualize where their mind and consciousness dwell. Where does it exist in the present life? Where will it exist in a later life? If it's not ended in the present life and not ended in the later life, then it's not freed in the present life and not freed in the later life. This is the third attainment of vision.

20. "Ascetics and priests use various methods to enter a fixed samadhi of mind. Following that samadhi of mind, they visualize the removal of the external impurities of skin, muscle, and white bones. Once again, they investigate consciousness. Consciousness will be in a later life and not exist in the present life. The present life ended, but the later life won't have ended. It'll be freed from the present life but not freed from the later life. This is the fourth attainment of vision.

21. "Ascetics and priests use various methods to enter a fixed samadhi of mind. Following that samadhi of mind, they visualize the removal of the external impurities of skin and muscle and then remove the white bones. Once again, they investigate consciousness. It doesn't exist in the present life and doesn't exist in the later life. When both are ended, then it's freed from both. This is the fifth attainment of vision.

"This Dharma is unsurpassed, his wisdom is complete, and his miraculous ability is complete. None of the world's ascetics and priests can match the Tathagata. How could they surpass him?

22. "The Dharma that the Tathagata teaches has another superiority, which is his explanation of eternalism. Eternalism refers to this: Ascetics and priests use various methods to enter a fixed samadhi of mind. Following that samadhi of mind, they recollect twenty eons of formation and destruction. They say, 'The world is eternal. This is true; anything else is false. Why is that? From my recollection, I know there have been these eons of formation and destruction. I don't know about anything further in the past, nor do I know about future eons of formation and destruction.' This person speaks without knowledge morning and night, 'The world is eternal. Only this is true; anything else is false.' This is the first form of eternalism.

23. "Ascetics and priests use various methods to enter a fixed samadhi of mind. Following that samadhi of mind, they recollect forty eons of formation and destruction. They then say, 'The world is eternal. This is true; anything else is false. Why is that? From my recollection, I know there have been these eons of formation and destruction. I could go beyond this knowledge of past eons of formation and destruction, but don't I know about future eons of formation and destruction.' This person speaks without knowledge morning and night, 'The world is eternal. Only this is true; anything else is false.' This is the second form of eternalism.

24. "Ascetics and priests use various methods to enter a fixed samadhi of mind. Following that samadhi of mind, they recollect eighty eons of formation and destruction. They say, 'The world is eternal. [This is true;] anything else is false. Why is that? From my recollection, I know there have been these eons of formation and destruction. I could go beyond this knowledge of past eons of formation and destruction, and I fully know about future eons of formation and destruction.' This person speaks without knowledge morning and night, 'The world is eternal. Only this is true; anything else is false.' This is the third form of eternalism.

"This Dharma is unsurpassed, his wisdom is complete, and his miraculous ability is complete. None of the world's ascetics and priests can match the Tathagata. How could they surpass him?

25. "The Dharma that the Tathagata teaches has another superiority, which is examination. Examination refers to when ascetics and priests examine it using their perceptions: 'That other mind has such a tendency, and this mind has such a tendency.' When these perceptions arise in their minds, they're sometimes true and sometimes false. This is the first examination.

26. "Ascetics and priests examine it not using perception. They might listen to gods or non-humans and claim that they say, 'Thus is your mind; thus is your mind.' This is also sometimes true and sometimes false. This is the second examination.

27. "Some ascetics and priests examine it not using their perceptions, nor do they listen to gods or non-humans. They examine themselves, or they listen to someone else, and they claim, 'Thus is your mind; thus is your mind.' This is also sometimes true and sometimes false. This is the third examination.

28. "Some ascetics and priests examine it not using perception, don't listen to gods or non-humans, nor is it their own or another's examination themselves. After eliminating perception and examination, they attain a fixed state of samadhi. Examining another's mind, they say, 'Thus is your mind; thus is your mind.' Such examination is true. This is the fourth examination.

"This Dharma is unsurpassed, his wisdom is complete, and his miraculous ability is complete. None of the world's ascetics and priests can match the Tathagata. How could they surpass him?

29. "The Dharma that the Tathagata teaches has another superiority, which is his instruction. Instruction refers to this: Sometimes there's a person who doesn't go contrary to his instructions. They end the contaminants and become uncontaminated. Their mind is liberated, and their wisdom is liberated. In the present life, they realize for themselves: 'Birth and death has been ended, the religious life has been established, and the task has been accomplished. I won't be subject to another existence.' This is the first instruction.

30. "Sometimes, a person doesn't go contrary to his instructions. They end the five lower bonds. They don't return to this world when they attain Nirvana. This is the second instruction.

31. "Sometimes, a person doesn't go contrary to his instructions. They end the three bonds, weaken lust, anger, and delusion, and become a once-returner. They return to this world and then attain Nirvana. This is the third instruction.

32. "Sometimes, a person doesn't go contrary to his instructions. They end the three bonds and attain stream-entry. They are reborn seven times at most, surely achieve the fruit of the path, and won't fall to bad destinations. This is the fourth instruction.

"This Dharma is unsurpassed, his wisdom is complete, and his miraculous ability is complete. None of the world's ascetics and priests can match the Tathagata. How could they surpass him?

33. "The Tathagata's teaching of Dharma has another superiority, which is his teaching Dharma for others and leading them to the purity of the precepts. The purity of the precepts refers to this: There are ascetics and priests whose speech is honest. They lack duplicity and are always respectful. They eliminate sleepiness, don't harbor wrong deceit, don't speak falsehoods, and don't predict the fortunes and misfortunes of worldly people. Nor do they praise themselves or claim to have attained things from others. They make themselves plain to others, seek the benefit of others, meditate, and cultivate knowledge. Their eloquence is unobstructed, their attention is focused and undistracted, and they are diligent and not negligent.

"This Dharma is unsurpassed, his wisdom is complete, and his miraculous ability is complete. None of the world's ascetics and priests can match the Tathagata. How could they surpass him?

34. "The Dharma that the Tathagata teaches has another superiority, which is the knowledge of liberation. The knowledge of liberation refers to this: The Bhagavan contemplated in his mind about the dependent origination of others: 'This person is a stream-entrant. This one is a once-returner. This one is a non-returner. This one is an arhat.'

"This Dharma is unsurpassed, his wisdom is complete, and his miraculous ability is complete. None of the world's ascetics and priests can match the Tathagata. How could they surpass him?

35. "The Dharma that the Tathagata teaches has another superiority, which is the direct knowledge of one's own past lives. Ascetics and priests use various methods to enter a fixed samadhi of mind. Following that samadhi, they recollect innumerable events of their own past lives: One birth, two births … a hundred thousand births, an eon of formation, or an eon of destruction. 'Thus were my innumerable birth places. My names were thus. My castes and clans were thus. My life spans were thus. My meals were thus. My pains and pleasures were thus. I was born there from here, and I was born here from there .' Whatever various aspects there were, they recollect their own past lives and the events of innumerable eons. Day and night, they're constantly aware of past times they've passed through. 'Here was form. Here was formlessness. Here was conception. Here was no conception. Here there was neither [conception nor] no conception.' They fully recollect and fully know it.

"This Dharma is unsurpassed, his wisdom is complete, and his miraculous ability is complete. None of the world's ascetics and priests can match the Tathagata. How could they surpass him?

36. "The Dharma that the Tathagata teaches has another superiority, which is the knowledge of the heavenly eye. The knowledge of the heavenly eye refers to this: Ascetics and priests use various methods to enter a fixed samadhi of mind. Following that samadhi of mind, they observe sentient beings as they die and are born. These beings have good forms and bad forms, good destinations and bad destinations, and are beautiful or ugly depending on their actions. They fully see and fully know them.

37. "Some sentient beings do bad physical actions, bad verbal actions, and bad mental actions. They slander the noble ones, believe wrong and mistaken views, and fall to the three bad destinies when their bodies break up and their lives end.

38. "Some sentient beings do good physical actions, good verbal actions, and good mental actions. They don't slander the noble ones, believe the practice of right view, and are born among gods or humans when their bodies break up and their lives end. With the purity of the heavenly eye, ascetics and priests observe sentient beings and truly know and see them.

"This Dharma is unsurpassed, his wisdom is complete, and his miraculous ability is complete. None of the world's ascetics and priests can match the Tathagata. How could they surpass him?

39. "The Dharma that the Tathagata teaches has another superiority, which is the realization of his miraculous abilities. The realization of miraculous abilities refers to this: Ascetics and priests use various methods to enter a fixed samadhi of mind. Following that samadhi of mind, they perform innumerable miraculous powers. They can make one body become innumerable bodies and combine innumerable bodies into one body. Stone walls are no obstacle to them, and they can sit cross-legged in the sky like a bird flying. They enter and exit the earth as though it were water and walk on water as though it were land. Their bodies produce smoke and fire like flames burning timber. They touch the sun and moon with their hand and stand as high as the Brahma Heaven.

40. "If ascetics and priests declare these miraculous abilities, the response to them should be: 'There are these miraculous abilities; it's not that they don't exist. These miraculous abilities are crude and inferior, something practiced by ordinary men. They aren't cultivated by noble people.

41. "If a monk isn't defiled by forms that are craved by the world, then he would practice in this fashion after secluding himself from them. This is what's called the noble person's miraculous ability. Without delighting in forms or being disgusted by them, he then would practice in this fashion after secluding himself from them. This is what's called a noble person's miraculous ability. Giving up both the forms that the world craves and that it doesn't crave, he cultivates complete equanimity, focusing his attention and not losing it. This is what's called the noble person's miraculous ability.

42. "He's like the Bhagavan who strived courageously, possesses great wisdom, knowledge, and awareness, and attained the supreme awakening. Therefore, he's called the Completely Awakened One.

43. "The Bhagavan isn't pleased by desires, either. He isn't pleased by the practices of crude and ordinary men, nor does he toil in mortifications. If he wishes to eliminate bad qualities, then the Bhagavan's seclusion gives rise to joy and happiness with perception and examination, and he traverses the first dhyana. The second, third, and fourth dhyanas are likewise. He strived courageously, possesses great wisdom, knowledge, awareness, and attained the supreme awakening. Therefore, he's called the Completely Awakened One."

44. The Buddha told Sariputra, "Suppose someone from another religion and a different training comes and asks you, 'Weren't the ascetics and priests of the past equals of the ascetic Gautama?' What would be your answer? Again, they ask, 'Won't the ascetics and priests of the future be equals of the ascetic Gautama?' What would be your answer? Again, they ask, 'Aren't the ascetics and priests of the present equals of the ascetic Gautama?' What would be your answer?"

45. Sariputra then said to the Buddha, "If I were asked, 'Weren't the ascetics and priests of the past equals of the Buddha?' I would answer, 'They were.' If I was asked, 'Won't the ascetics and priests of the future be equals of the Buddha?' I would answer, 'They will be.' If I was asked, 'Aren't the ascetics and priests of the present equals of the Buddha?' I would answer, 'They aren't.'"

46. The Buddha told Sariputra, "What if that ascetic from another religion again asks, 'Why do you say some are and some aren't?' What would be your answer?"

47. Sariputra said, "My response to them would be, 'The complete and correct Buddhas of the past were equals of the Tathagata, and the complete and correct Buddhas of the future will be equals of the Tathagata. I myself have heard from the Buddha that it's impossible for there to be other complete and correct Buddhas of the present who are equals of the Tathagata.' Bhagavan, just as I've heard it, I would thus answer them, relying on and aligning with the Dharma. Would there be any error in that?

48. The Buddha said, "Such an answer would rely on and align with the Dharma; you wouldn't contradict it. Why is that so? The complete and correct Buddhas of the past were my equals, and the complete and correct Buddhas of the future will be my equals, but it isn't possible for there to be two Buddhas who arise in the world in the present."

49. Venerable Udayin was standing behind the Bhagavan fanning him. The Buddha said to him, "Udayin, you should observe that the Bhagavan is satisfied with little desire. Now, I have great miraculous power and great majestic virtue but also satisfied with little desire. I'm not pleased to be among desires. Udayin, if other ascetics and priests would endeavor in this teaching through hardship to attain one thing, they should erect a banner and announce to the four quarters, 'Today, the Tathagata is satisfied with little desire. Now, observe that the Tathagata is satisfied with little desire. The Tathagata has great miraculous power and great majestic virtue, but he doesn't make use of desires.'"

50. Venerable Udayin then adjusted his robes to bare his right shoulder, knelt on his right knee, and saluted the Buddha was his hands together. "Extraordinary, Bhagavan! Few have as satisfied with little desire as the Bhagavan! The Bhagavan has great miraculous power and great majestic virtue, but he doesn't make use of desires. If again some other ascetic or priest endeavored in this teaching through hardship to attain one thing, they could erect a banner and announce to the four quarters, 'Today, the Bhagavan is satisfied with little desire …'

51. "Sariputra, you should teach this Dharma frequently for the monks, nuns, laymen, and laywomen. If they should have any doubts about the Buddha, Dharma, Sangha, or path, they won't be tangled in doubt after hearing this teaching."

52. The Bhagavan then told Sariputra, "You should frequently teach this Dharma for the monks, nuns, laymen, and laywomen. Why is that? Those who have doubts about the Buddha, Dharma, Sangha, or path will have them resolved when they hear you give this teaching."

Sariputra responded, "Very well, Bhagavan!"

53. After that, Sariputra frequently taught this Dharma for the monks, nuns, laymen, and laywomen. Because they purified themselves, it was called the "Purification Sutra."

54. When Sariputra heard what the Buddha taught, he rejoiced and approved.

DA 19 THE GREAT CONGREGATION (DN 20) [T 1.79b2]

(Parallel texts include DN 20, DN 32, T 19, SN 1.37, SA 1192, and T100.105.)

(This sutra depicts an occasion when a large gathering of gods and spirits came to hear the Buddha teach and see the assembly of monks. As such, it appears to represent a who's who of Buddhist mythology. This version of the sutra contains verses parallel to passages in both DN 20 and DN 32, suggesting that there was an older source for all of these related texts.)

1. Thus I have heard: One time, the Buddha was staying at Kapilavastu in the country of the Sakyans. He was accompanied by a large assembly of five hundred monks, all of whom were arhats. Marvelous gods had also gathered from the ten directions to honor the Tathagata and the sangha of monks.

2. It was then that four Suddhâvasa gods up in heaven each thought to themselves, "Today, the Bhagavan is staying at Kapilavastu in the country of the Sakyans. He's accompanied by a large assembly of five hundred monks, all of whom are arhats. Marvelous gods have also gathered from the ten directions to honor the Tathagata and the sangha of monks. Now, let's go visit the Bhagavan as well. We'll each praise the Tathagata with a verse."

3. Those four Suddhâvasa gods then disappeared from their heaven and arrived at Kapilavastu of the Sakyans in the time it takes a strong man to flex his arm. Once they had arrived, those four Suddhâvasa gods bowed their heads at the Buddha's feet and stood to one side.

4. The first Suddhâvasa god went before the Buddha and praised him with this verse:

• "Today, a great congregation
Of gods and spirits has gathered.
They've come for the Dharma
And to bow to the supreme assembly."

5. After speaking this verse, that god withdrew and stood to one side. Another Suddhâvasa god then composed a verse:

• "Monks see the many defilements;
Their upright minds guard against them.
Desire is like the sea swallowing rivers;
The wise guard their faculties against it."

6. Having spoken this verse, that god withdrew and stood to one side. Another Suddhâvasa god then composed a verse:

• "Remove thorns, level craving's chasm,
And fill the trench of ignorance.
Trek alone to the site of purity
Like excellent, well-trained elephants."

7. Having spoken this verse, that god withdrew and stood to one side. Another Suddhâvasa god composed a verse:

• "Taking refuge in the Buddha,
One never falls to a bad destiny.
They abandon their human forms
And receive the pure bodies of gods."

8. After those four Suddhâvasa gods had presented these verses, the Bhagavan approved of them. They bowed at the Buddha's feet, circled him three times, and suddenly disappeared.

9. Not long after they left, the Buddha told the monks, "There's a great congregation of gods today! There's a great gathering of gods today! Marvelous gods from the ten directions have come to honor and look upon the Tathagata and sangha of monks. Monks, the Tathagatas, Arhats, and Completely Awakened Ones of the past also had great congregations of gods, just as I do today. The Tathagatas, Arhats, and Completely Awakened Ones in the future will have great congregations of gods, just as I do today.

10. "Monks, this great congregation of gods today consists of spirits and sublime gods from the ten directions who've come to honor and look upon the Tathagata and sangha of monks. They also praise their names in verses that they speak for you.

11. "Monks, you should know:

• "Living in the Earth's mountains and valleys,
They hide when they see terrible things.
Those wearing all white clothes
Are pure and immaculate.
When the gods and people hear this,
They take refuge in the god Brahma.
• "Now, I will praise their names
In order, without any missing.
This assembly of gods has come today;
You monks should know them.
• "All the worldly people's knowledge
Doesn't see a hundredth of them.

How then could they see
The assembly of 70,000 demon spirits?
If they saw 100,000 demons,
They haven't seen all of them on one side.
How could they see the demon spirits
That are everywhere under heaven?

12. "Among the earth spirits, there are 7,000 yaksas of various kinds that possess miraculous powers, appearances, forms, and names. With delighted thoughts, they've come to the assembly of monks in this grove.

13. "The spirit of Mount Haimavata leads 6,000 demons and yaksas of various kinds that possess miraculous powers, appearances, forms, and names. With delighted thoughts, they've come to the assembly of monks in this grove.

14. "The spirit Sata leads 3,000 demons and yaksas of various kinds that possess miraculous abilities, appearances, forms, and names. With delighted thoughts, they've come to the assembly of monks in this grove.

15. "These 16,000 demon spirits and yaksas of various kinds possess miraculous abilities, appearances, forms, and names. With delighted thoughts, they've come to the assembly of monks in this grove.

16. "There's also the spirit Visvamitra who lives in Asvaka and leads 500 demons. They possess miraculous abilities and majestic virtue.

17. "There's also the spirit Kumbhira who lives on Mount Vepula of Rajagrha. He leads countless demon spirits who respectfully surround him.

18. "There's also the Eastern God King Dhrtarastra who leads gandharva spirits that possess great majestic virtue. He has ninety-one sons who are all named 'Indra' and possess great miraculous power.

19. "There's the Southern God King Virudhaka who leads naga kings that possess great majestic virtue. He has ninety-one sons who are also named 'Indra' and possess great miraculous power.

20. "There's the Western God King Virupaksa who leads kumbhanda demons that possess great majestic virtue. He has ninety-one sons who are also named 'Indra' and possess great miraculous power.

21. "There's the Northern God King named Vaisravana who leads yaksa demons that possess great majestic virtue. He has ninety-one sons who are also named 'Indra' and possess great miraculous power.

22. "These four god kings are the protectors of the world and possess great majestic virtue. Their bodies shine as they come to visit Kapilavastu."

23. The Bhagavan then wanted to vanquish their illusory and deluded thoughts, so he composed this incantation: "Deceptive (maya) is [Kiti]; deceptive is [Kiti]! [So is Vikiti; so is Vikiti]! Candana, Kamasrestha, Kunikantha, Nikantha, Pranada, Upapancaka, the charioteer of gods Matali, the gandharva Citrasena, Nara, Janavrsabha, Siva, Mucalinda, Visvamitra, Yugandhara, [Pancasikha], Tumburu, and Suryavarcasa.

24. "God kings, gandharvas, and raksasas such as these all possess miraculous abilities, appearances, and forms. With delighted thoughts, they have come to visit the assembly of monks in this grove."

25. The Bhagavan then created another incantation:

• "Then, the naga Nagasa came from Vaisala with Taksaka.
The Yamuna dhrtarastras came, as did [Tiva] with their kin.
Kambalas, asvataras, and nagas of great miraculous ability have come.
The great naga Airavana and the naga [Vima] have come.
"Of the clear-eyed heavenly birds that hunt the naga kings,
The colorful Suparna came to the grove from the sky.
The naga kings are unafraid, for the Buddha [makes them safe from Suparna].
Greeting them with gentle words, Suparna took refuge in the Buddha."

26. The Bhagavan then created an incantation for the asuras:

• "Defeated by Vajrahastena, the asuras fled to the ocean;
Vasavassi frightened them with his great miraculous power.
The asuras were Kalakanja, Mahabhimsa, [Danaveghasa],
Vemacitra, Sucitra, Prahlada, Mucilinda, and [Nava].
A hundred of [Asi-?] Bali's children, all named Vairocana,
[prepared Bali's army and approached] the fortunate Rahu:
'Now is the time, sir. The monks have gathered in a grove.'"

27. The Bhagavan again created an incantation for the gods:

• "The gods of water, earth, fire, and air have come.
Varuna, goddesses Varuni, Soma, and Yasas have come.
Maitra and Varuna's host of gods with great miraculous power have come.
These ten groups of gods have a variety of colors.
With great miraculous power, authority, and appearances, they were glorious.
They're delighted to come to the assembled monks in this grove.
The gods Visnu, Sahali, Agatas, and Yama [have come.]
The Mandavavalahaka [gods] came with the constellations leading them.
The gods who lived on the moon have come with the moon leading them.
The gods who lived on the sun have come with the sun leading them.
The munificent Indra, [known as] Vasava, Sakra, and the fortress-breaker, has come.
Sukla and Kadamba Karuna have come.
[Vemaniva?], supreme Avadatagrahya, and [Vepalana?] have come.
Sadamatta, Haritaka, and Misarikas have come.
Parjanya came with a thunderclap, who brings rain in the four directions.
The gods corrupted by play, Syama, Mahasyama, Manusa, and Amanusottama, have come.
The gods corrupted in spirit, too.
Again, the Haraya gods have come as well as the gods clothed in red.
The gods of great miraculous power, Varaha and Mahavaraha, have come.
The gods Ksemaka, Tusita, and Yama and countless krsnakas (black ones),
Lambi[taka] and Lambasrestha, gods of brilliant names, and [Isa?],
The Nirmanaratayah have come, and the Paranirmita[vasavartin], too.
The gods Agnisikhopama and Sabhika [have come] with goddesses who burn brightly.
Aristhaka, [Roya], gods like the flax flower, [Cabadharma?], Acyuta, and Aneka, [Suddhaka Rucika] has come, and Vasavanesi has arrived, too.
These are the sixty kinds of gods."

28. The Bhagavan again created an incantation for sixty-eight priests of the five penetrations:

• "The sage kings are approaching the forest of Kapilavastu.
Beidiiʒiät'o is coming.
Ts'amosatdei, Anggiĕ, and Beidimɪəundɪi are coming.
Peik'enyiäts'ak'ie, ʃiılisä, and Buahaniakt'o are coming.
The god Brahma, Deinabua, and Beidimɪəundɪi are coming.
King Kɪusatlɪi, ɪindɪilomuaʒɪäla, and Anggie and Puănʒɪä are coming.
Great King Ofɪɪuʌndəu and Akɪudeiləuyiəkt'o are coming.
Lɪukpei and Kɪusatlɪi are coming.
K'ielɪəŋiĕ, K'ieyiiladanhei, Dzuəibɪuibɪuyiä, and Pɪuktololɪisasendabo are coming.
King Deinak'ie and Bɪuibuahayiĕk'ieyiä thus are coming.
Kings Buala and Miuʌndatʻokiemɪuk are coming.
Iĕndalalaəumeikie, Bɪudalomo, Muak'iehei At'ɪəkʃɪaŋkɪupiĕyio are coming.
Heilanniakk'ie and Pɪəubeilɪimɪuəiyiolıi are thus coming, and then King Buahau and Miĕtolo are thus coming.
King Buasiĕbɪuətlɪĕ and ʃɪəudala thus are coming.
Great King ɪilıiyiäts'a and Senabo thus are coming.
King Puănʒɪäbuayio and Bualɪidiiʃɪĕa thus are coming.
Great King ɪuətalan, Bɪɛnbɪĕbualɪimualɪi, ʃɪubuaheidanamua, and Abuandii,
King K'omualɪi, Agɪu, and Siĕlɪidanabuadii are coming.
King ʃiĕbei and Great King ʃiiiinɪətmiĕnɪət and Bɪəubualəu thus are coming.
Great King Buatdabualɪi, Kɪusatlɪi, Muadeiʃɪu, and ʃiihandei,
King ʃɪɛmbualɪi and Siəudalalaəu thus are coming.
Aha Iĕndəuləu is coming.
Mualayio, Yiosolɪiyiot'a, Beidiideibo, and Ahabeilɪisii are coming.
fiəŋayiäləu, Bualamɪuktʃɪäyiämo, and Ayiit'o are coming.
King Iĕtmuayiäʃɪĕ, Biina, and Buats'amua,
King ñolɪikando, Yiobiidopuattʃɪĕ, and Yioʒɪĕsïupuanalomuaso,
King Yiäsiĕtayiəu, Heilanniak, Sobuanna, Piidʑïəudotɪiyiäsïu, Laʃɪĕpuala, Beidaɪuətda, Buahabuasa, Buahabuabuamɪəu, Sahasä, T'əmp'ɪukʃɪäda, ʃɪäpɪuʌpʒɪäsä, Aladanamua, Puängiĕsïeutatʃ'ɪäla, Kandəpbua, Säha, Buasattadeisobei are approaching
Where the monks have gathered in this grove Diibuandɪi."

29. There was then another 1,000 five-powered priests for whom the Tathagata also compiled an incantation.

30. The first Brahma king of this world and the gods of the Brahma heavens possessed miraculous abilities. There was a Brahma prince named Tisya who possessed great miraculous power.

31. There was also the other Brahma kings of the ten directions, each of whom was surrounded by their followers as they came. There was a great Brahma king from beyond 1,000 worlds who saw the great congregations of the Bhagavan. He came quickly with his followers surrounding him.

32. King Mara saw the great congregation around the Bhagavan and had a cruel thought. He thought to himself, "I'll lead an army of demons to go and destroy that entire congregation. I won't let any of them escape!"

33. He then commanded his fourfold army to beat their chariots with their hands, which sounded like crashing thunder. None who saw them weren't frightened by it. He sent a great storm of wind, rain, lightning, and thunder at that great congregation that surrounded Kapila Grove.

34. The Buddha addressed the monks who were delighted with this assembly: "You should know that today Mara's host is coming with evil intent!"

35. He then said in verse:

• "Now, you should be respectful
And establish the Buddha's Dharma.
You must destroy this host of Mara
Like elephants trampling flowers and grass.
• Focus your attention without carelessness
And perfect the pure precepts.
Still your minds, think naturally,
And guard your intentions well.
• If in the correct teaching
You can not be careless,
You'll be freed from old age and death
And forever end the source of suffering.
• After disciples hear this,
They diligently make effort.
Transcending the myriad desires,
Not a single hair of theirs is disturbed.
• This assembly is the greatest;
It possesses great knowledge and renown.
It's disciples are courageous
And respected by the community."

36. The gods, spirits, yaksas, and sages of five powers who surrounded the Buddha saw what Mara was doing and were shocked like never before. When the Buddha taught this Dharma, 84,000 gods became removed from dust and free of defilement, and their vision of the Dharma was purified.

37. The gods, nagas, yaksas, spirits, asuras, garudas, kimnara, mahoragas, humans, and non-humans who heard what the Buddha taught rejoiced and approved.

DA 20 AMBASTHA
(DN 3) [T 1.82a7]

(Direct parallels include DN 3 and an alternate Chinese translation, T 20.)

(A priest hears about the arrival of the Buddha near his town and sends a pupil to investigate whether he truly has the thirty-two signs of a great man. The pupil is arrogant towards the Buddha, who humbles him with a story about his family's humble background. He then lays out a full description of the gradual path to awakening.)

1. Thus I have heard: One time, the Buddha traveled to Kosala accompanied by a large assembly of 1,250 monks. They went to the Kosala priest village of Icchanangala and stopped to rest in a citron grove.

Puskarasarin Sends Ambastha to Meet the Buddha

2. The priest Puskarasarin had stopped in the village of Utkata, which was bountiful and thriving. King Prasenajit had bestowed this village to Puskarasarin as the priest's due. This priest was descended from seven generations of fathers and mothers who were genuine [priests], so he wasn't slighted by others. He had mastered the three Vedas and could discern all the various kinds of scriptures. He was also skilled in the techniques of [recognising] the great man's signs and [performing] sacrifices and rituals. He had 500 disciples whom he taught without exception.

3. His best student disciple, named Ambastha, was descended from seven generations of fathers and mothers who were genuine [priests], so he wasn't slighted by others. He had mastered the three Vedas and could discern all the various kinds of scriptures. He was also skilled in the techniques of [recognising] the great man's signs and [performing] sacrifices and rituals. He had 500 student disciples as well whom he taught without exception, the same as his teacher.

4. The priest Puskarasarin heard: "The ascetic Gautama of the Sakya clan, who had left home and achieved awakening, has arrived at the Kosala priest village of Icchanangala and stopped to rest in a citron grove. He's accompanied by a large assembly of 1,250 monks and possesses a great reputation that's heard throughout the world: 'He's a Tathagata, an Arhat, and a Completely Awakened One who has perfected the ten epithets. Among gods, worldly men, and demons, whether they're Mara and the gods or ascetics and priests, he's self-realized and teaches the Dharma for others. It's good in the beginning, middle, and end, complete in content and expression, and purifies the religious life.'"

5. [Puskarasarin said:] "Since he's a realized person, I should go and meet him! Now, I'd like to examine that ascetic Gautama to be certain he has the 32 signs. His name is heard everywhere, but is what they say about him true? Is there some way I could see the Buddha's signs?'

6. Again, he thought, "Now, my disciple Ambastha is descended from seven generations of fathers and mothers who were genuine [priests], so he's not slighted by others. He has mastered the three Vedas and can discern all the various kinds of scriptures. He's also skilled in the techniques of [recognising] the great man's signs and [performing] sacrifices and rituals. I can just send this man to examine the Buddha; he'll recognise if he possesses the signs or not."

7. The priest then summoned Ambastha and told him, "Go examine that ascetic Gautama and determine if he has the 32 signs or if he is a fake."

8. Ambastha then asked his teacher, "How will I examine Gautama's signs and know if he is a fake?"

9. His teacher replied, "Now, I'll tell you: If he has perfected the 32 signs of a great man, he's certain to arrive at [one of] two places, without a doubt.

10. "If he stays at home, he'll become a wheel-turning noble king, a king who rules over the world's four quarters, educating the people and managing the affairs of state with the Dharma. He'll be endowed with seven treasures: 1. The golden wheel treasure, 2. the white elephant treasure, 3. the blue horse treasure, 4. the magic jewel treasure, 5. the beautiful woman treasure, 6. the householder treasure, and 7. the general treasure. That king will have a thousand sons who are courageous and knowledgeable. He'll defeat his enemies without the use of military weapons. He'll make the world peaceful, and the people won't have anything to fear.

11. "If he's unhappy with the world and leaves home to pursue the path, then he'll become a Tathagata, Arhat, and Completely Awakened One who perfects the ten epithets. This is how you'll know if Gautama is fake or genuine."

Ambastha Behaves Badly

12. After he accepted his teacher's instruction, Ambastha prepared horses and a treasure chariot. At daybreak, he led his five hundred student disciples to the citron grove. Arriving there, he dismounted his chariot and proceeded on foot to the Bhagavan. He stood when the Bhagavan sat and sat when the Bhagavan stood while they were discussing a topic.

13. The Buddha asked the student, "Have you talked with elder, senior, and great priests like this in the past?"

The student asked the Buddha, "Why do you ask that?"

14. The Buddha told the student, "When I'm sitting, you stand, and you sit when I'm standing while we have this discussion. Is this the way you and your teacher discuss a teaching?"

The student said to the Buddha, "We priests discuss a teaching while both are sitting, both are standing, or both are laying down. Now, ascetics are disfigured and single. They're despicable, inferior, and practice a dark teaching. I don't ever sit or get up when I'm discussing something with such people."

15. The Bhagavan then said to him, "You, student, aren't disciplined yet."

When the student heard the Bhagavan call him "you" but before he heard "aren't disciplined yet," he became angry and disparaged the Buddha: "These Sakyans are so envious, evil, and lacking in courtesy!"

16. The Buddha asked the student, "What did the Sakyans do to you?"

The student said, "There was a time once when my teacher was in Kapilavastu of the Sakyas for some minor reason. There was a group of Sakyans who had gathered in a meeting hall for some minor reason, too. When they saw us coming from a distance, they slighted and teased us. They didn't follow the rules of courtesy nor treat each other with respect."

17. The Buddha told the student, "When they return to their own country, the Sakyans amuse themselves as they want like birds flying to their tree nests, coming and going freely. Sakyans amuse themselves freely in their own country in the same way."

18. The student said to the Buddha, "There are four castes in the world: The warriors, the priests, the householders, and the workers. The other three castes always honor, respect, and support the priests. The customs of the Sakyans should be the same. Those Sakyans are low class, despicable, and inferior people, yet they disrespected us priests."

Ambastha Is Brought to Heel

19. The Bhagavan then silently thought to himself, "This youth has repeatedly spoken insultingly and [acted like someone of] low class. Perhaps I'll tell him about his history to discipline him." The Buddha asked the student, "What is your clan?"

The student replied, "My clan is Svararaja."

20. The Buddha told the student, "That clan of yours is from the servant class of the Sakyas."

His 500 student disciples raised an uproar, saying to the Buddha, "Don't say such things as 'This student is from the servant class of the Sakyas'! Why is that? This great student is a legitimate son of his clan. He's handsome looking, eloquent, accommodating, and broadly learned. It's enough to converse with Gautama."

21. The Buddha then told the 500 students, "If your teacher is not entirely as you say, I'll set aside your teacher and discuss the matter with you. If your teacher is superior in the ways you say, then you ought to be quiet, and I'll discuss it with your teacher."

The 500 students said to the Buddha, "We'll be quiet and listen to you discuss it with our teacher." The 500 students all fell silent.

22. The Bhagavan then told Ambastha, "Going back to a time in the distant past, there was a king named Iksvaku. This king had four sons. One was named Ulkamukha, the second was named Hastikasirsa, the third was name Karakanda, and the fourth was named Opura.

23. "The king's four sons were young and committed offenses. The king banished them from the country, and they went south of the Himalaya Mountains to live in a teak tree grove. The mothers and family members of those four sons missed them, so they held a meeting and went to King Iksvaku. They said, 'Great king, you should know that we've been separated from your four sons for a long time. We would like to go see them.'

"The king replied, 'If you want to go, do as you like.'

24. "After the mothers and their relatives heard the king's instruction, they went to the teak tree grove south of the Himalaya Mountains where the four sons lived. Then the mothers said [to each other], 'I'll give my daughter to your son, and you give your daughter to my son. Match them up to be married as husband and wife. They'll have handsome-looking sons.'

25. "King Iksvaku then heard that the mothers of his four sons had given their daughters to be their wives, and they had given birth to handsome sons. The king was delighted and exclaimed, 'They are true Sakyans! True Sakyan boys!' They were able to stand and survived on their own, so they were called Sakya as a result.

26. "King Iksvaku was the first of the Sakya lineage. The king had a servant named Disa who was good-looking. She had a relationship with a priest and became pregnant as a result. She gave birth to a boy who fell to the ground able to speak. He would look for his parents and say, 'You must bathe me! Remove this filth! I'll love you when I'm older!' Because he could speak, her first-born son was called Svararaja.

27. "Just as present-day people are frightened when a first-born son can speak and call him 'Terrible,' he was likewise. Being born able to speak, they called him Svararaja. From that time to today, his priest clan's name has been Svararaja."

28. The Buddha asked the student: "Haven't you heard this history of your clan before when you visited senior, elder, and great priests?"

29. The student remained silent and didn't reply. The Buddha asked him again, but he still didn't reply. The Buddha asked him a third time, and then said to the student: "I've asked you a question three times. You ought to answer promptly, for when someone doesn't answer me, their head is smashed into seven pieces by the guhyaka warriors who are standing at my side armed with metal hammers."

30. The guhyaka warriors armed with metal hammers hovered in the air over the student's head. If he didn't answer the question right then, their iron hammers would've come down and smashed the student's head. The Buddha told the student, "Look for yourself."

31. The student looked, and he saw the guhyaka warriors hovering in the air with their metal hammers. When he saw that, he was frightened, and his hair stood on end. He got up and moved closer to the Bhagavan, hoping the Bhagavan would protect him. He said, "Ask me again, Bhagavan. I will answer you now."

32. The Buddha then asked the student: "Haven't you heard this history of your clan before when you visited senior, elder, and great priests?" The student answered, "I believe that what I've heard before really did happen."

33. His five hundred student disciples raised their voices, saying to each other, "This Ambastha really is descended from a Sakyan servant family!" "The ascetic Gautama speaks the truth!" "We've been acting badly, feeling so proud!"

34. The Bhagavan then thought, "These five hundred students will surely be arrogant after this and call him a servant. Now, I'll do something to dismiss that servant reputation." He then told the five hundred students, "You students, take care not to call him someone descended from a servant family. Why is that? He was once a priest who was a great and powerful sage. He attacked King Iksvaku to get his daughter, and the king gave her to him out of fear." The Buddha dismissed that slave reputation with these words.

The Superiority of the Warrior Caste

35. The Bhagavan then told Ambastha, "How is it, student? Suppose a warrior woman is descended from seven generations of fathers and mothers who were genuine [warriors], and she isn't slighted by other people. If she's married to a priest and bears him a son who's handsome, would that son enter the warrior caste, be given a seat and water, and recite the warrior's law?"

He replied, "He wouldn't."

36. "Would he get his father's property and business?"

"He wouldn't."

37. "Would he inherit his father's office?"

"He wouldn't."

38. "How is it, student? Suppose a priest woman is descended from seven generations of fathers and mothers who were genuine [priests], and she isn't slighted by other people. She's married to a warrior and bears him a son who's handsome. When he enters that priest's community, would he be given a seat and be offered water when he rises?"

He replied, "He would."

39. "Would he get to recite the priest's law, get his father's property, or inherit his father's office?"

"He would."

40. "How is it, student? If a priest rejects the priesthood and joins the warrior caste, would he be given a seat, be offered water when rising, and recite the warrior's law?"

He replied, "He wouldn't."

41. "Would he get his father's property or inherit his father's office?"

He replied, "He wouldn't."

42. "If a warrior rejects the warriors and joins the priests, would he be given a seat, be offered water when rising, and recite the priest's law? … Would he get his father's property or inherit his father's office?"

He replied, "He would."

43. "Therefore, student, the warrior woman is the best of women, and the warrior man is the best of men. It's not the priests.

44. "The god Brahma himself spoke this verse:

• 'Those born among warriors are best,
Whose families and clans are genuine.
Accomplished in insight and conduct,
They are supreme among gods and people.'"

45. The Buddha told the student, "Brahma spoke this verse, and it truly is well spoken and not unskillful. I agree with it. Why is that? Now, I am a Tathagata, an Arhat, and a Completely Awakened One. I also spoke this meaning:

• '"Those born among warriors are best,
Whose families and clans are genuine.
Accomplished in insight and conduct,
They are supreme among gods and people.'"

Leaving Home and Perfecting Precepts

46. The student said to the Buddha, "Gautama, what is this unsurpassed man like, who is accomplished in insight and conduct?"

The Buddha told the student, "Listen closely, listen closely! Consider it well. I'll explain this for you."

He replied, "Very well. I'd be glad to hear it."

47. The Buddha told the student, "If the Tathagata arises in the world who is an Arhat, Completely Awakened One, Accomplished in Insight and Conduct, Well Gone, Understander of the World, Unsurpassed Man, Trainer of Men, Teacher to Gods and People, Buddha, and Bhagavan, he alone is awakened and self-realized among all the gods, and worldly people, whether ascetics and priests, or the gods, Mara, and King Brahma. He explains the teaching for people that's good in the beginning, good in the middle, and good in the end. It's content and expression are complete and reveal the pure practice.

48. "Suppose a householder, a householder's son, or someone from the other castes hears the right teaching, and they believe it. With that belief, they think, 'Now, I live at home bound to my wife and children. I'm not able to purely cultivate the religious life. I would rather shave my hair, put on the three Dharma robes, and leave home to cultivate the path.' At some other time, they renounce home and property, abandon their friends and family, shave their hair, put on the three Dharma robes, and leave home to cultivate the path. They live with renunciants who equally abandon ornaments, and their practice of precepts is complete.

49. "They don't harm sentient beings. They renounce weapons, are conscientious and modest, and have kind thoughts for all beings. This is not killing.

50. "They abandon thoughts of stealing. They don't take what's not given, their minds are pure, and they don't think about personal profit. This is not stealing.

51. "They abandon sexual desire. They purely cultivate the religious life, are careful and energetic, aren't defiled by desire, and live purely. This is not engaging in sex.

52. "They abandon false speech, are sincere and not deceptive, and don't fool other people. This is not speaking falsely.

53. "They abandon duplicity. What they hear said here they don't convey to others there. What they hear said there they don't convey to others here. They skillfully bring together those who are alienated, and they work for mutual friendship and respect. All their speech is harmonious and aware of the occasion. This is not being duplicitous.

54. "They abandon harsh speech, which is words that are crude or fierce, that delight in troubling other people, and that cause the bonds of resentment to arise. They abandon such words. Their words are gentle and don't cause harm. They're beneficial to many people. The community has respect and affection for them, gladly listening to their words. This is not speaking harshly.

55. They abandon frivolous speech. Their words are aware of the occasion, sincere, and accord with the teaching. They settle disputes according to the discipline. When there's reason to speak, their speech doesn't miss the point. This is abandoning frivolous speech.

56. "They abandon drinking alcohol, part with carelessness, and aren't attached to fragrances, flowers, and jewelry. They don't watch or listen to songs and dances. They don't sit on high seats, eat at the wrong time, or accept and use gold, silver, or the seven treasures. They don't marry wives or concubines and don't take care of servants, workers, elephants, horses, carts, cattle, chickens, dogs, pigs, sheep, farmland, or pleasure parks. Nor do they fool other people with fraudulent weights and measures and then carry away the profit in their hands. They don't put others in debt to trap them. This is not being fraudulent.

57. "They abandon such evils, ceasing disputes and unskillful affairs. When they conduct themselves, they're aware of the time and don't act at the wrong time. They eat the amount of food their stomach holds and don't accumulate anything more than what they need. Their robes are sufficient for their bodies. Their Dharma clothes and bowl are their constant companions like a flying bird's wings. A monk has nothing more in the same way.

Criticisms of Other Ascetics and Priests

58. "Student, take the example of other ascetics and priests who accept the faithful gifts of others and then seek what another has saved. They are never satisfied with their robes and meals. No one who enters my teaching does such things.

59. "Student, take the example of other ascetics and priests who eat another's faithful alms and pursue their own occupation. They plant trees that are refuges for demons and spirits. No one who enters my teaching does such things.

60. "Student, take the example of other ascetics and priests who eat another's faithful alms and still pursue ways of seeking benefits like high and large beds [made of] elephant ivory and various treasures, various embroideries, carpets, blankets, and cushions. No one who enters my teaching does such things.

61. "Student, take the example of other ascetics and priests who accept another's faithful gifts and still pursue ways of adorning themselves. They rub their bodies with ghee and oil, wash with fragrant water, smear themselves with fragrant powder, and comb their hair with fragrant oil. They wear beautiful flower garlands, color their eyes dark blue, put makeup on their faces, and attach rings and thread to themselves. They look at themselves with mirrors, wear leather shoes of various colors, and wear pure white over their clothes. They keep weapons, followers, valuable parasols, valuable fans, and decorated, valuable chariots. No one who enters my teaching does such things.

62. "Student, take the example of other ascetics and priests who eat another's faithful alms and focus on entertaining themselves by playing games like chess on boards with eight squares, ten squares, a hundred squares … [a thousand] squares. They have fun in various ways. No one who enters my teaching does such things.

63. "Student, take the example of other ascetics and priests who eat another's faithful alms but only teach obstructions to the path. They discuss unbeneficial things such as kings, battles, events involving chariots and horses, friends, comrades, and officials. They ride horses and chariots here and there, walk in pleasure gardens, and have conversations while lying, rising, and walking about women, clothing, eating, and family matters. They also discuss the subject of diving in the ocean to hunt for treasures. No one who enters my teaching does such things.

64. "Student, take the example of other ascetics and priests who eat another's faithful alms but only pursue countless ways of wrong livelihood. They flatter others with pretty expressions or appear to criticize them in order to pursue benefits. No one who enters my teaching does such things.

65. "Student, take the example of other ascetics and priests who eat another's faithful alms but only debate with each other. They might visit parks or go to lakes and meeting halls and refute each other. They say, 'I know the teachings and discipline; you know nothing.' 'I've arrived at the correct path; you are going down the wrong road.' 'You put what's first last or put what's last first.' 'I'm tolerant of you, but you don't tolerate me.' 'The words that you say aren't true or correct.' 'If you have any doubts, you should come and ask me, and I'll answer it completely.' No one who enters my teaching does such things.

66. "Student, take the example of other ascetics and priests who eat another's faithful alms and still pursue their livelihoods on other ways. They serve as messengers for kings, royal officials, priests, or householders, traveling from here to there and there to here. They take messages from here and deliver them there and take messages from there and deliver them here. They might do this personally or instruct others to do it. No one who enters my teaching does such things.

67. "Student, take the example of other ascetics and priests who eat another's faithful alms but only practice battle tactics and martial arts. They might practice wielding melee weapons or bow and arrow. They might fight animals like chickens, dogs, pigs, sheep, elephants, horses, cattle, and camels. They might fight with men and women and make many sounds with conchs, drums, while singing and dancing. They might climb poles, perform handstands, and practice various acrobatics. No one who enters my teaching does such things.

68. "Student, take the example of other ascetics and priests who eat another's faithful alms and practice teachings that obstruct the path. They make their living with wrong livelihoods such as telling the signs of men and women's good and bad fortune, their beauty and ugliness, or the signs of livestock. They do this seeking profit. No one who enters my teaching does such things.

69. "Student, take the example of other ascetics and priests who eat another's faithful alms and practice teachings that obstruct the path. They make their living with wrong livelihoods. They summon demons and spirits or drive them away with various rites and prayers. In countless ways, they frighten and afflict people. They gather and scatter [people] and cause them pain and pleasure. They can also prevent miscarriages, produce clothing, and make people act like donkeys with spells, or make people blind, deaf, and dumb. They demonstrate these arts with their palms together raised to the sun and moon, and they practice asceticism in pursuit of profit. No one who enters my teaching does such things.

70. "Student, take the example of other ascetics and priests who eat another's faithful alms and practice teachings that obstruct the path. They make their living with wrong livelihoods. They might perform spells for people [that cause] illness or chant spells for good and evil. They practice medicine with acupuncture, cauterization, and herbs and minerals to cure various ailments. No one who enters my teaching does such things.

71. "Student, take the example of other ascetics and priests who eat another's faithful alms and practice teachings that obstruct the path. They make their living with wrong livelihoods. They might perform spells of water and fire, spells for demons, chant warrior spells, bird spells, and spells for limbs. They might perform spells or make charms for making households peaceful, or they might perform spells to understand [things] burnt by fire or chewed by mice. They might chant from books of discerning death and life, chant from books about dreams, tell fortunes using people's hands and faces, chant from books of gods, or chant from language books. No one who enters my teaching does such things.

72. "Student, take the example of other ascetics and priests who eat another's faithful alms and practice teachings that obstruct the path. They make their living with wrong livelihoods. They make predictions based on the heavens and seasons: 'It will rain … it won't rain … the harvest will be bountiful … the harvest will be poor … many people will fall ill … few will be ill … there'll be terrible [events] … there'll be peace.' They might discuss earthquakes, comets, solar and lunar eclipses, and stellar occultations and non-occultations, saying: 'This is a good omen; this is a bad omen.' No one who enters my teaching does such things.

73. "Student, take the example of other ascetics and priests who eat another's faithful alms and practice teachings that obstruct the path, making their living from wrong livelihoods. They might say, 'This country will win; that country is not their equal … that country will win; this country is not their equal.' They divine their fortune and misfortune and discuss the flourishing and demise [of different countries]. No one who enters my teaching does such things.

Noble Precepts and Faculties

74. "[Those who follow my teaching] only cultivate the noble precepts without the stain of mental attachments. They harbor inner joy and happiness. Even though their eyes see forms, they don't grasp at their appearances. Their eyes aren't seized by forms and tied to them. Their peacefulness is stable, they lack greediness, and they don't have sadness and troubled feelings. Bad things don't flow from them.

75. "They resolutely keep the various precepts and guard well their eye sense … ear … nose … tongue … body … and mind sense. They guide well their six contacts, guarding and disciplining themselves to become peaceful. They are like a team of four horses on level ground and well-driven by holding whip and reins. They don't leave the road. A monk thus drives the horses of the six senses to become peaceful and not lose it.

76. "They possess such noble precepts and attain the noble's eye sense. When eating, they stop once they're satisfied, and they aren't greedy for flavors. They eat food to support their body and make it free of pain and distress, not out of pride. They harmonize their body to cease old pains, ensure new pains don't arise, have strength without issues, and make the body comfortable. It's like someone applying a salve to a sore in order to be rid of it, not to decorate oneself out of pride.

77. "Student, a monk thus eats enough for his limbs and body and doesn't harbor a lazy attitude. It's like greasing a chariot to make it function well when carrying cargo wherever it needs to go. A monk is thus. He eats enough for his limbs and body because he's going to walk on the road.

78. "Student, a monk thus accomplishes the noble precepts and attains noble faculties. When eating, they stop once they're satisfied. In the early evening and late at night, they're diligent and awake. During the daytime, they're always mindful and unified in mind whether walking or sitting, and they rid themselves of the various hindrances. In the early evening, they're always mindful and unified in mind whether walking or sitting, and they rid themselves of the various hindrances. When the middle of the night arrives, they lie down on their right side to sleep, remembering the time to wake up. Fixing their thoughts on the morning, their minds are undisturbed. When the last of the night arrives, they get up and contemplate. Whether walking or sitting, they are constantly mindful and unified in mind, ridding themselves of the various hindrances.

79. "A monk perfects such noble precepts and attains noble faculties. When eating, they stop once they're satisfied. In the early evening and late at night, they're diligent and awake. They're always mindful, unified in mind, and undisturbed.

80. "How is a monk mindful and undisturbed? Such a monk observes his internal body as body with diligence and not negligence. Giving it attention and not losing it, he removes worldly greed and sadness. He observes external body as body … observes the internal and external body as body with diligence and not negligence. Giving it attention and not losing it, he removes worldly greed and sadness. He observes feelings, mind, and principles the same way. This is how a monk is mindful and undisturbed.

81. "How is he unified in mind? Suppose such a monk walks back and forth, looks right and left, turns, bends, and looks around. He holds his robe and bowl and takes the meal he receives. He urinates and defecates. He sleeps, wakes, sits, stands, speaks, and remains silent. He's mindful and unified in mind at all times, and he doesn't lose his composure. This is being unified in mind.

82. "It's like someone walking with a large assembly. Whether they walk in front, in the middle, or in the back, they're always at ease and without any anxiety. Student, when a monk thus walks back and forth … speaks, and remains silent, he's always mindful and unified in mind without any sorrow or fear.

83. "A monk has such noble precepts and attains noble faculties. When eating, they stop when satisfied. In the early evening and late at night, they're diligent and awake. [During the daytime,] they're always mindful, unified in mind, and undisturbed. They happily reside in a quiet place, under a tree, or in a charnel ground. Whether they stay in a mountain cave, on open ground, or in a refuse heap, when it's time to solicit alms, they wash their hands and feet and put their robe and bowl in a safe place when they return. They sit cross-legged with their body erect and correctly mindful. They then fix their attention to what's in front of them.

84. "They remove stinginess and greed, and their thoughts aren't accompanied by them. They cease anger. Not having resentments, their mind abides in purity and always feels compassion. They dispel sleepiness. Visualizing something bright, they remain mindful and undisturbed. They stop restlessness, and their thoughts aren't accompanied by it. They stop doubtfulness. Freeing themselves from the net of doubts, their mind is focused solely on good qualities.

85. "It's like slaves of a large household who are given the family's name and peacefully set free. Escaping that menial labor, they feel joyous, and they aren't sorrowful and fearful any longer.

86. "It's also like someone who takes on debt to make his living and makes a large profit from it. He returns the original sum to its owner, and the remainder is enough for himself. He thinks to himself, 'When I took this loan, I feared it wouldn't go as I wanted. Now that I've made this profit, I returned the original sum to its owner, and the remainder is enough for myself. I'm so happy I won't return to sorrow and fear.'

87. "It's like someone who was ill for a long time and recovers from that illness. They digest what they eat and drink, and their complexion and strength is restored. They think, 'I was ill before, but now I've recovered. I digest what I eat and drink, and my complexion and strength is restored. I'm so happy I won't return to sorrow and fear.'

88. "It's also like someone who's been imprisoned for a long time, and they are safely released. They think to themselves, 'I was taken and imprisoned before, but now I've been released! I'll so happy I won't return to sorrow and fear.'

89. "It's also like someone who carries many treasures across a wasteland, and they safely make it across without encountering bandits. They think to themselves, 'I've brought these treasures across that dangerous region. I'm so happy I won't return to sorrow and fear.' Their mind is peaceful and happy.

90. "Student, a monk who is covered by the five hindrances always feels sorrow and fear like a slave, a debtor, a person who's ill for a long time, a prisoner, and a traveler crossing a great wasteland. Seeing that they aren't free of them yet, their mind is obscured, covered in darkness, and their wisdom eye is dim.

Meditative Attainments

91. "They diligently detach themselves from desires and bad and unskillful things. Accompanied with perception and examination, their seclusion gives rise to joy and happiness, and they enter the first dhyana. They soak themselves in joy and happiness so that it's everywhere and overflowing. No part of them isn't filled with it.

92. "It's like someone skilled in filling bath containers with a variety of herbs. They soak it in water, and it becomes wet both inside and out. No part of it isn't filled with water. A monk thus enters the first dhyana. He's thoroughly joyous and happy. No part of him isn't filled with it.

93. "Thus, student, this is the start of the direct attainment of personal happiness. Why is that? These things come from diligence, mindfulness, and being undisturbed, which are gained from happily living in a quiet place.

94. "They then give rise to faith, focused attention, and unified mind by detaching from perception and examination. Without perception or examination, their samadhi gives rise to joy and happiness, and they enter the second dhyana. They soak themselves in unified mind, joy, and happiness so that it's everywhere and overflowing. No part of them isn't filled with it.

95. "It's like cool water that wells up from a spring on a mountain top. It doesn't come from an outside source. Instead, clear water comes out of this pool, which returns, sinks, and becomes soaked. No part of it isn't pervaded with the water. Student, a monk thus enters the second dhyana, and samadhi gives rise to joy and happiness. No part of him isn't filled with it. This is the second direct attainment of personal happiness.

96. "They detach from that joy and its abode. Being equanimous, mindful, and undisturbed, they personally experience the happiness that's taught by noble people. Giving rise to equanimity, mindfulness, and happiness, they enter the third dhyana. They aren't joyous, but they're soaked with happiness so that it's everywhere and overflowing. No part of him isn't filled with it.

97. "It's like blue lotus, red lotus, white lily, and white lotus flowers. When they first emerge from the mud but haven't emerged from the water yet, their roots, stems, branches, and leaves are soaked by the water. No part of them isn't covered by it.

98. "Student, a monk thus enters the third dhyana. Free of joy and abiding in happiness, they soak themselves with it. No part of them isn't covered by it. This is the third direct attainment of personal happiness.

99. "They detach from joy and happiness, and their previous sorrow and delight cease. Without pain or pleasure, their equanimity and mindfulness are purified, and they enter the fourth dhyana. In body and mind, their purity is full and overflowing. No part of them isn't covered by it.

100. "It's like when a person bathes and washes themselves. They then put on fresh, white cloth to cover their body and make themselves pure.

101. "Student, a monk thus enters the fourth dhyana. His mental purity fills up his body. No part of him isn't covered by it. Again, his mind has no increase or decrease when he enters the fourth dhyana, and it's motionless. He stands unmoved, without like or dislike.

102. "It's like a secret room that's plastered inside and out, and the door is tightly shut. There isn't any wind or dust, so a lamp burning inside isn't disturbed by anything. The flame of this lamp is peaceful and unmoving.

103. "Student, a monk thus enters the fourth dhyana. Their mind has no increase or decrease, and it's motionless. They stand unmoved, without like or dislike. This is the fourth direct attainment of personal happiness. Why is that? These things come from diligence, not being negligent, mindfulness, and being undisturbed, which are gained from happily living in a quiet place.

The Five Excellent Attainments

104. "They attain a concentrated mind that's pure, undefiled, gentle, and disciplined. They stand unmoved, conjuring themselves or someone else in their mind with all its limbs and organs without flaw. They then contemplate this, 'This body's form made of the four elements has created that body. This body is one thing, and that body is another. The thought arose from this body to create that body with all its limbs and organs without flaw.'

105. "It's like someone who draws a sword from its scabbard and thinks, 'The scabbard is one thing, and the sword is another, but the sword came from the scabbard.'

106. "It's also like someone who spins hemp [threads] to make rope and thinks, 'The hemp is one thing, and the rope is another, but the rope came from the hemp.'

107. "It's also like someone who takes a snake out of a basket and thinks, 'The basket is one thing, and the snake is another, but the snake came from the basket.'

108. "It's also like someone who takes a robe out of a hamper and thinks, 'The hamper is one thing, and the robe is another, but the robe came from the hamper.'

109. "Student, a monk is likewise. This is the first excellent attainment. Why is that? These things come from diligence, mindfulness, and being undisturbed, which are gained from happily living in a quiet place.

110. "After their mind is concentrated, pure, undefiled, gentle, and disciplined, they stand unmoved. They create their own or someone else's body that's made of the four elements in their mind, which has all its limbs and organs [without flaw]. They then contemplate this: 'This body is made of the four elements, and that body has come from conjuration. This body is one thing, and that body is another. That created body has this mind residing in this body as its supporting basis.'

111. "It's like beryl or mani gems that are polished, very bright, pure, and undefiled. Whether they are blue, yellow, or red, someone with eyes holding them in their hand can see that when they're threaded together the gems are one thing, and the thread is another. Still, the thread supports the gems and goes from gem to gem.

112. "Student, a monk contemplates mind as the supporting basis of this body. It goes to that created body in the same way. This is the monk's second excellent attainment. Why is that? These things come from diligence, mindfulness, and being undisturbed, which are gained from happily living in a quiet place.

113. "With a concentrated mind, they're pure, undefiled, gentle, and disciplined, and they stand unmoved. Unified in mind, they cultivate the realization of the knowledge of miraculous abilities. They're can work various miracles. They miraculously make one body into countless bodies and combines countless bodies into one. They can travel by flying. Stone walls are no obstacle to them. They travel through the sky like a bird and walk on water like the earth. Their body smokes and blazes like a large bonfire. They touch the sun and moon with their hand and stand as high as the Brahma Heaven.

114. "They're like a potter who's good at mixing wet clay and shaping it into whatever useful container he wants. They're also like a carpenter that's good at handling wood, making whatever useful thing he wants from it. They're also like an ivory worker who's good at handling elephant tusks, or a goldsmith who's good at refining pure gold. They make whatever useful things that they want.

115. "Student, this monk is like that. With a concentrated mind, they're pure … and they stand unmoved … They perform whatever miracles they like … touch the sun and moon with their hand and stand as high as the Brahma Heaven. This is the monk's third excellent attainment.

116. "With a concentrated mind, they're pure, undefiled, gentle, and disciplined, and they stand unmoved. Unified in mind, they cultivate the realization of the knowledge of the heavenly ear. Their heavenly ear is purified, which goes beyond human ears. It hears two sounds: Heavenly sounds and human sounds.

117. "It's like a city that has a great meeting hall, which is tall, wide, and spacious. A person in this hall who has a keen sense of hearing wouldn't need to strain to hear a sound. He hears all sorts of things. This monk is like that. Because their mind is concentrated, they purify the heavenly ear and hear these two kinds of sounds. Student, this is the monk's fourth excellent attainment.

118. "With a concentrated mind, they're pure, undefiled, gentle, and disciplined, and they stand unmoved. Unified in mind, they cultivate the realization of the knowledge of other minds. They know that other people's minds have desires or no desires, are defiled or undefiled, are deluded or not deluded, are open-minded or narrow-minded, are small-minded or broad-minded, concentrated or distracted, bound or liberated, superior or inferior, or have attained the unsurpassed mind. They fully know this.

119. "It's like someone's reflection in clear water. A person can surely observe that they are beautiful or ugly. This monk is like that. They can know other people's minds because their mind is purified. Student, this is a monk's fifth excellent attainment.

The Three Insights

120. "With a concentrated mind, they're pure, undefiled, gentle, and disciplined, and they stand unmoved. Unified in mind, they cultivate the realization of the knowledge of past lives. They then can recollect countless, diverse events of their past lives. They can remember from one birth … countless births, or numerous eons of formation and destruction: 'Dying here, I was born there with that name, surname, caste, and clan. The meals were delicious or disgusting. My life span was long or short, I experienced those pains or pleasures, and such was my form and appearance.' They remember all of this.

121. "It's like someone who goes from their own village or town to a city in another country. They live there walking, standing, speaking, or remaining silent, then they go from that country to another country. Thus, they travel in a circuit until they return to their native land, and they can entirely remember the countries they had traveled without any trouble: 'From here, I went there. From there, I went here. I walked, stood, spoke, and remained silent.' They remember all of this.

122. "Student, a monk is thus. With a concentrated mind that's pure and undefiled, they stand unmoved and recollect the countless events of their past lives with the knowledge of past lives.

123. "This is the monk's attainment of the first insight. Their ignorance is forever destroyed, and the state of great insight arises. The darkness is dispelled, and the state of illumination arises. This is the monk's understanding of the knowledge of past lives. Why is that? These things come from diligence, mindfulness, and being undisturbed, which are gained from happily living in a quiet place.

124. "With a concentrated mind, they're pure, undefiled, gentle, and disciplined, and they stand unmoved. Unified in mind, they cultivate the realization of the knowledge of seeing birth and death. Their heavenly eye is purified, and they see sentient beings dying here, being born there, and being born here from there. Their forms are beautiful or ugly, their fruits are good or evil, and they're noble or mean according to the results of the actions they've performed. He knows all of this.

125. "'This person's physical conduct was bad, their verbal conduct was bad, and their mental conduct was bad. They slandered the noble ones and believed wrong views. When their body broke up and their life ended, they fell to the three bad destinies.' 'This person's physical conduct was good, their verbal conduct was good, and their mental conduct was good. They didn't slander the noble ones and believed correct views. When their body broke up and their life ended, they were born in heaven or among humans.' With their purified heavenly eye, they see sentient beings leaving and arriving in the five destinies according to their actions.

126. "It's like a high, broad, and level area inside a city. At the head of a four-way intersection, a large and tall tower in built there from which someone with clear vision can keep watch. They see people traveling east, west, south, and north as they go. They can see all of them.

127. "Student, a monk is thus. With a concentrated mind, they're pure and stand unmoved. They can realize the knowledge of seeing birth and death. With their purified heavenly eye, they fully see sentient beings that are good and bad being born according to their actions, going and arriving in the five destinies. He sees all of them.

128. This is the monk's attainment of the second insight. Eliminating their ignorance, wise insight arises. The darkness is dispelled, and the light of wisdom shines. This is the realization of the insight into seeing sentient beings being born and dying. Why is that? These things come from diligence, mindfulness, and being undisturbed, which are gained from happily living in a quiet place.

129. "With a concentrated mind, they're pure, undefiled, gentle, and disciplined, and they stand unmoved. Unified in mind, they cultivate realization of the knowledge of having no contaminants. They truly know the noble truth of suffering … They truly know the contaminants, the formation of the contaminants, the ending of the contaminants, and the path that leads to the end of the contaminants. They thus know and see the contaminants of desire, existence, and ignorance. Their mind is freed, and their knowledge is freed: 'My births and deaths have been ended, the religious life has been established, and the task has been accomplished. I won't be subject to a later existence.'

130. "It's like wood, stones, fish, turtles, and other water-born things in a clear stream flowing from east to west. A person with eyes clearly sees them: 'That's wood and stones … that's fish and turtles.'

131. "Student, a monk is thus. With a concentrated mind, they're pure and stand unmoved. They realize the knowledge of having no contaminants … 'I won't be subject to a later existence.'

132. "This is the monk's attainment of the third insight. Eliminating their ignorance, wise insight arises. The darkness is dispelled, and the light of wisdom shines. This is the insight of the knowledge of having no contaminants. Why is that? These things come from diligence, mindfulness, and being undisturbed, which are gained from happily living in a quiet place.

133. "Student, this is the perfection of the unsurpassed insight and conduct. What do you think? Does this agree with insight and conduct or not?"

The Four Superficial Methods

134. The Buddha told the student, "Someone who can't perfect the unsurpassed insight and conduct instead practices four methods. What are the four?

135. "Student, perhaps someone can't perfect the unsurpassed insight and conduct. Instead, they take a spade and carry a pack into the mountains in search of herbs, and they eat tree roots. Doing so, student, they can't perfect the unsurpassed insight and conduct. Instead, they practice this first method. How is it, student? Do you or your teacher practice this first method?"

He answered, "No."

136. The Buddha told the student, "Your own pettiness makes you unaware of what's true or false, yet you slander and belittle the Sakyans while your own lineage is rooted in misdeeds that grow the source of Hell.

137. "Furthermore, student, someone can't perfect the unsurpassed insight and conduct. Instead, they take a water bottle and a walking staff into a mountain forest, and they eat fallen fruit. Doing so, student, they can't perfect the unsurpassed insight and conduct but instead practice this second method. How is it, student? Do you or your teacher practice this method?"

He answered, "No."

138. The Buddha told the student, "Your own pettiness makes you unaware of what's true or false, yet you slander and belittle the Sakyans while your own lineage is rooted in misdeeds that grow the source of Hell.

139. "Furthermore, student, [someone] can't perfect the unsurpassed insight and conduct. Instead, they give up picking herbs and fallen fruit. They return to their town and rejoin the people there, building a thatched hut and eating grass or tree leaves. Doing so, student, they can't perfect the [unsurpassed] insight and conduct. Instead, they practice this third method. How is it, student? Do you or your teacher practice this method?"

He answered, "No."

140. The Buddha told the student, "Your own pettiness makes you unaware of what's true or false, yet you slander and belittle the Sakyans while your own lineage is rooted in misdeeds that grow the source of Hell.

141. "Furthermore, student, [someone] can't perfect the unsurpassed insight and conduct, but they don't eat herbs and grass, fallen fruit, or grass and leaves. Instead, they build a large raised hall in a town or city, and people come from the east, west, south, and north to offer the donations that they can. Doing so, they can't perfect the unsurpassed insight and conduct. Instead, they practice this fourth method. How is it, student? Do you or your teacher practice this method?"

He answered, "No."

142. The Buddha told the student, "Your own pettiness makes you unaware of what's true or false, yet you slander and belittle the Sakyans while your own lineage is rooted in misdeeds and grows from the source of Hell.

The Ancient Priests

143. "How is it, student? The priests and sages of antiquity had many arts. They praised and commended the hymns of the past. Present-day priests recite and commend them as 1. Astaka, 2. Vamaka, 3. Vamadeva, 4. Visvamitra, 5. Angiras, 6. [Yamataggi], 7. Vasistha, 8. Kasyapa, 9. Aruna, 10. Gautama, 11. [Suyiva], and 12. Sundara. Such great sages and priests dug moats and erected raised halls. Do you and your teacher's followers today live like they did?"

He answered, "No."

144. "Those great sages would have built a walled city where they lived and surrounded it with houses. Do you and your teacher's followers today live like they did?"

He answered, "No."

145. "Didn't those great sages sit on high seats with layered cushions and carpets that were fine and soft? Do you and your teacher's followers today live like they did?"

He answered, "No."

146. "Didn't those great sages enjoy gold, silver, jewelry, colorful flower garlands, and beautiful women? Do you and your teacher's followers do the same? … Didn't those great sages have treasure chariots pulled by horses whose drivers were armed with lances, that were covered with white canopies? … Didn't they have precious fans and wear colorful and valuable sandals as well as all-white cotton cloth? Do you and your teacher's followers wear those things?"

He answered, "No."

147. "Student, your own pettiness makes you unaware of what's true or false, yet you slander and belittle the Sakyans while your own lineage is rooted in misdeeds that grow the source of Hell.

148. "How is it, student? Just as those great sages and priests of antiquity praised and commended reciting the hymns, the priests today commend and recitation of Astaka and the others. They hand down their teachings and teach them to others hoping to be born in the Brahma Heaven, but it's impossible.

149. "Student, it's like when King Prasenajit holds a meeting with others. He might be meeting with kings, officials, priests, or householders. A low-ranking person hears them, goes into Sravasti, and tells the people they meet, 'King Prasenajit had this to say.' How is it, student? Would the king have a meeting with such a person?"

He answered, "No."

150. "Student, that person recited the king's words and told them to other people. Would he be made a high official by the king?"

He answered, "That would be impossible."

151. "Student, today your tradition recites the teachings of former generations, great sages, and ancient priests. You want to be born in the Brahma Heaven, but it's impossible. How is it, student? Do all of you accept the offerings of others while following that method of practice?"

He answered, "Yes, Gautama. We accept the offerings of others and practice that method."

152. "Student, you and your teacher Puskarasarin accepted a fiefdom from the king, but when you have a meeting with King Prasenajit, you teach the king nonessential treatises and unbeneficial words, so there's no way to admonish him to do the right things.

Ambastha Sees the Thirty-Two Signs

153. "Now you see for yourself you and your teacher's errors. Setting those things aside, there's just the circumstances that brought you here."

154. Thereupon, the student examined the Tathagata's body searching for the signs and excellencies. He saw all the signs except for the two that weren't visible. This caused him to feel doubtful.

155. The Bhagavan then silently thought to himself, "Now, this student doesn't see two of the signs, and that has made him doubtful." He then stuck out his long and broad tongue sign and covered his ear with it.

156. The student was still doubtful about the other sign, and the Bhagavan again thought, "Now, this student is still doubtful about this one sign." He then used his miraculous ability to privately show him his hidden horse-like penis.

157. After seeing all his signs, the student no longer doubted the Tathagata. He rose from his seat, circled the Buddha, and departed.

Ambastha Returns to His Teacher

158. While standing outside his door looking into the distance, the priest Puskarasarin saw his disciple approaching from far away. He met him and asked, "Did you examine Gautama to see if his signs were real? Are his virtues and miraculous abilities really as we've heard?"

The student then said to his teacher, "The ascetic Gautama is replete with all 32 signs. His virtues and miraculous abilities are really as we've heard."

159. His teacher again asked, "Did you talk a little with Gautama?"

He answered, "I did in fact exchange words with Gautama."

160. The teacher again asked, "What did you discuss with Gautama?"

The student told his teacher about the words he exchanged with the Buddha.

His teacher said, "I had an intelligent disciple to send as my messenger, but we'll soon end up in Hell. Why is that? You spoke as a superior and criticized Gautama. When my messenger is displeasing, it comes back to me. You and the other intelligent disciples were sent with this errand, but I'll soon end up in Hell [on your account]."

161. Under the influence of the bond of resentment, the teacher kicked his student, making him fall from the chariot they were riding. After he fell from the chariot, the student developed vitiligo.

Puskarasarin Visits the Buddha

162. Examining the position of the sun, the priest Puskarasarin thought, "I'd pay a visit to the ascetic Gautama, but it's not the right time now. I'll need to wait until tomorrow, then I'll go and visit him." When the sun rose the next day, he prepared his treasure chariot and horses and proceeded to the citron grove surrounded by five hundred disciples. He then dismounted and continued on foot until he reached the Bhagavan. After they exchanged greetings, he sat to one side. Looking closely at the Tathagata's body, he saw that he had the signs, but he didn't see two of them.

163. The priest was doubtful about those two signs. Knowing his thoughts, the Buddha then stuck out his long and broad tongue and covered his ear with it.

164. The priest was still doubtful about the other sign. Knowing his thoughts, the Buddha used his miraculous abilities to allow him to see his hidden horse-like penis.

165. When the priest saw the Tathagata's 32 signs, his mind was opened, and he had no more misgivings. Quickly, he said to the Buddha, "If I meet the Buddha on the road while traveling, I'll stop my chariot for a brief rest. You should consider it as though I'm bowing respectfully to the Bhagavan. Why is that? I've received another's fiefdom. If I were to dismount from my chariot, I would lose this fiefdom and a bad reputation would be circulated about me."

166. He also said to the Buddha, "If I dismount, untie my sword, close my parasol, and remove my banner, water bottle, and sandals, you should consider it as though I'm venerating the Tathagata. Why is that? I've received another's fiefdom. If I were to dismount from my chariot, I would lose this fiefdom and a bad reputation would be circulated about me."

167. He also said to the Buddha, "Suppose I'm with my assembly and see the Buddha rise. If I bare my right shoulder and declare my clan's name, you should consider it as though I'm venerating the Tathagata. Why is that? I've received another's fiefdom. If I were to dismount from my chariot, I would lose this fiefdom and a bad reputation would be circulated about me."

168. He also said to the Buddha, "I take refuge in the Buddha, the Dharma, and the Sangha. Permit me to be a layman of the correct teaching! Hereafter, I won't kill, steal, commit adultery, lie, or drink alcohol. Please let the Bhagavan and those in this large assembly accept my invitation."

The Buddha Visits Puskarasarin

169. The priest saw that the Buddha remained silent and knew that he had given his consent. He then rose from his seat and departed, bowing to the Buddha and circling him three times without thinking about it. He went back and prepared meals of fine delicacies. When they were ready, he returned and said, "It's time."

170. The Bhagavan then put on his robe and took his bowl to the priest's house with that large assembly of 1,250 monks. Arriving, they prepared their seats and sat down.

171. The priest then personally served the meals, giving a variety of sweet delicacies to the Buddha and the Sangha. When they finished eating and washing their bowls, the priest took his disciple Ambastha to the Buddha with his right hand and said, "Please let the Tathagata permit us to repent for our wrongdoing! Please let the Tathagata permit us to repent for our wrongdoing!" He repeated this three times.

172. He also said to the Buddha, "Like a well-trained elephant or horse that returns again to the correct path when it goes astray, this man is thus. Although he was contaminated, it's gone now. Please permit him to repent for his wrongdoing!"

173. The Buddha told the priest, "It will lengthen your life to do so, and you'll find peace in the present life. It will also rid your disciple of his vitiligo." After the Buddha agreed, that disciple's vitiligo was cured.

Puskarasarin Attains Stream-Entry

174. The priest then fetched a small chair for the Buddha to sit in front of the assembly, and the Bhagavan explained the teaching for them. With plain instruction that's gainful and joyous, he discussed generosity, precepts, birth in the heavens, the defilement of desire, the trouble of the contaminants, the transcendence of escape, and the declaration of purity. When he knew that the priest's mind was gentle, pure, undefiled, and capable of accepting instruction about the path, the Bhagavan taught him the eternal teaching of Buddhas. He explained the noble truth of suffering, the noble truth of suffering's formation, the noble truth of suffering's cessation, and the noble truth of suffering's escape.

175. Sitting right there on his seat, the priest had his dust and defilements removed and his Dharma eye was purified. It was like a pure and clean white cloth that's easily stained. The priest Puskarasarin was likewise. He saw the teaching, attained the teaching, became certain about the fruits of the path, didn't believe other paths, and attained fearlessness.

176. He then said to the Buddha, "Now, I take refuge in the Buddha, the Dharma, and the Sangha of monks three times. Permit me to become a layman of the correct teaching! For the rest of my life, I won't kill, steal, commit adultery, lie, or drink alcohol. Please let the Bhagavan and the great assembly have pity on me and accept my invitation for the next seven days." The Bhagavan then silently consented to this.

177. During the next seven days, the priest gave a variety of offerings to the Buddha and his large assembly. After that, the Bhagavan traveled among the people.

178. Not long after the Buddha departed, the priest Puskarasarin fell sick, and his life ended. When the monks heard that this priest had given offerings to the Buddha for seven days before his life ended, they each thought, "Where was he born after his life ended?"

179. A group of monks went to the Buddha. After bowing to him, they sat to one side of the Buddha and said, "That priest had given offerings to the Buddha for seven days before his body broke up and his life ended. Where was he reborn?"

180. The Buddha told the monks, "This clansman had broadly collected virtues, perfected one teaching and the next, and didn't go contrary to the teaching. He ended the five lower bonds and will reach parinirvana without returning to this world."

181. When the monks heard what the Buddha had taught, they rejoiced and approved.

DA 21 BRAHMA'S SHAKING

(DN 1) [T 1.88b13]

(Direct parallels include DN 1 and an alternate Chinese translation, T 21. The Chinese title is translated as "Brahma's Shaking or God's Vibration," which suggests that the Sanskrit equivalent was Brahmacala rather than Brahmajala.)

(A pair of ascetics disagree in their assessment of the Buddha, one praising him while the other criticizes him. When the Buddha overhears the monks discussing this, he joins them and gives them a teaching on why they should not react to criticism or praise. In the process, he outlines 62 wrong views that non-Buddhists create when they speculate about the past and future.)

1. Thus I have heard: One time, the Buddha traveled to Magadha accompanied by an assembly of 1,250 great monks. Wandering among the people, they reached the bamboo grove and stopped to stay at the royal palace.

2. At the time, there was an ascetic named Supriya who had a disciple named Brahmadatta. This teacher and student were always following the Buddha. The ascetic Supriya criticized the Buddha, Dharma, and Sangha of monks in countless ways, and his disciple Brahmadatta praised the Buddha, Dharma, and Sangha of monks in countless ways. The teacher and his student both felt differently and contradicted each other. Why is that? It was because of their different customs, different views, and different friends.

3. It was then that a group of monks assembled in the meeting hall after soliciting alms to have this discussion: "Amazing and rare are the great miraculous power and majestic virtue possessed by the Bhagavan. He fully knows the intentions and destinations of sentient beings, but the ascetic Supriya and his disciple follow the Tathagata and the Sangha of monks. The ascetic Supriya criticizes the Buddha, Dharma, and Sangha in countless ways, and his disciple Brahmadatta praises the Tathagata, Dharma, and Sangha in countless ways. The teacher and his student both feel differently as a result of their different customs, different views, and different friends."

4. It was then that the Bhagavan overheard the monks having that discussion with his heavenly ear that surpasses the human ear. The Bhagavan emerged from his quiet abode, went to the meeting hall, and sat in front of that large assembly. Although he knew, he still asked them, "Monks, what's the reason you've gathered here in the meeting hall? What are you discussing?"

5. The monks then said to the Buddha, "After soliciting alms, we gathered here in the meeting hall to have this discussion: 'Amazing and rare are the great miraculous power and majestic virtue possessed by the Bhagavan. He fully knows the intentions and destinations of sentient beings, but the ascetic Supriya and his disciple always follow the Tathagata and the Sangha of monks. The ascetic Supriya criticizes the Tathagata, Dharma, and Sangha in countless ways, and his disciple Brahmadatta praises the Tathagata, Dharma, and Sangha in countless ways. The teacher and his student both feel differently as a result of their different customs, different views, and different friends.' We gathered here in the meeting hall to discuss this situation."

6. The Bhagavan then told the monks, "If someone criticizes the Tathagata, Dharma, and the Sangha in some way, don't allow yourselves to feel angry and have harmful intent toward them. Why is that? If they criticize me, the Dharma, and Sangha of monks and you feel angry and have harmful intent, it'll result in your own downfall; therefore, don't allow yourself to feel angry and have harmful intent toward them.

7. "Monks, if someone praises the Buddha, Dharma, and Sangha, that isn't enough for you to feel delighted and rejoice. Why is that? If you feel delighted, then it will be your downfall; therefore, you shouldn't feel delighted. Why is that? These are minor matters of deportment and observing precepts. Ordinary, uneducated people don't penetrate the [Dharma's] profound meaning, so they praise only what they see [with their eyes].

Minor Matters of Conduct

8. "What are the minor matters of deportment and observing precepts that ordinary, uneducated people only praise when they see them?

9. "There's this praise: 'The ascetic Gautama has ceased killing, desisted from killing, and discarded swords and staves. He feels remorse [for wrongdoing] and compassion for all [living things].' This is a minor matter of deportment and observing precepts for which ordinary, uneducated people praise the Buddha.

10. "There's also this praise: 'The ascetic Gautama has discarded taking what's not given, ceased taking what's not given, and doesn't have any thoughts of stealing.'

11. "There's also this praise: 'The ascetic Gautama has discarded lustful desire and purely cultivates the religious life. He simply guards the precepts and doesn't engage in sexual intercourse. His conduct is pure and clean.'

12. "There's also this praise: 'The ascetic Gautama has discarded and ceased false speech. His words being sincere and his statements being true, he doesn't deceive worldly people.' … 'The ascetic Gautama discarded and ceased duplicity. He doesn't say things here to cause misunderstandings there or say things there to cause misunderstandings here. When there's conflict, he brings people together. Once they are united, he increases their joy. His words and statements don't divide those who are unified. His heart is sincere, and he speaks when it's appropriate.' … 'The ascetic Gautama has discarded and ceased harsh speech. If there are crude words that hurt people, increase feelings of resentment, and nurture hatred, he doesn't use any of those crude words. He always delights people's mind with skillful words that are desired by many, and people don't grow tired of hearing them. He only speaks these words.' … 'The ascetic Gautama has discarded and ceased fancy speech. He speaks when it's appropriate, speaks truly, speaks beneficially, speaks about principles, speaks about discipline, and stops speaking otherwise. He only speaks these words.'

13. "'The ascetic Gautama has discarded and parted with drinking alcohol. He isn't attached to fragrant flowers, doesn't watch performances, doesn't sit on high seats, doesn't eat at the wrong time, and doesn't take gold or silver. He doesn't take care of wives, children, workers, or servants. He doesn't take care of elephants, horses, pigs, sheep, chickens, dogs, or other birds and animals. He doesn't take care of war elephants, cavalry, charioteers, or infantry. He doesn't take care of farmland or plant the five grains. He doesn't bully people with his fists. He doesn't trick people with weights and scales. He doesn't buy and sell agreements or negotiate them. He doesn't take on or touch debts that grow without end. He doesn't engage in secret plots, doesn't act differently to people's faces and behind their backs, and doesn't act at the wrong time. He takes care of his body and eats as much as fills his stomach. Wherever he goes, his robe and bowl follow him, just as a flying bird's body has a pair of wings.' These are minor matters of observing the precepts for which ordinary, uneducated people praise the Buddha.

Wrong Livelihoods

14. "'There are other ascetics and priests who accept the faithful gifts of others and try to hoard robes, food, and drinks insatiably. The ascetic Gautama doesn't do such things.'

15. "'There are other ascetics and priests who eat the faithful alms of others and work in their own occupations, like planting trees to serve as shelters for demons and spirits. The ascetic Gautama doesn't do such things.'

16. "'There are other ascetics and priests who eat the faithful alms of others and pursue ways of getting benefits like high and wide beds made of ivory and assorted jewels and various embroidered carpets, blankets, and cushions. The ascetic Gautama doesn't do such things.'

17. "'There are other ascetics and priests who eat the faithful alms of others and pursue ways of adorning themselves. They rub their bodies with ghee, wash with perfume, apply fragrant powders, comb their hair with fragrant liquids, wear beautiful flower garlands, dye their eyes dark blue, and paint their faces. They wear metal rings and strings that are clean, look at themselves in mirrors, wear valuable leather shoes, wear pure white over their clothes, and carry parasols, fans, flags, and banners as ornaments. The ascetic Gautama doesn't do such things.'

18. "'There are other ascetics and priests who focus on entertainment. They play games on boards with eight squares, ten squares, and a hundred or a thousand squares, entertaining themselves in various ways. The ascetic Gautama doesn't do such things.'

19. "'There are other ascetics and priests who eat the faithful alms of others and just talk about pointless things that obstruct the path. [They discuss] subjects like kings, battles, warhorses, officials, ministers, riding chariots and horses, and enjoying themselves in parks. They have conversations while they lie down, rise, and walk about women's affairs, clothing, food and drink, and relatives. They discuss the subject of finding treasures in the ocean, too. The ascetic Gautama doesn't do such things.'

20. "'There are other ascetics and priests who eat the faithful alms of others and just pursue wrong livelihoods. They flatter people with beautiful expressions or appear to criticize them, and they pursue profit with profit. The ascetic Gautama doesn't do such things.'

21. "'There are other ascetics and priests who eat the faithful alms of others and just argue with each other. Whether in parks, near ponds, or in halls, they blame each other: 'I know the sutras and discipline; you know nothing.' 'I'm on the correct path; you're going down the wrong road.' 'Either you put what's first last, or you put what's last first.' 'I can endure [this]; you aren't able to endure it.' 'Your words aren't correct.' 'If you have any doubts, you should come and ask me; I can answer everything.' The ascetic Gautama doesn't do such things.'

22. "'There are other ascetics and priests who eat the faithful alms of others and pursue a messenger's livelihood. Whether it's for kings, the king's ministers, priests, or gentlemen, they relay their messages. They travel from here to there and there to here. They take a message here and deliver it there or take a message there and deliver it here. They might do this themselves or instruct others to do it. The ascetic Gautama doesn't do such things.'

23. "'There are other ascetics and priests who eat the faithful alms of others and just study military strategy and combat. They might train in the use of swords and staves or the bow and arrow. They might fight animals like chickens, dogs, pigs, sheep, elephants, horses, cattle, and camels or fight men and women. They might make different kinds of music using horns and drums, singing and dancing. They might climb poles, perform handstands, and practice various acrobatics. The ascetic Gautama doesn't do such things.'

24. "'There are other ascetics and priests who eat the faithful alms of others and practice teachings that obstruct the path. They make their living with wrong livelihoods such as telling the signs of men and women's good and bad fortune, their beauty and ugliness, or the signs of livestock. They do this seeking to profit by it. The ascetic Gautama doesn't do such things.'

25. "'There are other ascetics and priests who eat the faithful alms of others and practice teachings that obstruct the path. They make their living with wrong livelihoods. They summon demons and spirits or drive them away with various rites and prayers. In countless ways, they frighten and afflict people. They gather and scatter [people] and cause them pain and pleasure. They can also prevent miscarriages, produce clothing, and make people act like donkeys with spells, or make people blind, deaf, and dumb. They demonstrate these arts with their palms together raised to the sun and moon, and they practice asceticism in pursuit of profit. The ascetic Gautama doesn't do such things.'

26. "'There are other ascetics and priests who eat the faithful alms of others and practice teachings that obstruct the path. They make their living with wrong livelihoods. They might perform spells for people [that cause] illness, chant evil and good spells, and practice medicine with acupuncture, cauterization, and herbs and minerals to cure various ailments. The ascetic Gautama doesn't do such things.'

27. "'There are other ascetics and priests who eat the faithful alms of others and practice teachings that obstruct the path. They make their living with wrong livelihoods. They might perform spells of water and fire, spells for demons, chant warrior spells, elephant spells, and spells for limbs. They might perform spells or make charms for making households peaceful, or they might perform spells to understand [things] burnt by fire or chewed by mice. They might chant from books of discerning death and life, chant from books about dreams, tell fortunes using people's hands and faces, chant from books of gods, or chant from language books. The ascetic Gautama doesn't do such things.'

28. "'There are other ascetics and priests who eat the faithful alms of others and practice teachings that obstruct the path. They make their living with wrong livelihoods. They make predictions based on the heavens and seasons: "It will rain … it won't rain … the harvest will be bountiful … the harvest will be poor … many people will fall ill … few will be ill … there'll be terrible [events] … there'll be peace." They might discuss earthquakes, comets, solar and lunar eclipses, stellar occultations and non-occultations and where they will happen, and they're able to predict them. The ascetic Gautama doesn't do such things.'

29. "'There are other ascetics and priests who eat the faithful alms of others and practice teachings that obstruct the path, making their living from wrong livelihoods. They might say, "This country will win; that country is not their equal … that country will win; this country is not their equal." They divine the fortune and misfortune and discuss the flourishing and demise [of different countries]. The ascetic Gautama doesn't do such things.'

30. "Monks, these are the minor matters of observing the precepts for which ordinary, uneducated people praise the Buddha.

Views about Past Eons

31. The Buddha told the monks, "Moreover, there's another teaching that illuminates what's profound, subtle, and great, but it's only the noble disciples who praise this teaching of the Tathagata's. What is that profound, subtle, great, and illuminating teaching for which the noble disciples praise the Tathagata?

32. "Ascetics and priests make diverse and countless statements as they like about past and future eons, and they all enter 62 views by doing so. Making these diverse and countless statements about past and future eons, none of them can go beyond these 62 views.

33. "What are the reasons those ascetics and priests make diverse and countless statements as they like about past and future eons and enter these 62 views that they don't go beyond?

34. "Ascetics and priests each make diverse and countless statements as they like about past eons, and they all enter 18 views. Making these diverse and countless statements about past eons, none of them can go beyond these 18 views.

35. "What are the reasons those ascetics and priests make diverse and countless statements as they like about past eons, and enter these 18 views that they don't go beyond?

Self and World Are Eternal

36. "Ascetics and priests create this eternalist theory about past eons: 'Self and the world always exists.' They all enter four views. Regarding past eons, they say that self and the world always exists and don't go beyond these four views that they enter.

37. "What are the reasons those ascetics and priests create eternalist theories about past eons, saying that self and the world always exist, and they don't go beyond these four views that they enter?

38. "Some ascetics and priests use various methods to enter a samadhi of mind through which they remember 20 eons of [world] formation and destruction. They say, 'Self and the world are eternal. This is true, the rest is false. Why is that? Using various methods, I entered a samadhi of mind through which I remembered 20 eons of [world] formation and destruction. During that time, sentient beings neither increased nor decreased. They always came together and didn't scatter. By this, I know: "Self and the world are eternal. This is true; the rest is false."' This is the first view. As a result of this assertion about past eons that self and world are eternal, ascetics and priests don't go beyond these four views.

39. "Some ascetics and priests use various methods to enter a samadhi of mind through which they remember 40 eons of [world] formation and destruction. They say, 'Self and the world are eternal. This is true; the rest is false. Why is that? Using various methods, I entered a samadhi of mind through which I remembered 40 eons of [world] formation and destruction. During that time, sentient beings neither increased nor decreased. They always came together and didn't scatter. By this, I know: "Self and the world are eternal. This is true; the rest is false."' This is the second view. As a result of this assertion about past eons that self and world are eternal, ascetics and priests don't go beyond these four views.

40. "Some ascetics and priests use various methods to enter a samadhi of mind through which they remember 80 eons of [world] formation and destruction. They say, 'Self and the world are eternal. This is true; the rest is false. Why is that? Using various methods, I entered a samadhi of mind through which I remembered 80 eons of [world] formation and destruction. During that time, sentient beings neither increased nor decreased. They always came together and didn't scatter. By this, I know: "Self and the world are eternal. This is true; the rest is false."' This is the third view. As a result of this assertion about past eons that self and world are eternal, ascetics and priests don't go beyond these four views.

41. "Some ascetics and priests possess quick intelligence and are skilled observers. Using the methods of quick intelligence and observation, they investigate the truth as they see it themselves. Using their own eloquence, they say, 'Self and the world are eternal.' This is the fourth view. As a result of this assertion about past eons that self and world are eternal, ascetics and priests don't go beyond these four views.

42. "These ascetics and priests make assertion about past eons that self and the world are eternal, and they all enter these four views. [Saying that] self and the world are eternal, they don't go beyond these four views that they enter.

43. "There's only the Tathagata that knows this ground of views thus maintained and thus adhered to, and he also knows its results. The Tathagata's knowledge goes beyond this. Although his knowledge is unattached, he attained complete cessation through this detachment. He knows the assembly, cessation, enjoyment, fault, and escape [of this ground of views]. Because of his equal observation and liberation without remainder, he's called a Tathagata.

44. "This is that other teaching that illuminates what's profound, subtle, and great and which causes the noble disciples to truly and equally praise the Tathagata.

Self and World Are Half Eternal and Half Impermanent

45. "Again, what's the other teaching that illuminates what's profound, subtle, and great and which causes the noble disciples to truly and equally praise the Tathagata?

46. "Ascetics and priests create this theory about past eons: 'Self and the world are half eternal and half impermanent.' As a result of this assertion about past eons that self and the world are half eternal and half impermanent, those ascetics and priests don't go beyond these four views.

47. "At the beginning of this eon of formation, there was a sentient being whose merits ended, whose life ended, and whose practice ended. When their life ended in the Abhasvara Heaven, they were born in an empty Brahma Heaven. This being's mind craved that birthplace and so was born there. It also wished for other sentient beings to be born there, too.

48. "After this sentient being was born according to its craving and wish, there were other sentient beings whose lives, practices, and merits were exhausted. When their lives ended in the Abhasvara Heaven, they were reborn in that empty Brahma Heaven. The sentient being who was born there first thought, 'Here, I am Brahma, Great Brahma! I appeared spontaneously; it's impossible that another created me. I know all meanings and scriptures, and I'm sovereign over a thousand worlds. I am the most honored who's able to transform himself and who's sublime, supreme, and the father of sentient beings. I was here first by myself, and those other sentient beings came later. I created those sentient beings who came later.'

49. "Those later sentient beings also thought, 'He is Great Brahma. He was able to create himself; no other could create him. He knows all meanings and scriptures, and he's sovereign over a thousand worlds. He's the most honored who's able to transform himself and who's, sublime, supreme, and the father of sentient beings. He was here first by himself, and it was later than we arrived. We sentient beings are his creations.'

50. "After the lives and practices of those brahma sentient beings are exhausted, they are born in the world and gradually grow up. They shave their hair, put on the three Dharma robes, and leave home to cultivate the path. They enter a samadhi of mind and become aware of their past births as a result of that samadhi. They say, 'That Great Brahma was able to create himself; no other could create him. He knows all meanings and scriptures, and he's sovereign over a thousand worlds. He's the most honored who's able to transform himself and who's sublime, supreme, and the father of sentient beings. Everlasting and unchanging is that Brahma who created us, but we are impermanent, changing, and unable to last long. Therefore, it should be known: "Self and the world are half eternal and half impermanent. This is true; the rest is false."' This is called the first view. As a result of creating this theory about past eons [that self and world are] half eternal and half impermanent, ascetics and priests don't go beyond these four views.

51. "Some sentient beings are playful and lazy. Countless are the games with which they entertain themselves. While they enjoy their games, their bodies are exhausted, and they forget themselves. As they forget themselves, their lives end, and they are reborn in the world. They gradually grow up, shave their hair, put on the three Dharma robes, leave home, and cultivate the path. They enter a samadhi of mind through which they become aware of their past births. They say, 'Those other sentient beings who didn't frequently entertain themselves with games exist eternally in their abodes, everlasting unchanging. As a result of my frequent games, I came to this impermanent state that's subject to change. Therefore, I know: "Self and the world are half eternal and half impermanent. This is true; the rest is false."' This is the second view. As a result of creating this theory about past eons [that self and world are] half eternal and half impermanent, ascetics and priests don't go beyond these four views.

52. "Some sentient beings forget themselves after watching each other one after the other. As a result, they're born in the world when their lives end. They gradually grow up, shave their hair, put on the three Dharma robes, leave home, and cultivate the path. They enter a samadhi of mind through which they became aware of their past births. Then they say, 'Those sentient beings that don't forget themselves while watching each other one after the other are everlasting and unchanging. We frequently watched each other and forgot ourselves after doing so. As a result, we've come to this impermanent state that's subject to change. Therefore, I know: "Self and the world is half eternal and half impermanent. This is true; the rest is false."' This is the third view. As a result of creating this theory about past eons [that self and world are] half eternal and half impermanent, ascetics and priests don't go beyond these four views.

53. "Some ascetics and priests possess quick intelligence and are skilled observers. With their quick intelligence and observation, they use their own eloquence to say, 'Self and the world are half eternal and half impermanent. This is true; the rest is false.' This is the fourth view. As a result of creating this theory about past eons [that self and world are] half eternal and half impermanent, ascetics and priests don't go beyond these four views.

54. "These ascetics and priests create the theory about past eons that self and the world are half eternal and half impermanent. They all enter these four views and don't go beyond them.

55. "There's only the Tathagata that knows this ground of views thus maintained and thus adhered to, and he also knows its results. The Tathagata's knowledge goes beyond this. Although his knowledge is unattached, he attained complete cessation through this detachment. He knows the assembly, cessation, enjoyment, fault, and escape [of this ground of views]. Because of his equal observation and liberation without remainder, he's called a Tathagata.

56. "This is that other teaching that illuminates what's profound, subtle, and great and which causes the noble disciples to truly and equally praise the Tathagata.

Self and the World Are Limited and Limitless

57. "Again, what's the other teaching that illuminates what's profound, subtle, and great and which causes the noble disciples to truly and equally praise the Tathagata?

58. "Ascetics and priests create this theory about past eons: 'Self and the world are limited and limitless.' As a result of creating this theory about past eons that self and the world are limited and limitless, those ascetics and priests don't go beyond these four views.

59. "Some ascetics and priests use various methods to enter a samadhi mind through which they examine the world and perceive that it has limits. They then say, 'This world has limits. This is true; the rest is false. Why is that? Using various methods, I entered a samadhi of mind through which I examined the world and its limits. Therefore, I know: "The world has limits. This is true; the rest is false."' This is the first view. As a result of creating this theory about past eons that self and world have limits, ascetics and priests don't go beyond these four views.

60. "Some ascetics and priests use various methods to enter a samadhi of mind through which they examine the world and perceive that it's limitlessness. They then say, 'This world is limitless. This is true; the rest is false. Why is that? Using various methods, I've entered a samadhi of mind through which I examined the world and its limitlessness. Therefore, I know: "This world is limitless. This is true; the rest is false."' This is the second view. As a result of creating this theory about past eons that self and world are limitless, ascetics and priests don't go beyond these four views.

61. "Some ascetics and priests use various methods to enter a samadhi of mind through which they examine the world. They take the upward direction to have a limit and the four directions to be limitless. They then say, 'This world has a limit, and it's limitless. This is true; the rest is false. Why is that? Using various methods, I've entered a samadhi of mind through which I examined the world. I observed that the upward direction has a limit and that the four directions are limitless. Therefore, I know: "The world has a limit, and it's limitless. This is true; the rest is false."' This is the third view. As a result of creating this theory about past eons that self and world are limited and limitless, ascetics and priests don't go beyond these four views.

62. "Some ascetics and priests possess quick intelligence and are skilled observers. With their quick intelligence and observation, they use their own eloquence to say, 'Self and the world are neither limited nor limitless. This is true; the rest is false.' This is the fourth view. As a result of creating this theory about past eons that self and world are neither limited nor limitless, ascetics and priests don't go beyond these four views.

63. "These ascetics and priests create the theory regarding past eons that self and the world are limited and limitless. They all enter these four views and don't go beyond them.

64. "There's only the Tathagata that knows this ground of views thus maintained and thus adhered to, and he also knows its results. The Tathagata's knowledge goes beyond this. Although his knowledge is unattached, he attained complete cessation through this detachment. He knows the assembly, cessation, enjoyment, fault, and escape [of this ground of views]. Because of his equal observation and liberation without remainder, he's called a Tathagata.

65. "This is that other teaching that illuminates what's profound, subtle, and great and which causes the noble disciples to truly and equally praise the Tathagata.

Equivocations

66. "Again, what's the other teaching that illuminates what's profound, subtle, and great and which causes the noble disciples to truly and equally praise the Tathagata?

67. "Ascetics and priests equivocate about past eons. When asked at different times, they have different answers, and they enter four views. As a result of equivocating about past eons, ascetics and priests don't go beyond these four views.

68. "Some ascetics and priests create theories such as this and form views like this: 'I don't see or know that there are good and bad results or that there aren't results [to actions]. Not seeing or knowing it, I would say, "Are there results that are good and bad, or are there no results?" The world has ascetics and priests who are broadly learned, clever, and wise. They always enjoy quietude, eloquence, and subtlety. They're honored by the world and skillfully discern views with wisdom. Suppose they were to question me about this profound subject; I wouldn't be able to answer them. I'd be ashamed of that. Fearing that happening, I'll use this answer as my refuge, island, home, and ultimate path.'

69. "When they're questioned, they will answer, 'This matter is thus … this matter is true … this matter is different … this matter isn't different … this matter is neither different nor not different.' This is the first view. As a result of this type of equivocation, ascetics and priests don't go beyond these four views.

70. "Some ascetics and priests create theories such as this and form views like this: 'I don't see or know that there is another world or that there isn't another world. The world's ascetics and priests perceive it with their heavenly eye and use the knowledge of other minds to see distant things as though they were nearby, which other people don't see. They might know if there's another world or isn't another world, but I don't know or see that there's another world or that there's no other world. If I were to say either, that would be false speech. I dislike and fear false speech, so I'll make that [answer] my refuge, island, home, and ultimate path.'

71. "When they're questioned, they will answer, 'This matter is thus … this matter is true … this matter is different … this matter isn't different … this matter is neither different nor not different.' This is the second view. As a result of this type of equivocation, ascetics and priests don't go beyond these four views.

72. "Some ascetics and priests form views like this and create theories such as this: 'I don't know or see what's skillful and what's unskillful. How can I thus say "this is skillful" or "this is unskillful" when I don't know or see it? Craving arises in me regarding this, and anger arises from the craving. Having craving and anger, then I'd be subject to birth. I wanted to cease being subject [to birth], so I left home to cultivate myself. To be subject to that is terrible, so I'll take this [answer] to be my refuge, island, home, and ultimate path.'

73. "When they're questioned, they will answer, 'This matter is thus … this matter is true … this matter is different … this matter isn't different … this matter is neither different nor not different.' This is the third view. As a result of this type of equivocation, ascetics and priests don't go beyond these four views.

74. "Some ascetics and priests are foolish and dull-witted. When others question them, they answer according to what others say. 'This matter is thus … this matter is true … this matter is different … this matter isn't different … this matter is neither different nor not different.' This is the fourth view. As a result of this type of equivocation, ascetics and priests don't go beyond these four views.

75. "These ascetics and priests equivocate regarding past eons. They all enter these four views and don't go beyond them.

76. "There's only the Tathagata that knows this ground of views thus maintained and thus adhered to, and he also knows its results. The Tathagata's knowledge goes beyond this. Although his knowledge is unattached, he attained complete cessation through this detachment. He knows the assembly, cessation, enjoyment, fault, and escape [of this ground of views]. Because of his equal observation and liberation without remainder, he's called a Tathagata.

77. "This is that other teaching that illuminates what's profound, subtle, and great and which causes the noble disciples to truly and equally praise the Tathagata.

The World Has No Cause

78. "Again, what's the other teaching that illuminates what's profound, subtle, and great and which causes the noble disciples to truly and equally praise the Tathagata?

79. "Some ascetics and priests say about past eons that this world arose without cause, and they all enter two views. As a result of saying about past eons that this world arose without cause, they don't go beyond these two views.

80. What are the reasons those ascetics and priests say about past eons that [the world] exists without cause and don't go beyond these two views?

81. "Some sentient beings lack conception or perception. If those sentient beings give rise to concepts, then they're reborn in the world when their lives end. They gradually grow up, shave their hair, put on the three Dharma robes, leave home, and cultivate the path. They enter a samadhi of mind through which they become aware of their past births. They say, 'I didn't exist in the past, but now suddenly I exist. This world didn't exist before, but now it does. This is true; the rest is false.' This is the first view. As a result of saying about past eons that [the world] exists without cause, ascetics and priests don't go beyond these two views.

82. "Some ascetics and priests possess quick intelligence and are skilled observers. With their quick intelligence and observation, they use their own eloquence to say: 'This world exists without a cause. This is true; the rest is false.' This is the second view. As a result of saying about past eons that [the world] exists without cause, ascetics and priests don't go beyond these two views.

83. "These ascetics and priests [say] about past eons [that the world] exists without a cause. They all enter these two views and don't go beyond them. There's only the Tathagata that knows this … same as before.

84. "Ascetics and priests make diverse and countless statements as they like about past eons, and they all enter these 18 views. Making these diverse and countless statements that they make as they like about past eons, none of them go beyond these 18 views. There's only the Tathagata that knows this … same as before.

Views about Future Eons

85. "Again, what's the other teaching that illuminates what's profound, subtle, and great? Ascetics and priests make countless and diverse statements as they like about the future eons, and they all enter 44 views by doing so. Making these diverse and countless statements about future eons, they don't go beyond these 44 views.

86. "What are the reasons those ascetics and priests make countless and diverse as they like about future eons, entering 44 views that they don't go beyond?

87. "Some ascetics and priests create theories about having conception in future eons, claiming that the world will have conceptions. They enter a total of sixteen views about future eons in doing so. Theorizing about future eons and claiming that the world will have conception, they don't go beyond these sixteen views.

88. "What are the reasons those ascetics and priests create theories about conception in future eons, claim that the world will have conceptions, and don't go beyond these sixteen views?

The World Will Have Conceptions

89. "Some ascetics and priests create such theories and such views as this: 'After this life ends, I'll be born with form and conceptions. This is true; the rest is false.' This is the first view. As a result of creating theories about conception in future eons and claiming that the world will have conceptions, those ascetics and priests don't go beyond these sixteen views.

96. "Some say, 'After this life ends, I'll be born neither with nor without limits and with conceptions. This is true; the rest is false.'

97. "Some say, 'After this life ends, I'll be born only with happiness and conceptions. This is true; the rest is false.'

98. "Some say, 'After this life ends, I'll be born only with suffering and conceptions. This is true; the rest is false.'

99. "Some say, 'After this life ends, I'll be born with both happiness and suffering and conceptions. This is true; the rest is false.'

100. "Some say, 'After this life ends, I'll be born with neither happiness nor suffering and with conceptions. This is true; the rest is false.'

101. "Some say, 'After this life ends, I'll be born with a single concept. This is true; the rest is false.'

102. "Some say, 'After this life ends, I'll be born with diverse concepts. This is true; the rest is false.'

103. "Some say, 'After this life ends, I'll be born with a few conceptions. This is true; the rest is false.'

104. "Some say, 'After this life ends, I'll be born with measureless conceptions. This is true; the rest is false.' This is the sixteenth view.

105. "Some ascetics and priests create theories about conception in future eons and claim that the world will have conceptions. They don't go beyond these sixteen views. There's only the Buddha who can know this … as before.

The World Won't Have Conceptions

106. "Again, what's the other teaching that illuminates what's profound, subtle, and great? Ascetics and priests create theories about lacking conception in future eons and claim that the world will lack conceptions. They enter a total of eight views about future eons in doing so. Creating theories about lacking conception [and claiming that the world won't have conceptions, those ascetics and priests] they don't go beyond these eight views.

107. "What are the reasons those ascetics and priests create theories about lacking conception in future eons, claim the world won't have conceptions, and don't go beyond these eight views?

108. "Some ascetics and priests create this view and this theory: 'After this life ends, I'll be born with form and without conceptions. This is true; the rest is false.'

109. "Some say, 'After this life ends, I'll be born without form or conceptions. This is true; the rest is false.'

110. "Some say, 'After this life ends, I'll be born with and without form and without conceptions. This is true; the rest is false.'

111. "Some say, 'After this life ends, I'll be born neither with nor without form and without conceptions. This is true; the rest is false.'

113. "Some say, 'After this life ends, I'll be born without limits or conceptions. This is true; the rest is false.'

114. "Some say, 'After this life ends, I'll be born with and without limits and without conceptions. This is true; the rest is false.'

115. "Some say, 'After this life ends, I'll be born neither with nor without limits and without conceptions. This is true; the rest is false.' This is the eighth view.

116. "If ascetics and priests create theories about lacking conception in future eons and claim that the world won't have conceptions, then as a result they enter a total of eight views and don't go beyond them. There's only the Buddha who can know this … as before.

The World Will Have Neither Conceptions Nor No Conceptions

117. "Again, what's the other teaching that illuminates what's profound, subtle, and great? Some ascetics and priests create theories about there being neither conception nor no conception in future eons and claim that the world will have neither conceptions nor no conceptions. They enter a total eight views about future eons in doing so. Creating theories about there being neither conception nor no conception in future eons and claiming that the world will have neither conceptions nor no conceptions, they don't go beyond these eight views.

118. "What are the reasons those ascetics and priests create theories about there being neither conception nor no conception in future eons, claim that the world will have neither conceptions nor no conceptions, and don't go beyond these eight views?

119. "Ascetics and priests create such theory and such a view as this: 'When this life ends, I'll be born with form and neither conceptions nor no conceptions. This is true; the rest is false.'

120. "Some say, 'When this life ends, I'll be born without form and with neither conceptions nor no conceptions. This is true; the rest is false.'

126. "Some say, 'When this life ends, I'll be born neither with nor without limits and with neither conceptions nor no conceptions. This is true; the rest is false.' This is the eighth view.

127. "If ascetics and priests create theories about there being neither conception nor no conception in future eons and claim that the world will have neither conceptions nor no conceptions, then as a result they enter a total of eight views and don't go beyond them. There's only the Buddha who can know this … as before.

Annihilationist Theories

128. "Again, what's the other teaching that illuminates what's profound, subtle, and great…? Some ascetics and priests create annihilationist theories about future eons and claim sentient beings will be annihilated without remainder. They all enter seven views about future eons by doing so. Creating annihilationist theories about future eons and claiming that sentient beings will be annihilated without remainder, they don't go beyond these seven views.

129. "What are the reasons that those ascetics and priests create annihilationist theories about future eons and claim that sentient beings will be annihilated without remainder, entering seven views that they don't go beyond?

130. "Some ascetics and priests create such a theory and form such a view as this: 'My body of four elements and six senses was born from parents, fed milk, and raised, grew larger with clothes and food, and it's caressed, hugged, and protected. Still, it's impermanent and sure to decay and die. That's precisely what's called "annihilated."' This is the first view.

131. "Some ascetics and priests say this: 'Here, I won't be called annihilated. In the desire realm heavens, I'll be annihilated without remainder. That's precisely what's called "annihilated."' This is the second view.

132. "Some ascetics and priests say this: 'I won't be annihilated here; my body will be conjured in the form realm with faculties that are perfect, and it'll be annihilated without remainder. This is "annihilation."'

133. "Some say, 'I won't be annihilated here; I'll be annihilated in the formless abode of space.'

134. "Some say, 'I won't be annihilated here; I'll be annihilated in the formless abode of consciousness.'

135. "Some say, 'I won't be annihilated here; I'll be annihilated in the formless abode of nothingness.'

136. "Some say, 'I won't be annihilated here; I'll be annihilated in the formless abode of neither conception nor no conception.' This is the seventh annihilation and the seventh view.

137. "As a result of saying about future eons that these sentient beings will be annihilated without remainder, ascetics and priests enter seven views and don't go beyond them. There's only the Buddha who can know this … likewise as before.

Nirvana in the Present Life

138. "Again, what's the other teaching that illuminates what's profound, subtle, and great…? Some ascetics and priests create theories about future eons and Nirvana in the present life, saying that sentient beings will have Nirvana in the present. They all enter five views about future eons by doing so. Creating theories about future eons and Nirvana in the present life, they don't go beyond these five views.

139. "What are the reasons that ascetics and priests claim about future eons that sentient beings will have Nirvana in the present life, entering five views that they don't go beyond?

140. "Some ascetics and priests form this view and this theory: 'Here in the present life, I partake of the five desires and indulge myself. This is the Nirvana that I've attained in the present.' This is the first view.

141. "Again, some ascetics and priests say this: 'This is Nirvana in the present, nothing else is. Again, there's Nirvana in the present life that's sublime and supreme. You don't know of it; only I know it. I've departed from desire and bad and unskillful things. With perception and examination, that seclusion gave rise to joy and happiness, and I entered the first dhyana. This is called Nirvana in the present life.' This is the second view.

142. "Again, some ascetics and priests say this: 'This is Nirvana in the present, nothing else is. Again, there's Nirvana in the present life that's sublime and supreme. You don't know of it; only I know it. I ceased perception and examination. With inner joy, unified mind, and the absence of perception and examination, samadhi gave rise to joy and happiness, and I entered the second dhyana. This is called Nirvana in the present life.' This is the third view.

143. "Again, some ascetics and priests say this: 'This is Nirvana in the present, nothing else is. Again, there's Nirvana in the present life that's sublime and supreme. You don't know of it; only I know it. I eliminated thought, discarded joy, and abided in happiness, equanimity, mindfulness, and a unified mind. I personally knew happiness as it's declared by noble people and entered the third dhyana. This is called Nirvana in the present life.' This is the fourth view.

144. "Again, some ascetics and priests say this: 'This is Nirvana in the present, nothing else is. Again, there's Nirvana in the present life that's sublime and supreme. You don't know of it; only I know it. As my happiness and suffering ceased, it eliminated my prior sorrow and joy. Feeling neither pain nor pleasure, I was equanimous, mindful, and pure, and I entered the fourth dhyana. This is called the supreme Nirvana.' This is the fifth view.

145. "If ascetics and priests create these theories about future eons and Nirvana in the present life, they don't go beyond these five views. There's only the Buddha who can know this … same as before.

146. "Some ascetics and priests make countless and diverse statements as they like about future eons, and they all enter these 44 views and don't go beyond them. There's only the Buddha who can know this … same as before.

147. "Some ascetics and priests make countless and diverse statements as they like about past and future eons, and they all enter these 62 views by doing so. Making these diverse and countless statements about past and future eons, they don't go beyond these 62 views. There's only the Buddha who can know this … same as before.

The Net of Views

148. "Some ascetics and priests create eternalist theories and say that self and the world are eternal. Those ascetics and priests regarding this possess the knowledge of [past] births, which is caused by a different faith, different desire, different learning, different relations, different understanding, different view, different samadhi, and different tolerance. Because it rarely occurs, it's called an attainment … each ground of views is the same up to Nirvana in the present life.

149. "Ascetics and priests create eternalist theories and say that the world is eternal. As a result of being conditioned by that ascertainment, they produce and give rise to craving, but they aren't aware of it themselves. Being defiled and attached to craving, they submit to those cravings… each ground of views is the same up to Nirvana in the present life.

150. "Some ascetics and priests create eternalist theories about past eons and say that the world is eternal. They do so as a result of being conditioned by contact. It would be impossible for them to establish their theories unless they were conditioned by contact… each ground of views is the same up to Nirvana in the present.

151. "Some ascetics and priests each speak according to their views about past and future eons. They all enter these 62 views by doing so. They each speak according to their views, and they all depend on those views, which they don't go beyond.

152. "It's like a fisherman who covers the top of a small pond with a fine-meshed net. He knows that whatever kind of aquatic life in the pond that enters his net won't have a way to escape and won't go beyond it.

153. "Ascetics and priests are likewise. They make diverse statements about past and future eons, and they all enter these 62 views and don't go beyond them.

154. "If monks really know the accumulation, cessation, enjoyment, fault, and escape of the six contacts, that's the supreme escape from those views. The Tathagata himself knows that his birth and death has ended. Those who have bodies do so because they desire the merits to be liberated as gods or humans. If they have no body, then gods and worldly people have no basis for that. They then are like a palm tree that's been cut at its root; it doesn't grow anymore. The Buddha is likewise; he has ended birth and death and won't be born again."

The Sutra's Title

155. When the Buddha spoke this teaching, this great realm of a thousand worlds quaked and shook in six ways. At that moment, Ananda was behind the Buddha fanning him. He bared his right shoulder and knelt with his palms together. He said, "This teaching is profound! What's its name? How should it be accepted and remembered?"

156. The Buddha told Ananda, "This sutra should be called the 'Shaking of Meaning,' 'Shaking of the Teaching,' 'Shaking of Views,' 'Shaking of Mara,' and 'Shaking of Brahma.'"

157. When Ananda heard what the Buddha taught, he rejoiced and approved.

DA 22 SRONATANDYA

(DN 4) [T 1.94a18]

(The direct parallel for this sutra is DN 4.)

(When the people of Campa hear that the Buddha and his disciples have arrived, they all decide to go and pay their respects to him. The local lord, a priest named Sronatandya decided to go with them. After a debate with a group of priests over the wisdom of doing this, Sronatandya talks with the Buddha, who questions him about which qualities are essential to being a priest. They agree that precepts and wisdom are essential to being a priest or a monk.)

1. Thus I have heard: One time, the Buddha was staying in Anga accompanied by a large assembly of 1,250 monks. They traveled among the people, stopping to stay at the city of Campa by the side of Garga Pond.

2. At the time, there was a priest named Sronatandya who was residing in Campa, a city that was populous, thriving, and bountiful. King Prasenajit had bestowed the city to the priest Sronatandya as his priestly due.

3. This priest was descended from seven generations of fathers and mothers who were genuine [priests], so he wasn't slighted by others. He had mastered the three Vedas and could discern all the various kinds of scriptures. He was learned about all the subtleties of the world's scriptures. He was also skilled in the techniques of [recognising] the great man's signs, divining fortune and misfortune, and [performing] sacrifices and rituals. He had 500 disciples whom he taught without exception.

4. The priests, prominent people, and householders in Campa heard: "The ascetic Gautama of the Sakya clan, who had left the home life [113a] and achieved awakening, is touring among the people of Anga and has arrived by the side of Garga Pond. He possesses a great reputation that's heard throughout the world. He's a Tathagata, an Arhat, and a Completely Awakened One who has perfected the ten epithets. Among gods, worldly men, and demons, whether they're in the assemblies of Mara, gods, ascetics, or priests, he is self-realized and teaches the Dharma for others. His words are all genuine in the beginning, middle, and end, complete in content and expression, and purify the religious life."

5. They said, "It would be fitting to go and have an audience with such a realized man as this. We should go and pay him a visit now!" After they said that, they followed each other as they left the city. Crowds of people headed out to visit the Buddha.

6. The priest Sronatandya was up in his tower and saw those crowds of people from a distance. He asked his attendant, "What's the reason those crowds of people are following each other? Where are they going?"

7. His attendant said, "I heard this: 'The ascetic Gautama of the Sakya clan, who had left the home life and achieved awakening, is touring among the people of Anga and has arrived by the side of Garga Pond. He possesses a great reputation that's heard throughout the world. He's a Tathagata, an Arhat, and a Completely Awakened One who has perfected the ten epithets. Among gods, worldly men, and demons, whether they're in the assemblies of Mara, gods, ascetics, or priests, he is self-realized and teaches the Dharma for others. His words are all genuine in the beginning, middle, and end, complete in content and expression, and purify the religious life.' Those crowds of priests, prominent people, and householders of Campa are going to pay a visit to the ascetic Gautama."

8. The priest Sronatandya then instructed his attendant: "Quickly, memorize my words and go tell those people this: 'All of you, wait a little while for me. We'll go pay a visit to that Gautama together.'"

9. His attendant then went and told those people Sronatandya's message: 'Everyone, wait a little while for me. We'll go pay a visit to that Gautama together."

10. The people replied to his attendant, "Quickly return to the priest and tell him, 'Now is a good time. We should go together.'"

11. The attendant returned and said, "The people are waiting. They say, 'Now is a good time. We should go together.'" The priest Sronatandya then came down from his tower and stood at its entrance.

12. At the time, another five hundred priests had already first assembled under the entrance for some minor reason. When they saw the priest Sronatandya coming, they all looked up and asked, "Great priest, where are you going?"

13. Sronatandya replied, "The ascetic Gautama of the Sakya clan, who had left the home life and achieved awakening, is touring among the people of Anga and has arrived by the side of Garga Pond. He possesses a great reputation that's heard throughout the world. He's a Tathagata, an Arhat, and a Completely Awakened One who has perfected the ten epithets. Among gods, worldly men, and demons, whether they're in the assemblies of Mara, gods, ascetics, or priests, he is self-realized and teaches the Dharma for others. His words are all genuine in the beginning, middle, and end, complete in content and expression, and purify the religious life. It would be fitting to go and have an audience with such a true man as this. I'm going to visit him and have a look at his [bodily] signs."

14. Those five hundred priests said to Sronatandya, "Don't go and look at his signs. Why not? He should visit you here; you shouldn't go there to visit him. Now, great priest, you're descended from fathers and mothers who were genuine [priests] for seven generations, and other people don't slight you. You have achieved such status, so he should come here to visit you; you shouldn't go there to visit him.

15. "Moreover, great priest, you've mastered the three Vedas and can discern all the various scriptures. You're learned about all the subtleties of the world's scriptures. You're also skilled at [recognising] the great man's signs, divining fortune and misfortune, and [performing] sacrifices and rituals. You have achieved such status, so he should come here to visit you; you shouldn't go there to visit him.

16. "Moreover, great priest, you're handsome looking, having attained the appearance of Brahma. You have achieved such status, so he should come here to visit you; you shouldn't go there to visit him.

17. "Moreover, great priest, your precepts and virtue are surpassing, and your wisdom is accomplished. You have achieved such status, so he should come here to visit you; you shouldn't go there to visit him.

18. "Moreover, great priest, your words are gentle, complete in eloquence, and their content and expression are pure. You have achieved such status, so he should come here to visit you; you shouldn't go there to visit him.

19. "Moreover, great priest, you have numerous disciples. You have achieved such status, so he should come here to visit you; you shouldn't go there to visit him.

20. "Moreover, great priest, you're the instructor of five hundred priests. You have achieved such status, so he should come here to visit you; you shouldn't go there to visit him.

21. "Moreover, great priest, students come from the four directions to request [your instruction], asking about the technique of sacrifices and rituals. You have achieved such status, so he should come here to visit you; you shouldn't go there to visit him.

22. "Moreover, great priest, King Prasenajit and King Bimbisara respect and support you. You have achieved such status, so he should come here to visit you; you shouldn't go there to visit him.

23. "Moreover, great priest, you're rich, possess treasures, and your treasury is overflowing. You have achieved such status, so he should come here to visit you; you shouldn't go there to visit him.

24. "Moreover, great priest, your wisdom is insightful, your words are learned, and you lack timidity. You have achieved such status, so he should come here to visit you; you shouldn't go there to visit him.

25. Sronatandya then told the priests, "So it is, so it is! As you've said, I'm endowed with these virtues; there are none I don't possess. Now, listen to what I say: These virtues are possessed by the ascetic Gautama, so we should go there to him; he shouldn't come here to us. The ascetic Gautama is descended from fathers and mothers who were genuine for seven generations, so he's not slighted by other people. He has achieved such status, so we should go there to him; he shouldn't come here to us.

26. "Moreover, the ascetic Gautama is handsome looking, having come from the warrior caste. He has achieved such status, so we should go there to him; he shouldn't come here to us.

27. "Moreover, the ascetic Gautama was born to a noble station and left home for the path. He has achieved such status, so we should go there to him; he shouldn't come here to us.

28. "Moreover, the ascetic Gautama is endowed with a glowing form, his caste and clan are genuine, and he left home to cultivate the path. He has achieved such status, so we should go there to him; he shouldn't come here to us.

29. "Moreover, the ascetic Gautama was born to a wealthy family that possessed great majesty, and he left home for the path. He has achieved such status, so we should go there to him; he shouldn't come here to us.

30. "Moreover, the ascetic Gautama has perfected noble precepts and accomplished wisdom. He has achieved such status, so we should go there to him; he shouldn't come here to us.

31. "Moreover, the ascetic Gautama's words are gentle and refined. He has achieved such status, so we should go there to him; he shouldn't come here to us.

32. "Moreover, the ascetic Gautama is a teacher to a multitude, and his disciples are numerous. He has achieved such status, so we should go there to him; he shouldn't come here to us.

33. "Moreover, the ascetic Gautama has forever destroyed craving without any fickleness. He has eliminated sorrow and fear, and his hair doesn't stand on end. He rejoices and is glad to see people commend what's good, skillfully teaches the results of conduct, and doesn't criticize other religions. He has achieved such status, so we should go there to him; he shouldn't come here to us.

34. "Moreover, the ascetic Gautama is always respected and supported by King Prasenajit and King Bimbisara. He has achieved such status, so we should go there to him; he shouldn't come here to us.

35. "Moreover, the ascetic Gautama is respected and supported by the priest Puskarasarin, and the priests Brahmayu, [Tarukkha], [Kutadanta], Sukamanava Taudeyaputra support him, too. Having achieved such a state, I should go to him; he shouldn't come here.

36. "Moreover, the ascetic Gautama is honored, respected, and supported by his disciples, and gods, demons, and other spirits respect him, too. The Sakya clan and the Kuru … Vrji, Malla, and Soma honor him, too. Having achieved such a state, I should go to him; he shouldn't come here.

37. "Moreover, the ascetic Gautama conferred the three refuges and five precepts to King Prasenajit and King Bimbisara. He has achieved such status, so we should go there to him; he shouldn't come here to us.

38. "Moreover, the ascetic Gautama conferred the three refuges and five precepts to the priest Puskarasarin. He has achieved such status, so we should go there to him; he shouldn't come here to us.

39. "Moreover, the ascetic Gautama's disciples received the three refuges and five precepts, and so have gods, the Sakya clan, the Kuru, and others. He has achieved such status, so we should go there to him; he shouldn't come here to us.

40. "Moreover, wherever the ascetic Gautama travels, all the people respect and support him. He has achieved such status, so we should go there to him; he shouldn't come here to us.

41. "Moreover, when the ascetic Gautama arrives as a city or village, he's supported by its people. He has achieved such status, so we should go there to him; he shouldn't come here to us.

42. "Moreover, wherever the ascetic Gautama goes, non-humans, demons, and spirits don't dare harass him. He has achieved such status, so we should go there to him; he shouldn't come here to us.

43. "Moreover, wherever the ascetic Gautama goes, the people living there see his light and hear heavenly music. He has achieved such status, so we should go there to him; he shouldn't come here to us.

44. "Moreover, wherever the ascetic Gautama goes, many people feel such longing that they cry as they watch him leave. He has achieved such status, so we should go there to him; he shouldn't come here to us.

45. "Moreover, when he first left home, the ascetic Gautama's parent cried and felt disappointed and heart-broken. He has achieved such status, so we should go there to him; he shouldn't come here to us.

46. "Moreover, when he was still young after leaving home, the ascetic Gautama discarded decorations, elephants and horses, valuable chariots, the five desires, and jewelry. He has achieved such status, so we should go there to him; he shouldn't come here to us.

47. "Moreover, the ascetic Gautama renounced his place as a wheel-turning king and left home for the path. If he'd stayed home, he would have ruled the peoples of the whole world, and we would've been his subordinates. He has achieved such status, so we should go there to him; he shouldn't come here to us.

48. "Moreover, the ascetic Gautama clearly understands the teachings of Brahma, he's able to explain them for others, and he pays visits to Brahma to speak with him. He has achieved such status, so we should go there to him; he shouldn't come here to us.

49. "Moreover, the ascetic Gautama is endowed all 32 signs [of a great man]. He has achieved such status, so we should go there to him; he shouldn't come here to us.

50. "Moreover, the ascetic Gautama is wise and insightful, and he lacks timidity. He has achieved such status, so we should go there to him; he shouldn't come here to us.

51. "Moreover, the ascetic Gautama is here at Campa by the side of Garga Pond right now. It would be an honor for me to be his guest and fitting to go and have an audience with him."

52. Those five hundred priests then said to Sronatandya, "Amazing! Extraordinary! Does he have such virtues? If he were to achieve just one of these virtues, he still shouldn't come [here to us]. How would it be if he were endowed with all of them? It would be fitting for us to come along and greet him."

53. Sronatandya replied, "If you want to go, it's a good time to do so."

54. Sronatandya then prepared horses and a treasure chariot, and he went to Garga Pond surrounded by those five hundred priests and the priests, prominent people, and householders of Campa. He stopped not far from the pond and thought to himself, "Suppose I question Gautama, and maybe it's not to his liking? That ascetic Gautama will rebuke me, 'You should ask this question and not ask that question.' The crowd will overhear him and take me for a fool, and my reputation will be damaged. Suppose the ascetic Gautama asks me about a topic, and maybe my answer won't be to his liking. That ascetic Gautama will rebuke me, 'You should answer this way and not that way.' The crowd will overhear him and take me for a fool, and my reputation will be damaged. Suppose I remain silent. When I return, the people will say, 'This priest knows nothing!' No matter what I do, visiting the ascetic Gautama will damage my reputation. If the ascetic Gautama asked me about the priest's teaching, that would be the only topic I could answer well enough to suit him!"

55. Once he finished thinking that beside of Garga Pond, Sronatandya dismounted from his chariot and walked on foot to the Bhagavan. After they had exchanged greetings, he sat down to one side.

56. Some of the priests, prominent people, and householders of Campa bowed to the Buddha and sat. Some of them exchanged greetings with him and sat. Some of them praised him and sat. Some of their saluted him with their hands together and sat. Some remained quiet and sat. When the crowd was seated and settled, the Buddha knew that thought the priest Sronatandya had in his mind, so he told him, "Regarding that thought you had, you should do as you wish."

57. The Buddha then asked Sronatandya, "How many qualities of a priest have you accomplished? Be honest; don't speak falsely."

58. Sronatandya then silently thought to himself, "Amazing! Extraordinary! The ascetic Gautama has that great miraculous power to read people's minds. He asked about the topic that I had thought about!"

59. The priest Sronatandya sat up straight, surveyed the audience around them, and smiled happily. He then answered the Buddha, "I've accomplished five qualities of a priest, speaking honestly and not falsely. What are the five? One is that I'm a priest who is descended from seven generations of fathers and mothers who are genuine so that other people don't slight me. Two is that I've mastered and chant the three Vedas, discern all the various scriptures, and I'm learned about all the subtleties of the world's scriptures. I'm also skilled at [recognising] the great man's signs, divining fortune and misfortune, and [performing] sacrifices and rituals. Three is that I'm handsome looking. Four is that I've perfected the observance of precepts. Five is that I'm wise and insightful. These are the five. Gautama, I've accomplished these five qualities of a priest, speaking truthfully and not falsely."

60. The Buddha said, "Good, Sronatandya! Could it be that a priest who discards one of those five qualities and achieves four of them could also be called a priest, speaking truthfully and not falsely?"

61. Sronatandya said to the Buddha, "He could. Why is that? Gautama, what purpose does his birth serve? Suppose a priest masters and chants the three Vedas, discerns all the various scriptures, and he's learned about all the subtleties of the world's scriptures. He's also skilled at [recognising] the great man's signs, divining fortune and misfortune, and [performing] sacrifices and rituals. He's handsome looking. He perfects the observance of precepts, and he's wise and insightful. Having these four qualities, he could be called a priest, speaking truthfully and not falsely."

62. The Buddha told Sronatandya, "Good, good! If he were to lack one of those four qualities and achieve three of them, would he still be called a priest, speak truthfully and not falsely?"

63. Sronatandya replied, "He would. Why is that? What purpose does his birth and the Vedas serve? Suppose a priest is handsome looking, has perfected the observance of precepts, and is wise and insightful. Achieving these three qualities, he could be called a priest, speaking truthfully and not falsely."

64. The Buddha said, "Good, good! How is it? If he were to lack one of those three qualities and achieve two of them, would he be called a priest, speaking truthfully and not falsely?"

65. Sronatandya answered, "He would. Why is that? What purpose does his birth, the Vedas, and being handsome serve?"

66. Each of the five hundred priests then spoke up and said to the priest Sronatandya: "Why do you disrespect [a priest's] birth, the Vedas, and being handsome, saying that they serve no purpose?"

67. The Bhagavan then told the five hundred priests, "If this priest Sronatandya were ugly, lacked [a respectable] caste and clan, hadn't mastered the Vedas, and lacked eloquence, wisdom, and good answers, he wouldn't be the one speaking with me, and you could speak. Since the priest Sronatandya is handsome, perfect in caste and clan, has mastered the Vedas, and is wise, eloquent, and good at answering questions, he's qualified to have a discussion with me. The rest of you, remain silent and let this man speak."

68. The priest Sronatandya then said to the Buddha, "Please, Gautama, stop for a moment. I'll instruct them about the teaching."

69. Sronatandya then told the five hundred priests, "Now, don't you see my nephew who's a student here in this assembly? Of everyone assembled here, only Gautama's appearance is as handsome as his, but that student does evil things like killing, stealing, engaging in sex, lacking courtesy, lying, deceiving, burning people with fire, and cutting them off from the path. Priests, this student from Anga has done all these evil things, so what purpose do the Vedas and being handsome serve in the end?"

70. The five hundred priests remained silent and didn't respond. Sronatandya then said to the Buddha, "If he perfects the observance of precepts, and he's wise and insightful, then he could be called a priest, speaking truthfully and not falsely."

71. The Buddha said, "Good, good! How is it, Sronatandya? If he lacks one of these two qualities and accomplishes one of them, would he be called a priest, speaking truthfully and not falsely?"

72. He answered, "He cannot. Why is that? The precepts are wise, and wisdom is the precepts. Having both precepts and wisdom, then as a result I would say that he is called a priest, speaking truthfully and not falsely."

73. The Buddha said, "Good, good! As you've said, having precepts is having wisdom, and having wisdom is having precepts. Precepts purify wisdom, and wisdom purifies precepts. Sronatandya, it's like when someone washes their hands: The right and left hand need each other. The left hand washes the right hand, and the right hand washes the left hand. These things are likewise. Having wisdom is having precepts, and having precepts is having wisdom. Precepts purify wisdom, and wisdom purifies precepts. Priest, I say someone endowed with precepts and wisdom is called a monk."

74. Sronatandya then said to the Buddha, "What are the precepts?"

The Buddha replied, "Listen closely, listen closely; consider it well! I will discern them one by one for you."

He responded, "Very well! I'd be glad to hear it."

75. The Bhagavan then told Sronatandya, "Suppose a Tathagata appears in the world who's Worthy of Alms, Completely Awakened, Accomplished in Insight and Conduct, Well Gone, Understands the World, an Unsurpassed Man, Trainer of Men, Teacher to Gods and Humans, a Buddha, and a Bhagavan. Among gods, worldly people, ascetics, and priests, he's self-realized, and he teaches for others. His words are all genuine in the beginning, middle, and end, complete in content and expression, and purify the religious life.

76. "Suppose prominent people or the children of prominent people hear this teaching. Once their belief is pure, they thus observe: 'The household life is difficult; it's like being in handcuffs and bond. I'd like to cultivate the religious life, but I can't free myself from it. I'd rather cut off my hair, put on the three Dharma robes, leave home, and cultivate the path.'

77. "At some different time, they renounce their home, property, and occupation, part with family and friends, put on the three Dharma robes, and leave ornaments behind. They recite the Vinaya and perfect the discipline of precepts. They renounce killing and don't kill beings … and so forth up to … He attains the rapture of the four dhyanas in the present life. Why is that? These things are a result of diligence, focused attention that's not lost, and attainment of a pleasant and solitary dwelling. Priest, this is perfecting the precepts."

78. The priest asked, "What is wisdom?"

79. The Buddha said, "If a monk's mind is purified and undefiled as a result of samadhi, is flexible and gentle, dwells in imperturbability … and so forth up to … attains the three insights. He eliminates ignorance and gives rise to wise insight. He produces the great light of Dharma and ceases being in darkness, and the knowledge that the contaminants have ended arises in him. Why is that? These things are a result of diligence, focused attention that's not lost, and attainment of a pleasant and solitary dwelling. Priest, this is perfecting wisdom."

80. The priest Sronatandya then said to the Buddha, "Now, I take refuge in the Buddha, Dharma, and Noble Sangha. Please permit me to become a layman in the correct teaching! From now until the end of my life, I won't kill, steal, commit adultery, lie, or drink alcohol."

81. When the priest Sronatandya heard what the Buddha taught, he rejoiced and approved.

DA 23 KUTATANDYA

(DN 5) [T 1.96c17]

(This sutra is parallel to DN 5.)

(In a similar story as the previous sutra, the Buddha's arrives at a town whose lord was a priest named Kutatandya inspires. As with Sronatandya, a group of priests argue that it's beneath Kutatandya to visit the Buddha. However, Kutatandya was planning a large sacrifice but was unsure how to proceed. He decides to ask the Buddha, who tells him a story of his previous birth as a warrior king who arranged a similar sacrifice. Kutatandya convert to the Buddha's teaching and attains Nirvana.)

1. Thus I have heard: One time, the Buddha was in the country of Kosala accompanied by a large assembly of 1,250 monks. Touring among the people, they arrived north of the priest town of [Khanumata] in Kosala and stopped to stay in a rosewood grove.

The Priest Kutatandya

2. There was a priest named Kutatandya who lived in [Khanumata]. The town was bountiful, and the people were flourishing. It had scenic parks, bathing ponds, and refreshing trees. King Prasenajit had granted this town to the priest Kutatandya as his priestly due. This priest was descended from seven generations of fathers and mothers who were genuine, so he wasn't slighted by others. He had mastered the three Vedas, could discern all the various kinds of scriptures, and was learned about all the subtleties of worldly literature. He was also skilled in the way of the great man's signs, divining fortune and misfortune, and ritual sacrifices and etiquette. He had 500 disciples whom he taught without exception.

3. That priest was about to arrange a large sacrifice at the time. He had acquired 500 bulls, 500 cows, 500 bull calves, 500 heifer calves, 500 ewes, and 500 wethers to offer as sacrifices.

4. The priests, prominent men, and householders of [Khanumata] heard: "The ascetic Gautama of the Sakyans who left home and achieved awakening has been touring among the people of Kosala. He arrived north of [Khanumata] and stopped to stay in the rosewood grove there. His great fame is heard throughout the world: 'He's a Tathagata, Arhat, and Completely Awakened One who has perfected the ten epithets!' Among gods and worldly people, be they Maras, Brahmas, ascetics, or priests, he teaches for others what he himself has realized. His words are all genuine in the beginning, middle, and end, complete in content and expression, and purify the religious life. It's fitting to have an audience with such a realized person."

5. They then said, "We'd better go and pay him a visit now!" After they said that, they followed each other as they left [Khanumata]. Crowds of people headed out to visit the Buddha.

6. The priest Kutatandya was up in the upper story of his house and saw the crowds of people following each other from a distance. He asked his attendant, "What's the reason those crowds of people are following each other? Where are they going?"

7. His attendant said, "I heard this: 'The ascetic Gautama of the Sakyans who had left the home life and achieved awakening has been touring among the people of Kosala. He arrived north of [Khanumata] and stopped to stay in the rosewood grove there. His great fame is heard throughout the world: "He's a Tathagata, Arhat, and Completely Awakened One who has perfected the ten epithets!" Among gods and worldly people, be they Maras, Brahmas, ascetics, or priests, he teaches for others what he himself has realized. His words are all genuine in the beginning, middle, and end, complete in content and expression, and purify the religious life.' Those crowds of priests, prominent people, and householders from the town are going to pay a visit to the ascetic Gautama."

8. The priest Kutatandya then instructed his attendant: "Quickly, remember what I say. Go tell those people this: 'Everyone, wait a little while for me. We'll go pay a visit to that ascetic Gautama together.'"

9. His attendant then went and told those people Kutatandya's message: "'Everyone, wait a little while for me. We'll go pay a visit to that Gautama together.'"

10. The people replied to his attendant, "Quickly, return to the priest and tell him: 'Now is a good time. We should go together.'"

11. The attendant returned and said, "The people are waiting. They say: 'Now is a good time. We should go together.'" The priest Kutatandya then came down from the upper story and stood at his home's entrance.

The Priests Object to Visiting the Buddha

12. At the time, another five hundred priests were already seated outside his door, waiting to help Kutatandya prepare his large sacrifice. When they saw the priest Kutatandya coming, they all rose and greeted him. They said, "Great priest, where are you going?"

13. Kutatandya replied, "I've heard this: 'The ascetic Gautama of the Sakyans who had left the home life and achieved awakening has been touring among the people of Kosala. He arrived north of [Khanumata], and stopped to stay in the rosewood grove there. His great fame is heard throughout the world: "He's a Tathagata, Arhat, and Completely Awakened One who has perfected the ten epithets!" Among gods and worldly people, be they Maras, Brahmas, ascetics, or priests, he teaches for others what he himself has realized. His words are all genuine in the beginning, middle, and end, complete in content and expression, and purify the religious life. It's fitting to have an audience with such a realized person.'

14. "Priests, I've also heard that Gautama knows the three kinds of ritual sacrifice and sixteen ritual requisites. Now, previous generations and elders in our assembly haven't known these things, but I want to make a great sacrifice and have prepared the cattle and sheep for it. I'm going to visit Gautama to ask him about the three kinds of ritual sacrifice and sixteen ritual requisites. Once we've acquired these ways of ritual sacrifice, we'll perfect their virtues, and our fame will be heard far and wide."

15. Those five hundred priests said to Kutatandya, "Don't go visit him. Why not? He should come visit you; you shouldn't go visit him. Now, great priest, you are descended from seven generations of fathers and mothers who were genuine, so you aren't slighted by others. You have achieved such status, so he should come visit you; you shouldn't go visit him."

16. They continued: "Great priest, you've mastered the three Vedas, can discern all the various scriptures, and have learned about the subtleties of worldly literature. You're also skilled in the way of the great man's signs, divining fortune and misfortune, and ritual sacrifices and etiquette. You have achieved such status, so he should come visit you; you shouldn't go visit him.

17. "Moreover, great priest, you're handsome looking, having attained the appearance of Brahma. You have achieved such status, so he should come visit you; you shouldn't go visit him.

18. "Moreover, great priest, your precepts and virtue are surpassing, and your wisdom is accomplished. You have achieved such status, so he should come visit you; you shouldn't go visit him.

19. "Moreover, great priest, your words are gentle and eloquent, and their content and expression are pure. You have achieved such status, so he should come visit you; you shouldn't go visit him.

20. "Moreover, great priest, you are the leader of this assembly and have numerous disciples. You have achieved such status, so he should come visit you; you shouldn't go visit him.

21. "Moreover, great priest, you're the usual instructor of five hundred priests. You have achieved such status, so he should come visit you; you shouldn't go visit him.

22. "Moreover, great priest, scholars come from the four directions with requests [for instruction], asking about the techniques of ritual sacrifice. You have achieved such status, so he should come visit you; you shouldn't go visit him.

23. "Moreover, great priest, King Prasenajit and King Bimbisara respect and support you. You have achieved such status, so he should come visit you; you shouldn't go visit him.

24. "Moreover, great priest, you're rich, possess treasures, and your treasury is overflowing. You have achieved such status, so he should come visit you; you shouldn't go visit him.

25. "Moreover, great priest, your wisdom is insightful, your words are learned, and you aren't timid. You have achieved such status, so he should come visit you; you shouldn't go visit him.

26. "Great teacher, you've perfected these eleven qualities. He should come visit you; you shouldn't go visit him."

Kutatandya Explains Why It's Fitting to Visit the Buddha

27. Kutatandya then told the priests, "So it is, so it is! As you've said, I truly am endowed with these virtues; there are none that I don't possess. Now, listen to what I say: These virtues have been achieved by the ascetic Gautama, so we should go visit him; he shouldn't come visit us.

28. "The ascetic Gautama is descended from seven generations of fathers and mothers who were genuine, so he isn't slighted by others. He has achieved such status, so we should go visit him; he shouldn't come visit us.

29. "Moreover, the ascetic Gautama is handsome looking, having come from the warrior caste. He has achieved such status, so we should go visit him; he shouldn't come visit us.

30. "Moreover, the ascetic Gautama was born to a noble house and left home for the path. He has achieved such status, so we should go visit him; he shouldn't come visit us.

31. "Moreover, the ascetic Gautama is endowed with radiance, his caste and clan are proper, and he left home to cultivate the path. He has achieved such status, so we should go visit him; he shouldn't come visit us.

32. "Moreover, the ascetic Gautama was born to a wealthy family that possessed great majesty, and he left home for the path. He has achieved such status, so we should go visit him; he shouldn't come visit us.

33. "Moreover, the ascetic Gautama possesses noble precepts and has accomplished wisdom. He has achieved such status, so we should go visit him; he shouldn't come visit us.

34. "Moreover, the ascetic Gautama's speech is skillful, being gentle and refined. He has achieved such status, so we should go visit him; he shouldn't come visit us.

35. "Moreover, the ascetic Gautama is the leader of an assembly, and his disciples are numerous. He has achieved such status, so we should go visit him; he shouldn't come visit us.

36. "Moreover, the ascetic Gautama has forever destroyed craving without any intemperance. He has eliminated sorrow and fear, and his hair doesn't stand on end. He's joyous and cheerful. When he sees people, he commends their goodness. He skillfully teaches the results of conduct and doesn't criticize other religions. He has achieved such status, so we should go visit him; he shouldn't come visit us.

37. "Moreover, the ascetic Gautama is always respected and given offerings by King Prasenajit and King Bimbisara. He has achieved such status, so we should go visit him; he shouldn't come visit us.

38. "Moreover, the ascetic Gautama is respected and given offerings by the priest Puskarasarin, and the priests Brahmayu, [Tarukkha], Sronatandya, Sukamanava Taudeyaputra respect and give offerings to him, too. He has achieved such status, so we should go visit him; he shouldn't come visit us.

39. "Moreover, the ascetic Gautama is honored, respected, and given offerings by his disciples, and he's respected by gods, demons, and other spirits, too. The Sakya, Kuru, Maineya, Vrji, Malla, and Soma peoples also honor him. Having achieved such status, we should go visit him; he shouldn't come visit us.

40. "Moreover, the ascetic Gautama conferred the three refuges and five precepts to King Prasenajit and King Bimbisara. He has achieved such status, so we should go visit him; he shouldn't come visit us.

41. "Moreover, the ascetic Gautama conferred the three refuges and five precepts to the priest Puskarasarin. He has achieved such status, so we should go visit him; he shouldn't come visit us.

42. "Moreover, the ascetic Gautama conferred the three refuges and five precepts to his disciples, and he conferred them to gods and the Sakya, Kuru, and other peoples. He has achieved such status, so we should go visit him; he shouldn't come visit us.

43. "Moreover, wherever the ascetic Gautama travels, all the people respect and give offerings to him. He has achieved such status, so we should go visit him; he shouldn't come visit us.

44. "Moreover, when the ascetic Gautama arrives at a city or village, the inhabitants are undisturbed, and they respect and give offerings to him. He has achieved such status, so we should go visit him; he shouldn't come visit us.

45. "Moreover, wherever the ascetic Gautama goes, non-humans, demons, and spirits don't dare to harass him. He has achieved such status, so we should go visit him; he shouldn't come visit us.

46. "Moreover, wherever the ascetic Gautama goes, the people living there see lights and hear heavenly music. He has achieved such status, so we should go visit him; he shouldn't come visit us.

47. "Moreover, wherever the ascetic Gautama goes, crowds of people miss him and cry when they watch him leave. He has achieved such status, so we should go visit him; he shouldn't come visit us.

48. "Moreover, when he first left home, the ascetic Gautama's parents and relatives cried and felt heart-broken. He has achieved such status, so we should go visit him; he shouldn't come visit us.

49. "Moreover, the ascetic Gautama was still young when he left home, and he renounced decorations, elephants, horses, valuable chariots, the five desires, and jewelry. He has achieved such status, so we should go visit him; he shouldn't come visit us.

50. "Moreover, the ascetic Gautama renounced his position as a wheel-turning king and left home for the path. If he'd stayed home, he would have been king of the world's four quarters, the ruler of everyone, and we would've been his subjects. He has achieved such status, so we should go visit him; he shouldn't come visit us.

51. "Moreover, the ascetic Gautama clearly understands the teachings of Brahma, he explains them for others, and he pays visits to Brahma to speak with him. He has achieved such status, so we should go visit him; he shouldn't come visit us.

52. "Moreover, the ascetic Gautama clearly understands the three types of ritual sacrifice and sixteen ritual requisites, but our previous generations and elders aren't able to know them. He has achieved such status, so we should go visit him; he shouldn't come visit us.

53. "Moreover, the ascetic Gautama is endowed with all thirty-two signs [of a great man]. He has achieved such status, so we should go visit him; he shouldn't come visit us.

54. "Moreover, the ascetic Gautama is wise and insightful, and he isn't timid. He has achieved such status, so we should go visit him; he shouldn't come visit us.

55. "Moreover, the ascetic Gautama is here at [Khanumata] right now. He is a worthy to me. It would be an honor to be his guest and fitting to go have an audience with him."

56. Those five hundred priests then said to Kutatandya, "Amazing! Extraordinary! He has such virtues? If he were to achieve just one of these virtues, he still shouldn't come visit us. How would it be if he were endowed with all of them? It would be fitting for us all to come along and greet him."

57. Kutatandya replied, "If you want to go, you should know that this is the time to do it."

Kutatandya Visits the Buddha

58. Kutatandya then prepared horses and a treasure chariot, and he went to the rosewood grove while surrounded by those five hundred priests as well as the priests, prominent people, and householders of [Khanumata]. When he arrived, he dismounted from his chariot and proceeded on foot to the Bhagavan. After they had exchanged greetings, he sat to one side.

59. Some of the priests, prominent people, and householders bowed to the Buddha and sat down. Some of them exchanged greetings with him and sat down. Some of them told him their name and sat down. Some of them saluted the Buddha with their palms together and sat down. Some of them remained quiet and sat down. Once the assembly was seated and settled, Kutatandya said to the Buddha, "I have a question I'd like to ask if you have a moment and would permit me." The Buddha said, "You may ask your question."

60. The priest then said to the Buddha, "I've heard that Gautama clearly understands the three types of ritual sacrifice and sixteen kinds of ritual requisites. Our previous generations and elders aren't able to know them, but now we are going to perform a large sacrifice. I've prepared 500 bulls, 500 cows, 500 bull calves, 500 heifer calves, 500 ewes, and 500 wethers to offer as sacrifices. Today, I've come to ask about the way of the three ritual sacrifices and sixteen ritual requisites. If we could accomplish this sacrifice, we would obtain a great reward, the fame would be far-reaching, and both gods and people would respect us."

61. The Bhagavan then told Kutatandya, "Now, listen closely. Listen closely and consider it well. I'll explain this for you."

The priest said, "Of course, Gautama! I'd be glad to listen."

The Story of a Past King's Large Sacrifice

62. The Buddha told Kutatandya, "A long time ago, there was a warrior king from a water-anointed clan who wanted to arrange a large sacrifice. He met with his priestly great minister and told him, 'I possess a great fortune, and I freely enjoy the five pleasures, but I'm an old man now. My warriors are powerful; none is weak, and the treasury is overflowing. Now, I want to arrange a large sacrifice. Tell me about the way of sacrifices. What will be needed?'

63. "His great minister said, 'So it is, great king! As the king has said, the country is wealthy, the army is strong, and the treasury is overflowing. However, the people harbor many evil thoughts, and they don't practice the proper way. If a sacrifice is performed at this time, it wouldn't accomplish the way of sacrifices, just as a thief sent to chase a thief wouldn't become a messenger.

64. "'Great king, don't think, "These are my people. I can attack, kill, rebuke, and stop them." Those who approach the king should be provided with what they require. Those managing businesses should be provided wealth. Those cultivating farmland should be provided cattle and seed. Putting these things to use, they will each take care of their business. When the king doesn't oppress the people, the people will be peaceful. They'll raise their children and be happy together.'"

65. The Buddha told Kutatandya, "Hearing what the ministers said, the king provided clothes and food to those close to him, wealth to merchants, and cattle and seed to farmers. The people each took care of their business, and they didn't trouble each other. They raised their children and were happy together."

66. The Buddha said, "The king summoned the ministers again and told them, 'My country is wealthy, the army is strong, and the treasury is overflowing. I've provided for the people so that they want for nothing. They raise their children and are happy together. Now, I want to arrange a large sacrifice. Tell me about the way of sacrifices. What will be needed?'

67. "The ministers told the king, 'So it is, so it is! It's as the king says. The country is fortunate, the army is strong, and the treasury is overflowing. You've provided for the people so that they want for nothing. They raise their children and are happy together. If the king wants a sacrifice, he may speak with his palace wives and let them know about it.'

68. "The king then did as the minister said. He went into the palace and said to his wives, 'My country is wealthy, the army is strong, and the treasury is overflowing. I possess many treasures. I want to arrange a large sacrifice.'

69. "Then the wives said to the king, 'So it is, so it is! It's as the king says. The country is wealthy, the army is strong, and the treasure is overflowing. He possesses many treasures. If he wants to arrange a large sacrifice, now would be the right time for it.'

70. "The king returned and told the ministers, 'My country is wealthy, the army is strong, and the treasury is overflowing. I've provided for the people so that they want for nothing. They raise their children and are happy together. Now, I want a large sacrifice. I've told the palace wives. All of you, tell me what things will be needed for this.'

71. "The ministers then said to the king, 'So it is, so it is! It's as the king says. He wants to arrange a large sacrifice and has told the palace wives about it, but he hasn't told the prince, crown prince, great minister, and the officers. The king should tell them.'

72. "Hearing what the ministers said, the king then told the princes, crown prince, ministers, and officers, 'My country is wealthy, the army is strong, and the treasury is overflowing. I want to arrange a large sacrifice.'

73. "The princes, crown prince, ministers, and officers then said to the king, 'So it is, so it is! Great king, the country is now wealthy, the army is strong, and the treasury is overflowing. If you want to arrange a sacrifice, now would be the right time for it.'

74. "The king again told the great minister, 'My country is wealthy, the army is strong, and I possess many treasures. I've talked to my palace wives, the princes, crown prince, and even the officers. Now, I want to arrange a large sacrifice. What will be needed for this?'

75. "The ministers said, 'It's as the great king says. If he wants to arrange a sacrifice, now would be the right time for it.'

76. "Hearing them say this, he had a new palace built to the east of the city. Entering that new palace, the king put on a deerskin garment and rubbed incensed ghee onto his body. He also wore deer antlers on his head and had cow dung spread on the ground, which he sat and laid on. His first wife and priestly great minister selected a yellow cow. It was milked once for the king to drink, once for his wife to drink, once for the minister to drink, and once to give to the great assembly. The rest was given to its calf.

77. "The king then accomplished eight things, and his great minister accomplished four things. What were the eight things that the king accomplished? That warrior king was descended from seven generations of fathers and mothers who were genuine, so he wasn't slighted by others. This was the first thing he had achieved. That king was a handsome-looking member of a warrior tribe. This was the second thing. The virtue of that king's precepts was higher, and his wisdom was complete. This was the third thing. That king practiced a variety of skills such as riding elephants, horses, and chariots, swordsmanship, archery, and other martial arts. There was nothing that he didn't fully know. This was the fourth thing. That king possessed great authority that brought together the lesser kings. There were none who didn't submit to him. This was the fifth thing. That king was well-spoken. What he said was gentle, and his meaning and content were complete. This was the sixth thing. That king possessed many treasures, and his treasury was overflowing. This was the seventh thing. That king was shrewd, bold, and had no weaknesses. This was the eighth thing. That warrior king accomplished these eight things.

78. "What were the four things accomplished by that great minister? That priestly great minister was descended from seven generations of fathers and mothers who were genuine, so he wasn't slighted by other people. This was the first thing.

79. "Furthermore, that great minister had mastered the three Vedas, could discern all the various kinds of scriptures, and was learned about all the subtleties of worldly literature. He was also skilled in the way of the great man's signs, divining fortune and misfortune, and ritual sacrifices and etiquette. This was the second thing.

80. "Furthermore, that great minister was well-spoken. What he said was gentle, and his meaning and content were complete. This was the third thing.

81. "Furthermore, that prime minister was shrewd, bold, and had no weaknesses. There were no matters of ritual sacrifice he didn't understand. This was the fourth thing.

82. "That king had accomplished these eight things, and his priestly great minister had accomplished these four things. That king then had four aids, three ways of ritual sacrifice, and sixteen ritual requisites.

83. "The priestly great minister went to the king's newly built house and disclosed to him sixteen things, which dispelled the king's doubts. What were the sixteen?

84. "The great minister said to the king, 'Some people say, "Now, the warrior king wants a large sacrifice, but he's descended from seven generations of fathers and mothers who weren't genuine, so he's constantly slighted by other people.' Supposing this were said, it wouldn't besmirch the king. Why is that? The king is descended from seven generations of fathers and mothers who were genuine, so he isn't slighted by other people.

85. "'Sometimes, people say, "Now, the warrior king wants a large sacrifice, but he's ugly-looking and not a member of a warrior tribe." Supposing this were said, it wouldn't besmirch the king. Why is that? The king is handsome-looking and a member of a warrior tribe.

86. "Sometimes, people say, 'Now, the warrior king wants a large sacrifice, but he doesn't have higher precepts, nor does he possess wisdom.' Supposing this were said, it wouldn't besmirch the king. Why is that? The virtue of the king's precepts is higher, and his wisdom is complete.

87. "Sometimes, people say, 'Now, the warrior king wants a large sacrifice, but he hasn't developed skills such as riding elephants, horses, and chariots, nor does he understand the various martial arts.' Supposing this were said, it wouldn't besmirch the king. Why is that? The king has developed these skills and the arts of war and martial techniques. There's none he doesn't understand.

88. "Sometimes, people say, 'The king wants a large sacrifice, but he doesn't have the authority to bring lesser kings together.' Supposing this were said, it wouldn't besmirch the king. Why is that? The king does have great authority that brings lesser kings together.

89. "Sometimes, people say, 'The king wants a large sacrifice, but he isn't well-spoken. His speech is harsh, and its content and meaning are incomplete.' Supposing this were said, it wouldn't besmirch the king. Why is that? The king is well-spoken. His speech is gentle, and its content and meaning are complete.

90. "Sometimes, people say, 'The king wants a large sacrifice, but he doesn't have much treasure.' Supposing this were said, it wouldn't besmirch the king. Why is that? The king's treasury is overflowing with much treasure.

91. "Sometimes, people say, 'The king wants a large sacrifice, but he lacks shrewdness, and his temperament is timid.' Supposing this were said, it wouldn't besmirch the king. Why is that? The king is shrewd, courageous, and lacks any timidity.

92. "Sometimes, people say, 'The king wants a large sacrifice, but he hasn't consulted the women in the palace.' Supposing this were said, it wouldn't besmirch the king. Why is that? The king wants a sacrifice, and he consulted the women in the palace beforehand.

93. "Sometimes, people say, 'The king wants a large sacrifice, but he hasn't consulted the princes or crown prince.' Supposing this were said, it wouldn't besmirch the king. Why is that? The king wants a sacrifice, and he consulted the princes and crown prince beforehand.

94. "Sometimes, people say, 'The king wants a large sacrifice, but he hasn't consulted his ministers.' Supposing this were said, it wouldn't besmirch the king. Why is that? The king wants a sacrifice, and he consulted his ministers beforehand.

95. "Sometimes, people say, 'The king wants a large sacrifice, but he hasn't consulted his officers and men.' Supposing this were said, it wouldn't besmirch the king. Why is that? The king wants a sacrifice, and he consulted his officers and men beforehand.

96. "Sometimes, people say, 'The king wants a large sacrifice, but his priestly great minister is descended from seven generations of fathers and mothers who weren't genuine, so he's always slighted by other people.' Supposing this were said, it wouldn't besmirch the king. Why is that? I'm descended from seven generations of fathers and mothers who were genuine, so I'm not slighted by other people.

97. "Sometimes, people say, 'The king wants a large sacrifice, but his great minister hasn't mastered the three Vedas, nor can he discern the various scriptures or learn about the subtleties of worldly literature. He isn't skilled in the way of the great man's signs, divining fortune and misfortune, or ritual sacrifices and etiquette.' Supposing this were said, it wouldn't besmirch the king. Why is that? I've mastered the three Vedas, can discern the various scriptures, and have learned about the subtleties of worldly literature. I'm skilled in the way of the great man's signs, divining fortune and misfortune, and ritual sacrifices and etiquette.

98. "Sometimes, people say, 'The king wants a large sacrifice, but his great minister isn't well-spoken. His speech is harsh, and its content and meaning are incomplete.' Supposing this were said, it wouldn't besmirch the king. Why is that? I'm well-spoken. My speech is gentle, and its content and meaning are complete.

99. "Sometimes, people say, 'The king wants a large sacrifice, but his priestly great minister isn't shrewd, his temperament is timid, and he doesn't understand the way of ritual sacrifice.' Supposing this were said, it wouldn't besmirch the king. Why is that? I'm shrewd and courageous, lack any timidity, and there's nothing about the way of ritual sacrifice that I don't understand."

100. The Buddha told Kutatandya, "The king had some doubts about those sixteen points, but the great minister disclosed these sixteen things to him."

101. The Buddha said, "In that new palace, the great minister plainly instructed, benefited, and gladdened the king by performing ten things. What were the ten? The great minister said, 'During the king's ritual sacrifice, there will be a gathering of people who are and aren't killers. Provide for them all equally. If someone comes who has killed beings, provide for them. The king himself should know, "Should someone come who hasn't killed beings, I'll be providing for them, too." The reason for giving is to think of generosity in this way.

102. "'If again there are thieves, adulterers, those who speak duplicitously, falsely, harshly, and frivolously, or those who are greedy, hateful, and have wrong views in the gathering, provide for them. The king himself should know, "Should some who don't steal … and have right views come, I'll be providing for them, too." The reason for giving is to think of generosity in this way.'"

103. The Buddha told the priest, "That great minister instructed him plainly, benefiting and gladdening the king with these ten practices."

104. The Buddha also told the priest, "That warrior king then had three thoughts of regret in his new home, which the great minister dispelled. What were the three? The king had this regret, 'Now, this is a large sacrifice of mine. My large sacrifices in the past, my large sacrifices in the future, and my large sacrifices in the present have cost much treasure.' When these three thoughts occurred to him, he felt regret.

105. "The great minister said, 'The king has made large sacrifices, and his generosity in the past, future, and present has brought the merits of these sacrifices. You shouldn't feel regretful about it.' The king went to his new home feeling these three regrets, and the great minister dispelled them."

106. The Buddha told the priest, "That water-anointed warrior king left his new home on the fifteenth-day full moon and lit a large bonfire on open ground in front of it. He held up a vessel of oil, poured it into the fire, and called out, 'I offer this! I offer this!'

107. "The king's wife heard that the king had left his new home on the fifteenth-day full moon, lit a large bonfire in front of it, held up a vessel of oil, poured it on the fire, and called out, 'I offer this! I offer this!' His wife and concubines brought many treasures to the king and told him, 'These assorted treasures are to help the king conduct his sacrifice.'

108. "Priest, that king immediately told his wife and concubines, 'Stop, stop! You have supported it, and my own treasure is great. It'll be sufficient for the ritual sacrifice.'

109. "His wife and concubines then thought to themselves, 'It wouldn't be right for us to take these treasures back to the palace. If the king holds a large sacrifice to the east, then we'll go and contribute to it.'

110. "Priest, later the king prepared a large sacrifice to the east, and his wife and concubines then provided these treasures to it.

111. "The prince and crown prince heard that the king had left the new palace on the fifteenth-day full moon, lit a large bonfire in front of it, held up a vessel of oil, poured it on the fire, and called out, 'I offer this! I offer this!' The prince and crown prince brought treasures to the king and told him, 'These treasures are to help the king conduct his large sacrifice.'

112. "The king said, 'Stop, stop! You have supported it, and my own wealth is great. It'll be sufficient for the ritual sacrifice.'

113. "The prince and crown prince then thought to themselves, 'It wouldn't be right for us to take these treasures back. If the king holds a large sacrifice to the south, then we'll go and contribute to it.'

114. "Thus, the great minister brought a treasure and said, 'I wanted to help the king with the ritual sacrifice to the west.' …

115. "The officers and men brought treasures and said, 'We wanted to help the king with the ritual sacrifice to the north.' …"

116. The Buddha told the priest, "When the king held the large sacrifice, he didn't kill cattle, sheep, or other sentient beings. He only sacrificed butter, milk, sesame oil, honey, black sweets, and rock sweets."

117. The Buddha told the priest, "When that warrior king held the large sacrifice, it was joyous in the beginning, middle, and end. This is the way to accomplish a ritual sacrifice."

118. The Buddha told the priest, "After that warrior king's large sacrifice, he cut off his hair and beard, put on the three Dharma robes, and left home for the path. He cultivated the four measureless mental states until his body broke up and his life ended, and he was born in the Brahma Heaven.

119. "After she had made her great gift, the king's wife also cut off her hair, put on the three Dharma robes, and left home to cultivate the path. She practiced the four Brahma practices until her body broke up and her life ended, and she was born in the Brahma Heaven. After teaching the king the four methods of ritual sacrifice, the priestly great minister also made a great gift. Afterward, he cut off his hair and beard, put on the three Dharma robes, and left home to cultivate the path. He practiced the four Brahma practices until his body broke up and his life ended, and he was born in the Brahma Heaven."

The Conversion of Kutatandya

120. The Buddha told the priest, "The king had followed the three ways of ritual sacrifice, possessed the sixteen ritual requisites, and performed that large sacrifice. What do you think about it?"

121. After hearing what the Buddha had said, Kutatandya was silent and didn't respond. The five hundred priests who were there said to Kutatandya, "The ascetic Gautama's words are wonderful. Why does the great teacher remain silent and not answer him?"

122. Kutatandya replied, "What the ascetic Gautama has taught is wonderful. It's not that I don't accept it. The reason I was silent was because I was thinking about it. The ascetic Gautama has explained this subject, but he didn't say he heard it from someone else, so I was silently thinking, 'Was the ascetic Gautama that warrior king at the time? Or was he that priestly great minister?'"

123. The Bhagavan then told Kutatandya , "Good, good! You've examined the Tathagata and correctly ascertained that he is proper. When that warrior king performed his large sacrifice, was he a different person? Don't imagine that, for he was myself. That was when I reached the utmost wisdom of great generosity."

124. Kutatandya said to the Buddha, "Precisely these three ways of ritual sacrifice and possession of sixteen ritual requisites obtain a great reward, but is there something else that's greater?"

The Buddha said, "There is."

125. The priest asked, "What is it?"

The Buddha said, "If someone can always provide support to the Sangha and doesn't discontinue it, their virtue is greater than that of the three ways of ritual sacrifice and possession of sixteen ritual requisites."

126. "Is there something else that's greater than this virtue of always providing support to the Sangha and not discontinuing it, which is itself greater than that of the three ways of ritual sacrifice and possession of sixteen ritual requisites?"

The Buddha said, "There is."

127. "What is it?"

The Buddha said, "Erecting monasteries and raised halls for the Sangha of the four directions is a gift that's much greater than that of the three ways of ritual sacrifice and possession of sixteen ritual requisites or supporting the Sangha and not discontinuing it."

128. "Is there something else that's greater than this virtue of erecting monasteries and raised halls for the samgha in the four directions, which is itself greater than that of the three ways of ritual sacrifice and possession of sixteen ritual requisites or supporting the Sangha and not discontinuing it?"

The Buddha said, "There is."

129. "What is it?"

The Buddha said, "Suppose someone performs the three ways of ritual sacrifice and possesses sixteen ritual requisites, supports the Sangha and doesn't discontinue it, and they erect monasteries and raised halls for the Sangha in the four directions. Those things aren't equal to producing a joyous mind and declaring, 'I take refuge in the Buddha, take refuge in the Dharma, and take refuge in the Sangha.' The merit of this is greater."

130. "Is there something else that's greater than the reward that's obtained by these three refuges?"

The Buddha said, "There is."

131. "What is it?"

The Buddha said, "Suppose someone were to accept and practice the five precepts with a joyous heart for their whole life, not killing, stealing, engaging in sex, lying, or drinking alcohol. This merit is greater."

132. "Is there something else that's greater than the great reward obtained from these three ways of ritual sacrifice … five precepts?"

The Buddha said, "There is."

133. "What is it?"

The Buddha said, "Suppose someone is able to be compassionately mindful of all sentient beings for as long as it takes to pull a squirt of milk from a cow. The merit of that is much greater."

134. "Is there something else that's greater than the great reward obtained by these three ways of ritual sacrifice … compassion?"

The Buddha said, "There is."

135. "What is it?"

The Buddha said, "Suppose a Tathagata, Arhat, and Completely Awakened One appears in the world, and someone leaves home to cultivate the path of that Buddha's teaching. This equips him with a variety of virtues … they perfect the three insights, destroy the darkness of ignorance, and possess the illumination of wisdom. Why is that? The merit of this is much greater because they aren't negligent and happily dwell in seclusion."

136. Kutatandya again said to the Buddha, "Gautama, I was going to perform a ritual sacrifice that requires five hundred head of cattle and sheep each. Now, I will let them all go so that they can find their own water and grass. I take refuge in the Buddha, take refuge in the Dharma, and take refuge in the Sangha. Permit me to become a layman in the correct teaching. From now on, I won't kill, steal, engage in sex, lie, or drink alcohol for my whole life. Please let the Bhagavan and the great assembly accept my request!" The Bhagavan silently accepted it.

137. The priest then saw that the Buddha had silently accepted his request. He got up, bowed to the Buddha, and circled him three times before leaving. He went home and prepared a variety of delicious foods.

138. The next day, the Bhagavan put on his robe and took his bowl. Accompanied by a large assembly of 1,250 monks, he went to the priest's home where they prepared seats and sat down. The priest then personally served them food, offering it to the Buddha and Sangha. When they were finished eating, they left with their bowls. When they were done washing them, the Buddha composed verses for the priest:

• "Fire is the best of sacrifices;
Poetry is the best for chanting;
The king is the best among people;
The ocean is best among rivers;
The moon is the best among stars;
And the sun is best among lights.
• Up, down, and in the four directions,
Among all living things that exist,
Whether gods or worldly people,
Only the Buddha is supreme.
Someone looking for great fortune
Should support the three jewels."

The Liberation of Kutatandya

139. The priest Kutatandya then fetched a small chair and sat in front of the Buddha. The Bhagavan gradually taught him the Dharma. He instructed him plainly, benefiting and making him glad. He discoursed on generosity, precepts, birth in heaven, the great danger of desire, the obstacle to going upstream, and the superiority of escape. He discerned and made clear the pure practices. Then, the Bhagavan saw that the priest's mind had become flexible, his hindrances were reduced, and he was easily trained. He taught him the truth of suffering according to the eternal teaching of Buddhas, discerning and making it clear. He taught the noble truth of formation, the noble truth of cessation, and the noble truth of escape.

140. The priest Kutatandya became far removed from dirt and separated from defilement right where he sat, and he attained purification of the Dharma vision. Like a pristine white muslin that's easily stained, Kutatandya was likewise. He saw the Dharma and attained the Dharma. Obtaining its fruit, he stood in certainty not because of belief in someone else and attained fearlessness. He said to the Buddha, "Now, I seriously take refuge in the Buddha, Dharma, and noble Sangha three times. Please let the Buddha permit me to become a layman in the correct teaching. From now on, I won't kill, steal, engage in sex, lie, or drink alcohol for my whole life."

141. He also seriously said to the Buddha, "Please let the Bhagavan accept my invitation to stay for seven days." The Bhagavan silently accepted it. The priest personally served meals to the Buddha and Sangha for seven days. After the week had passed, the Buddha continued travelling among the people.

142. It wasn't long after the Buddha departed that Kutatandya became ill, and his life ended.

143. A group of monks heard that Kutatandya had supported the Buddha for seven days and then fell ill and died not long afterward. They thought to themselves, "That man's life has ended, but where did he go?"

144. Those monks went to the Buddha, bowed their heads at his feet, and sat to one side. They asked, "Now that Kutatandya 's life has ended, where will he be born?"

145. The Buddha told the monks, "That man purely cultivated the religious practice and accomplished one state after the next, and he wasn't disturbed by anything in the teaching. Because he ended the five lower fetters, his Parinirvana was in the present. He didn't return to this world."

146. When the monks heard what the Buddha taught, they rejoiced and approved.

DA 24 DHRUVA

(The direct parallel for this sutra is DN 11.)

(A layman named Dhruva encourages the Buddha to instruct the monks to impress people with displays of miraculous abilities, but the Buddha demurs, saying that it would be unwise. He then tells Dhruva the story of Asvajit's search throughout the heavens for a god who knows how to cease the four elements of the body forever. Failing to find any answers, he returns to the Buddha, who likens him to a mariner's bird used to spot land when out to sea. Asvajit gets his answer in the form of a pair of famous verses.)

1. Thus I have heard: One time, the Buddha was staying at the city of Nalanda in Pravarika's mango grove. He was accompanied by a large assembly of 1,250 monks.

2. At the time, there was a prominent man's son named Dhruva who came to the Buddha, bowed his head at his feet, and sat down to one side. That prominent man's son said to the Buddha, "It would be excellent, Bhagavan, if you could please tell the monks, 'If a priest, a prominent man's son, or a householder comes, show them the superhuman state with a display of miraculous abilities.'"

3. The Buddha told Dhruva, "I never instruct the monks to show the superhuman state with a display of miraculous abilities. I simply teach my disciples to peacefully contemplate the path in an empty and quiet place. If they have virtues, they should keep them to themselves. If they have defects, they should disclose them."

4. The prominent man's son Dhruva again said to the Buddha, "Please, Bhagavan, tell the monks: 'If a priest, a prominent man's son, or a householder comes, show them the superhuman state with a display of miraculous abilities.'"

5. The Buddha again told Dhruva, "I never instruct the monks to show the superhuman state with a display of miraculous abilities. I simply teach my disciples to peacefully contemplate the path in an empty and quiet place. If they have virtues, they should keep them to themselves. If they have defects, they should disclose them."

6. The prominent man's son Dhruva said to the Buddha, "I don't have doubts about the superhuman state. It's only that the region of Nalanda is bountiful, and the population is thriving. If someone were to display miraculous abilities, they would profit greatly by it, and the Buddha and his large assembly are skilled at converting others and spreading the path."

7. The Buddha once again told Dhruva, "I never instruct the monks to show the superhuman state with a display of miraculous abilities. I simply teach my disciples to peacefully contemplate the path in an empty and quiet place. If they have virtues, they should keep them to themselves. If they have defects, they should disclose them.

8. "Why is that? There are three miraculous abilities. What are three? One is miraculous abilities, the second is observing other minds, and third is instruction.

9. "What are the miraculous abilities? Prominent man's son, a monk learns measureless miraculous abilities. They're able to form countless [bodies] from a single body and recombine those countless bodies into one [body]. Whether near or far, [they can move through] mountains, rivers, and stone walls freely and without obstruction like walking through air. They fly in the air like birds while sitting cross-legged. They go in and out of the earth as though it were water. They walk on water as though it were dry land. Their bodies smoke and burn like a large fire. They touch the sun and moon with their hands and stand as high as the Brahma Heaven.

10. "If a faithful prominent man or householder were to see monks displaying these measureless miraculous abilities … standing as high as the Brahma heaven, he would visit other prominent men and householders who haven't become believers and tell them, 'I saw a monk display measureless miraculous abilities … standing as high as the Brahma Heaven.' Those prominent men and householders who aren't believers yet will say to that believer, 'I've heard that there's the spell of Gola that can display such measureless miraculous abilities … standing as high as the Brahma Heaven.'"

11. The Buddha again told Dhruva, "Those non-believers would have this to say. Wouldn't this be an insult?"

Dhruva said to the Buddha, "It really would be insulting."

12. The Buddha said, "This is why I don't tell the monks to display miracles to convert people. I simply teach my disciples to peacefully contemplate the path in an empty and quiet place. If they have virtues, they should keep them to themselves. If they have defects, they should make them known. Thus, prominent man's son, this is the miraculous ability displayed by my monks.

13. "What's called the miraculous ability of observing other minds? Here, a monk displays measureless miraculous abilities of observation, observing the thoughts in the minds of sentient beings and becoming aware of what they've done in private.

14. "Suppose a faithful prominent man or householder sees monks displaying measureless miraculous abilities of observation, observing the thoughts in the minds of sentient beings and becoming aware of what they've done in private. He would visit some other prominent men or householders who haven't become believers and tell them, 'I saw a monk display measureless miraculous abilities of observation, observing the thoughts in the minds of sentient beings and knowing what they had done in private.' Those prominent men or householders who aren't believers yet would produce this insult upon hearing that: 'There's the spell of Gandhari that can observe other minds … and knowing what they've done in private.'

15. "How is it, prominent man's son? Wouldn't this be an insult?" Dhruva said to the Buddha, "It really would be insulting."

16. The Buddha said, "This is why I don't tell the monks to display miracles to convert people. I simply teach my disciples to peacefully contemplate the path in an empty and quiet place. If they have virtues, they should keep them to themselves. If they have defects, they should disclose them. Thus, prominent man's son, this is the miraculous ability of observation displayed by my monks.

17. "What is the miraculous ability of instruction? Prominent man's son, suppose a Tathagata, Arhat, and Completely Awakened One arises in the world, and he perfects the ten epithets. Among gods, worldly men, and demons, whether they're in the assemblies of Mara, gods, ascetics, or priests, he realizes the Dharma for himself and teaches it for others. His words are all genuine in the beginning, middle, and end. Their content and expression are pure, and they perfect the religious life.

18. "After hearing it, a prominent man or a householder believes it. They investigate it and think: 'It's not fitting for me to remain at home. If I remain at home, it'll be like being bound in chains, unable to purely cultivate the religious life. Now, I'd better shave my hair, put on the three Dharma robes, leave home, and cultivate the path. Equipped with virtues … I'll accomplish the three insights that produce the great radiance of knowledge that dispels darkness. Why is that? These things are a result of diligence, enjoyment of a solitary and quiet dwelling, and focused attention that's not lost.' Prominent man's son, this is the miraculous ability of instruction displayed by my monks."

19. The prominent man's son Dhruva then asked the Buddha, "Are there any monks who've accomplished these three miraculous abilities?"

20. The Buddha told the prominent man's son, "I wouldn't say they are numerous, but there are several monks who've achieved these three miraculous abilities. Prominent man's son, there was a monk in this assembly who thought to himself, 'How are the four elements of this body made to cease forever, which are earth, water, fire, and air?' That monk instantly headed for the heavenly road. He went to the Heaven of the Four God Kings and asked the four god kings, 'How are the four elements of this body made to cease forever, which are earth, water, fire, and air?'

21. "Prominent man's son, those four god kings replied to that monk, 'We don't know. How are the four elements made to cease forever? There's a heaven above us called the Trayastrimsa, which is sublime and supreme. The gods there have great wisdom. Perhaps they know how to make the four elements cease?'

22. "Hearing this, the monk then instantly headed for the heavenly road. He went up to the Trayastrimsa Heaven and asked those gods, 'How are the four elements of this body made to cease forever, which are earth, water, fire, and air?'

Those Trayastrimsa gods replied to the monk, 'We don't know. How are the four elements made to cease forever? There's a heaven above us called Yama which is sublime and supreme. Having great wisdom, the gods there may know.' He went there and asked, but they said they didn't know.

23. "Thus, he went to the Tusita Heaven … the Nirmanarati Heaven … the Paranirmitavasavartin Heaven. They said, 'We don't know. How are the four elements made to cease forever? There's yet another heaven above us that's sublime and supreme, and they have great wisdom. It's called the Brahmakayika. Those gods may know how the four elements are ceased forever.'

24. "That monk then instantly headed for the Brahma road. He went to that Brahma Heaven above and asked, 'How are the four elements of this body made to cease forever, which are earth, water, fire, and air?'

"Those Brahma gods replied to the monk, 'We don't know. How are the four elements made to cease forever? Now, there's the heaven of King Great Brahma the Undefeatable, Ruler of a Thousand Worlds, the Noble Lord, Highest Attainer of Sovereignty, Creator of Everything, and Parent to Sentient Beings. He may know how the four elements are ceased forever.'

25. "Prominent man's son, that monk immediately asked, 'Now, where would King Great Brahma be?'

"Those gods replied, 'We don't know where Great Brahma is, but judging by what we see, he'll appear soon.' Soon after, the Brahma King suddenly appeared.

26. "Prominent man's son, that monk went to the Brahma King and asked him, 'How are the four elements of this body made to cease forever, which are earth, water, fire, and air?'

"That King Great Brahma told the monk, 'I am the king of Brahmas, the Undefeatable, Ruler of a Thousand Worlds, the Noble Lord, Highest Attainer of Sovereignty, Creator of Everything, and Parent to Sentient Beings.'

27. "That monk then told the Brahma King, 'I didn't ask about that. My question is: How are the four elements made to cease forever, which are earth, water, fire, and air?'

"Prominent man's son, that Brahma King again answered the monk, 'I am the king of Brahmas, the Undefeatable, Ruler of a Thousand Worlds, the Noble Lord, Highest Attainer of Sovereignty, Creator of Everything, and Parent to Sentient Beings.'

28. "The monk again told him, 'I didn't ask about that. My question is: How are the four elements made to cease forever?'

29. "Prominent man's son, that Brahma King said the same thing for a third time. He wasn't able to answer that monk's question about how the four elements are made to cease forever. King Great Brahma then took the monk aside with his right hand and led him to private place. He said to him, 'Now, monk, I'm the wisest of the Brahma kings; there's nothing I don't know and see, which is why I didn't answer you [honestly]: "I don't know or see how these four elements are made to cease forever."'

30. "He also told the monk, 'You are quite a fool! You set aside the Tathagata and put your question about this to us in the heavens. You should ask the Bhagavan about this and remember well what he tells you about it.'

31. "He also told the monk, 'The Buddha is in Anathapindada's Park of Sravasti. You can go and ask him there.'

32. "Prominent man's son, the monk then suddenly disappeared from the Brahma Heaven. In the time it takes a strong man to flex his arm, he arrived in Anathapindada's Park of Sravasti. He came to me, bowed his head at my feet, and sat to one side. He said, 'Bhagavan, how are the four elements of this body made to cease forever, which are earth, water, fire, and air?'

33. "I then told him, 'Monk, it's like a merchant who takes a hawk with him when he goes out to sea. The bird flies to the east, west, south, and north. When it finds dry land, it stops there [and circles]. If there's no land, then it returns to the ship. Monk, you're likewise. You went up to the Brahma heavens asking about this. Not achieving anything, you've returned to me. Now, I will help you accomplish this goal.'

34. "I then spoke in verse:

• "'What causes the four elements to not exist,
Ceasing earth, water, fire, and air?
What causes what's coarse and fine to not exist,
What's long, short, beautiful, and ugly?
What causes name and form to not exist,
To be forever ceased without remainder?
• The answer is that consciousness is formless,
Measureless, and has its own radiance.
When it ceases, the four elements cease;
What's coarse, fine, beautiful, and ugly ceases.
When these names and forms cease,
Consciousness ceases, and the rest ceases, too.'"

35. The prominent man's son Dhruva said to the Buddha, "Bhagavan, what was this monk's name? How is he remembered?"

The Buddha told the prominent man's son, "This monk's name was Asvajit. That's how he should be remembered."

36. When the prominent man's son Dhruva heard what the Buddha taught, he rejoiced and approved.

DA 25 THE NAKED WANDERER

(DN 8) [T 1.102c25]

(The direct parallel for this sutra is DN 8.)

(A Non-Buddhist wandering ascetic from the Kasyapa clan pays the Buddha a visit and asks about the allegation that the Buddha had denounced all the traditional practices of self-mortification and those who practiced them. The Buddha gives him a teaching about the difference between his method and that of self-mortifying ascetics.)

1. Thus I have heard: One time, the Buddha was staying at the deer preserve near Karnakastha [of Ujunna]. He was accompanied by a large assembly of 1,250 monks.

2. A naked wanderer from the Kasyapa clan visited the Bhagavan. After they exchanged greetings, he sat to one side. That naked Kasyapa said to the Buddha, "I hear that the ascetic Gautama criticizes all ritual practices and rebukes other ascetics, considering them corrupt. Gautama, suppose someone said, 'The ascetic Gautama criticizes all the ritual practices and rebukes other ascetics, considering them corrupt.' If someone says this is Dharma speech that accomplishes the teachings, would they not be slandering the ascetic Gautama?"

3. The Buddha replied, "Kasyapa, suppose someone said, 'The ascetic Gautama criticizes all ritual practices and rebukes other ascetics, considering them corrupt.' That wouldn't be Dharma speech that accomplishes the teachings. They would be slandering me, for it's not a true statement. Why is that?

4. "Kasyapa, I've seen those ascetics fall into hell when their bodies broke up and their lives ended. I've also seen ascetics born in a heavenly good place when their bodies broke up and their lives ended. Sometimes, I've seen ascetics who enjoyed the ascetic practices born in hell when their bodies broke up and their lives ended. Sometimes, I've seen ascetics who enjoyed the ascetic practices born in a heavenly good place.

5. "Kasyapa, I fully know and fully see these two destinies that are places gotten as rewards. Why would I want to rebuke all those ascetics and consider them corrupt? When I correctly say 'Yes,' they then say 'No.' When I correctly say 'No,' they say 'Yes.' Kasyapa, there are ascetics and priests who equally possess the way, and there are ascetics and priest who don't equally possess the way. Kasyapa, those who aren't equal are the ones that I set aside because their teaching isn't shared with ascetics and priests equally.

6. "Kasyapa, those who are wise make this observation: 'When the ascetic Gautama had unskillful qualities, quite defiled, dark, and ignoble and when other teachers had the same qualities, which of them was capable of destroying these qualities?' Kasyapa, when the wise make this observation, they thus know and see that only the ascetic Gautama was able to destroy these qualities. Kasyapa, when those who are wise make this observation, inquire into this, and discuss this, I'm the one who they name as being so.

7. "Furthermore, Kasyapa, those who are wise make this observation: 'When the ascetic Gautama's disciples have unskillful qualities, quite defiled, dark, and ignoble and the disciple of other teachers have the same qualities, which of them is capable of destroying these qualities? Kasyapa, when those who are wise make this observation, they thus know and see: 'The ascetic Gautama's disciples are able to destroy these qualities.' Kasyapa, when the wise make this observation, inquire into this, and discuss this, my disciples are who they name.

8. "Furthermore, Kasyapa, those who are wise make this observation, 'The ascetic Gautama has skillful qualities, pristine, sublime, and noble and other teachers have the same qualities. Which of them is capable of cultivating and making them grow?' Kasyapa, when the wise make this observation, they thus know and see: 'Only the ascetic Gautama is capable of cultivating these qualities and making them grow.' Kasyapa, when the wise make this observation, inquire into this, and discuss this, I'm the one who they name as being so.

9. "Kasyapa, those who are wise make this observation: 'When the ascetic Gautama's disciples have skillful qualities, pristine, sublime, and noble, and the disciples of other teachers have the same qualities, which of them is capable of cultivating them and making them grow?' Kasyapa, when the wise make this observation, they thus know and see, 'Only the ascetic Gautama's disciples are capable of cultivating these qualities and making them grow.' Kasyapa, when the wise make this observation, inquire into this, and discuss this, my disciples are who they name.

10. "Kasyapa, there's a path and a way that a monk cultivates, and then he himself will know and see: 'The ascetic Gautama's speech is timely, genuine, meaningful, the teaching, and the discipline.' Kasyapa, what is the path and what are the way that a monk cultivates, and then he himself will know and see: 'The ascetic Gautama's speech is timely, genuine, meaningful, the teaching, and the discipline'?

11. "Kasyapa, a monk cultivates the awakening factor of mindfulness based on stopping, lack of desire, and escape. He cultivates the awakening factor of the teaching … effort … joy … calm … samadhi … equanimity based on stopping, lack of desire, and escape. Kasyapa, this is the path and the way that a monk cultivates, and then he himself will know and see: 'The ascetic Gautama's speech is timely, genuine, meaningful, the teaching, and the discipline."

12. Kasyapa said, "Gautama, there's only this path and this way that a monk cultivates, and then he himself knows and sees: 'The ascetic Gautama's speech is timely, genuine, meaningful, the teaching, and the discipline.' It's only the dirty ascetic practices that make it possible to be named a priest or an ascetic. What dirty ascetic practices make it possible to be named a priest or an ascetic?

13. "Gautama, they part with clothing and go naked, covering themselves with their hands. They don't accept food in pots or bowls. They don't accept food while between two walls, between two people, between two blades, or between two bowls. They don't accept food when a family is eating together, when there's a pregnancy in the household, when they see a dog at the door, or when a home has many flies.

14. "They don't accept invitations to meals or food from someone who says they know them. They don't eat fish or meat and don't drink wine. They don't take two bowls of food, considering one swallow to be a meal up to seven meals and stopping. When they accept a person's beneficial food, they don't do so more than seven times. Sometimes, they eat one meal a day or one every two days, three days, four days, five days, six days, or seven days.

15. "Sometimes, they eat fruit or weeds and drink juice. They eat flax seed, rice, long-grain rice, cow dung, deer dung, tree roots, branches, leaves, and fruit, or fruit that has fallen naturally.

16. "Sometimes, they wear clothes, throw on sedge as clothes, wear tree bark, curtain yourselves in grass, or wear deerskin. Sometimes, they fasten head hair to themselves, wear plaited hair, or wear clothes from a charnel ground.

17. "Sometimes, they keep your arms raised all the time, don't sit on couches or mats, or crouch all the time. Sometimes, they cut their hair and fasten it to their beard, lie on thorns, lie on fruits and berries, or lie naked on cow dung. Sometimes, they bath three times a day or three times a night. They torment their bodies with these countless hardships. Gautama, these are the dirty practices that make it possible to be named a priest or ascetic."

18. The Buddha said, "Kasyapa, parting with clothes and going naked … tormenting one's body with these countless hardships, their precepts aren't complete, and their views aren't complete. They aren't able to diligently cultivate, and their [teachings] aren't broad and open."

19. Kasyapa said to the Buddha, "What are the completion of precepts and completion of views that go beyond the ascetic practices and that are fine and supreme?"

20. The Buddha told Kasyapa, "Listen closely, and well consider it. I'll explain it for you."

Kasyapa said, "Very well, Gautama. I'd be glad to hear it."

21. The Buddha addressed Kasyapa, "If a Tathagata, an Arhat, arises in the world … the four dhyanas, then he attains happiness in the present life. Why is that? These things are a result of diligence, focused attention, unified mind, delighting in quiet seclusion, and not being self-indulgent. Kasyapa, this is the completion of precepts and completion of views that surpasses the ascetic practices, that's fine and supreme."

Kasyapa said, "Gautama, although you say this completion of precepts and completion of views surpasses the ascetic practices and is fine and supreme, it's only being an ascetic or priest that's difficult."

22. The Buddha said, "Kasyapa, this is world's special teaching, that the teachings of ascetics and priests are difficult. Kasyapa, even a laywoman can understand these teachings. Parting with clothing and going naked … tormenting one's body with these countless hardships, a person still doesn't understand their mind: 'Am I angry or not … resentful or not … harmful or not?' If someone knows these mental states, they aren't named ascetics or priests. It's because they don't understand themselves that being an ascetic or priest is difficult."

23. Kasyapa then said to the Buddha, "What's an ascetic or a priest like whose precepts and views are complete and who's higher, superior, fine, and supreme?"

24. The Buddha told Kasyapa, "Listen closely, listen closely! Consider it well. I will explain this for you."

Kasyapa said, "Very well, Gautama. I'd be glad to hear it."

25. The Buddha said, "Kasyapa, with samadhi of mind, a monk … attains the three insights, destroys the darkness of delusions, and produces the light of wisdom. This is called producing the knowledge that the contaminants have ended. Why is that? These things are a result of diligence, focused attention, not being forgetful, delighting in quiet seclusion, and not being self-indulgent. Kasyapa, this is called an ascetic or priest whose precepts and views are complete, and who's superior, higher, fine, and supreme.

Kasyapa said, "Gautama, although you say this is an ascetic or priest whose views and precepts are complete and who's higher, superior, fine, and supreme, it's only being an ascetic or priest that's exceedingly difficult. It's exceedingly difficult! An ascetic is also hard to know, and a priest is also hard to know."

26. The Buddha told Kasyapa, "A layman can cultivate this teaching, too. Someone who says 'From this day forward, I will part with clothing and go naked … and torment my body with these countless hardships' can't be called an ascetic or a priest on account of these practices. If they were called an ascetic or priest because of these practices, it couldn't be said, 'Being an ascetic is exceedingly difficult! Being a priest is exceedingly difficult!' That isn't possible to say on account of these practices of ascetics and priests, 'Being an ascetic is exceedingly difficult! Being a priest is exceedingly difficult!'"

27. The Buddha told Kasyapa, "There was once a time I was in Rajagrha, staying at Saptaparna Cave near Mount Vaibhara. There, I explained to that wanderer Nigrodha the pure ascetic practices. That wanderer rejoiced, attained pure faith, gave offerings to me, praised me, and gave his best offerings and praise to me."

Kasyapa said, "Gautama, who hasn't Gautama made rejoice greatly, attain pure faith, make offerings, and praise him? Now, Gautama has made me rejoice, attain pure faith, make offerings, and praise him. I take refuge in Gautama."

28. The Buddha told Kasyapa, "Those precepts possessed by the world don't possess or accompany the higher precepts, and the rest. How could they want to produce anything higher? They possess samadhi, wisdom, and liberation, and have seen the liberation of wisdom, but they don't possess or accompany these higher samadhi, wisdom, liberation, and seeing the liberation of wisdom. How could they want to produce anything higher?

29. "Kasyapa, the Tathagata, Arhat, and Completely Awakened One is a lion. When he teachings Dharma in detail in a great assembly, he's sovereign and fearless, so he's called a lion.

30. "How is it, Kasyapa? Would you say that Tathagata isn't courageous when he roars the lion's roar? Don't imagine this. The Tathagata's lion's roar is courageous and fearless.

31. "Kasyapa, would you say the Tathagata's courageous and fearless lion's roar isn't done in a large assembly? Don't imagine this. The Tathagata courageously roars the lion's roar in a large assembly.

32. "Kasyapa, would you say that the Tathagata doesn't teach the Dharma when he courageously roars the lion's roar in a large assembly? Don't imagine this. Why is that? The Tathagata skillfully teaches the Dharma when he courageously and fearlessly roars the lion's roar in a large assembly.

33. "How is it, Kasyapa? Would you say that the audience isn't unified in mind when the Tathagata courageously and fearlessly roars the lion's roar in a large assembly and skillfully teaches the Dharma? Don't imagine this. Why is that? When the Tathagata courageously and fearlessly roars the lion's roar in a large assembly and skillfully teaches the Dharma, the audience is unified in mind.

34. "How is it, Kasyapa? Would you say that the audience doesn't rejoice, believe, and accept it when the Tathagata courageously and fearlessly roars the lion's roar in a large assembly, skillfully teaches the Dharma, and those present listen with unified minds? Don't imagine this. Why is that? When the Tathagata courageously and fearlessly roars the lion's roar in a large assembly, skillfully teaches the Dharma, and the audience that's present listens with unified minds, they rejoice, believe, and accept it.

35. "Kasyapa, would you say that the audience doesn't make offerings when the Tathagata courageously and fearlessly roars the lion's roar in a large assembly, skillfully teaches the Dharma, and the audience rejoices, believes, and accepts it? Don't imagine this. [Why is that?] When the Tathagata courageously and fearlessly roars the lion's roar in a large assembly, skillfully teaches the Dharma, and the audience rejoices, believes, and accepts it, they make offerings to him.

36. "Kasyapa, would you say that the audience doesn't shave their hair and beard, put on the three Dharma robes, leave home, and cultivate the path when the Tathagata courageously and fearlessly roars the lion's roar in a large assembly … and they believe, respect, and make offerings? Don't imagine this. Why is that? When the Tathagata courageously and fearlessly roars the lion's roar in a large assembly … and they believe, respect, and make offerings, the audience shaves their hair and beard, put on the three Dharma robes, leave home, and cultivate the path.

37. "Kasyapa, would you say that the audience doesn't practice the ultimate religious practice and reach the peaceful abode, which is Nirvana without remainder, when the Tathagata courageously and fearlessly roars the lion's roar in a large assembly … and they leave home and cultivate the path? Don't imagine this. Why is that? When the Tathagata courageously and fearlessly roars the lion's roar in a large assembly … and they leave home and cultivate the path, the audience does practice the ultimate religious practice and reach a peaceful abode, which is Nirvana without remainder."

38. Kasyapa then said to the Buddha, "How, Gautama, do I leave home and accept the full precepts in this teaching?"

The Buddha told Kasyapa, "If someone from another training wishes to enter my teaching, leave home, and cultivate the path, they will wait and be observed for four months and receive the Sangha's assent. Afterward, they can leave home and accept the precepts. Kasyapa, this is simply because, while there is this teaching, we also observe the person."

39. Kasyapa said, "If someone from another training wishes to enter the Buddha's teaching and cultivate the religious life, they will wait to be observed for four months to assess their many ideas. Afterward, they can leave home and receive the Sangha's assent. Now, I would be willing to wait for four years of observation to enter the Buddha's teaching to receive the Sangha's assent. Afterward, I'll leave home and accept the precepts."

The Buddha told Kasyapa, "I would give you my assent, but it's simply that we observe the person [first]."

40. Kasyapa then left home and accepted the full precepts in the Buddha's teaching. It wasn't long after Kasyapa had accepted the precepts that he was cultivating the unsurpassed religious practice with pure faith. In the present life, he himself realized: "My births have been ended, the religious practice has been established, and the task has been accomplished. I won't be subject to a later existence." He had become an arhat.

41. When Kasyapa heard what the Buddha taught, he rejoiced and approved.

DA 26 KNOWLEDGE OF THE THREE VEDAS
(DN 13) [T 1.104c17]
(The direct parallel for this sutra is DN 13.)

(A pair of priests have an argument about which of their teachers has the correct teaching that's the way to Brahma's Heaven. They decide to get the Buddha's opinion on the matter. He explains why priests who study the three Vedas are not able to achieve this goal, then teaches them the practice of the four immeasurables (also known as the four abodes of Brahma, God, the god of creation.). The 3 vedas the ancient author talks here about are [1st] the Rigveda (the supreme book of wisdom), [2nd] the Samaveda (the songbook of wisdom), and [3rd] the Yajurveda (the worship book of wisdom).

The text of the fourth Veda is a late addition to the Vedic scriptures of Hinduism. The Atharva Veda (the mantra, prayer, or the priestly book of wisdom) is known as the "knowledge storehouse of atharvanas, the procedures for everyday life". That the author mentions only 3 vedas means that the Atharva Veda was accepted into the Veda-canon only after the death of the Buddha, so probably after the 5th or the 4th century BC.)

1. Thus I have heard: One time, the Buddha was travelling among the people of Kosala accompanied by a large assembly of 1,250 monks. He went to the Kosala priest village of Icchanangala and stopped to rest in a citron grove.

2. A priest named Puskarasarin and another named [Tarukkha] had gone to the village of Icchanangala for some minor reason.

3. This priest Puskarasarin was descended from seven generations of fathers and mothers who were genuine [priests], so he wasn't slighted by others. He had mastered the three Vedas and could discern all the various kinds of scriptures. He was also skilled in the techniques of [recognising] the great man's signs, divining fortune and misfortune, and [performing] sacrifices and rituals. He had 500 disciples whom he taught without exception.

4. He had a disciple named Vasistha who was descended from seven generations of fathers and mothers who were genuine [priests], so he wasn't slighted by others. He had mastered the three Vedas and could discern all the various kinds of scriptures. He was also skilled in the techniques of [recognising] the great man's signs, divining fortune and misfortune, and [performing] sacrifices and rituals. He also had 500 disciples whom he taught without exception.

5. The priest [Tarukkha] was descended from seven generations of fathers and mothers who were genuine [priests], so he wasn't slighted by others. He had mastered the three Vedas and could discern all the various kinds of scriptures. He was also skilled in the techniques of [recognising] the great man's signs, divining fortune and misfortune, and [performing] sacrifices and rituals. He had 500 disciples whom he taught without exception.

6. He had a disciple named Bharadvaja who was descended from seven generations of fathers and mothers who were genuine [priests], so he wasn't slighted by others. He had mastered the three Vedas and could discern all the various kinds of scriptures. He was also skilled in the techniques of [recognising] the great man's signs, divining fortune and misfortune, and [performing] sacrifices and rituals. He also had 500 disciples whom he taught without exception.

7. These two men, Vasistha and Bharadvaja went to a park in the early morning. When they discussed doctrines, they contradicted one another. Vasistha said to Bharadvaja, "My path is true. It can attain escape and arrive in Brahma's Heaven. This is the teaching of the priest Puskarasarin." Bharadvaja also said, "My path is true. It can attain escape and arrive in Brahma's Heaven. This is the teaching of the priest [Tarukkha]." Vasistha thus praised his own path as true three times, and Bharadvaja also praised his own path as true three times. They continued their discussion, but neither was able to be decisive.

8. Vasistha then said to Bharadvaja, "I heard that the ascetic Gautama of the Sakya clan, who had left the home life and achieved awakening, was travelling among the people of Kosala and now is staying in the grove at Icchanangala. He possesses a great reputation that's heard throughout the world: 'He's a Tathagata, an Arhat, and a Completely Awakened One who has perfected the ten epithets. Among gods, worldly men, and demons, whether they're in the assemblies of Mara and gods or ascetics and priests, he is self-realized and teaches the Dharma for others. It's good in the beginning, middle, and end, complete in content and expression, and purifies the religious life.'

9. "Since he's a realized person, we should go and meet him! I've heard that Gautama knows the way to Brahma's Heaven and teaches it for others. He frequently visits Brahma's Heaven to speak with him. We should go together to visit Gautama. He'll settle this matter. If the ascetic Gautama has something to tell us, we should uphold it together, too."

10. Vasistha and Bharadvaja both went to the citron grove to visit the Bhagavan. After exchanging greetings, they sat to one side.

11. Knowing the thoughts in their minds, the Bhagavan then told Vasistha, "Both of you went to a grove in the early morning. When you had a discussion, you contradicted each other. One of you said, 'My path is true. It can attain escape and arrive in Brahma's Heaven. This is the teaching of the priest Puskarasarin.'

"The other said, 'My path is true. It can attain escape and arrive in Brahma's Heaven. This is the teaching of the priest [Tarukkha].'

"Thus, you contradicted each other three times. Is that what happened?"

12. Vasistha and Bharadvaja were shocked when they heard the Buddha say this, and their hair stood up. They thought, "The ascetic Gautama possesses great miraculous virtue. He knows a person's thoughts beforehand. The ascetic Gautama was the first to mention what we came wanting to discuss!"

13. Vasistha said to the Buddha, "My path and his path are both praised as true, achieving the escape and arriving at Brahma's Heaven. Is what's taught by the priest Puskarasarin correct, or is it what's taught by the priest [Tarukkha] that's correct?"

14. The Buddha said, "Vasistha, even if it were this path or that path which is truly the escape and arrives at Brahma's Heaven, why did you contradict each other three times while you were in a grove this morning?"

15. Vasistha then said to the Buddha, "The priests possessing the three Vedas teach various paths, such as the path of free desires, the self-realized path, and the path to Brahma's Heaven. All three paths lead to Brahma's heaven. Gautama, it's like a village that has many roads that lead to its citadel. Although the priests teach various paths, they all lead to Brahma's Heaven."

16. The Buddha asked Vasistha, "Do all of those paths arrive at Brahma's Heaven?"

He replied, "All of them arrive there."

17. The Buddha asked him three times, "Do those various paths all arrive at Brahma's Heaven?"

He replied, "They all arrive there."

18. After being certain of what he was saying, the Bhagavan asked Vasistha, "Is there anyone among those priests who possess the three Vedas who have seen Brahma's Heaven?"

He replied, "None of them have seen it."

19. "How is it, Vasistha? Did any previous teacher of those priests who possess the three Vedas see Brahma's Heaven?"

He replied, "None of them saw it."

20. "How is it, Vasistha? Going back to the priests of antiquity, there were sages who possessed the three insights who recited and mastered [the Vedas], taught the recitations for others, and chanted the hymns. Their names were the priests Astaka, [Vamaka], Vamadeva, Visvamitra, Angiras, [Yamataggi], Vasistha, Kasyapa, Aruna, Gautama, [Suyiva], and Sundara. Did any of them see Brahma's Heaven?"

He answered, "None of them saw it."

21. The Buddha said, "If not one of the priests who possess the three insights have seen Brahma's Heaven, none of the previous teachers of the priests who possess the three Vedas have seen Brahma's Heaven, and even the great sages of antiquity like the priest Astaka didn't see Brahma's Heaven, we should know that the teachings of the priests who possess the three Vedas are untrue."

22. He also told Vasistha, "It's like a lustful man who says, 'I have a relationship with that beautiful woman. Praise the way of lust!'

23. "Someone else says, 'Do you know that woman? Where is she? To the east, west, south, or north?'

"The man replied, 'I don't know.'

24. "He's again asked, 'Don't you know the region, city, town, or village where that woman lives?'

"He replies, 'I don't know.'

25. "He's again asked, 'Do you know the family name of that woman's parents?'

"He replies, 'I don't know.'

26. "Again, he's asked, 'Do you know if that woman is a warrior woman or a priest, householder, or worker woman?'

"He replies, 'I don't know.'

27. "Again, he's asked, 'Do you know if that woman is tall or short, crude or fine, dark or light, and beautiful or ugly?'

"He replies, 'I don't know.'

28. "How is it, Vasistha? Does that man praise something that's true?" Vasistha replied, "It's not true."

29. "So it is, Vasistha. The teachings of these priests who possess the three Vedas are the same. They have no reality. How is it, Vasistha? Do your priests who possess the three Vedas watch the sun and moon travel between the places where they rise and set? Do they salute them with their hands together, make offerings, and say, 'This path is true that attains the escape to the sun and moon'?"

He replied, "Yes, the priests who possess the three Vedas do see the sun and moon travel between the places where they rise and set. They salute them with their hands together and make offerings, but they can't say, 'This path is true that will attain the escape to the sun and moon.'"

30. "So it is, Vasistha. The priests who possess the three Vedas watch the sun and moon travel between the places where they rise and set. They salute them with their hands together and make offerings, but they can't say, 'This path is true that will attain the escape to the sun and moon.' Still, they routinely salute them with their hands together and make offerings. Isn't that done in vain?"

He answered, "Yes, Gautama. That's actually done in vain."

31. The Buddha said, "They are like a man who builds a ladder in an empty place. Someone else asks him, 'What's the purpose of building a ladder here?'

"The man answers, 'I want to ascend the hall.'

32. "Again, he's asked, 'Where is this hall? Is it east, west, south or north of here?'

"He answers, 'I don't know.'

33. "How is it, Vasistha? Didn't this man who built a ladder to ascend a hall do so in vain?"

He replied, "Yes, it's actually done in vain."

34. The Buddha said, "The priests who possess the three Vedas are likewise. They are deceptive and untrue.

35. "Vasistha, the five desires are pure and extremely delightful. What are the five? Images seen by the eye are extremely delightful … ear … sounds … nose … odors … tongue … flavors … body … touches … are extremely delightful. In my noble teaching, they are attachments, fetters, and binding chains. Those priests who possess the three Vedas are defiled by these five desires, and their addiction to them is strong. They don't see their drawback and don't know their escape, so they are bound by these five desires. Even if they worshipped the sun and moon or water and fire and declared, 'Support my rebirth in Brahma's Heaven!' it would be impossible.

36. "It's like the Ajiravati River when its current is as high as its banks and a crow could drink from it. Suppose a person on the near shore who's been tightly bound called in vain to the other shore, 'Cross over to me!' Would the other shore cross over to this person?"

He replied, "No."

37. "Vasistha, the five desires are pure and extremely delightful, but they are still binding chains in my noble teaching. Those priests who possess the three Vedas are defiled by these five desires, and their addiction to them is strong. They don't see their drawback and don't know their escape, so they are bound by these five desires. Even if they worshipped the sun and moon or water and fire and declared, 'Support my rebirth in Brahma's Heaven!' it would likewise never be possible.

38. "Vasistha, it's like the Ajiravati River when its current is as high as its banks and a crow could drink from it. Could someone without a boat or the strength to swim cross it if they wanted?"

He answered, "They couldn't."

39. "Vasistha, the priests who possess the three Vedas are likewise. They don't cultivate the ascetic's pure religious life, instead cultivating other paths that are impure practices. Their goal of being born in Brahma's Heaven isn't possible.

40. "Vasistha, it's like many people caught in a flash flood in the mountains without boats or a bridge. A traveler comes upon it and wants to cross over to the other shore. Seeing the mountain river's torrent and the people floating in it, they realize they also lack a boat or bridge. That person thinks, 'Now, I'd better collect many reeds and branches and bind them into a raft. Perhaps I could then cross to the other shore using my own power?' They then bind a raft and use their own power to cross over to safety.

41. "Vasistha, this is likewise. If a monk abandons the impure practices of non-ascetics and practices the ascetic's pure religious practice, then his desire to be born in Brahma's Heaven is possible. How is it, Vasistha? Does Brahma have resentment, or does he not?"

He answered, "He doesn't have resentment."

42. Again, the Buddha asked, "Do the priests who possess the three Vedas have resentment, or do they not?"

He answered, "They have resentment."

43. "Vasistha, Brahma has no resentment, but the priests who possess the three Vedas have resentment. They don't equally have or have no resentment. They aren't both free of it and headed the same way. Therefore, Brahma and the priests aren't equals. How is it, Vasistha? Does Brahma have anger, or does he not?"

He answered, "He doesn't have anger."

44. The Buddha again asked, "Do the priests who possess three insights have anger, or do they not?"

He answered, "They have anger."

45. The Buddha said, "Brahma has no anger, but the priests who possess the three Vedas have anger. They don't equally have or have no anger. They aren't both free of it and headed the same way. Therefore, Brahma and the priests aren't equals. How is it, Vasistha? Does Brahma have enmity, or does he not?"

He answered, "He doesn't have enmity."

46. The Buddha again asked, "Do the priests who possess the three Vedas have enmity, or do they not?"

He answered, "They have enmity."

47. The Buddha said, "Brahma has no enmity, but the priests of three insights do have enmity. They don't equally have or have no enmity. They aren't both free of it and headed the same way. Therefore, Brahma and the priests aren't equals. How is it, Vasistha? Does Brahma have a household and property?"

He answered, "He doesn't."

48. The Buddha again asked, "Do the priests who possess the three Vedas have households and property?"

He answered, "They do."

49. The Buddha said, "Brahma has no household or property, but the priests who possess the three Vedas have households and property. They don't equally have or have no household and property. They aren't both free of them and headed the same way. Therefore, Brahma and the priests aren't equals. How is it, Vasistha? Has Brahma attained sovereignty or has he not?"

He answered, "He has attained sovereignty."

50. The Buddha also asked, "Do the priests who possess the three Vedas attain sovereignty, or do they not?"

He answered, "They don't attain sovereignty."

51. The Buddha said, "Brahma has attained sovereignty, but the priests who possess the three Vedas haven't attained sovereignty. They aren't equally sovereign or not sovereign. They aren't both sovereign and headed the same way. Therefore, Brahma and the priests aren't equals."

52. The Buddha said, "Suppose someone were to approach those priests who possess the three Vedas and ask them about a profound and hard subject, and they can't provide an answer. Is that the way it actually is?"

He answered, "Yes."

53. Both Vasistha and Bharadvaja then said to the Buddha, "Setting aside other discussions, we've heard that the ascetic Gautama is clearly aware of the way to Brahma and explains it for others, and he relates how he sees them reborn with Brahma. Please let the ascetic Gautama discuss the way to Brahma out of compassion for us. Make it a plain and detailed explanation!"

54. The Buddha addressed Vasistha, "Now, I'll ask you a question, and you tell me what you think. How is it, Vasistha? Would it be far or near to go to the country of Manasakata?"

He answered, "It's nearby."

55. "Suppose someone who was born and grew up in that country was asked by someone else about the way to that country. How would it be, Vasistha? Would that person who was from that country tell him the way there, or would he be uncertain about it?"

He answered, "He wouldn't be uncertain. Why is that? It's his native country."

56. The Buddha said, "Even so, that person who's from that country might have some uncertainty. If someone approached me and asked the way to Brahma, I'd have no uncertainty. Why is that? I frequently explain the way to Brahma."

57. Vasistha and Bharadvaja then both said to the Buddha, "Setting aside this discussion, we've heard that the ascetic Gautama is clearly aware of the way to Brahma and explains it for others. He also relates how he sees others reborn with Brahma. Please let the ascetic Gautama discuss the way to Brahma out of compassion for us. Make it a plain and detailed explanation!"

58. The Buddha said, "Listen closely, and well consider it. I'll explain it for you."

They answered, "Very well. We'd like to hear it."

59. The Buddha said, "Suppose a Tathagata, Arhat, and Completely Awakened One arises in the world who perfects the ten epithets … four dhyanas, and lives leisurely in the present life. Why is that? These things come from diligence, focused attention that's not lost, happily living in seclusion, and not being negligent.

60. "He completely fills one direction with kindness and the other directions as well. It's vast, without end, without duality, measureless, and lacks resentment or harmfulness. He's entertained by this mental state and enjoys himself. How is it, Vasistha? Does Brahma have resentment, or does he not?"

He answered, "He doesn't have resentment."

61. The Buddha again asked, "Does a monk practicing kindness have resentment, or does he not?"

He answered, "He doesn't have resentment."

62. The Buddha said, "Brahma has no resentment, and a monk practicing kindness has no resentment. They're equal in not having resentments. They're both free of it and headed in the same way. Therefore, Brahma and the monk are equals. How is it, Vasistha? Does Brahma have anger, or does he not?"

He answered, "He doesn't have anger."

63. The Buddha again asked, "Does a monk practicing kindness have anger, or does he not?"

He answered, "He doesn't have anger."

64. The Buddha said, "Brahma has no anger, and a monk practicing kindness has no anger. They're equal in not having anger. They're both free of it and headed in the same way. Therefore, Brahma and the monk are equals. How is it, Vasistha? Does Brahma have enmity, or does he not?"

He answered, "He doesn't have enmity."

65. The Buddha again asked, "Does a monk practicing kindness have enmity, or does he not?"

He answered, "He doesn't have enmity."

66. The Buddha said, "Brahma has no enmity, and a monk practicing kindness has no enmity. They're equal in not having enmity. They're both free of it and headed in the same way. Therefore, Brahma and the monk are equals. How is it, Vasistha? Does Brahma have a household and property?"

He answered, "He doesn't."

67. The Buddha again asked, "Does a monk practicing kindness have a household and property?"

He answered, "He doesn't."

68. The Buddha said, "Brahma has no household or property, and a monk practicing kindness has no household or property. They're equal in not having a household or property. They're both free of them and headed in the same way Therefore, Brahma and the monk are equals. How is it, Vasistha? Does Brahma attain sovereignty?"

He answered, "He does."

69. The Buddha again asked, "Does a monk practicing kindness attain sovereignty?"

He answered, "He does."

70. The Buddha said, "Brahma attains sovereignty, and a monk practicing kindness attains sovereignty. They're equal in attaining sovereignty. They're both free and headed in the same way Therefore, Brahma and the monk are equals."

71. The Buddha told Vasistha, "You should know that when such a monk's body breaks up and his life ends, he's born up in Brahma's Heaven in an instant like shooting an arrow." When the Buddha taught this Dharma, Vasistha and Bharadvaja had their defilements and dust removed right where they were sitting, and the Dharma eye arose in them.

72. When Vasistha and Bharadvaja heard what the Buddha taught, they rejoiced and approved.

DA 27 THE FRUITS OF THE ASCETICS

(DN 2) [T 1.107a20]

(Parallels include DN 2, EA 43.7, and T22.)

(King Ajatasatru decides to visit the Buddha on an auspicious full moon night with his brother Jivaka. He asks the Buddha what the fruits of the ascetic life are in the present and relates the various responses he received from the six heretical teachers.)

1. Thus I have heard: One time, the Buddha was staying at Rajagrha in Jivaka's Mango Park. He was accompanied by a large assembly of 1,250 monks.

Ajatasatru Visits the Buddha

2. It was then that King Ajatasatru, the son of Vaidehi, summoned one of his wives during the fifteenth day full moon. He said to her, "Tonight is clear and bright, and the day was no different. What shall we do?"

His wife said to the king, "Now, it's the fifteenth day full moon tonight, and the day was no different. It would be fitting to bathe and wash our hair. We could bring the courtesan women and entertain ourselves with the five desires."

3. The king also summoned the first prince Udayibhadra. He asked him, "Tonight is the fifteenth day full moon, and the day was no different. What shall be undertake?"

The prince said to the king, "Tonight is the fifteenth day full moon, and the day was no different. It would be fitting to assembly the fourfold army and make a plan of attack on our foreign adversaries. After we return, we'll celebrate it together."

4. The king also summoned a great and heroic general. He asked him, "Now is the fifteenth day full moon. The night is clear and bright, and the day was no different. What shall we do?"

The great general said, "Tonight is clear and bright, and the day was no different. It would be fitting to assembly the fourfold army and decide to march on the world and know who is for and against us."

5. The king also summoned the priest Varsakara. He asked him, "Now, it's the fifteenth day full moon. This night is clear and bright, and the day was no different. Shall we visit some ascetic or priest who can enlighten my mind?"

Varsakara then said, "Tonight is clear and bright, and the day was no different. There is Purana Kasyapa who leads a large assembly. Many have known him, and his fame is heard far away. Just as the ocean holds many things, he gets many kinds of support. Great king, it would be fitting to visit him and exchange greetings. If the king meets him, his mind might be enlightened."

6. The king also summoned Varsakara's brother [Sunidha] and asked him, "Tonight is clear and bright, and the day was no different. Would it be fitting to visit some ascetic or priest who can enlighten my mind?"

[Sunidha] said, "Tonight is clear and bright, and the day was no different. There's Maskarin Gosaliputra who leads a large assembly. Many have known him, and his fame is heard far away. Just as there's nothing that the ocean doesn't hold, he gets many kinds of support. Great king, it would be fitting to visit him and exchange greetings. If the king meets him, his mind might be enlightened."

7. The king also summoned his minister of law-making and asked him, "Tonight is clear and bright, and the day was no different. Shall we go visit some ascetic or priest who can enlighten my mind?"

That minister of law-making said, "There's Ajita Kesakambala who leads a large assembly. Many have known him, and his fame is heard far away. Just as there's nothing that the ocean doesn't holds, he gets many kinds of support. Great king, it would be fitting to visit him and exchange greetings. If the king meets him, his mind might be enlightened."

8. "The king also summoned his gate keeper [Kala] and asked him, "Tonight is clear and bright, and the day was no different. Shall we visit some ascetic or priest who can enlighten my mind?"

"That gate keeper [Kala] said, "There's Kakuda Katyayana who leads a large assembly. Many have known him, and his fame is heard far away. Just as there's nothing that the ocean doesn't hold, he gets many kinds of support. Great king, it would be fitting to visit him and exchange greetings. If the king meets him, his mind might be enlightened."

9. The king also summoned Udayin [Mandiputra] and asked him, "Tonight is clear and bright, and the day is no different. Shall we visit some ascetic or priest who can enlighten my mind?"

Udayin said, "There's Samjayin Vairatiputra who leads a large assembly. Many have known him, and his fame is heard far away. Just as there's nothing that the ocean doesn't hold, he gets many kinds of support. Great king, it would be fitting to visit him and exchange greetings. If the king meets him, his mind might be enlightened."

10. The king also summoned his brother Abhaya and asked him, "Tonight is clear and bright, and the day was no different. Shall we visit some ascetic or priest who can enlighten my mind?"

His brother Abhaya said, "There's Nirgrantha Jnataputra who leads a large assembly. Many have known him, and his fame is heard far away. Just as there's nothing that the ocean doesn't hold, he gets many kinds of support. Great king, it would be fitting to visit him and exchange greetings. If the king meets him, his mind might be enlightened."

11. The king also summoned Prince Jivaka and asked him, "Tonight is clear and bright, and the day was no different. Shall we visit some ascetic or priest who can enlighten my mind?"

Prince Jivaka said, "There is the Buddha, the Bhagavan, who now is staying in the Mango Park. Great king, it would be fitting to go visit him and exchange greetings. If the king meets him, his mind surely will be enlightened."

12. The king ordered Jivaka, "Prepare my chariot with a treasure elephant and another five hundred white elephants."

13. Jivaka accepted his instructions. When he was finished preparing the king's elephant and the other five hundred elephants, he said to the king, "The teams have been prepared. Please know that it's time."

14. King Ajatasatru road on his treasure elephant and ordered his 500 wives to ride 500 female elephants. They each carried a torch in hand that showed the king's magnificence. They left Rajagrha intending to visit the Buddha. After they had gone a little way, the king told Jivaka, "Now, you are tricking me. You've set a trap to send me and this great assembly into the hands of our enemies."

Jivaka said, "Great king, I would not dare fool a king. I would not dare set a trap to send a king and his great assembly into the hands of their enemies. King, just go forward; you'll surely obtain good fortune."

15. The king continued a little further and then told Jivaka, "Now, you are tricking me. You've set a trap to send me and this great assembly into the hands of our enemies." He repeated this three times. "Why is that? The Buddha has a great assembly of 1,250 people, but it's silent. There are no voices. Where are you leading us?"

Jivaka also said three times, "Great king, I wouldn't dare fool, set a trap, or send the king's great assembly into the hands of his enemies. King just go forward; you'll surely obtain good fortune. Why is that? That ascetic's teaching is always delightful and peaceful. That's why there are no voices. King, just go forward; the park grove has come into view."

16. King Ajatasatru arrived at the park's entrance, got down from his elephant, untied his sword, and withdrew a parasol. Leaving the five deportments, he walked into the park entrance and asked Jivaka, "Now, where is the Buddha, the Bhagavan?"

Jivaka replied, "Great king, now the Buddha is there in the high hall in front of a lit lamp. The Bhagavan is there sitting on a lion's throne facing south. King, go forward a little and see the Bhagavan for yourself."

17. King Ajatasatru went to the meeting hall and washed his feet outside. Afterward, he ascended the hall, and silently looked in all directions. Feeling joyous, he blurted out, "Now, the ascetics are quiet, tranquil, and endowed with calm contemplation. I wish my Prince Udayin could also achieve the same kind of calm contemplation."

18. The Bhagavan then addressed King Ajatasatru, "It was because you thought of your son that you blurted out, 'I wish my prince Udayin could also achieve the same type of a calm contemplation.' You may come forward and sit."

Ajatasatru's Question

19. King Ajatasatru then went forward, bowed his head at the Buddha's feet, and sat to one side. He said to the Buddha, "Now, I have a question I'd like to ask. If you have a moment, might I ask it?"

The Buddha said, "Great king, if you have a question, then you may ask it."

20. King Ajatasatru said to the Buddha, "Bhagavan, take for example the people here who rode elephant and horse chariots armed with knives, spears, swords, bow and arrows, polearms, and martial methods. The king's son, strong men, and great strong men, and a variety of artisans such as servants, tanners, barbers, weavers, charioteers, masons, woodworkers, and reed weavers make their livings and entertain themselves as they like. Parents, wives and children, workers, and servants all entertain themselves. This arises from their occupations, which have present rewards. Now, does an ascetic's cultivation in the present have rewards in the present?"

The Buddha told the king, "Have you visited other ascetics and priests to ask them about this subject?"

21. The king said to the Buddha, "I have visited ascetics and priests in the past to ask them about this subject. I remember one time I went to Purana Kasyapa and asked, 'Just as people ride elephants and horse chariots, armed with … martial methods … various occupations give rise their rewards in the present. Now, this assembly presently cultivates the path. What reward do they obtain in the present?'

22. "That Purana Kasyapa replied to me, 'Suppose the king or another on his behalf chops, smites, injures, boils, burns, cuts, and slices sentient beings to torment them, and they lament and cry out. Killing beings, stealing, raping, speaking falsely, trespassing, robbing, and setting fires are evils that cut off the path. Great king, to do such things isn't bad. Great king, suppose you were to cut and slice all sentient beings with a sharp sword and turn them into a mass of meat that covered the world. This wouldn't be bad, nor would there be a reward for a misdeed. If you cut and sliced sentient beings on the south side of the Ganga River, that also wouldn't bring any bad rewards. If you gave charity to a large congregation on the north side of a river, giving to everyone and profiting people, there wouldn't be a rewards for merit, either.'"

23. The king said to the Buddha, "It was like someone asking about a melon and getting an answer about a plum; he was likewise. I asked if they attain rewards in the present or not, and he answered me with there's no rewards of misdeeds or merits. So, I then thought, 'I am a warrior king whose head was anointed with water. There's no reason to kill this mendicant, but I should bind him and drive him away!' I felt anger that fettered my mind. Having had this thought, I then departed."

24. He also said to the Buddha, "There was a time I went to Maskarin Gosaliputra and asked him, 'Just as people ride elephants and horse chariots armed with … martial methods … various occupations give rise their rewards in the present. Now, this assembly presently cultivates the path. What reward do they obtain in the present?'

25. "He replied to me, 'Great king, there's no gift and no giving, and no sacrifice. There's no good or bad and no good or bad rewards. There's no present life and no afterlife. There's no father, no mother, no gods, no conjured sentient beings. There are no ascetics or priests in the world who practice the same. None of them who are self-realized and disseminate it to other people in the present life or an afterlife. Their words are all false.'

26. "Bhagavan, it was like someone asking about a melon and getting an answer about a plum; he was likewise. I asked if they attain rewards in the present or not, and he gave me a meaningless answer. So, I then thought, 'I am a warrior king whose head was anointed with water. There's no reason to kill this mendicant, but I should bind him and drive him away!' I felt anger that fettered my mind. Having had this thought, I then departed."

27. He also said to the Buddha, "There was one time I went to Ajita Kesakambala and asked him, 'Venerable, just as people ride elephants and horse chariots armed with … martial methods … various occupations give rise their rewards in the present. Now, this assembly presently cultivates the path. What reward do they obtain in the present?'

28. "He replied to me, 'A person acquires the four elements and takes them to the end of his life. The earth element returns to earth; the water element returns to water; the fire element returns to fire; and the air element returns to air. People are all destroyed, and their faculties return to space. When a person dies, their body is placed on a palanquin and they are taken to a charnel ground. There, they are cremated until their bones are the color of pigeons, or they turn into ashes. Whether foolish or wise, people are all destroyed when their lives end. It's the rule of annihilation.'

29. "Bhagavan, it was like someone asking about a melon and getting an answer about a plum; he was likewise. I asked if they attain rewards in the present or not, and he answered about annihilation. So, I then thought, 'I am a warrior king whose head was anointed with water. There's no reason to kill this mendicant, but I should bind him and drive him away!' I felt anger that fettered my mind. Having had this thought, I then departed."

30. He also said to the Buddha, "There was one time I went to Kakuda Katyayana and asked, 'Venerable, just as people ride elephants and horse chariots armed with … martial methods … various occupations give rise their rewards in the present. Now, this assembly presently cultivates the path. What reward do they obtain in the present?'

31. "He answered me, 'Great king, there's no strength and no effort. People have no power and no means. There's no cause and no condition for the attachment of sentient beings to defilement, and there's no cause and no condition for the purification of sentient beings. Every kind of sentient being that has a life has no power, and they can't act freely. Without any enemies, they are certain to exist in numbers. They experience pain and pleasure in these six births.'

32. "Bhagavan, it was like someone asking about a melon and getting an answer about a plum; he was likewise. I asked if they attain rewards in the present or not, and he answered me about being powerless. So, I then thought, 'I am a warrior king whose head was anointed with water. There's no reason to kill this mendicant, but I should bind him and drive him away!' I felt anger that fettered my mind. Having had this thought, I then departed."

33. He also said to the Buddha, "There was one time I went to Samjayin Vairatiputra and asked him, 'Venerable, just as people ride elephants and horse chariots armed with … martial methods … various occupations give rise their rewards in the present. Now, this assembly presently cultivates the path. What reward do they obtain in the present?'

34. "He answered me, 'Great king, "Is there a reward for ascetics in the present?" Questioned thus, I would answer this subject in this way: "This is something real, this is something different, or this is something neither different nor not different." Great king: "Is there no reward for ascetics in the present?" Questioned thus, I would answer this subject in this way: "This is something real, this is something different, or this is something neither different nor not different." Great king: "Is there both a reward and no reward for ascetics in the present?" Questioned thus, I would answer this subject in this way: "This is something real, this is something different, and this is something neither different nor not different." Great king: "Is there neither a reward nor no reward for ascetics in the present?" Questioned thus, I would answer this subject in this way: "This is something real, this is something different, or this is something neither different nor not different."'

35. "Bhagavan, it was like someone asking about a melon and getting an answer about a plum; he was likewise. I asked if they attain rewards in the present or not, and he answered me with those different positions. So, I then thought, 'I am a warrior king whose head was anointed with water. There's no reason to kill this mendicant, but I should bind him and drive him away!' I felt anger that fettered my mind. Having had this thought, I then departed."

36. He also said to the Buddha, "There was a time I went to Nirgrantha Jnatiputra and asked him, 'Venerable, just as people ride elephants and horse chariots armed with … martial methods … various occupations give rise their rewards in the present. Now, this assembly presently cultivates the path. What reward do they obtain in the present?'

37. "He answered me, 'Great king, I am an all-knowing and all-seeing person. My knowledge is complete without exception. Whether walking, standing, sitting, or lying down, my awakening is without exception, and my knowledge is always right in front of me.'

38. "Bhagavan, it was like someone asking about a melon and getting an answer about a plum; he was likewise. I asked if they attain rewards in the present or not, and he answered me with omniscience. So, I then thought, 'I am a warrior king whose head was anointed with water. There's no reason to kill this mendicant, but I should bind him and drive him away!' I felt anger that fettered my mind. Having had this thought, I then departed."

39. "Therefore, Bhagavan, I've come here now to ask about this subject: Just as people ride elephants and horse chariots armed with … martial methods … various occupations give rise their rewards in the present. Now, ascetics presently cultivate the path. What reward do they obtain in the present?"

The Buddha's Answer

40. The Buddha told King Ajatasatru, "Now, I'll respond with a question to the king, and he can answer as he likes. How is it, great king? The king's household has servants and people who work inside and outside. They see the king on the fifteenth day full moon wash his hair and bathe. He then ascends the high hall with his concubines, and they entertain each other. The servants think, 'Ah! This is the reward of what action? This King Ajatasatru on the fifteenth day full moon washes his hair and bathes. He then ascends the high hall with his concubines, and they entertain themselves with the five desires. Who can know what action for which this is the reward?' Afterward, they shave off their hair and beard, put on the three Dharma robes, leave home, cultivate the path, and practice equanimity. How is it, great king? When the great king sees these people coming from a distance, would he again think, 'Are these my servants, or not?'

The king said to the Buddha, "No, Bhagavan. If I saw them coming, I would rise and ask them to sit."

41. The Buddha said, "Is this not an ascetic's reward that's attained in the present?"

The king replied, "So it is, Bhagavan. This is an ascetic's rewards that's attained in the present."

42. "Furthermore, great king. Suppose people from the king's realm, inside his household, or who are visiting eat from the king's provisions. They see the king on the fifteenth day full moon wash his hair and bathed. He then ascends the high hall with his concubines, and they entertain themselves with the five desires. These people think, 'Ah! This is the reward of what action? Who can know what action for which this is the reward?' Afterward, they shave off their hair and beards, put on the three Dharma robes, leave home, cultivate the path, and practice equanimity. How is it, great king? When the great king sees these people coming from a distance, would he again produce the thought, 'These are my people who eat from my provision as guests'?"

The king said, "No. If I saw them from a distance, I would rise, bow, exchange greetings with them, and ask them to sit."

43. "How is it, great king? Is this not an ascetic's reward attained in the present?"

The king said, "So it is. It's an ascetic's reward attained in the present."

44. "Furthermore, great king, the Tathagata, Arhat, and Rightly and Fully Awakened One arises in the world. Someone who enters my teaching … three insights destroy the shadows and produce the great radiance of knowledge, which is the knowledge realized by ending the contaminants. Why is that? These things come from diligence, focused mindfulness that isn't lost, delighting in quiet seclusion, and not being careless. How is it, great king? Is this not an ascetic's reward attained in the present?"

The king replied, "So it is, Bhagavan. This really is an ascetic's reward attained in the present."

Ajatasatru Repents and Takes Refuge

45. It was then that King Ajatasatru rose from his seat and bowed his head at the Buddha's feet. He then said to the Buddha, "May the Bhagavan accept my repentance. I have been mad, foolish, delusional, and unaware. My father, King Bimbisara of Magadha had ruled with the Dharma. He wasn't crooked in any way, but I was deluded by the five desires, and truly did harm my father, the king. May the Bhagavan have compassion and accept my repentance."

The Buddha told the king, "You were foolish, benighted, and unaware, and you've only repented that you were deluded by the five desires when you harmed your father, the king. Now, someone who can repent his faults in this noble teaching benefits himself. Because of my compassion for you, I will accept your repentance."

46. King Ajatasatru then bowed at the Bhagavan's feet and then returned to sitting to one side. The Buddha explained the teaching for him with plain instruction, intelligence, and joy. After the king heard the Buddha's instruction, he then said, "Now, I take refuge in the Buddha, take refuge in the teaching, and take refuge in the community. Permit me to become a layman in the right teaching. From this day forward to the end of my life, I won't kill, steal, commit adultery, lie, or drink alcohol. May the Bhagavan and this great assembly clearly accept my request."

47. The Bhagavan then silently agreed. The king then saw that the Buddha had silently accepted his request, so he rose, bowed to the Buddha, circled him three times, and departed.

48. Not long after he departed, the Buddha told the monks, "The King Ajatasatru's transgression has been reduced, for he has uprooted a serious fault. If King Ajatasatru hadn't have killed his father, then he would have attained purification of the Dharma eye while he was sitting here. King Ajatasatru now has repented, and that transgression has been reduced. He has uprooted a serious fault."

49. King Ajatasatru was then on the road and told Prince Jivaka, "Good, good! Now, you've been a great benefit to me! You praised the Tathagata's guidance and edification, and afterward you led me to a visit with the Bhagavan. I attained that my awakening. I'm deeply in your debt. I'll never forget it!"

50. The king returned to his palace and had a variety of delicious foods and drinks prepared. When the sun rose, the time arrived that only the noble ones knew.

51. It was then that the Bhagavan put on his robe, took his bowl, and went to the king's palace with his assembly of 1,250 monks. Seats were prepared, and they sat down. The king served the Buddha and the assembly with his own hands. When the meal was finished, they left with their bowls to wash them. When that was done, he bowed at the Bhagavan's feet and said, "Now, I repent three times. I was mad, foolish, deluded, benighted, and unaware. My father King Bimbisara of Magadha ruled with the Dharma. He wasn't crooked in any way, and I was deluded by the five desires. I really did harm my father, the king. May the Bhagavan have compassion and accept my repentance."

52. The Buddha told the king, "You were foolish, benighted, and unaware. You were deluded by the five desires when you harmed your father, the king. Now someone who can repent in this noble teaching benefits himself. Now, I have compassion for you and accept your repentance."

53. After the king had bowed at the Buddha's feet, he took a small seat and sat in front of the Buddha. The Buddha explained the teaching with plain instruction, intelligence, and joy. After the king heard the Buddha's instruction, he also said to the Buddha, "Now, I take refuge three times in the Buddha, take refuge in the teaching, and take refuge in the community. May I be permitted to become a layman in the right teaching. From this day until the end of my life, I won't kill, steal, commit adultery, lie, or drink alcohol."

54. It was then that the Bhagavan discussed the teaching for King Ajatasatru with plain instruction, intelligence, and joy. Afterward, he rose from his seat and departed.

55. Once King Ajatasatru and Prince Jivaka had heard what the Buddha taught, they rejoiced and approved.

DA 28 [POTTHAPADA]
(DN 9) [T 1.109c23]
(The direct parallel for this sutra is DN 9.)
(The Buddha sets out early one morning to solicit alms and decides to visit a grove where wanderers stayed to visit [Potthapada]. When he arrives, the wanderer tells him about the kinds of philosophical controversies that the wanderers and priests had recently about the nature of perception. The Buddha gives him a practical explanation using meditative attainments. On another occasion, Potthapada and Hasthika visit the Buddha and report the reaction the other wanderers had to the Buddha's teaching. Further discussion leads both wanderers to convert to the Buddha, and Potthapada becomes an arhat.)

1. Thus I have heard: One time, the Buddha was staying at Anathapindada's Park of Sravasti. He was accompanied by a large assembly of 1,250 monks.

2. At sunrise, the Buddha put on his robe and took his bowl into Sravasti to solicit alms. The Bhagavan thought, "It's too early to solicit today's alms. I'd better go see [Potthapada] in the wanderers' grove. I'll solicit alms later when it's the right time." The Bhagavan then went to the wanderers' grove.

3. The wanderer [Potthapada] saw the Buddha coming from a distance and got up to greet him. "Welcome, ascetic Gautama! It's been a long time! What brings you here today? You can prepare a seat in the front."

4. The Bhagavan then prepared his seat, asking [Potthapada], "When you have meetings here, what do you do? What do you discuss?"

5. The wanderer told the Buddha, "Bhagavan, yesterday, there was a meeting of wanderers, ascetics, and priests at the priest's meeting all. They discussed this subject with contradictory theories.

6.\ "Gautama, sometimes a wanderer would say, 'A person's conceptions arise without cause or condition, and they cease without cause or condition.'

7. "Gautama, sometimes a wanderer would say, 'It's because of the soul that conceptions arise, and they cease when it departs.'

8. "Gautama, sometimes a wanderer would say, 'What was said before isn't possible. There's a great demon spirit who possesses great power. It takes conceptions away and brings conceptions with it. When it takes them away, one's conceptions cease. When it brings them, one's conceptions arise.'

9. "A thought occurred to me because of this. I thought, 'The ascetic Gautama surely knows about this subject. Surely, he would know conceptions well and know about the attainment of cessation.'"

10. The Bhagavan then told the wanderer, "Those theories have their defects. They say, 'Conceptions arise without cause or condition and cease without cause or condition. Conceptions come and go. When they arrive, conceptions arise. When they depart, conceptions cease.'

11. "Sometimes, they say, 'The soul is the cause of conceptions arising and the cause for them to cease. Conceptions come and go. When they arrive, conceptions arise. When they depart, conceptions cease.'

12. "Sometimes, they say, 'That's impossible. There's a great demon spirit. It takes conceptions away and brings conceptions with it. When he takes them away, one's conceptions cease. When he brings them, one's conceptions arise.' These statements all have their defects. Why is that? Wanderer, there are causes and conditions for conceptions to arise, and there are causes and conditions for conceptions to cease.

13. "Suppose a Tathagata arises in the world, an Arhat and Completely Awakened One who possesses the ten epithets. Someone leaves home for the path in the Buddha's Dharma … ceases the five hindrances that obscure their mind. They abandon desires and bad and unskillful things. With perception and examination, that seclusion gives rise to joy and happiness, and they enter the first dhyana.

14. "Their prior notions of desire cease, and notions of joy and happiness arise. Wanderer, we know because of this that there are causes and conditions for conceptions to arise, and cause and condition for conceptions to cease.

15. "That person ceases having perception or examination. They have an inner joy and unified mind without perception or examination. That samadhi gives rise to joy and happiness, and they enter the second dhyana.

16. "Wanderer, that conception of the first dhyana ceases, and the conception of the second dhyana arises. We know as a result of this that there are causes and conditions for conceptions to cease and causes and conditions for conceptions to arise.

17. "Abandoning joy, they cultivate equanimity, focus their attention, and unify their mind. They perceive their own happiness to be that which the noble ones seek. Equanimous, mindful, and pure, they enter the third dhyana.

18. "Wanderer, that conception of the second dhyana ceases, and the conception of the third dhyana arises. We know as a result of this that there are causes and conditions for conceptions to cease and causes and conditions for conceptions to arise.

19. "They abandon pain and abandon pleasure. Their previous sorrow and joy having ceased, they're equanimous, mindful, and pure, and they enter the fourth dhyana.

20. "Wanderer, that conception of the third dhyana ceases, and the conception of the fourth dhyana arises. We know as a result of this that there are causes and conditions for conceptions to cease and causes and conditions for conceptions to arise.

21. "They abandon all notions of form, cease [notions of] anger, don't attend to other notions, and they enter the abode of space.

22. "Wanderer, all those notions of form cease, and the conception of the abode of space arises. We know as a result of this that there are causes and conditions for conceptions to cease and causes and conditions for conceptions to arise.

23. "They go entirely beyond the abode of space and enter the abode of consciousness.

24. "Wanderer, that conception of the abode of space ceases, and the conception of the abode of consciousness arises. We know as a result of this that there are causes and conditions for conceptions to cease and causes and conditions for conceptions to arise.

25. "They go entirely beyond the abode of consciousness and enter the abode of nothingness.

26. "Wanderer, that conception of the abode of consciousness ceases, and the conception of the abode of nothingness arises. We know as a result of this that there are causes and conditions for conceptions to cease and causes and conditions for conceptions to arise.

27. "They abandon the abode of nothingness and enter the abode with and without conception.

28. "Wanderer, their conception of the abode of consciousness ceases, and the conception of the abode with and without conception arises. We know as a result of this that there are causes and conditions for conceptions to cease and causes and conditions for conceptions to arise.

29. "They abandon the abode with and without conception and enter the conception that knows the attainment of cessation.

30. "Wanderer, their conception of the abode with and without conception ceases, and they enter the conception that knows the attainment of cessation. We know as a result of this that there are causes and conditions for conceptions to cease and causes and conditions for conceptions to arise.

31. "After they attain this conception, they think, 'Having thoughts is bad, and having no thoughts is good.' When they think that, there's a subtle conception that doesn't cease, and then a cruder conception arises. They again think, 'Now, I'd rather not have any thought activity, for thinking to stop.'

32. "Once they don't have any thought activity and stop thinking, that subtle conception ceases, and the cruder conception doesn't arise. When they don't have thought activity, thinking stops, that subtle conception ceases, and the cruder conception doesn't arise, they then enter the conception that knows the attainment of cessation.

33. "How is it, wanderer? Up until now, have you ever heard the causes and conditions for this sequence of ceasing conceptions?"

34. The wanderer said to the Buddha, "Up until now, I don't believe I've heard the causes and conditions for such a sequence of ceasing conceptions."

35. He also said to the Buddha, "Now, I have this thought: 'Here, there's a conception, then no conception, and perhaps there's a conception again. A person thinks, "Having thoughts is bad, and having no thoughts is good." When they think that, a subtle conception doesn't cease, and a cruder conception arises.

36. "'Again, they think, "Now, I'd better not have any thought activity and stop thinking.' Once they don't have any thought activity and stop thinking, that subtle conception ceases, and the cruder conception doesn't arise. When they don't have thought activity, stop thinking, the subtle conception ceases, and the cruder conception doesn't arise, they then enter conception that knows the attainment of cessation."

37. The Buddha told the wanderer, "Good, good! This is the sequence of ceasing conceptions in the noble teaching."

38. The wanderer again said to the Buddha, "Among these conceptions, which of them is the unsurpassed conception?"

The Buddha told the wanderer, "The conception of the abode of nothingness is unsurpassed."

39. The wanderer also said to the Buddha, "Among conceptions, which is the supremely unsurpassed conception?"

The Buddha said, "The conception that knows the attainment of cessation, which is attained in a sequence from 'having conception' to 'having no conception,' is the supremely unsurpassed conception."

40. The wanderer again asked, "Is it a single conception or many conceptions?"

The Buddha said, "It's a single conception; it isn't many conceptions."

41. The wanderer again asked, "Does the conception arise first and the knowledge afterward, does the knowledge arise first and the conception afterward, or do both the conception and the knowledge arise at the same time?"

The Buddha said, "The conception arises first and the knowledge afterward. That knowledge comes from the conception."

42. The wanderer again asked, "Is that conception the self?"

43. The Buddha told the wanderer, "What type of person is the self in your teaching?"

The wanderer said to the Buddha, "I don't claim that a person is the self. My claim is about the form body of four elements and six senses that's born, nurtured by parents, drinks milk until it's grown, wears clothes and ornaments, and that's an impermanent, eroding thing. I say this person is the self."

44. The Buddha told the wanderer, "You say, 'It's the form body of four elements and six senses that's born, nurtured by parents, drinks milk until it's grown, wears clothes and ornaments, and that's an impermanent, eroding thing. I say this person is the self.' Wanderer, setting aside this self, this is just a concept of a person that arises and a concept of a person that ceases."

The wanderer said, "Then I don't say that that person is the self. I say that the gods of the desire realm are the self."

45. The Buddha said, "Setting aside the gods of the desire realm as self, this is just a concept of a person that arises and a concept of a person that ceases."

The wanderer said, "Then I don't say that that person is the self. I say that the gods of the form realm are the self."

46. The Buddha said, "Setting aside the gods of the form realm as the self, this is just a concept of a person that arises, and a concept of a person that ceases."

The wanderer said, "Then I don't say that that person is the self. I say that the gods of abode of space … abode of consciousness … abode of nothingness … abode with and without conception of the formless realm are the self."

47. The Buddha said, "Setting aside the gods of the abode of space … abode of consciousness … abode of nothingness … abode with and without conception of the formless realm as the self, this is just a concept of a person that arises and a concept of a person that ceases."

The wanderer said to the Buddha, "How is it, Gautama? How can I know the concept of a person that arises and the concept of a person that ceases?"

48. The Buddha told the wanderer, "You want to know the concept of a person that arises and the concept of a person that ceases? It's very difficult! Very difficult! Why is that? You have a different view, different training, different tolerance, different experience, and rely on a different teaching."

49. The wanderer said to the Buddha, "So it is, Gautama. I have a different view, different training, different tolerance, different experience, and rely on a different teaching, so my desire to know the concept of a person that arises and the concept of a person that ceases is very difficult. Very difficult. Why is that?

50. "'Self and the world are permanent. This is true; anything else is false.' 'Self and the world are impermanent. This is true; anything else is false.' 'Self and the world are permanent and impermanent. This is true; anything else is false.' 'Self and the world are neither permanent nor impermanent. This is true; anything else is false.'

51. "'Self and the world have limits. This is true; anything else is false.' 'Self and the world are limitless. This is true; anything else is false.' 'Self and world have limits and are limitless. This is true; anything else is false.' 'Self and the world are neither limited nor limitless. This is true; anything else is false.'

52. "'The soul is the body. This is true; anything else is false.' 'The soul is one thing, and the body is another. This is true; anything else is false.' 'The body and soul are neither different nor not different. This is true; anything else is false.' 'There's no soul and no body. This is true; anything else is false.'

53. "'The Tathagata dies. This is true; anything else is false.' 'The Tathagata doesn't die. This is true; anything else is false.' 'The Tathagata dies and doesn't die. This is true; anything else is false.' 'The Tathagata neither dies nor doesn't die. This is true; anything else is false.'"

54. The Buddha told the wanderer, "I don't explain these views: 'The [self and the] world are permanent … the Tathagata neither dies nor doesn't die.'"

55. The wanderer said to the Buddha, "Gautama, why don't you explain the views: 'Self and the world are permanent … The Tathagata neither dies nor doesn't die'? You don't explain any of them?"

The Buddha said, "These views aren't compatible with meaning or with the teaching, nor with the religious life, dispassion, the unconditioned, cessation, calming, right awakening, the ascetic, or Nirvana. That's why I don't explain them."

56. The wanderer again asked, "What is compatible with meaning and the teaching? What is the beginning of the religious life? What is the unconditioned? What is dispassion? What is cessation? What is calming? What is right awakening? What is the ascetic? What is Nirvana? What do you call explanation?"

The Buddha told the wanderer, "I explain the truth of suffering … formation of suffering … cessation of suffering … the truth of the escape from suffering. Why is that? They are compatible with meaning and with the teaching, and they are the leaders of the religious life, dispassion, the unconditioned, cessation, calming, right awakening, the ascetic, and Nirvana. This is why I explain them."

57. The Bhagavan then taught the Dharma for the wanderer. After he was encouraged by its plain instruction, the Buddha rose from his seat and left.

58. Not long after the Buddha departed, some other wanderers said to the wanderer [Potthapada], "Why were you listening to the teaching of that ascetic Gautama and approving of what he said? Gautama says, "'Self and the world is permanent … the Tathagata neither dies nor doesn't die" are incompatible with meaning … so I don't explain them.' Why did you approve of those words? We cannot have such discussions with the ascetic Gautama."

59. [Potthapada] replied to the wanderers, "The ascetic Gautama taught, "'Self and the world are permanent … the Tathagata neither dies nor doesn't die" aren't compatible with the meaning … so I don't explain them.' I don't approve of his words, either. It's just that the ascetic Gautama lives relying on a teaching, so he speaks using that teaching. The escape uses this teaching, so why would I contradict his wise statement? A subtle Dharma statement like the ascetic Gautama's can't be contradicted."

60. At a different time, the wanderer [Potthapada] visited the Bhagavan with Hastikasirsa Sariputra. After exchanging greetings, he sat to one side. Hastikasirsa Sariputra bowed to the Buddha and sat, too.

61. The wanderer said to the Buddha, "When the Buddha paid us a visit before, the other wanderers said to me not long after you departed, 'Why were you listening to what the ascetic Gautama teaches and approving of what he said? Gautama says, "'Self and the world are permanent … the Tathagata neither dies nor doesn't die' aren't compatible with meaning … so I don't explain them." Why did you approve of those words? We cannot have such discussions with the ascetic Gautama.'

62. "I replied to them, 'The ascetic Gautama does teach, "'Self and the world are permanent … the Tathagata neither dies nor doesn't die' aren't compatible with the meaning … so I don't explain them.' I don't approve of what he said, either. It's just that the ascetic Gautama lives relying on a teaching, so he explains that teaching, and the escape uses this teaching, so why would I contradict his wise statement? A subtle Dharma statement like the ascetic Gautama's can't be contradicted.'"

63. The Buddha told the wanderer, "The wanderers asked, 'Why were you listening to what the ascetic Gautama teaches and approving of what he said?' It's a mistake that they ask that. Why is that? The Dharma that I teach has a certain explanation and an uncertain explanation.

64. "What's called the uncertain explanation? 'Self and the world are permanent … the Tathagata neither dies nor doesn't die.' I say these statements don't have certain explanations. What's the reason for this? They aren't compatible with meaning or the teaching, nor with the beginning of the religious life, dispassion, the unconditioned, cessation, calming, right awakening, the ascetic, or Nirvana. Why, wanderer, would I discuss these statements even though they don't have certain explanations?

65. "What's called the certain explanation? I explain the truth of suffering … formation of suffering … cessation of suffering … truth of the escape from suffering. Why is that? These things are compatible with the teaching and meaning. They are leaders of the religious life, dispassion, the unconditioned, cessation, calming, right awakening, the ascetic, and Nirvana, so I teach these certain explanations.

66. "Wanderer, perhaps an ascetic or priest claims that there's one abode of the world that's the only way to happiness. I would say to him, 'You truly say that there's one abode in the world that's the only way to happiness?'

"He replies to me, 'Yes.'

67. "I again ask him, 'Do you know and see this one abode in the world that's the only way to happiness?'

"He answers me, 'I don't know or see it.'

68. "I again ask him, 'Are the heavens that one abode in the world that's the only way to happiness, which you've never seen?'

"He replies to me, 'I don't know or see it.'

69. "I again ask him, 'Have you ever shared a seat, had a conversation, made effort, or cultivated samadhi with the gods of that one abode in the world?'

"He replies to me, 'No.'

70. "I again ask him, 'Do the gods of that one abode in the world that's the only way to happiness come to tell you, "If you practice honestly, you'll be born in the only way to heavenly happiness, for I practiced honestly and attained birth where they share that happiness"?"

"He answers me, 'No.'

71. "I again ask him, 'Are you able to produce a mind yourself that transforms into another body of the four elements, a body complete with flawless faculties?'

"He answers me, 'I'm not able to do that.'

72. "How is it, wanderer? Would what that ascetic or priest say be honest? Would it be the Dharma?"

The wanderer said to the Buddha, "This is not honest, nor is it an expression of Dharma."

73. The Buddha told the wanderer, "What if there's someone who says, 'I'll have a relationship with a beautiful woman!' He praises attractive women.

74. "Another person asks, 'Do you know that woman? Where is she? To the east, west, south, or north?'

"He answers, 'I don't know.'

75. "Again, he's asked, 'Do you know which country, city, or town where she lives?'

"He answers, 'I don't know.'

76. "Again, he's asked, 'Do you know her parents or what her family name is?'

"He answers, 'I don't know.'

77. "Again, he's asked, 'Do you know if that woman is a warrior woman or a priest, householder, or worker woman?'

"He answers, 'I don't know.'

78. "Again, he's asked, 'Do you know if that woman is tall or short, crude or fine, dark or light, or beautiful or ugly?'

"He answers, 'I don't know.'

79. "How is it, wanderer? Would this person be speaking honestly?"

The wanderer answered, "No."

80. "Wanderer, that ascetic or priest would be likewise. He isn't being honest. Wanderer, it would be like someone who builds a ladder on empty ground. Someone else asks him, 'What's the purpose of building a ladder here?'

"He answers, 'I want to ascend to the meeting hall.'

81. "Again, he's asked, 'Where's this meeting hall?'

"He answers, 'I don't know.'

82. "How is it, wanderer? Wouldn't building that ladder be based on a deception?"

The wanderer answered, "Yes, it's based on a deception."

83. The Buddha said, "Those ascetics and priests are likewise. They are deceptive and not honest."

84. The Buddha addressed [Potthapada], "You say that self is the body of four elements and six senses that's born, nurtured by parents, drinks milk until it's grown, wears clothes and ornaments, and which is an impermanent, eroding thing. You say this is the self, but I ask, 'Is this defilement or purity, and does it attain freedom?'

85. "You might think that defilement cannot cease, that purity cannot arise, and that suffering is eternal, but don't think that. Why is that? The cessation of defilement is possible, and the production of purity is possible. Dwelling in a place of well-being is joyful and delightful. By focusing attention and unifying one's mind, wisdom increases and broadens.

86. "Wanderer, I say that the gods of the desire realm … form realm … abode of space … abode of consciousness … abode of nothingness … the abode with and without conception are defiled. I also say they are pure, and they attain freedom.

87. "You might think that defilement cannot cease, that purity cannot arise, and that suffering is eternal, but don't think that. Why is that? The cessation of defilement is possible, and the production of purity is possible. Dwelling in a place of well-being is joyful and delightful. By focusing attention and unifying one's mind, wisdom increases and broadens.

88. Hastikasirsa Sariputra then said, "Bhagavan, shouldn't it be that when there's the desire realm person's body of four elements and faculties, there's also at the same time the body of the desire realm gods … form realm gods … abode of space … abode of consciousness … abode of nothingness … the abode with and without conception gods?

89. "Bhagavan, shouldn't it be that when there's the body of the desire realm gods, there's also at the same time the desire realm person's body of four elements and faculties, body of the form realm gods, body of the abode of space … abode of consciousness … abode of nothingness … abode with and without conception gods?

90. "Bhagavan, shouldn't it be that when there's the body of the form realm gods, there's also at the same time the desire realm person's body of four elements and faculties, the body of the desire realm gods, body of the abode of space … abode of consciousness … abode of nothingness … abode with and without conception gods?

91. "… when there's the body of the gods of the abode with and without conception, there's also at the same time the desire realm person's body of four elements and faculties, body of the desire realm gods, body of the form realm gods … abode of space … abode of consciousness … abode of nothingness … abode with and without conception?"

92. The Buddha told Hastikasirsa Sariputra, "If there's a person's body of the desire realm of four elements and faculties, then it would correct that there's a person's body of the desire realm of four elements and faculties but not the god body of the desire realm … form realm … abode of space … abode of consciousness … abode of nothingness … abode with and without conception… when there's a god body of the abode with and without conception, then it would be correct that there's a god body of the abode with and without conception but no human body of four elements and faculties of the desire realm or a god body of the desire realm, god body of the form realm … abode of space … abode of consciousness … the abode of nothingness.

93. "Hastikasirsa, it's like cow's milk. Milk changes into cream, cream gives rise to raw butter, raw butter becomes refined butter, refined butter becomes ghee, and ghee is supreme. Hastikasirsa, it should be that when there's milk, it's only called milk and not called cream, butter, and ghee. Thus, when it turns into ghee, it's only called ghee and not called milk, cream, and butter.

94. "Hastikasirsa, this is likewise. If there's the desire realm person's body of four elements and faculties, there wouldn't be the body of the desire realm gods … form realm gods … abode with and without conception gods. Thus, they turn into each other. When the body of the abode with and without conception gods is possessed, then only that body of the abode with and without conception gods is possessed. There's no desire realm person's body of four elements and faculties, nor is there body of the desire realm gods … the form realm gods … abode of nothingness gods.

95. "Hastikasirsa, what do you think? If someone asked you, 'If when you had a body in the past, did you possess a future and present body at the same time? When you'll possess a body in the future, will you possess a past and present body at the same time? When you possess a body in the present, do you possess a past and future body at the same time?' Supposing these questions were put to you, what would your reply be?"

96. Hastikasirsa said, "Supposing that such questions were put to me, I would reply, 'When I possessed a body in the past, there was only that past body and none in the future or present. When I will possess a body in the future, there will only be that future body and none in the past or present. When I possess a body in the present, there's just this present body and none in the past or future.'"

97. "Hastikasirsa, this is likewise. When a desire realm person's body of four elements and faculties is possessed, there's no body of the desire realm gods, form realm gods …

abode with and without conception gods. Thus, in their turn … when the body of the abode with and without conception gods is possessed, there's no desire realm person's body of four elements and faculties, body of the desire realm gods, form realm gods … abode of nothingness gods.

98. "Furthermore, Hastikasirsa, suppose someone asked you, 'Did your existence in the past cease? Will your existence in the future arise? Do you now exist in the present?' Supposing someone puts these questions to you, what will be your answer?"

99. Hastikasirsa said to the Buddha, "If someone asked that, I would answer, 'My existence in the past did cease; that did happen. My existence in the future will arise; it will happen. I exist in the present; it's happening.'"

100. The Buddha said, "Hastikasirsa, this is likewise. When a desire realm person's body of four elements and faculties is possessed, there's no body of the desire realm gods, form realm gods … abode with and without conception gods. Thus it is, in turn … when the body of the abode with and without conception gods is possessed, there's no desire realm person's body of four elements and faculties … desire realm gods … form realm gods … abode of nothingness gods."

101. Hastikasirsa then said to the Buddha, "Bhagavan, I now take refuge in the Buddha, refuge in the Dharma, and refuge in the Sangha. Permit me to be a layman in the correct teaching! From now on, I won't kill, steal, commit adultery, lie, or drink alcohol for the rest of my life."

102. The wanderer [Potthapada] then said to the Buddha, "May I be given the precepts of a renunciate in the Buddha's Dharma?"

The Buddha told the wanderer, "If someone of a different training wants to leave home for the path in my Dharma, they're first observed for four months, and then the assembly gives their assent. After that, they are given the precepts and leave home. While there's this rule, the person is just observed."

103. The wanderer said to the Buddha, "Those of a different training who want to leave home for the path in the Buddha's Dharma, they're first observed for four months, and then the assembly gives their assent. After that, they are given the precepts and leave home. Now, I would be willing to be observed for four years before the assembly assented. After that, I would look forward to receiving the precepts and leaving home."

104. The Buddha told the wanderer, "As I said, while there's this rule, the person is just observed."

105. That wanderer then received the precepts and left home. It wasn't long after than his faith became firm, and he purified cultivation of the religious life. In the present life, he realized for himself, 'Birth and death have been ended, the task has been accomplished, and the religious life has been established. I won't be subject to a later life.' He then became an arhat.

106. When [Potthapada] heard what the Buddha taught, he rejoiced and approved.

DA 29 LOHITYA

(DN 12) [T 1.112c20]

(This sutra is a close parallel with Pali DN 12. Aside from differences in details, there are two major departures from the Pali sutta.)

(A priestly lord named Lohitya hears that the famous mendicant teacher Gautama [Buddha] has stopped nearby. He decides to meet the Buddha, so he invites him to share a meal at his residence. When the Buddha gives him an unrequested Dharma teaching, however, Lothitya is offended and forms a wrong view that religious teachers should not teach others for their own gain.)

1. Thus I have heard: One time, the Buddha was in Kausala touring among the people. With an assembly of 1,250 great monks, he went to the brahmin town of [Salavati] and stopped to rest to the north in a rosewood grove.

2. There was a brahmin then named Lohitya who was staying in a sal grove. His town was bountiful and happy, and the people were flourishing. King Prasenajit had awarded this town to that brahmin as his brahmin due. This brahmin was descended from seven generations of fathers and mothers who were genuine, so he wasn't slandered by others. He chanted and fully understood the other canon of three divisions, and he could entirely discern the various kinds of scriptures. He was also skilled in the principle of the great man's signs, divining fortune and misfortune, and sacrifices and rituals.

3. He heard that the mendicant Gautama of the Sakya clan, who had left the home life [113a] and achieved awakening, was touring among the people of Kausala and had arrived in a rosewood grove. This Gautama had a great reputation that was heard throughout the world. He was a Tathagata, an Arhat, and a Perfectly Awakened One, fully endowed with the ten epithets. Of gods, worldly men, and demons, whether they were assemblies of Mara's gods, mendicants, or brahmins, he had himself realized and taught the Dharma for others. It was good in the beginning, middle, and end, complete in meaning and manner, and the purification of the religious life. Lohitya said: "It would be fitting to go and have an audience with such a true man as this. I would like to go and pay him a visit now."

4. The brahmin then left his village and went to visit the Bhagavan in the rosewood grove. After making polite inquiries, he sat to one side. The Buddha taught the Dharma for him, and the instruction was profitable and elating. After that brahmin heard the Dharma, he said to the Buddha, "May the Bhagavan and the great assembly clearly accept my invitation."

The Bhagavan then silently accepted his invitation.

5. The brahmin saw that the Buddha was silent. Once he knew that he had the Buddha's assent, he rose from his seat, circled the Buddha, and left. He wasn't far away from the Buddha when a bad view occurred to him: "Mendicants and brahmins often know the good Dharma, and many are their proofs, but they shouldn't teach it to other people. They simply know it for themselves and desist from discussing it with others. It's like a man who builds a new prison after he destroys an old prison. It's a greedy, bad, and unwholesome thing!"

6. After the brahmin returned to the sal grove, he then prepared a variety of delicious food and drink that night. When he arrived, the brahmin said to his barber, "Remember my words and go to the rosewood grove. Tell the mendicant Gautama, 'Once morning has arrived, you should know that it's time.'"

7. His barber accepted and performed his instructions. He went to the Buddha and bowed at the Bhagavan's feet. "Once the day has come, you should know that it's time."

8. The Bhagavan then put on his robe, picked up his bowl, and when to the sal grove with his 1,250 disciples.

9. The barber followed the Bhagavan on his right side, saluted him with his palms together, and told the Buddha, "That brahmin Lohitya had this evil view occur to him not far from the Buddha when he left: 'Mendicants and brahmins often know the good Dharma, and many are their proofs, but they shouldn't teach it to other people. They simply know it for themselves and desist from discussing it with others. It's like a man who builds a new prison after he destroys an old prison. It's a greedy, bad, and unwholesome thing!' May the Bhagavan remove his bad view."

The Buddha told the barber, "This is only a minor subject that's easily taught."

10. When the Bhagavan arrived at the brahmin's residence, he prepared a seat, and sat down. The brahmin then personally served them various delicious foods, providing it to the Buddha and the assembly. When they had finished the meal, left with their bowls, and were done washing them, [113b] they gave a small sofa to the Buddha to sit in front.

11. The Buddha then told Lohitya, "Yesterday, you weren't far away after you left when a bad view occurred to you: 'Mendicants and brahmins often know the good Dharma, and many are their proofs, but they shouldn't teach it to other people. They simply know it for themselves and desist from discussing it with others. It's like a man who builds a new prison after he destroys an old prison. It's a greedy, bad, and unwholesome thing!' Is that statement true?"

Lohitya said, "Yes, it's true that this happened."

12. The Buddha told Lohitya, "Don't let this bad view arise again. What is the reason for that? There are three teachers in the world whom it's possible admonish yourself. Who are the three? One shaves off his hair, wears the three Dharma robes, and leaves home to cultivate the path. Here in the present, he could be rid of the afflictions, and he could develop and attain the state of a superior man. Here in the present, however, he isn't rid of the afflictions, and he doesn't attain the state of a superior man. His work is incomplete, yet he teaches the Dharma for his disciples. His disciples don't respect or serve him. As a result, they again support him and reside with him as equals.

13. "Lohitya, those disciples say to their teacher, 'Teacher, now you've shaven off your hair, put on the three Dharma robes, and left home to cultivate the path. Here in the present, you could be rid of the myriad afflictions and attain the supreme state of a superior man. Here in the present, however, you aren't able to be rid of the afflictions nor attain the supreme state of a superior man. Your work is incomplete, yet you teach the Dharma for disciples, which causes your disciples to no longer respect, serve, or make offerings. They just share your support and reside as equals.'"

14. The Buddha continued, "Lohitya, like a man who builds a new prison after destroying an old prison, this is called a greedy, degenerate thing. This is one teacher whom it's possible to admonish yourself. It's a precept of nobles, a precept of the discipline, a precept of propriety, and a precept of the time.

15. "The second teacher shaves off his hair, wears the three Dharma robes, and leaves home to cultivate the path. Here in the present, he could be rid of the myriad afflictions, and he could develop and attain the state of a superior man. Here in the present, however, he isn't able to be rid of the myriad afflictions, even though he again does attain a little or a lot of the supreme state of a superior man. His work is incomplete, yet he teaches the Dharma for his disciples. His disciples don't respect or serve him. As a result, they again support him and reside with him as equals.

16. "Lohitya, those disciples say to the teacher, 'Teacher, now you've shaven off your hair, put on the three Dharma robes, and left home to cultivate the path. Here in the present, you could be rid of the myriad afflictions and attain the state of a superior man. Here in the present, however, you aren't able to be rid of the myriad afflictions, although you've attained a little or a lot of the state of a superior man. Your own benefit is incomplete, yet you teach the Dharma for disciples, which causes your disciples to no longer respect, serve, or make offerings. They just share your support and reside as equals.'"

17. The Buddha [113c] continued, "Lohitya, like a man who rubs another's back with his hand after walking, this is called a greedy, degenerate thing. This is the second teacher whom it's possible to admonish yourself. It's a precept of nobles, a precept of the discipline, a precept of propriety, and a precept of the time.

18. He also told Lohitya, "A third teacher shaves off his hair, wears the three Dharma robes, and leaves home to cultivate the path. Here in the present, he could be rid of the afflictions, and he could develop and attain the state of a superior man. Here in the present, however, he isn't able to be rid of the myriad afflictions, even though he again does attain a little or a lot of the state of a superior man. His own benefit is incomplete, yet he teaches the Dharma for his disciples. His disciples don't respect or serve him, supporting him and residing as his equals.

19. "Lohitya, those disciples say to the teacher, 'Teacher, now you've shaven off your hair, put on the three Dharma robes, and left home to cultivate the path. Here in the present, you could be rid of the myriad afflictions and attain a little or a lot of the state of a superior man. Here in the present, however, you aren't able to be rid of the myriad afflictions, although you've attained a little or a lot of the state of a superior man. Your own benefit is incomplete, yet you teach the Dharma for disciples. Your disciples respect and serve you, sharing support and residing as equals.'"

20. The Buddha said, "Lohitya, like a man who plows another's field after abandoning his own crop, this is a greedy, degenerate teaching. This is the third teacher whom it's possible to admonish yourself. It's a precept of nobles, a precept of the discipline, a precept of propriety, and a precept of the time.

21. "Lohitya, there's one Bhagavan who doesn't reside in the mundane and cannot be shaken. Who is the one? If a Tathagata, an Arhat, and a Completely Awakened One appears in the world up to attains three knowledges, eliminates ignorance, gives rise to the radiance of wisdom, leaves behind darkness, and produces the great light of Dharma, then that's known as the realization of the knowledge that the contaminants are ended. What is the reason for that? These are attainments that come from diligence, focus, mindfulness, unforgetfulness, and happy solitude. Lohitya, this is the first Bhagavan who doesn't reside in the mundane and cannot be shaken.

22. "Lohitya, there are four fruits of the mendicant. What are the four? They are the fruit of stream entry, fruit of one more return, fruit of no return, and the fruit of the arhat. How is it, Lohitya? Someone who hears the teaching should attain these four fruits of a mendicant. Suppose someone prohibits it by saying, 'Don't teach the Dharma.' If those words are put into action, would that person hear the Dharma and attain these fruits by doing so?"

"He won't attain them."

23. "If he doesn't attain these fruits, does he attain birth in heaven?"

"He won't attain it."

24. "To prohibit others from teaching Dharma causes them to not attain its fruits and not attain birth in heaven. Is that a wholesome or an unwholesome thought?"

"Unwholesome."

25. "Is someone with unwholesome thoughts born in good destinies, or do they fall into bad destinies?"

"He's born to a bad [114a] destiny."

26. "Lohitya, he's like a man who says to King Prasenajit, 'The country belongs to the king. The wealth within it is entirely for the king's own use. Don't share it with anyone else!' How is it, Lohitya? If he put that person's words into action, would the king stop sharing it with other people?"

"He would stop."

27. "To stop sharing with others: Is that a wholesome thought or an unwholesome thought?"

"An unwholesome thought."

28. "Is someone with unwholesome thoughts born in good destinies, or do they fall into bad destinies?"

"He'll fall to a bad destiny."

29. "Lohitya, he's likewise, someone who hears the Dharma and would attain four fruits of a mendicant. Suppose someone prohibits it by saying, 'Don't teach the Dharma.' If those words are put into action, would that person hear the Dharma and attain these fruits?"

"He won't attain them."

30. "If he doesn't attain these fruits, does he attain birth in heaven?"

"He won't attain it."

31. "To prohibit others from teaching Dharma causes them to not attain its fruits and not attain birth in heaven. Is that a wholesome or an unwholesome thought?"

"Unwholesome."

32. "Is someone with unwholesome thoughts born in good destinies, or do they fall into bad destinies?"

"He'll fall to a bad destiny."

33. "Lohitya, if someone were to say to you, 'There's wealth in that fiefdom of *Salavati. Lohitya, it's for your own use; don't share it with others. Possessions are for your own use. What purpose is there to giving them to others?' How would it be, Lohitya? If you put his words into action, would you stop sharing with anyone else?"

"I would stop."

34. "Is teaching people to stop sharing with others a wholesome or an unwholesome thought?"

"Unwholesome."

35. "Is someone with unwholesome thoughts born in good destinies, or do they fall into bad destinies?"

"He'll fall to a bad destiny."

36. "Lohitya, it's likewise for someone who hears the Dharma who would attain the four fruits of a mendicant. Suppose someone says, 'Don't teach the Dharma.' If those words are put into action, would that person hear the Dharma and attain these fruits?"

"He wouldn't attain them."

37. "If he doesn't gain these fruits, does he attain birth in heaven?"

"He won't attain it."

38. "To prohibit others from teaching Dharma causes them to not attain its fruits and not attain birth in heaven. Is that a wholesome or an unwholesome thought?"

"Unwholesome."

39. "Is someone with unwholesome thoughts born in good destinies, or do they fall into bad destinies?"

"He'll fall to a bad destiny."

40. The brahmin Lohitya then said to the Buddha, "I take refuge in the Buddha, refuge in the Dharma, and refuge in the Samgha. Please permit me to be a layman in the correct teaching. From this day forward, I will not kill, steal, commit sexual misconduct, lie, or drink alcohol for all my life."

41. After the Buddha had taught the Dharma, the brahmin Lohitya heard what the Buddha had said, rejoiced, [114b] and approved.

DA 30 DESCRIPTION OF THE WORLD

[T 1.114b8]

(This sutra is an early version of a cosmological text very similar to one that was incorporated into the Sarvastivada Abhidharma and translated to Tibetan and Pali later in history. It circulated as a sutra before this, judging by the four Chinese translations that still exist (including this one). It collects Buddhist mythology about geography, sentient beings, heaven and hell, catastrophes, and the cycle of creation and destruction.

This sutra does not have a direct parallel with any Pali sutta, but various passages and stories that it collects are found in Pali suttas and paracanonical sources. The closest parallels to the entire text are the Lokaprajnapti of the Sarvastivada Abhidharma (which exists in Tibetan) and the Pali version of the same called the Lokapannatti.

The author(s) of this text envisioned the Earth as a flat plane, and the world as a circle bounded by a ring of mountains with Mount Sumeru at its centre. This was not a universal belief in the ancient world, however. Ancient Greeks believed the world was spherical as early as 500 BC because they believed a sphere was the perfect shape. Later Greeks noticed clues that the Earth is round such as the rounded shadow cast on the moon during eclipses and that different constellations are visible from different latitudes. Eratosthenes appears to have been the first person to accurately calculate the Earth's circumference in 240 BC.

In the following text is mentioned a measure unit called yojana. A yojana is an ancient Indian unit of distance similar to a league. Like most ancient units of measurement, there was no exact value. Depending on its local definition, one yojana usually ranged from 7 to 9 miles (11.25 to 14.5 km), or about twice the distance of a league. Thus, 168,000 yojanas would be approximately 1,344,000 miles (2,162,958 km).) Below is a list of its chapters.

CHAPTER 1: THE CONTINENT OF JAMBUDVIPA

Introduction

1. Thus I have heard: One time, the Buddha was staying in the Karirika Hut in Anathapindada's Park at Jeta's Grove of Sravasti. He was accompanied by a large assembly of 1,250 monks.

2. After their meal, a group of monks gathered up in the meeting hall. They had this discussion: "Gentlemen, it's amazing! What causes the destruction of heaven and earth? What causes their formation? What are the countries where sentient beings live?"

3. The Bhagavan was in a quiet place at the time and overheard them clearly with his heavenly ear. He heard those monks saying this, having gathering up in the meeting hall after their meal. The Bhagavan then emerged from his quiet hut, went to the meeting hall, and sat down. Knowing it, he purposefully questioned them. He asked the monks, "You were having a discussion earlier. What was it that you were discussing?"

4. The monks said to the Buddha, "We gathered here in the meeting hall after our meal and discussed this: 'Gentlemen, it's amazing! What causes the destruction of heaven and earth? What causes their formation? What countries do sentient beings live in?' This was what we were discussing after gathering here in the hall."

5. The Buddha told the monks, "Good, good! Everyone who's left home should practice two things: The first is the noble silence, and the second is [the noble] discussion of the Dharma. When all of you gather in a meeting hall, you should practice noble silence or [noble] discussion of the Dharma. Monks, would you like to hear the Tathagata describe the formation and destruction of heaven and earth and the cities and countries where sentient beings live?" The monks said to the Buddha, "Indeed, Bhagavan, now would be a good time! We'd be glad to hear it. Once the Bhagavan has explained this, we'll remember it!"

6. The Buddha said, "Monks, listen closely! Listen closely and consider it well! I will explain it for you."

The Buddha Realm

7. The Buddha told the monks, "Just as one sun and moon orbit the four continents and shine their light on them, there are a thousand such worlds. In a thousand worlds, there are a thousand suns and moons, a thousand Sumeru mountain kings, four thousand continents, four thousand great continents, four thousand oceans, four thousand great oceans, four thousand nagas, four thousand great nagas, four thousand garudas, four thousand great garudas, four thousand unpleasant destinies, four thousand great unpleasant destinies, four thousand kings, four thousand great kings, seven thousand great trees, eight thousand great hells, ten thousand great mountains, a thousand King Yamas, a thousand four god kings, a thousand Trayastrimsa Heavens, a thousand Yama Heavens, a thousand Tusita Heavens, a thousand Nirmanarati Heavens, a thousand Paranirmitavasavartin Heavens, and a thousand Brahma Heavens. This is a small thousand worlds.

8. "Like one small thousand worlds, a thousand of those small thousand worlds are a medium thousand worlds. Like one medium thousand worlds, a thousand of those medium thousand worlds are a triple-thousand great thousand worlds. Such worlds revolve around as they form and are destroyed. The sentient beings that inhabit them are called a single Buddha realm."

The World

9. The Buddha told the monks, "Now, this Earth is 168,000 yojanas deep, and its bounds are endless [in the four directions]. Where the earth stops, there's water. The water is 3,030 yojanas deep, and its bounds are endless. Where the water stops, there's air. The air is 6,040 yojanas deep, and its bounds are endless.

10. "Monks, the ocean's water is 84,000 yojanas deep, and its bounds are endless. Sumeru the mountain king is 84,000 yojanas in the water, and it rises to a height of 84,000 yojanas above the ocean. Below, it's roots connect it to the earth with many hard points. That mountain goes straight up without any bends. All sorts of trees grow on it, and the trees produce many fragrances. The fragrances pervade the mountain's forests. Many noble people, great spirits, and marvelous gods make their homes there. The foundation under that mountain is entirely gold sand. Four crags emerge from that mountain's four sides that are 700 yojanas high with a mixture of colors throughout and made of the seven treasures. Those four crags are slanted, leaning precariously over the ocean.

11. "Sumeru the mountain king has stairways made of the seven treasures. At the bottom, the stairways are sixty yojanas wide. On both sides, the path is bordered by a seven walls, seven balustrades, seven nettings, and seven rows of trees.

12. "The gold walls have silver gates, the silver walls have gold gates, the crystal walls have beryl gates, the beryl walls have crystal gates, the ruby walls have emerald gates, the emerald walls have ruby gates, and the coral walls have gates made of many treasures.

13. "The balustrades had gold balusters with silver rails, silver balusters with gold rails, crystal balusters with beryl rails, beryl balusters with crystal rails, ruby balusters with emerald rails, emerald balusters with ruby rails, and coral balusters with rails made of many treasures.

14. "Above those balustrades, there are precious nettings. The gold netting is hung with silver bells, the silver netting is hung with gold bells, the beryl netting is hung with crystal bells, the crystal netting is hung with beryl bells, the ruby netting is hung with emerald bells, the emerald netting is hung with ruby bells, and the coral netting is hung with bells made of many treasures.

15. "The gold trees have gold roots and limbs and silver leaves, flowers, and fruit. The silver trees have silver roots and limbs and gold leaves, flowers, and fruit. The crystal trees have crystal roots and limbs and beryl leaves, flowers[, and fruit]. The beryl trees have beryl roots and limbs and crystal leaves, flowers[, and fruit]. The ruby trees have ruby roots and limbs and emerald leaves, flowers[, and fruit]. The emerald trees have emerald roots and limbs and ruby leaves, flowers[, and fruit]. The coral trees have coral roots and limbs and leaves, flowers[, and fruit] made of many treasures.

16. "Each of the seven walls has four gates. The gates have balustrades, and towers and terraces are above the seven walls. They're surrounded by scenic parks and lakes where myriad precious flowers and plants grow. The rows of treasure trees are full with flowers and fruit, and they produce fragrances that blow in the four directions to the delight of passersby. Ducks, geese, cakras, and other rare kinds of birds in countless thousands sing peacefully to each other.

17. "Furthermore, halfway up Sumeru the mountain king, the stairways are forty yojanas wide. On both sides, the path is bordered by seven walls, seven balustrades, seven nettings, and seven rows of trees … Countless birds of many kinds sing peacefully to each other as they do at the lower stairways.

18. "At the top of Sumeru the mountain king, the stairways are twenty yojanas wide. On both sides, the path is bordered by seven walls, seven balustrades, seven nettings, and seven rows of trees … Countless birds of many kinds sing peacefully to each other as they do at the middle stairways."

19. The Buddha told the monks, "There are yaksa spirits that live on the lower stairway called Karotapani. The yaksa spirits that live on the middle stairway are called Maladhara. The yaksa spirits that live on the upper stairway are called Sadamada.

The Heavens

20. "The four crags rise to a height of 42,000 yojanas, and the four great god kings live on them in their palaces. Their palaces have seven fortress walls, seven balustrades, seven nettings, and seven rows of trees with precious bells … Countless birds of many kinds sing peacefully to each other as before.

21. "The palace of the Trayastrimsa gods is at the summit of Mount Sumeru. It has seven fortress walls made of treasures, seven balustrades, seven nettings, and seven rows of trees … Countless birds of many kinds sing peacefully to each other as before.

22. "The same number of yojanas up from the Trayastrimsa Heaven is the palace of the Yama gods. The same number of yojanas beyond the Yama Heaven palace is the palace of the Tusita gods. The same number of yojanas beyond the Tusita Heaven palace is the palace of the Nirmanarati gods. The same number of yojanas beyond the Nirmanarati Heaven palace is the palace of the Paranirmitavasavartin gods. The same number of yojanas beyond the Paranirmitavasavartin Heaven palace is the palace of the Brahmakayika gods.

23. "The god Mara's palace is halfway between the Paranirmitavasavartin Heaven and the Brahmakayika Heaven. It's 6,000 yojanas in diameter and has seven fortress walls made of treasures, seven balustrades, seven nettings, and seven rows of trees … Countless birds of many kinds sing peacefully to each other as before.

24. "The same number of yojanas beyond the Brahmakayika Heaven palace is the palace of the Abhasvara gods. The same number of yojanas beyond the Abhasvara Heaven is the palace of the Subhakrtsna gods. The same number of yojanas beyond the Subhakrtsna Heaven palace is the palace of the Brhatphala gods. The same number of yojanas beyond the Brhatphala Heaven [palace] is the palace of the Asamjnika gods. The same number of yojanas beyond the Asamjnika Heaven [palace] is the palace of the Avrha gods. The same number of yojanas beyond the Avrha Heaven [palace] is the palace of the Atapa gods. The same number of yojanas beyond the Atapa Heaven [palace] is the palace of the Sudarsana gods. The same number of yojanas beyond the Sudarsana Heaven [palace] is the palace of the Mahasudarsana gods. The same distance beyond the Mahasudarsana Heaven [palace] is the palace of the Akanistha gods.

25. "Above the Akanistha Heaven are the gods who cognize the abode of space … the gods who cognize the abode of consciousness … the gods who cognize the abode of nothingness … the gods who cognize the abode with and without conception.

26. "These are called the boundaries of sentient beings and the worlds of sentient beings where they all are born, grow old, fall ill, and die. They acquire these aggregates and these existences, and none go beyond that."

The Four Continents

27. The Buddha told the monks, "North of Mount Sumeru, there is a continent named Uttarakuru. That land is perfectly square and 10,000 yojanas across. The people there have square faces that resemble the shape of their land.

28. "East of Mount Sumeru, there's a continent named Purvavideha. That land is perfectly round and 9,000 yojanas across. The people there have round faces that resemble the shape of their land.

29. "West of Mount Sumeru, there's a continent named Godaniya. That land is the shape of a half moon and 8,000 yojanas across. The people there have faces that likewise resemble the shape of that land.

30. "South of Mount Sumeru, there's a continent named Jambudvipa. That land is narrow in the south and wide in the north, and it's 7,000 yojanas across. The people there have faces that likewise resemble the shape of that land.

31. "The north side of Mount Sumeru is made of heavenly gold that shines northward. The east side of Mount Sumeru is made of heavenly silver that shines eastward. The west side of Mount Sumeru is made of heavenly crystal that shines westward. The south side of Mount Sumeru is made of heavenly beryl that shines southward.

The Great Trees of the World

32. "Uttarakuru has a great tree king named Amra. It's seven yojanas around and a hundred yojanas tall. It's limbs and leaves spread out for fifty yojanas in each direction.

33. "Purvavideha has a great tree king named Kadamba. It's seven yojanas around and a hundred yojanas tall. It's limbs and leaves spread out for fifty yojanas in each direction.

34. "Godaniya has a great tree king named Tinduka. It's seven yojanas around and a hundred yojanas tall. It's limbs and leaves spread out for fifty yojanas in each direction. That tree also has a banner of a stone bull under it that's one yojana tall.

35. "Jambudvipa has a great tree king named Jambu. it's seven yojanas around and a hundred yojanas tall. It's limbs and leaves spread out for fifty yojanas in each direction.

36. "The king of the garuda birds and the king of the nagas have a tree named Kutasalmali. It's seven yojanas around and a hundred yojanas tall. It's limbs and leaves spread out for fifty yojanas in each direction.

37. "The king of the asuras has a tree named Good Day. It's seven yojanas around and a hundred yojanas tall. It's limbs and leaves spread out for fifty yojanas in each direction.

38. "The Trayastrimsa Heaven has a tree named Parijata. It's seven yojanas around and a hundred yojanas tall. It's limbs and leaves spread out for fifty yojanas in each direction.

Lesser Mountains around Sumeru

39. "Mount Sumeru is bordered by a mountain named Khadiraka. It's 42,000 yojanas tall and 42,000 yojanas across. Its extent is spacious with a mixture of colors throughout, and it's made of the seven treasures.

40. "That mountain sits 84,000 yojanas away from Mount Sumeru, and utpala flowers, padma flowers, kumuda flowers, pundarika flowers, reeds, pine trees, and bamboo groves grow between them. They produce all sorts of fragrances that fill the area.

41. "Not far beyond Mount Khadiraka, there's a mountain named Isadara. It's 21,000 yojanas tall and 21,000 yojanas across. Its extent is spacious with a mixture of colors throughout, and it's made of the seven treasures.

42. "That mountain sits 42,000 yojanas away from Mount Khadiraka, and utpala flowers, padma flowers, kumuda flowers, pundarika flowers, reeds, pine trees, and bamboo groves grow between them. They produce all sorts of fragrances that fill the area.

43. "Not far beyond Mount Isadara, there's a mountain named Yugandhara. It's 12,000 yojanas tall and 12,000 yojanas across. Its extent is spacious with a mixture of colors throughout, and it's made of the seven treasures.

44. "That mountain sits 21,000 yojanas away from Mount Isadara, and utpala flowers, padma flowers, kumuda flowers, pundarika flowers, reeds, pine trees, and bamboo groves grow between them. They produce all sorts of fragrances that fill the area.

45. "Not far beyond Mount Yugandhara, there's a mountain named Sudarsana. It's 6,000 yojanas tall and 6,000 yojanas across. Its extent is spacious with a mixture of colors throughout, and it's made of the seven treasures.

46. "That mountain sits 12,000 yojanas away from Mount Yugandhara, and utpala flowers, padma flowers, kumuda flowers, pundarika flowers, reeds, pine trees, and bamboo groves grow between them. They produce all sorts of fragrances that fill the area.

47. "Not far beyond Mount Sudarsana, there's a mountain named Asvakarna. It's 3,000 yojanas tall and 3,000 yojanas across. Its extent is spacious with a mixture of colors throughout, and it's made of the seven treasures.

48. "That mountain sits 6,000 yojanas away from Mount Sudarsana, and utpala flowers, padma flowers, kumuda flowers, pundarika flowers, reeds, pine trees, and bamboo groves grow between them. They produce all sorts of fragrances that fill the area.

49. "Not far beyond Mount Asvakarna, there's a mountain named Nimindhara. It's 1,200 yojanas tall and 1,200 yojanas across. Its extent is spacious with a mixture of colors throughout, and it's made of the seven treasures.

50. "That mountain sits 3,000 yojanas away from Mount Asvakarna, and utpala flowers, padma flowers, kumuda flowers, pundarika flowers, reeds, pine trees, and bamboo groves grow between them. They produce all sorts of fragrances that fill the area.

51. "Not far beyond Mount Nimindhara, there's a mountain named Vinitaka. It's 600 yojanas tall and 600 yojanas across. Its extent is spacious with a mixture of colors throughout, and it's made of the seven treasures.

52. "That mountain sits 1,200 yojanas away from Mount Nimindhara, and utpala flowers, padma flowers, kumuda flowers, pundarika flowers, reeds, pine trees, and bamboo groves grow between them. They produce all sorts of fragrances that fill the area.

53. "Not far beyond Mount Vinitaka, there's a mountain named Cakravada. It's 300 yojanas tall and 300 yojanas across. Its extent is spacious with a mixture of colors throughout, and it's made of the seven treasures.

54. "That mountain sits 600 yojanas away from Mount Vinitaka, and utpala flowers, padma flowers, kumuda flowers, pundarika flowers, reeds, pine trees, and bamboo groves grow between them. They produce all sorts of fragrances that fill the area.

Beyond the Lesser Mountains

55. "Not far beyond Mount Cakravada is a great ocean. On the north shore of that ocean is the great tree king named Jambu that's seven yojanas around and a hundred yojanas tall. It's limbs and leaves spread out for fifty yojanas in each direction. It's bordered by an open area.

56. "There's also a forest named Amra that's fifty yojanas across.

There's another forest named Campa that's fifty yojanas across.

There's another forest named Sala that's fifty yojanas across.

There's another forest named Tala that's fifty yojanas across.

There's another forest named Iksu that's fifty yojanas across.

There's another forest named Sala that's fifty yojanas across.

There's another forest named *Salana that's fifty yojanas across.

There's another forest named Uruvilva (?) that's fifty yojanas across.

There's another forest named Great Uruvilva (?) that's fifty yojanas across.

There's another forest named Atimuktaka that's fifty yojanas across.

There's another forest named Campaka that's fifty yojanas across.

There's another forest named Patala that's fifty yojanas across.

There's another forest named Sumana that's fifty yojanas across.

There's another forest named Varsika that's fifty yojanas across.

There's another forest named *Talari (?) that's fifty yojanas across.

There's another forest named *Kasa that's fifty yojanas across.

There's another forest named Grape that's fifty yojanas across.

57. "Beyond that is an open region. In that open region, there's an [utpala] flower lake that's fifty yojanas across. There's also a padma flower lake, a kumuda flower lake, and a pundarika flower lake. They're filled with venomous snakes, and each is fifty yojanas across.

58. "Beyond that open region, there's an ocean in an open area named *Ujanna (?). There's a noble wheel-turning king's road beneath this sea that's twelve yojanas wide. On both sides, the road is bordered by seven walls, seven balustrades, seven nettings, and seven rows of trees that are decorated all around and made the seven treasures. When a noble wheel-turning king arises in the land of Jambudvipa, that sea naturally recedes to expose the road just above its surface.

59. "Not far beyond that sea, there's a mountain named *Uja (?). That mountain is majestic. Trees grow abundantly there, flowers and fruit are bountiful, and their many fragrances are sweet-smelling. There's also a diversity of animals with no species that isn't present.

60. "Not far beyond Mount *Uja (?) is a mountain named Golden Wall. There are 80,000 caves inside of it, and 80,000 elephant kings stay in those caves. Their bodies are all white, their heads are mottled, and they have six tusks in their mouths and gold between their teeth.

61. "Beyond that Mount Golden Wall, there's a mountain named Himavat. It's five hundred yojanas across and five hundred yojanas high. The ocean is to its east and west, and there are treasure mountains twelve yojanas tall between it and Mount Himavat.

Lake Anavatapta

62. "Crags rises up a hundred yojanas from Mount Himavat. Lake Anavatapta is at the summit of that mountain. It's fifty yojanas across with refreshing, clear, and unpolluted water. It has a stone wall made of seven treasures, seven balustrades, seven nettings, and seven rows of trees with all sorts of colors that are made of the seven treasures.

63. "Those balustrades have gold balusters with silver rails, silver balusters with gold rails, beryl balusters with crystal rails, crystal balusters with beryl rails, ruby balusters with emerald rails, emerald balusters with ruby rails, and coral balusters with rails made of many treasures.

64. "The gold netting has silver bells, the silver netting has gold bells, the beryl netting has crystal bells, the crystal netting has beryl bells, [the ruby netting has emerald bells, the emerald netting has ruby bells,] and the coral netting has bells made of many treasures.

65. "The gold tala trees have gold roots and limbs and silver leaves, [flowers,] and fruit. The silver tala trees have silver roots and limbs and gold leaves, [flowers,] and fruit. [The beryl trees have beryl roots and limbs and crystal leaves, flowers, and fruit.] The crystal trees have crystal roots and limbs and beryl [leaves,] flowers, and fruit. The ruby trees have ruby roots and limbs and emerald leaves, flowers, and fruit. [The emerald trees have emerald roots and limbs, and ruby leaves, flowers, and fruit.] The coral trees have coral roots and limbs, and [leaves,] flowers, and fruit made of many treasures.

66. "On Lake Anavatapta's shores, there are scenic parks and pools with heaps of myriad flowers and all sorts of trees with abundant leaves, flowers, and fruit. The sweet smell of their fragrances blow in all directions. All kinds of birds peacefully sing to each other. The bottom of Lake Anavatapta is full of gold sand, and it has stairs with handrails on four sides. There are gold handrails with silver steps, silver handrails with gold steps, beryl handrails with crystal steps, crystal handrails with beryl steps, ruby handrails with emerald steps, emerald handrails with ruby steps, and coral handrails with steps made of many treasures. A balustrade surrounds the lake, and the four kinds of flowers grow there in a mixture of blues, yellows, reds, and whites. The flowers are like cartwheels, and their roots are like wheel hubs. The roots of those flowers produce sap that's white as milk and tastes sweet as honey.

67. "The Ganga River flows from a cow's mouth, going east from Lake Anavatapta. Five hundred rivers join it as it flows to the eastern ocean. The Sindhu River flows from a lion's mouth, going south from Lake Anavatapta. Five hundred rivers join it as it flows to the southern ocean. The Vaksu River flows from a horse's mouth, going west from Lake Anavatapta. Five hundred rivers join it as it flows to the western ocean. The Sita River flows from an elephant's mouth, going north from Lake Anavatapta. Five hundred rivers join it as it flows to the northern ocean.

68. "In the palace of Anavatapta, there is a hall with five pillars where the Naga King Anavatapta always lives."

The Meaning of "Anavatapta"

69. The Buddha said, "Why is it called Anavatapta? What's the meaning of 'Anavatapta'? Here in Jambudvipa, there's a naga king who stopped having three troubles. Only the naga Anavatapta has none of these three troubles. What are the three?

70. "First, all the nagas throughout Jambudvipa suffer from hot winds and hot sand that cling to their bodies and burn their skin and flesh. It even burns their bones and marrow, causing them misery. Only the naga Anavatapta doesn't have this trouble.

71. "Second, all the naga palaces throughout Jambudvipa have fierce winds that blow through them. They lose their treasure-decorated clothes, and their naga bodies are left exposed, which causes them misery. Only the Naga King Anavatapta doesn't have this trouble.

72. "Third, when all the naga kings throughout Jambudvipa entertain themselves in their respective palaces, great garuda birds take the opportunity to snatch them or their newly born, for they like to eat nagas. The nagas are afraid of them and always feel distressed about this. Only the naga Anavatapta doesn't have this trouble.

73. If the garuda birds decide to go there, their lives end. Therefore, it's called Anavatapta (Anavatapta in Chinese means 'No Distress')."

74. The Buddha told the monks, "On the right side of Mount Himavat, there's a city named Vaisali. That city has seven black mountains to its north. North of those seven black mountains, there's a fragrance mountain. There are always sounds of music and singing at that mountain. It has two caves: One is called Painted and the second is called Skillfully Painted. They're made of seven heavenly treasures that are soft and pleasant smelling like heavenly cloth. The Gandharva King Sarasvati lives there with 500 gandharvas.

The Elephant King Susamsthita

75. "North of the caves Painted and Skillfully Painted is a sal tree king named Susamsthita. It's surrounded on four sides by 8,000 other tree kings. An elephant king lives under the tree king Susamsthita that's also named Susamsthita. His body is all white, he stands flush in seven places, and he has the ability to fly. His head is red and his hair is multicolored. His six tusks are delicate, and there's gold between them. He's surrounded by 8,000 elephants that follow him. Those 8,000 elephants live under the 8,000 other tree kings in the same way.

76. "North of that tree king Susamsthita is a large lake named Mandakini. It's fifty yojanas across, surrounded all around by 8,000 ponds, and its water is refreshing and unpolluted. It's surrounded by an embankment made of bricks of the seven treasures, seven balustrades, seven nettings, and seven rows of trees that are made of the seven treasures.

77. "[The balustrades] have gold balusters with silver rails, silver balusters with gold rails, crystal balusters with beryl rails, beryl balusters with crystal rails, ruby balusters with emerald rails, emerald balusters with ruby rails, and coral balusters with rails made of many treasures.

78. "The gold netting is hung with silver bells, the silver netting is hung with gold bells, the crystal netting is hung with beryl bells, the beryl netting is hung with crystal bells, the ruby netting is hung with emerald bells, the emerald netting is hung with ruby bells, and the coral netting is hung with bells made of many treasures.

79. "The gold trees have gold roots and limbs and silver leaves, flowers, and fruit. The silver trees have silver roots and limbs and gold leaves, flowers, and fruit. The crystal trees have crystal roots and limbs and beryl [leaves,] flowers, and fruit. The beryl trees have beryl roots and limbs and crystal [leaves,] flowers, and fruit. The ruby trees have ruby roots and limbs and emerald [leaves,] flowers, and fruit. The emerald trees have emerald roots and limbs and ruby [leaves,] flowers, and fruit. The coral trees have coral roots and limbs and [leaves,] flowers, and fruit made of many treasures.

80. "The bottom of that lake is strewn with gold sand, and it has stairways made of seven treasures all around it. The gold stairs have silver steps, the silver stairs have gold steps, the beryl stairs have crystal steps, the crystal stairs have beryl steps, the ruby stairs have emerald steps, the emerald stairs have ruby steps, and the coral stairs have steps made of many treasures. There are also precious balustrades on both sides of those stairs.

81. "The four kinds of flowers grow in that lake with a mixture of blues, yellows, reds, and whites. The flowers are like cartwheels and their roots are like wheel hubs. The roots of those flowers produce sap that's white as milk and tastes sweet as honey.

82. "There are many scenic parks, forests, and ponds on all four sides of that lake where various refreshing flowers and trees grow. Their flowers and fruit are bountiful, and countless birds sing to each other peacefully as before.

83. "When the elephant king Susamsthita decides to entertain himself in the lake, he thinks of the other 8,000 elephant kings. Those 8,000 elephant kings then think to themselves, 'The elephant king Susamsthita is thinking of us now! We ought to pay the elephant king a visit.' Then the herd of elephants go before him.

84. "The elephant king Susamsthita then goes to Lake Mandakini with the other 8,000 elephants. Some among those elephants carry parasols and hold precious fans for the elephant king. Some among them dance and play music in front of them.

85. "When the elephant king Susamsthita enters the lake to bathe, they dance and play music to entertain each other. Some of the elephants wash the king's trunk, some wash his mouth, some wash his head, some wash his tusks, some wash his ears, some wash his stomach, some wash his back, some wash his tail, and some wash his feet. Some of them pick flowers and roots, wash them, and give them to the king to eat. Some of them throw the four kinds of flowers on the king.

86. "After he has bathed, drank, eaten, and entertained himself, the elephant king Susamsthita goes onto the shore and stands facing the tree Susamsthita. Afterward, the other 8,000 elephants each go into the lake to bathe, drink, eat, and entertain themselves. When they're finished, they come back out and go to the elephant king.

87. "The elephant king then leads the other 8,000 elephants to the tree king Susamsthita. Some among them carry parasols for the elephant king. Some bear precious fans to fan the elephant king, and some among them dance and play music in front of the others.

88. "When the elephant king Susamsthita reaches the tree king, he sits, lies down, or walks around as he likes. The other 8,000 elephants each are free to sit, lie down, and walk around as they like.

89. "In that tree's forest, there's a circle [of trees] eight fathoms in size, a circle nine fathoms in size … ten fathoms … fifteen fathoms in size. Only the elephant king Susamsthita was within a circle sixteen fathoms in size around the sal tree king. When those other 8,000 sal trees drop their limbs and leaves, a cool breeze blows through the forest from outside. Also, when the other 8,000 elephants defecate and urinate, yaksas remove it from the forest."

90. The Buddha told the monks, "The elephant king Susamsthita possesses great miraculous abilities. Such is his virtue. Although he was born an animal, he received such fortune."

CHAPTER 2: UTTARAKURU

(The translator in this chapter chose to use a Chinese unit of distance, the Li, for what was probably a smaller Indian unit. A Li is a much shorter distance than a Yojana, being about half a kilometer. Translated it into modern measurements i.e., seventy li equals about 35 km, which would be about 2.75 yojanas.)

The Land of Uttarakuru

1. The Buddha told the monks, "The continent of Uttarakuru has many mountains. There are scenic parks and lakes beside those mountains where an assortment of refreshing flowers and trees grow. Their flowers and fruit are bountiful, and countless birds sing to each other peacefully.

2. "Moreover, there are many rivers in those mountains. Their currents flow gently without any rapids, and they're covered with a multitude of flowers that float downstream smoothly. Those streams flow between two rows of various trees. Their branches are flexible, and their flowers and fruit are bountiful. Lush grass grows in clockwise coils on the land. It has the color of a peacock or a kingfisher and the fragrance of varsika flowers, and it's soft as heavenly cloth. The ground is also soft to walk on. The earth sinks four inches and then springs back when one lifts their foot. The land is level like the palm of a hand, without any high or low points.

3. "Monks, that land of Uttarakuru has four Anavatapta lakes on its four sides. Each of them is a hundred yojanas across. Their water is clear and unpolluted, and they're ringed by stepped embankments made of the seven treasures … countless birds sing to each other peacefully, and nearby Lake Mandakini is not decorated any different than before.

4. Those four great lakes each produce four great rivers that are ten yojanas wide. Their currents flow gently without any rapids, and they're covered with many flowers that float downstream smoothly. Those streams flow between two rows of various trees. Their branches are flexible, and their flowers and fruit are bountiful. Lush grass grows in clockwise coils on the land. It has the color of a peacock or a kingfisher and the fragrance of varsika flowers, and it's soft as heavenly cloth. The ground is also soft to walk on. The earth sinks four inches and then springs back when one lifts their foot. The land is level like the palm of a hand, without any high or low points.

5. "Moreover, that land is devoid of gullies, pits, brambles, or stumps, nor does it have biting insects, venomous snakes, scorpions, tigers, and other dangerous animals. The earth is made purely of many treasures, without any stones or sand. The weather is mild, and the seasons are gentle, being neither cold nor hot. There isn't any kind of trouble.

6. "That land is moist. Dust and dirt doesn't kick up, as though it were a wetland. There isn't any dust that blows around. A hundred kinds of grass grow constantly, for there isn't any winter or summer. The trees are abundant, and their flowers and fruit are bountiful. Lush grass grows in clockwise coils on the land. It has the color of a peacock or a kingfisher and the fragrance of varsika flowers, and it's soft as heavenly cloth. The ground is also soft to walk on. The earth sinks four inches and then springs back when one lifts their foot. The land is level like the palm of a hand, without any high or low points.

7. "There's always natural rice present on that land. It grows by itself without being planted and doesn't have any husk or chaff. It looks like a cluster of white flowers, resembling the food of the Trayastrimsa Heaven, and it possesses many flavors.

8. "That land always has natural iron kettles present. They have mani gems called Brilliant Light in the bottom, which cook food when the light goes out. It doesn't require firewood, fire, or troublesome human labor.

The Magical Trees of Uttarakuru

9. "That land has a kind of tree called Bending Over. When men and women stop under them when it rains, their leaves line up such that water doesn't drip between them.

10. "Also, there are perfume trees that stand thirty-five kilometers tall with abundant flowers and fruit. When the fruit is ripe, the skin splits open by itself and produces natural perfume. Those trees are sometimes thirty kilometers tall … twenty-five … twenty … as little as 2.5 kilometers tall. Their flowers and fruit are abundant. When the fruit is ripe, the skin splits open by itself to produce natural perfume.

11. "Also, there are cloth trees that stand thirty-five kilometers tall with abundant flowers and fruit. When the fruit is ripe, the skin splits open by itself to produce all sorts of clothing. Those trees are sometimes thirty kilometers tall … twenty-five … twenty … as little as 2.5 kilometers tall. Their flowers and fruit are abundant. When the fruit is ripe, the skin splits open by itself to produce all sorts of clothing.

12. "Also, there are ornament trees that stand thirty-five kilometers tall with abundant flowers and fruit. When the fruit is ripe, the skin splits open by itself to produce all sorts of things to ornament a person's body. Those trees are sometimes thirty kilometers tall … twenty-five … twenty … as little as 2.5 kilometers tall. Their flowers and fruit are abundant. When the fruit is ripe, the skin splits open by itself to produce all sorts of things to ornament a person's body.

13. "Also, there are flower garland trees that stand thirty-five kilometers tall with abundant flowers and fruit. When the fruit is ripe, the skin splits open by itself to produce all sorts of garlands. Those trees are sometimes thirty kilometers tall … twenty-five … twenty … as little as 2.5 kilometers tall. Their flowers and fruit are abundant. When the fruit is ripe, the skin splits open by itself to produce all sorts of garlands.

14. "Also, there are vessel trees that stand thirty-five kilometers tall with abundant flowers and fruit. When the fruit is ripe, the skin splits open by itself to produce all sorts of vessels. Those trees are sometimes thirty kilometers tall … twenty-five … twenty … as little as 2.5 kilometers tall. Their flowers and fruit are abundant. When the fruit is ripe, the skin splits open by itself to produce all sorts of vessels.

15. "Also, there are fruit trees that stand thirty-five kilometers tall with abundant flowers and fruit. When the fruit is ripe, the skin splits open by itself to produce all sorts of fruit. Those trees are sometimes thirty kilometers tall … twenty-five … twenty … as little as 2.5 kilometers tall. Their flowers and fruit are abundant. When the fruit is ripe, the skin splits open by itself to produce all sorts of fruit.

16. "Also, there are musical instrument trees that stand thirty-five kilometers tall with abundant flowers and fruit. When the fruit is ripe, the skin splits open by itself to produce all sorts of musical instruments. Those trees are sometimes thirty kilometers tall … twenty-five … twenty … as little as 2.5 kilometers tall. Their flowers and fruit are abundant. When the fruit is ripe, the skin splits open by itself to produce all sorts of musical instruments.

Lake Sudarsana

17. "That land has a lake named Sudarsana that's a hundred yojanas across. Its water is clear and unpolluted, and it's ringed by stepped embankments made of the seven treasures.

The lake has on all four sides seven balustrades, seven nettings, and seven rows of trees … and countless birds sing to each other peacefully as before. That Lake Sudarsana has a tree to its north named Amra, which is 3.5 kilometers around and stands fifty kilometers tall. It's branches and leaves spread out in all four directions to cover twenty-five kilometers.

18. "The Sugati River flows east from Lake Sudarsana, and it's a yojana wide. Its current flows gently without any rapids, and it's covered with many flowers that float downstream smoothly. That river flows between two rows of various trees. Their branches are flexible, and their flowers and fruit are bountiful. Lush grass grows in clockwise coils on the land. It has the color of a peacock or a kingfisher and the fragrance of varsika flowers, and it's soft as heavenly cloth. The ground is also soft to walk on. The earth sinks four inches and then springs back when one lifts their foot. The land is level like the palm of a hand, without any high or low points.

19. "Moreover, in that river there are boats made of many treasures. When people want to go into the river to bathe or entertain themselves, they take off their clothes on the shore and ride the boats to the middle of the river. When they're finished with their recreation, they cross the river to find clothes to put on. When they emerge from the water and get dressed, they don't look for their original clothes.

20. "Next, they go to a perfume tree, and the tree bends over for them. The people take various assorted perfumes in their hands and rub them on their bodies.

21. "Next, they go to a cloth tree, and the tree bends over for them. The people take various assorted clothing and put on what they like.

22. "Next, they go to an ornament tree, and the tree bends over for them. The people take all sorts of ornaments and decorate themselves with them.

23. "Next, they go to a garland tree, and the tree bends over for them. The people take various assorted garlands and put them over their heads.

24. "Next, they go to a vessel tree, and the tree bends over for them. The people select from all sorts of precious vessels and take one of them.

25. "Next, they go to a fruit tree, and the tree bends over for them. The people take all sorts of sweet fruits. Some eat the fruit, some put them in their mouths, and some drink their juice.

26. "Next, they go to a musical instrument tree, and the tree bends over for them. The people take various musical instruments and strum or drum them. With wondrous voices in harmony with their music, they walk to parks and entertain themselves as they like. Sometimes it's for one day … two days … or seven days. Afterward, they leave, but they have no fixed home.

27. "The Wondrous Body River flows south from Lake Sudarsana … The Wondrous Flavor River flows west from Lake Sudarsana … The Reflection River flows north from Lake Sudarsana in the same way.

Sudarsana Park

28. "East of Lake Sudarsana, there's a park named Sudarsana, which is a hundred yojanas across. It's surrounded on all four sides with seven balustrades, seven nettings, and seven rows of trees of a mixture of assorted colors that are made of the seven treasures.

29. "That park has four large gates on its four sides, and it's surrounded by a balustrade made of the seven treasures. Inside the park, it's clean and devoid of brambles. The ground is level without any gullies, pits, or hills, nor does it have biting and stinging insects, venomous snakes, scorpions, tigers, and other dangerous animals. The earth is made purely of many treasures, without any stones or sand. The weather is mild, and the seasons are gentle, being neither cold nor hot. There isn't any kind of trouble.

30. "That land is moist. Dust and dirt doesn't kick up, as though it were a wetland. There isn't any dust that blows around. A hundred kinds of grass grow constantly, for there isn't any winter or summer. The trees are abundant, and their flowers and fruit are bountiful. Lush grass grows in clockwise coils on the land. It has the color of a peacock or a kingfisher and the fragrance of varsika flowers, and it's soft as heavenly cloth. The ground is also soft to walk on. The earth sinks four inches and then springs back when one lifts their foot. [The land is level like the palm of a hand, without any high or low points.]

31. "Natural rice is always present in that park. [It grows by itself without being planted] and doesn't any husk or chaff. It looks like a cluster of white flowers, possesses many flavors, and resembles the food of the Trayastrimsa Heaven.

32. "That park always has natural iron kettles present. They have mani gems called Brilliant Light in the bottom, which cook food when the light goes out. It doesn't require firewood, fire, or troublesome human labor.

33. "That park has a kind of tree called Bending Over. When men and women stop under them when it rains, their leaves line up such that water doesn't drip between them.

34. "Also, there are perfume trees that stand thirty-five kilometers tall with abundant flowers and fruit. When the fruit is ripe, the skin splits open by itself and produces all sorts of perfume. Those trees are sometimes thirty kilometers tall … twenty-five … twenty … as little as 2.5 kilometers tall. Their flowers and fruit are abundant. When the fruit is ripe, [the skin splits open by itself] to produce all sorts of perfume … The musical instrument trees are likewise.

35. "People in that land walk around in that park for recreation, staying for one … two … or seven days. That Sudarsana Park has no wardens, so people can wander through it as they like and leave afterward.

36. "South of Lake Sudarsana, there's a forest park called Mahasudarsana … West of Lake Sudarsana, there's a forest park called Recreation … North of Lake Sudarsana, there's a forest park called Fully Flowering that are likewise.

37. "At the middle and end of the night in that land, the naga king of Anavatapta often creates pure clouds according to the season. They wrap around the world and release sweet showers that last as long as it takes to milk a cow. Rain water with eight flavors wets and permeates the land. The water doesn't stand, though, so the ground doesn't become muddy. It's like a florist watering flowers to keep them from withering, and they are moistened and refreshed.

38. "After the middle of the night in that land, the sky is clear of any obscuring clouds. A cool breeze blows from the ocean that's pure and gentle. It blows lightly over a person and makes their whole body feel pleasant.

The People of Uttarakuru

39. "That land is bountiful, and the people are prosperous. If they need to eat, they put natural rice into a kettle. At the bottom of the kettle is a brilliant light gem, which causes the food to be spontaneously cooked, and then the light of the gem goes out by itself. People come and eat as much as they like. When the owner doesn't rise, the food never runs out, but if the owner does rise, then the food will run out.

40. "The food is fresh and clean, looking like a cluster of white flowers, possessing many flavors, and resembling the food of the Trayastrimsa Heaven. Those who eat the food don't have any illnesses, and their vitality is restored. Their appearance is peaceful and cheerful, and it doesn't decline at all.

41. "Again, the people of that land are the same in type of body and appearance such that they can't be distinguished from one another. Their appearance is youthful like a twenty-year-old in Jambudvipa. Their teeth are even, straight, pure white, and their gaps aren't visible. Their hair is dark blue and without any dirtiness. Their beards are eight inches long, and their eyebrows stop growing once they aren't too long nor short.

42. "When the men of that land feel amorous, they look passionately at a woman and then walk away from her. The woman follows after him as he goes to a forest park. If that woman is a relative of the man's father or mother and they shouldn't have sex, the trees don't bend for them, and they each go their separate ways. If she isn't a relative of his father or mother and they could have a relationship, the trees bend over and encircle them with a screen. They then enjoy each other for as long as they like, whether for one day, two days … or seven days. Then, they go their separate ways.

43. "After being pregnant for seven or eight days, the woman gives birth. Depending on whether it's a boy or a girl, she puts the child at a major crossroads and leaves them there. Travelers who pass by that side of the road give them a finger to suck, which produces sweet milk that satisfies and nourishes the child. After seven days pass, the child has grown up and joins the other people. The boys go with a group of men, and the girls go with a group of women.

44. "When those people die, they don't lament and cry together. They decorate the corpses, place them by an intersection, and leave them there. There's a bird called Uccamgama that takes the corpses away and leaves them in other regions.

45. "Again, when the people of that land go to defecate or urinate, the ground opens up, and it closes back up when they are finished.

46. "The people of that land don't have romantic attachments, nor do they accumulate things. Their life spans are always an exact length, and they're born in heaven when they die. Why are their life spans always exactly the same? Those people cultivated the ten good actions in previous lives and were born in Uttarakuru after their bodies broke up and their lives ended. They live for a thousand years, no more or less. This is why those people have life spans that are an exact length.

47. "Furthermore, those who kill living beings fall to evil destinies, and those who don't kill living beings are born in good destinies. So it is with those who steal, commit sexual misconduct, who speak duplicitously, harshly, falsely, or frivolously, and who are greedy, jealous, or hold wrong views. They fall to evil destinies. Those who don't steal, don't engage in sex, don't speak duplicitously, harshly, falsely, or frivolously, who aren't greedy or jealous, and who don't hold wrong views are born to good destinies.

48. "Sometimes, those who don't kill, don't steal, don't engage in sex, don't speak duplicitously, harshly, falsely, or frivolously, aren't greedy or jealous, and don't hold wrong views are born in Uttarakuru when their bodies break up or their lives end. They live for a thousand years, no more or less. This is why those people have life spans that are an exact length.

49. "Furthermore, those who are stingy and greedy aren't capable of generosity. They fall to evil destinies when they die. Those with open minds aren't stingy and capable of generosity, so they're born in good places. Some people give to ascetics and priests, or they give to the poor, beggar children, the sick, and the suffering. They provide clothing, meals, carriages, flower garlands, perfumes, seats, and shelter. They also build shrines and provide lamps for them. Those people are born in Uttarakuru when their bodies break up and their lives end. They live for a thousand years, no more or less. This is why those people have life spans that are an exact length.

50. "Why is Uttarakuru praised as superior? That land's people aren't taught the ten good acts, but their behavior naturally consists of those ten virtues. They're born in good places when their bodies break up and their lives end. This is why those people receive that praise that Uttarakuru is superior.

51. "What's the meaning of 'Uttarakuru'? Among the other three continents, its land is the best and supreme. Therefore, it's called 'Uttarakuru' (Uttarakuru in Chinese means 'Highest').

CHAPTER 3: NOBLE WHEEL-TURNING KINGS

(This chapter is largely the same as the story of Mahasudarsana found in DA 2 (and parallel with DN 17). However, the author(s) have inserted some mythical geography into the narrative and depict Jambudvipa being transformed to resemble Uttarakuru. One wonders if this may have been among the first glimmers of Buddhist pure land thought.)

1. The Buddha told the monks, "The world has noble wheel-turning kings who achieve seven treasures and possess four miraculous virtues.

2. "What are the seven treasures achieved by a noble wheel-turning king? First is the golden wheel treasure, second is the white elephant treasure, third is the blue horse treasure, fourth is the magic jewel treasure, fifth is the beautiful woman treasure, sixth is the householder treasure, and seventh is the army general treasure.

The Golden Wheel Treasure

3. "How does a noble wheel-turning king achieve the golden wheel treasure? If a noble wheel-turning king arises in Jambudvipa, he'll be a water-anointed warrior [king]. During the fifteenth-day full moon, he'll bathe in a fragrant wash, ascend to his high hall, and entertain himself with a group of maidens. The wheel will spontaneously appear before him. It has a thousand spokes and possesses a glowing light. It's something made by a heavenly artisan, not something made in this world. It is made of pure gold and about fourteen feet in diameter.

4. "After seeing this, the noble wheel-turning king thinks to himself, 'In the past, I've heard senior elders say, "If a water-anointed warrior king bathes in a fragrant wash during the fifteenth-day full moon, ascends to his high hall, and surrounds himself with maidens, the wheel will spontaneously appear before him. It has a thousand spokes and possesses a glowing light. It's something made by a heavenly artisan, not something made in this world. It's made of pure gold and fourteen feet in diameter. He's then known as a noble wheel-turning king." Now, this wheel has appeared! But is it that one? I had better test this wheel treasure.'

5. "The noble wheel-turning king then summons his four armies and faces the golden wheel treasure with his right shoulder bared. He kneels on his right knee, touches the golden wheel with his right hand, and says: 'Head east. Turn according to the Dharma, and don't go contrary to the eternal law.' The wheel then turns east.

6. "The wheel-turning king then follows it, leading his four armies, and four spirits are ahead of the golden wheel, guiding it. The king stops his horses where the wheel stops to dwell. When the lesser kings in the east see the great king arrive, they come to the king with gold bowls holding silver grain and silver bowls holding gold grain. They present them to their chief, saying, 'Welcome, Great King! The lands in this eastern region are plentiful now [with many treasures,] and the people are prosperous. Their culture is gentle, loving, and loyal. Please, Noble King, rule them properly! We'll serve you, right and left, and accept what's appropriate.'

7. "The wheel-turning king tells the lesser kings, 'Stop, gentlemen! Stop! You've given offerings to me, but I will simply rule with the correct Dharma. Don't go out of your way to serve me, and let no one in the country act contrary to the Dharma. Don't kill beings yourselves and instruct other people not to kill beings … don't steal … don't commit sexual misconduct … don't speak duplicitously … harshly … falsely … frivolously … don't be greedy … jealous … don't hold wrong views … This is what I call my way of ruling.'

8. "When the lesser kings hear this instruction, they follow the great king as he tours their countries. He'll go east until the ocean is in sight, and next travel south, west, and north, going wherever the wheel goes. The kings in those regions each presents their countries in the same way as the lesser countries in the east do.

9. "Here in Jambudvipa, there's a land called Fertile Bounty, which has many treasures. It's forests and rivers are pure, and its terrain is flat and wide. The wheel will travel around it, passing through all its towns, going twelve yojanas east to west and ten yojanas south to north. In the middle of the night, heavenly spirits will build a metropolis surrounded by seven fortress walls, seven balustrades, seven nettings, and seven rows of trees decorated with the seven treasures … and countless birds will sing to each other peacefully.

10. "After it's built, the golden wheel treasure will also enter the city and travel through its streets, going four yojanas east to west and two yojanas south to north. In the middle of the night, heavenly spirits will build a palace hall that's seven stories tall and made of the seven treasures … and countless birds will sing to each other peacefully in same way.

11. "After it's built, the golden wheel treasure will go up into the sky and hover above the palace hall, complete and unmoving. The noble wheel-turning king will celebrate, 'This golden wheel treasure is a true sign to me that I really am a noble wheel-turning king now!' This is his accomplishment of the golden wheel treasure.

The White Elephant Treasure

12. "How does he accomplish the white elephant treasure? The noble wheel-turning king will be sitting up in his correct [Dharma] hall in the morning, and the elephant treasure will suddenly appear before him. Its hair is all white, stands flush in seven places, and has the ability to fly. Its head is mottled, and its six tusks are delicate and have real gold between them.

13. "When he sees this, the king will think, 'This elephant treasure is excellent. If it's well trained, I could ride it!' He tests its training, and it's be capable of doing everything it should. The wheel-turning king then wants to further test the elephant, so he mounts it and rides it out of the city in the morning. He travels around the four oceans and returns when it's time to eat.

14. "The wheel-turning king will celebrate, 'This white elephant treasure is a true sign to me that I really am a noble wheel-turning king now!' This is his accomplishment of the elephant treasure.

The Blue Horse Treasure

15. "How does the noble wheel-turning king accomplish the blue horse treasure? The noble wheel-turning king will be sitting up in his correct [Dharma] hall in the morning, and the horse treasure will suddenly appear before him. It's dark blue in color with a vermillion mane and tail. It's head and neck are like an elephant's and has the ability to fly.

16. "When he sees this, the king will think, 'This horse is excellent. If it's well trained, I could ride it!' He then tests its training, and it's capable of doing everything it should. The noble wheel-turning king wants to further test this horse treasure, so he mounts it and rides out of the city in the morning. He travels around the four oceans and returns when it's time to eat.

17. "The wheel-turning king will celebrate, 'This blue horse treasure is a true sign to me that I really am a noble wheel-turning king now!' This is his accomplishment of the blue horse treasure.

The Magic Jewel Treasure

18. "How does he accomplish the magic jewel treasure? The noble wheel-turning king will be sitting up in his correct [Dharma] hall in the morning, and the magic jewel treasure will suddenly appear before him. It's substance and color are transparent and lacks any flaws or defilement.

19. "When he sees this, the king will think, 'This jewel is marvelous! When it glows, it could light the interior of the palace!' The wheel-turning king then tests this jewel by summoning his four armies and placing the jewel treasure atop a tall banner. He carries this banner out of the city during a dark night, and the jewel's light illuminates an area that's a yojana in radius. Inside the city, people can go about their business as they do during the day.

20. "The noble wheel-turning king will celebrate, 'This magic jewel is a true sign to me that I really am a noble wheel-turning king now!' This is his accomplishment of the magic jewel treasure.

The Beautiful Woman Treasure

21. "How does he accomplish the beautiful woman treasure? The beautiful woman treasure will suddenly appear [before him]. Her countenance is agreeable, and her appearance is handsome. She isn't too tall or short, too crude or fine, too white or black, or too sharp or gentle. In winter, her body is warm, and she's cool during summer. The hair pores of her whole body exude the scent of sandalwood, and her breath has the fragrance of an utpala flower. Her words are gentle, stimulating, and calm. She's the first to rise and the last to sit. She doesn't do anything inappropriate. The noble wheel-turning king isn't attached to seeing her, so he doesn't think about her for a moment, much less being intimate with her.

22. "After seeing her, the noble wheel-turning king will celebrate, 'This beautiful woman treasure is a true sign to me that I really am a noble wheel-turning king now!' This is his accomplishment of the beautiful woman treasure.

The Householder Treasure

23. "How does he accomplish the householder treasure? A householder man will suddenly appear with a natural storehouse of treasures and measureless wealth. The householder will have an eye from past merit that clearly sees hidden treasures in the earth and whether they have owners or not. He sees and knows all this. When the treasure has an owner, he will protect it for them. When a treasure doesn't have an owner, he will collect it and provide it for the king's use. The householder treasure goes to the King and says, 'Great King, you don't need to worry about paying me a salary. I can take care of myself.'

24. "The noble wheel-turning king wants to test the householder treasure. He orders them a boat prepared to go sailing on a river, then he tells the householder, 'I need a treasure of gold. Quick, give it to me.'

"The householder replies, 'Just a moment, Great King, while I go onto shore.'

25. "The king presses him, 'I need it immediately. Get it for me right now.'

"The householder treasure accepts the king's command and kneels down on the boat. He puts his right hand into the water, and a precious jar comes out of the water after his hand. Like a caterpillar climbing a tree, that householder treasure is likewise. Putting his hand in the water, a treasure will climb his hand as he lifts it out of the water. He fills the boat up [with treasures] and then asks the king, 'How much treasure does the king need?'

26. "The noble wheel-turning king says to the householder, 'Stop, stop! I didn't need any treasure; it was just a way to test you. You've already given offerings to me.'

"Hearing what the king said, that householder immediately throws the treasures back into the water.

27. "The noble wheel-turning king will celebrate, 'This householder treasure is a true sign to me that I really am a noble wheel-turning king now!' This is his accomplishment of the householder treasure.

The Army General Treasure

28. "How does he accomplish the army general treasure? The army general treasure will suddenly appear [before him]. He's shrewd, courageous, and good at planning. He goes to the king and says, 'Great King, if there's anyone you need defeated, don't worry about it. I can handle it for him.'

29. "The noble wheel-turning king wants to test the army general treasure. He assembles the four armies and tells him, 'Now, take charge of the army. Assemble those who haven't yet assembled and disperse those who have assembled. Equip those who haven't yet been equipped, and dismiss those who've been equipped. Let go those who haven't yet been on leave, and have those who've been on leave remain.'

30. "Hearing what the king said, the army general treasure leads the army. He assembles those who haven't yet assembled and disperses those who have assembled. He equips those who haven't yet been equipped and dismisses those who've been equipped. He lets go those who haven't yet been on leave and has those who've been on leave remain.

31. "When he sees this, the noble wheel-turning king will celebrate, 'This army general treasure is a true sign to me that I really am a noble wheel-turning king now!' This is the noble wheel-turning king's accomplishment of the seven treasures.

The Four Miraculous Virtues

32. "What are his four miraculous virtues? First is a long life that's incomparable and isn't cut short. Second is physical vigor that's incomparable and tireless. Third is a handsome appearance that's incomparable. Fourth is a treasury that's incomparable and overflowing. These are the seven treasures and four virtues accomplished by a noble wheel-turning king.

The Way the Noble King Rules

33. "After a long time, the noble wheel-turning king will order his horses readied and go out for a ride to visit his park. He tells the driver, 'Be a good driver, and go at a calm pace. Why is that? I want to closely observe the country and see that the people are happy and untroubled.'

34. "Once he has observed the country's people from the side of the road, he then tells his driver, 'Continue at a leisurely pace. I want them to closely observe the Noble King's majestic appearance.'

35. "The noble wheel-turning king kindly nurtures the people and their needs like a father loving his children. The people are fond of the king like children looking up to their father. They all pay tribute to the king with their valuables, hoping that he will accept their gifts.

36. "But the king says, 'Stop, people! I have my own treasures. You can use these for yourselves.'

The Transformation of the Land

37. "When a noble wheel-turning king governs Jambudvipa, the land is level without any brambles, gullies, or hills, nor does it have biting insects, scorpions, stinging insects, venomous snakes, and other dangerous animals. The stones, sand, and rocks naturally disappear, and gold, silver, and jewels appear on the ground. The seasons are mild, being neither cold nor hot. The ground is soft and lacks any dust or dirt. As though coated with oil, it's pure and glistening without any dust or dirt.

38. "When the noble wheel-turning king governs the world, the land is like that. It produces springs that are pure and never dry up. Lush grass grows on the land, and it's always green in winter and summer. The trees are abundant, and their flowers and fruit are bountiful. Lush grass grows in clockwise coils on the land. It has the color of a peacock or a kingfisher and the fragrance of varsika flowers, and it's soft as heavenly cloth. The ground is also soft to walk on. The earth sinks four inches and then springs back when one lifts their foot, without leaving a depression. There's also natural rice without chaff or husk that possesses many flavors.

39. "During that time, there are perfume trees with abundant flowers and fruit. When their fruit is ripe, the skin splits open by itself and produces natural perfume, and the fragrance wafts through the air.

40. "Also, there are cloth trees with abundant flowers and fruit. When their fruit is ripe, the skin splits open by itself and produces all sorts of clothing.

41. "Also, there are ornament trees with abundant flowers and fruit. When their fruit is ripe, the skin splits open by itself and produces all sorts of things to ornament a person's body.

42. "Also, there are flower garland trees with abundant flowers and fruit. When their fruit is ripe, the skin splits open by itself and produces all sorts of garlands.

43. "Also, there are vessel trees with abundant flowers and fruit. When their fruit is ripe, the skin splits open by itself and produces all sorts of vessels.

44. "Also, there are fruit trees with abundant flowers and fruit. When their fruit is ripe, the skin splits open by itself and produces all sorts of fruit.

45. "Also, there are musical instrument trees with abundant flowers and fruit. When their fruit is ripe, the skin splits open by itself and produces many musical instruments.

46. When a noble wheel-turning king governs the world, the naga king of Anavatapta produces great unseen clouds in the middle of the night. They wrap around the world and release heavy rains that last as long as it takes to milk a cow. The rain water with eight flavors wets and permeates the land. The water doesn't stand, though, so the ground doesn't become muddy. It's like a florist watering flowers, moistening, refreshing, and preventing them from withering. Those rains moisten the land in the same way.

47. "After the middle of the night, the sky is clear without any obscuring clouds. A cool breeze blows from the ocean that's pure and gentle. It blows lightly on a person and makes their whole body feel pleasant.

48. "When the noble [wheel-turning] king governs [the world], Jambudvipa is bountiful with the five grains, the people prosper, and their wealth is abundant. No one wants for anything.

The End of a Noble Wheel-Turning King's Life

49. "When a noble wheel-turning king properly governs the land in future times, he'll do so without crookedness and practice the ten good deeds. The people in that time will also cultivate right view and the ten good deeds. The king will live for a long time until his body becomes seriously diseased. When he reaches the end of his life, he'll be like a happy person who ate a little too much and feels a bit unwell. When his life ends, he'll be born up in the Brahma Heaven. The beautiful woman treasure, householder treasure, army general treasure, and the people of the land will sing and play music when they inter the noble [wheel-turning] king's body.

50. "The beautiful woman treasure, householder treasure, army general treasure, and the people in the country bathe the king's body in fragrant water. They wrap it with cotton and then in five hundred layers of cloth. They place the king's body in a gold coffin and pour fragrant oil on it. They then place that coffin in a second larger iron coffin. Another wooden coffin is built on the outside of it. They then pile fragrant firewood on top of cloth and cremate him. A shrine of seven treasures that's one yojana across is built at a crossroads. It's multi-colored and made of the seven treasures.

51. "That shrine has a gate on each of its four sides, and it's surrounded by a balustrade made of the seven treasures. There's five yojanas of open space on all four sides, then seven park walls, seven balustrades, seven nettings, and seven rows of trees.

52. "The gold walls have silver gates, the silver walls have gold gates, the beryl walls have crystal gates, the crystal walls have beryl gates, the ruby walls have emerald gates, the emerald walls have ruby gates, and the coral walls have gates made of many treasures.

53. "The gold balustrades have gold balusters with silver rails. The silver balustrades have silver balusters with gold rails. The crystal balustrades have crystal balusters with beryl rails. The beryl balustrades have beryl balusters with crystal rails. The ruby balustrades have ruby balusters with emerald rails. The emerald balustrades have emerald balusters with ruby rails. The coral balustrades have coral balusters with rails made of many treasures.

54. "The gold netting is hung with silver bells, and the silver netting is hung with gold bells. The beryl netting is hung with crystal bells, and the crystal netting is hung with beryl bells. The ruby netting is hung with emerald bells, and the emerald netting is hung with ruby bells. The coral netting is hung with bells made of many treasures.

55. "The gold trees have silver leaves, flowers, and fruit. The silver trees have gold leaves, flowers, and fruit. The beryl trees have crystal leaves, flowers[, and fruit]. The crystal trees have beryl leaves, flowers[, and fruit]. The ruby trees have emerald leaves, flowers[, and fruit]. The emerald trees and ruby leaves, flowers[, and fruit]. The coral trees have leaves, flowers[, and fruit] made of many treasures.

56. "The four park walls also have four gates, and they're surrounded by balustrades. There's also towers and lookouts made of treasures on top of the walls. There are trees and groves on all four sides, as well as springs and ponds where all sorts of flowers grow. The trees are abundant, and their flowers and fruit are bountiful. Their many fragrances are sweet-smelling, and diverse birds sing peacefully [to each other].

57. "After that shrine is built, the beautiful woman treasure, householder treasure, army general treasure, and the people in the whole country bring offerings to the shrine. They give to the needy whatever food, clothing, elephants, horses, and treasure carts that they need. They give them all sorts of things that they need.

58. "Such are the majestic virtues of a noble wheel-turning king."

CHAPTER 4: THE HELLS

(This chapter is one of the most brutally detailed descriptions of the Buddhist hells. Parallels are found in the Commentary to the Perfection of Wisdom Sutra (T1509.175c18ff), Vasubandhu's Abhidharma Kosa, and the The Correct Dharma Abode of Mindfulness Sutra (T721.27a17ff). This version differs somewhat from the presentation of eight hot and eight cold hells found in the above Sarvastivada accounts, but the two versions appear to derive from a common source. They share many of the same names of their hells, but the descriptions are often quite different. They also both include the concept of sixteen lesser hells.)

The Eight Great Hells

1. The Buddha told the monks, "There are 8,000 islands that surround the four continents. There's also a great ocean that completely encircles those 8,000 islands, and a chain of great diamond mountains encircles that ocean. Beyond those diamond mountains, there's a second chain of great diamond mountains. There's an utter darkness between those two mountain chains, where the great illuminating power of the sun and moon gods doesn't reach.

2. "There are eight great hells there, and each of those hells has sixteen lesser hells. The first great hell is called *Samjna. The second is called Kalasutra. The third is called *Samhata. The fourth is called *Roravana. The fifth is called *Maharoravana. The sixth is called Tapana. The seventh is called Mahatapana. The eighth is called Avici.

The Great Hell of *Samjna

3. "The *Samjna Hell has sixteen lesser hells. These lesser hells are 500 yojanas across. The first lesser hell is called Black Sand. The second is called Boiling Excrement. The third is called Five Hundred Nails. The fourth is called Hunger. The fifth is called Thirst. The sixth is called Copper Cauldron. The seventh is called Many Copper Cauldrons. The eighth is called Grinding Stone. The ninth is called Pus and Blood. The tenth is called Measuring Fire. The eleventh is called River of Ash. The twelfth is called Iron Ball. The thirteenth is called Axes. The fourteenth is called Wolves. The fifteenth is called Sword Trees. The sixteenth is called Frozen Ice.

4. "What is called the *Samjna Hell? In that hell, sentient beings grow iron claws on their hands that are long and sharp. They are quick to anger, harboring resentments and harmful notions. When they seize each other with their claws, flesh falls from their hands. After they perceive their own deaths, a cool breeze blows over them and restores their skin and flesh. Quickly healed, they stand back up and perceive of themselves, 'I'm alive again!' The other sentient beings say, 'I perceive that you are alive!' Because of these perceptions, it's called the *Samjna Hell.

5. "Furthermore, the sentient beings in the *Samjna Hell harbor harmful notions and attack each other. They hold spontaneous swords in their hands, and those swords have sharp points. They hack and stab each other, slicing and chopping their bodies to bits on the ground. They perceive, 'I'm dead,' and then a cool breeze blows over them that restores their skin and flesh. Quickly healed, they stand back up and perceive of themselves, 'I'm alive again!' The other sentient beings say, 'I perceive that you are alive!' Because of these circumstances, it's called the *Samjna Hell.

6. "Furthermore, the sentient beings in the *Samjna Hell harbor harmful notions and attack each other. Holding swords in their hands that have sharp points, they chop and stab each other, slicing and cutting until they perceive, 'I'm dead.' A cool breeze blows over them that restores their skin and flesh. Quickly healed, they stand back up and say to themselves, 'I'm alive again!' The other sentient beings say, 'I perceive that you are alive!' Because of these circumstances, it's called the *Samjna Hell.

7. "Furthermore, the sentient beings in that *Samjna Hell harbor harmful notions and attack each other. Holding oiled dark blades in their hands that have sharp points, they chop and stab each other, slicing and cutting until they perceive, 'I'm dead.' A cool breeze blows over them that restores their skin and flesh. Quickly healed, they stand back up and say to themselves, 'I'm alive again!' The other sentient beings say, 'I perceive that you are alive!' Because of these circumstances, it's called the *Samjna Hell.

8. "Furthermore, the sentient beings in that *Samjna Hell harbor harmful perceptions and attack each other. Holding small swords in their hands that have sharp points, they chop and stab each other, slicing and cutting until they perceive, 'I'm dead.' A cool breeze blows over them that restores their skin and flesh. Quickly healed, they stand back up and say to themselves, 'I'm alive again!' Other sentient beings say, 'I perceive that you are alive!' Because of these circumstances, it's called the *Samjna Hell.

The Lesser Hell of Black Sand

9. "After experiencing this punishment for a long time, those sentient beings escape the *Samjna Hell. They run in confusion, trying to save themselves from the prison of their past misdeeds, but they inadvertently arrive at the Black Sand Hell.

10. "A fierce and hot wind rises there that blows hot black sand. It sticks to the sentient beings and makes their whole bodies black as a dark cloud. That hot sand also burns their skin and all their flesh down to their bones. A black torch arises from those sinners, and it circles round and round them before returning to their bodies. This makes them to suffer as they're burnt to a crisp. They experience these pains because of their misdeeds, but their punishment isn't done yet, so they're prevented from dying.

The Lesser Hell of Boiling Excrement

11. "After experiencing these pains for a long time, those sentient beings escape the Black Sand Hell. They run in confusion, trying to save themselves from the prison of their past misdeeds, but they inadvertently arrive at the Boiling Excrement Hell.

12. "That hell is spontaneously filled with boiling excrement and iron balls. The sinners are forced to embrace the iron balls, which burn their bodies and hands up to their heads. No part of them isn't covered by it. They're made to feel around, pick it up, and put it into their mouths, which burns their tongue and gums. From their throat, it continues to their stomach and passes down through them. No part of them isn't burned by it. There are iron fanged serpents that bite them, too. They eat their skin and flesh down to their bones and into their marrow. The pain is bitter and extreme, and their sorrow is measureless. Their punishment isn't done yet, so they still don't die.

The Lesser Hell of Iron Nails

13. "After experiencing these pains for a long time, they escape the Boiling Excrement Hell. They run in confusion, trying to save themselves from the prison of their past misdeeds, but they [inadvertently] arrive at the Iron Nails Hell.

14. "Upon arriving, they fall into that hell and land on burning iron, which is then wrapped around their body. Their hands, feet, and heart are nailed all around with a total of 500 iron spikes. The pain is bitter and extreme, and they cry out and wail. Their punishment is not done yet, so they still don't die.

The Lesser Hell of Hunger

15. "After experiencing these pains for a long time, they escape the Iron Nails Hell. They run in confusion trying to save themselves [from the prison of their past misdeeds, but they inadvertently] arrive at the Hunger Hell.

16. "The wardens come and ask the sinner, 'What were you searching for when you came here?'

"They reply, 'I'm hungry!'

17. "The wardens then grab them and wrap their body in hot iron. They then force their mouth open with iron forceps and put a hot iron ball into it. It burns their gums and tongue. From their throat to their stomach, the iron ball passes down through them. No part of them isn't burned to a crisp. The pain is bitter and extreme, and they cry and wail. Their punishment is not done yet, so they still don't die.

The Lesser Hell of Thirst

18. "After experiencing these pains for a long time, they escape the Hunger Hell. They run in confusion trying to save themselves [from the prison of their past misdeeds, but they inadvertently] arrive at the Thirst Hell.

19. "The wardens ask the sinner, 'What were you searching for when you came here?'

"They reply, 'I'm thirsty!'

20. "The wardens grab them and wrap their body in hot iron. They then force their mouth open with hot iron forceps and pour molten copper into it. It burns their gums and tongue. From their throat to their stomach, the copper burns down through them. No part of them isn't burned to a crisp. The pain is bitter and extreme, and they cry and wail. Their punishment is done yet, so they still don't die.

The Lesser Hell of the Copper Cauldron

21. "After experiencing these pains for a long time, they escape the Thirst Hell. They run in confusion trying to save themselves from the prison of their past misdeeds, but they inadvertently arrive at the Copper Caldron Hell.

22. "The wardens there glare angrily at the sinner, grab them by their feet, and put them into the cauldron headfirst. They're stirred in boiling water, flowing up, down, and all around. They might go from the bottom to the top, the top to the bottom, or stay in the belly of the cauldron as their body cooks. They're like beans being stirred in boiling water, flowing up, down, and all around. Once they are thoroughly cooked, they disintegrate. The sinner in that cauldron goes up and down as they are boiled in the same way. They cry out and wail, being subjected to a multitude of pains. Their punishment isn't done yet, so they still don't die.

The Lesser Hell of Many Copper Cauldrons

23. "After experiencing these pains for a long time, they escape the Copper Caldron Hell. They run in confusion trying to save themselves from the prison of their past misdeeds, but they inadvertently arrive at the Many Copper Caldrons Hell.

24. "The Many Copper Caldrons Hell is 500 yojanas across. The demonic wardens there glare angrily at the sinner, grab them by their feet, and put them into a cauldron headfirst. They're stirred in boiling water, flowing up, down, and all around. They might go from the bottom to the top, the top to the bottom, or stay in the belly of the cauldron as their whole body cooks and disintegrates. They're like beans being stirred in boiling water, flowing up, down, and all around. The sinner in that cauldron is stirred up and down as they are boiled in the same way, going from the bottom to the top and the top to the bottom.

25. "Sometimes a hand or foot appears in the cauldron, a thigh or belly appears, or a head or face appears. The wardens use iron hooks to pick them out and put them in the other cauldrons. They cry out and wail, the pain is so bitter and extreme. Their punishment isn't done yet, so they still don't die.

The Lesser Hell of Grinding Stones

26. "After experiencing these pains for a long time, they escape the Many Copper Caldrons Hell. They run in confusion trying to save themselves from the prison of their past misdeeds, but they inadvertently arrive at the Grinding Stone Hell.

27. "The Grinding Stone Hell is 500 yojanas across. The wardens there are wrathful. They grab the sinner and slam them on hot stones. Their hands and feet are stretched out, and the wardens crush their body with an extremely hot stone. They turn and grind it into the sinner until their bones and flesh are pulverized and their blood flows out. The pain of their injuries is excruciating, and they cry out and wail. Their punishment isn't done yet, so they still don't die.

The Lesser Hell of Pus and Blood

28. "After experiencing these pains for a long time, they escape the Grinding Stone Hell. They run in confusion trying to save themselves from the prison of their past misdeeds, but they inadvertently arrive at the Pus and Blood Hell.

29. "That Pus and Blood Hell is 500 yojanas across. In that hell, there's spontaneous pus and blood that wells up boiling hot. The sinner runs through it going east or west, and the boiling hot pus and blood washes over their body. Their hands, feet, and head are cooked and disintegrate. They also scoop up the pus and blood to feed themselves, and then it washes over their gums and tongue. From their throat to their stomach, it burns down through them. No part of them isn't cooked and disintegrated. The pain is so bitter and extreme, and their many injuries are hard to endure. Their punishment isn't done yet, so they still don't die.

The Lesser Hell of Measuring Fire

30. "After experiencing these pains for a long time, they escape the Pus and Blood Hell. They run in confusion trying to save themselves from the prison of their past misdeeds, but they inadvertently arrive at the Measuring Fire Hell.

31. "The Measuring Fire Hell is 500 yojanas across. In that hell, there's a great mass of fire that spontaneously appears in front of the sinner. That fire is blazing hot. The wardens angrily drive them forward, forcing the sinner to hold an iron ladle and measure the mass of fire. When they measure the fire, it burns their hands, feet, and the rest of their body. The pain of those burns is excruciating, and they cry out and wail. Their punishment isn't done yet, so they still don't die.

The Lesser Hell of the River of Ash

32. "After experiencing these pains for a long time, they escape the Measuring Fire Hell. They run in confusion trying to save themselves from the prison of their past misdeeds, but they inadvertently arrive at the River of Ash Hell.

33. "The River of Ash Hell is 500 yojanas across and 500 yojanas deep. The ashen water is boiling hot, the noxious air is fiery and smoky, swirling waves crash into each other, and the echoing noise is terrible. From bottom to top, horizontal eight-inch iron thorns stab the sinner. Long swords grow on the river's shores. There are also wardens and wolves on its shores. Beyond the shores, sword trees grow that have eight-inch blades for limbs, leaves, flowers, and fruit that have sharp points.

34. "In the river, the sinner is pushed up and down by the waves, swirling around and being submerged. The iron thorns stab their body through and through. Their skin and flesh is cooked and disintegrates, and their blood flows out. The pain from so many wounds makes them lament bitterly. Their punishment isn't done yet, so they still don't die.

35. "After experiencing these pains for a long time, they escape that River of Ash Hell by getting onto its shore. On the shore, sharp swords cut and stab their bodies, and their hands and feet are cut to pieces.

36. "At that point, the wardens ask the sinner, 'What were you searching for when you came here?'

"The sinner responds, 'I'm hungry!'

37. "The wardens grab the sinner and slam him onto hot iron and stretch out his body. They pry open his mouth with iron forceps and pour molten copper into it. It burns their gums and tongue. From their throat to their stomach, it burns down through them. No part of them isn't burned to a crisp.

38. "Again, there are wolves with long, sharp teeth that come and bite the sinner, eating them alive. From there, the sinner is boiled in the River of Ash. They're stabbed by sharp thorns, and molten copper pours into their mouth.

39. "After the wolves bite them, they run in confusion up the sword trees. When they climb up a sword tree, the swords point downward. When they climb down a sword tree, the swords point upward. Their hands are cut as they climb, and their feet are cut when they stand. The swords stab their bodies, impaling them through and through. Their skin and flesh fall off, and their blood flows out until only white bones and connecting tendons remain.

40. "At the top of the sword trees, iron beak birds peck their skull, break it open, and eat their brain. The pain is bitter and extreme, and they cry out and wail. Their punishment isn't done yet, so they still don't to die.

The Lesser Hell of Iron Balls

41. "They're restored and get back in the River of Ash Hell, where they're pushed up and down by the waves. Swirling around and being submerged, the iron thorns stab their body through and through. Their skin and flesh is cooked and disintegrates, and their blood flows out. When only their white bones are left floating, a cool wind blows that restores them. Imprisoned by their past misdeeds, they inadvertently arrive at the Iron Ball Hell.

42. "The Iron Ball Hell is 500 yojanas across. After the sinner enters it, a hot iron ball spontaneously appears in front of them, and a demonic warden forces them to grab it. Their hands and feet are roasted and disintegrate, and their whole body is set on fire. They cry out in pain, being subjected to such a multitude of injuries. Their punishment isn't done yet, so they still don't die.

The Lesser Hell of Axes

43. "After experiencing these pains for a long time, they escape the Iron Ball Hell. They run in confusion trying to save themselves from the prison of their past misdeeds, but they inadvertently arrive at the Axes Hell.

44. "The Axes Hell is 500 yojanas across. After they enter that hell, the wardens there glare angrily, grab the sinner, and slam them on hot iron. They lop off their hands, feet, ears, nose, and torso with hot iron axes. The pain is so bitter and extreme, they cry out and wail. Their punishment isn't done yet, so they still don't die.

The Lesser Hell of Wolves

45. "After experiencing these pains for a long time, they escape the Axes Hell. They run in confusion trying to save themselves from the prison of their past misdeeds, but they inadvertently arrive at the Wolves Hell.

46. "The Wolves Hell is 500 yojanas across. After they enter there, packs of wolves come to bite, chew, and devour them. Flesh falls from their bones, and their blood flows out. The pain from so many wounds makes them lament bitterly. Their punishment isn't done yet, so they still don't die.

The Lesser Hell of Sword Trees

47. "After experiencing these pains for a long time, they escape the Wolves Hell. They run in confusion trying to save themselves from the prison of their past misdeeds, but they inadvertently arrive at the Sword Tree Hell.

48. "The Sword Tree Hell is 500 yojanas across. When the sinner enters the sword tree forest, a windstorm rises that blows the leaves from the sword trees, which fall on them. If the swords hit their hands, their hands are cut off. If they hit their feet, their feet are cut off. No part of their bodies and heads aren't cut to pieces. Iron beak birds land on their heads and peck out both of their eyes. The pain from so many wounds makes them lament bitterly. Their punishment isn't done yet, so they still don't die.

The Lesser Hell of Frozen Ice

49. "After experiencing these pains for a long time, they escape the Sword Tree Hell. They run in confusion trying to save themselves from the prison of their past misdeeds, but they inadvertently arrive at the Frozen Ice Hell.

50. "The Frozen Ice Hell is 500 yojanas across. After they enter there, a great windstorm rises that blows on them. Their whole body is frostbitten, and their skin and flesh fall off. The pain is so bitter and extreme, they cry out and wail. Afterward, their life ends."

The Great Hell of Kalasutra

51. The Buddha told the monks, "The Great Hell of Kalasutra has sixteen lesser hells that completely encircle it. Each of them is 500 yojanas across from the Kalasutra Hell to the Frozen Ice Hell.

52. "Why is it called the Kalasutra Hell? The wardens there grab the sinner, slam them onto hot iron, and stretch out their bodies. They use an iron cord to mark them with straight lines, then they use hot iron axes to chop along the lines that were marked on the sinner until they are reduced to a hundred thousand slices. Like a carpenter using a cord to mark wood and then chopping along the lines with a sharp axe to make a hundred thousand slices, they handle the sinner in the same way. The pain is so bitter and extreme that it's indescribable. Their punishment isn't done yet, so they still don't die. Therefore, it's called the Kalasutra Hell.

53. "Furthermore, the wardens of the Kalasutra Hell grab the sinner, slam them onto hot iron, and stretch out their body. They mark them with iron cords and then amputate their limbs with saws. Like a carpenter who marks wood with a cord and then uses a saw to cut it, they handle the sinner in the same way. The pain is so bitter and extreme that it's indescribable. Their punishment isn't done yet, so they still don't die. Therefore, it's called the Kalasutra Hell.

54. "Furthermore, the wardens of the Kalasutra Hell grab the sinner, slam them onto hot iron, and stretch out their body. They place hot iron cords on their body that burn through their skin and flesh, roast their bones, and boil their marrow. The pain is so bitter and extreme that it's indescribable. Their punishment isn't done yet, so they still don't die. Therefore, it's called the Kalasutra Hell.

55. "Furthermore, the wardens of the Kalasutra Hell hang hot iron cords in countless crisscrosses and then force the sinner to run between them. A wicked windstorm rises that blows the iron cords, causing them to fall on the sinner. The cords burn through their skin and flesh, roast their bones, and boil their marrow. The pain is so bitter and extreme that it's indescribable. Their punishment isn't done yet, so they still don't die. Therefore, it's called the Kalasutra Hell.

56. "Furthermore, the wardens of the Kalasutra Hell force the sinner to wear clothes made of hot iron cords. The cords burn through their skin and flesh, roast their bones, and boil their marrow. The pain is so bitter and extreme that it's indescribable. Their punishment isn't done yet, so they still don't die. Therefore, it's called the Kalasutra Hell.

57. "After the sinner experiences these pains for a long time, they escape the Kalasutra Hell. They run in confusion trying to save themselves from the prison of their past misdeeds, but they inadvertently arrive at the Black Sand Hell … the Frozen Ice Hell … afterward their life ends as before."

The Great Hell of *Samhata

58. The Buddha told the monks, "The Great Hell of *Samhata has sixteen lesser hells that completely encircle it. Each of them is 500 yojanas across.

59. "Why is it called the *Samhata Hell? There are great stone boulders in that hell, pairs of which face each other. When the sinner enters, the boulders spontaneously come together, crushing their body and grinding their bones and flesh. The boulders then return to their original place. It's like a tree is thrown into another tree and snaps back again. Those sinners are handled in the same way. The pain is so bitter and extreme that it's indescribable. Their punishment isn't done yet, so they still don't die. Therefore, it's called the *Samhata Hell.

60. "Furthermore, the *Samhata Hell has a great iron elephant. Its entire body is in flames. It roars and tramples the sinner, twisting and turning on top of them. Their body is pulverized and their blood flows out. The pain is so bitter and extreme that it's indescribable. Their punishment isn't done yet, so they still don't die. Therefore, it's called the *Samhata Hell.

61. "Furthermore, the wardens of the *Samhata Hell grab the sinner and put them on grinding stones. They grind them until their bones and flesh are pulverized and their blood flows out. The pain is so bitter and extreme that it's indescribable. Their punishment isn't done yet, so they still don't die. Therefore, it's called the *Samhata Hell.

62. "Furthermore, the wardens of the *Samhata Hell grab the sinners and lay them on a large stone. They crush them with another large stone until their bones and flesh are pulverized and their blood flows out. The pain is so bitter and extreme, being subjected to a multitude of injuries. Their punishment isn't done yet, so they still don't die. Therefore, it's called the *Samhata Hell.

63. "Furthermore, the wardens of the *Samhata Hell take the sinners and lay them in an iron mortar. They use an iron pestle to pound them from head to foot until their skin and flesh is pulverized and their blood flows out. The pain is so bitter and extreme that it's indescribable. Their punishment isn't done yet, so they still don't die. Therefore, it's called the *Samhata Hell.

64. "After the sinner experiences these pains for a long time, they escape from the *Samhata Hell. They run in confusion trying to save themselves from the prison of their past misdeeds, but they inadvertently arrive at the Black Sand Hell … the Frozen Ice Hell … afterward their life ends as before."

The Great Hell of *Roravana

65. The Buddha told the monks, "The Great Hell of *Roravana has sixteen lesser hells that completely encircle it. Each of them is 500 yojanas across.

66. "Why is it called the *Roravana Hell? The wardens there grab the sinner and throw them into a huge cauldron. Stirring them in boiling water, they cook the sinner. They cry out and wail, the pain is so bitter and extreme as they're subjected to a multitude of injuries. Their punishment isn't done yet, so they still don't die. Therefore, it's called the *Roravana Hell.

67. "Furthermore, the wardens of the *Roravana Hell grab the sinner and throw them into a huge iron pot. Stirring them in boiling water, they cook the sinner. They cry out and wail, the pain is so bitter and extreme. Their punishment isn't done yet, so they still don't die. Therefore, it's called the *Roravana Hell.

68. "Furthermore, the wardens of the *Roravana Hell take the sinner and put them in a great iron cauldron. Stirring them in boiling water, they cook the sinner. They cry out and wail, the pain is so bitter and extreme. Their punishment isn't done yet, so they still don't die. Therefore, it's called the *Roravana Hell.

69. "Furthermore, the wardens of the *Roravana Hell take the sinner and throw them into a small cauldron. Stirring them in boiling water, they cook the sinner. They cry out and wail, the pain is so bitter and extreme. Their punishment isn't done yet, so they still don't die. Therefore, it's called the *Roravana Hell.

70. "Furthermore, the wardens of the *Roravana Hell take the sinner, throw them on a huge frying pan, and turn them over as they cook. They cry out and wail, the pain is so bitter and extreme. Their punishment isn't done yet, so they still don't die. Therefore, it's called the *Roravana Hell.

71. "After experiencing these pains for a long time, they escape from the *Roravana Hell. They run in confusion trying to save themselves from the prison of their past misdeeds, but they inadvertently arrive at the Black Sand Hell … the Frozen Ice Hell … afterward their life ends as before."

The Great Hell of *Maharoravana

72. The Buddha told the monks, "The *Maharoravana Hell has sixteen lesser hells that completely encircle it. [Each of them is 500 yojanas across.]

73. "Why is it called the *Maharoravana Hell? The wardens there take the sinner and put them in a huge iron kettle.

78. "After experiencing these pains for a long time, they escape the *Maharoravana Hell. They run in confusion trying to save themselves from the prison of their past misdeeds, but they inadvertently arrive at the Black Sand Hell … the Frozen Ice Hell … afterward their life ends as before."

The Great Hell of Tapana

79. The Buddha told the monks, "The Great Hell of Tapana has sixteen lesser hells that encircle it. [Each of them is 500 yojanas across.]

80. "Why is it called the Great Hell of Tapana? At that point, the wardens put the sinner in an iron city. That city is in flames, glowing red inside and out. It burns and roasts the sinner, and their skin and flesh is burned to a crisp. The pain is so bitter and extreme as they're subjected to a multitude of injuries. Their punishment isn't done yet, so they still don't die. Therefore, it's called the Tapana Hell.

81. "Furthermore, the wardens of the Tapana Hell lead the sinner into an iron chamber. That chamber is in flames, glowing red inside and out. It burns and roasts the sinner, and their skin and flesh is burned to a crisp. The pain is so bitter and extreme as they're subjected to a multitude of injuries. Their punishment isn't done yet, so they still don't die. Therefore, it's called the Tapana Hell.

82. "Furthermore, the wardens of the Tapana Hell take the sinner and put them up in an iron tower. That tower is in flames, glowing red inside and out. It burns and roasts the sinner, and their skin and flesh is burned to a crisp. The pain is so bitter and extreme as they're subjected to a multitude of injuries. Their punishment isn't done yet, so they still don't die. Therefore, it's called the Tapana Hell.

83. "Furthermore, the wardens of the Tapana Hell take the sinner and throw them into a large iron kiln. That kiln is in flames, glowing red inside and out. It burns and roasts the sinner, and their skin and flesh is burned to a crisp. The pain is so bitter and extreme as they're subjected to a multitude of injuries. Their punishment isn't done yet, so they still don't die. Therefore, it's called the Tapana Hell.

84. "Furthermore, the wardens of the Tapana Hell take the sinner and throw them onto a huge frying pan. That frying pan is in flames, glowing red inside and out. It burns and roasts the sinner, and their skin and flesh is burned to a crisp. The pain is so bitter and extreme as they're subjected to a multitude of injuries. Their punishment isn't done yet, so they still don't die. [Therefore, it's called the Tapana Hell.]

85. "After experiencing these pains for a long time, they escape the Tapana Hell. They run in confusion trying to save themselves from the prison of their past misdeeds, but they inadvertently arrive at the Black Sand Hell … the Frozen Ice Hell … afterward their life ends as before."

The Great Hell of Mahatapana

86. The Buddha told the monks, "The Great Hell of Mahatapana has sixteen lesser hells that encircle it. Each of them is 500 yojanas across.

87. "Why is it called the Mahatapana Hell? The wardens there lead the sinner into an iron city. That city is in flames, glowing red inside and out. It burns the sinner with an even more intense roasting fire. Their skin and flesh is burned to a crisp. The pain is so bitter and extreme as they're subjected to a multitude of injuries. Their punishment isn't done yet, so they still don't die. Therefore, it's called the Mahatapana Hell.

88. "Furthermore, the wardens of the Mahatapana Hell lead the sinner into an iron chamber. That chamber is in flames, glowing red inside and out. It burns the sinner with an even more intense roasting fire. Their skin and flesh is burned to a crisp. The pain is so bitter and extreme as they're subjected to a multitude of injuries. Their punishment isn't done yet, so they still don't die. Therefore, it's called the Mahatapana Hell.

89. "Furthermore, the wardens of the Mahatapana Hell take the sinner and put them up in an iron tower. That tower is in flames, glowing red inside and out. It burns the sinner with an even more intense roasting fire. Their skin and flesh is burned to a crisp. The pain is so bitter and extreme as they're subjected to a multitude of injuries. Their punishment isn't done yet, so they still don't die. Therefore, it's called the Mahatapana Hell.

90. "Furthermore, the wardens of the Mahatapana Hell take the sinner and throw them into a large iron kiln. That kiln is in flames, glowing red inside and out. It burns the sinner with an even more intense roasting fire. Their skin and flesh is burned to a crisp. The pain is so bitter and extreme as they're subjected to a multitude of injuries. Their punishment isn't done yet, so they still don't die. Therefore, it's called the Mahatapana Hell.

91. "Furthermore, the Mahatapana Hell has a large spontaneous fire pit. The fire rages and blazes. There's a pair of large fire mounds on two sides of that pit. The wardens there grab the sinner, skewer them on iron forks, and plant them in the fire. It burns their bodies with an even more intense roasting fire. Their skin and flesh is burned to a crisp. The pain is so bitter and extreme as they're subjected to a multitude of injuries. Their punishment isn't done yet, so they still don't die. [Therefore, it's called the Mahatapana Hell.]

92. "After experiencing these pains for a long time, they escape the Mahatapana Hell. They run in confusion trying to save themselves from the prison of their past misdeeds, but they inadvertently arrive at the Black Sand Hell … the Frozen Ice Hell … afterward their life ends as before."

The Great Hell Avici

93. The Buddha told the monks, "The Great Hell of Avici has sixteen lesser hells that encircle it. Each of them is 500 yojanas across.

94. "Why is it called the Avici Hell? The wardens there grab the sinner and skin them from head to foot. They then wrap the sinner in their own skin and tie them to a flaming cartwheel. That burning cart has swift horses, and the sinner is rolled over a hot iron ground. Turning round and round, their body is pulverized and roasted until their skin and flesh falls off. The pain is so bitter and extreme as they're subjected to a multitude of injuries. Their punishment isn't done yet, so they still don't die. Therefore, it's called the Avici Hell.

95. "Furthermore, the Great Hell of Avici has a great iron city. That city has great fires that rise from all four sides. The eastern flames go west. The western flames go east. The southern flames go north. The northern flames go south. The flames from above go down. The flames from below go up. These blazing flames swirl around, leaving no empty space between them. In the midst of this, the sinner runs east or west, and their body is burned. Their skin and flesh is burned to a crisp. The pain is so bitter and extreme as they're subjected to a multitude of injuries. Their punishment isn't done yet, so they still don't die. Therefore, it's called the Avici Hell.

96. "Furthermore, there's an iron city in the Great Hell of Avici that's blazing and glowing hot. In the midst of it, the sinner's body burns brightly. Their skin and flesh is burned to a crisp. The pain is so bitter and extreme as they're subjected to a multitude of injuries. Their punishment isn't done yet, so they still don't die. Therefore, it's called the Avici Hell.

97. "Furthermore, after the sinners have been in the Great Hell of Avici for a long time, the gates open. They run for it, trying to escape to somewhere else. As they run, their limbs and tendons burst into flames. It's like a strong man running with a large grass torch in hand that burns brightly in the wind. The sinner is likewise as they run. When they are about to reach the gate, it spontaneously closes, and the sinner is forced to run on hot iron, which burns their bodies. Their skin and flesh is burned to a crisp. The pain is so bitter and extreme as they're subjected to a multitude of injuries. Their punishment isn't done yet, so they still don't die. Therefore, it's called the Avici Hell.

98. "Furthermore, when the sinners in the Avici Hell lift their gaze, they all they see is ugly forms. Their ears only hear ugly sounds. Their noses only smell bad odors. Their bodies only feel painful contacts. Their minds only remember ugly things. Moreover, there's not a finger snap of time that they aren't in pain. Therefore, it's called the Avici Hell.

99. "After experiencing these pains for a long time, they escape the Avici Hell. They run in confusion trying to save themselves from the prison of their past misdeeds, but they inadvertently arrive at the Black Sand Hell … the Frozen Ice Hell … afterward their life ends as before."

Conclusion to the Great Hells

100. At that point, the Bhagavan spoke in verse:

• "Doing unskillful physical deeds
And unskillful verbal and mental deeds,
A person falls to the *Samjna Hell,
Its terrors giving them goosebumps.
• Bad intention towards father and mother,
The Buddha, and his disciples
Falls to the Kalasutra Hell,
Where the suffering is indescribable.
• Those who only do three evil deeds
And don't cultivate the three good conducts Fall to the *Samhata Hell,
Where their suffering is indescribable.
• Angry and harboring harmful intent,
The bloody-handed who kill beings
And practice a variety of evil deeds
Fall to the *Roravana Hell.
• Making a habit of having wrong views,
Those hindered by the snare of craving
Do such despicable practices
That they fall to the *Maharoravana Hell.
• Those who are always setting fires
And burning up sentient beings
Fall to the Tapana Hell,
Where they burn for a long time.
• Those who discard the fruit of good deeds,
The pure path of those good fruits,
And practice many bad actions
Fall to the Mahatapana Hell.
• Those who commit extreme crimes
Surely are born in evil destinies;
Falling to the Avici Hell,
Their punishments are indescribable.
• The *Samjna and Kalasutra Hells,
The *Samhata and two *Roravanas,
The Tapana and Mahatapana,
And the Avici Hell is eighth.
• These eight great hells
Are blazing with the light and color of fire.
They are the results of past evils,
And each has sixteen lesser hells."

The Great Vajra Mountains Protect the World

101. The Buddha told the monks, "There's a great wind that blows between those two chains of great diamond mountains, which is called Samkhya. If this wind were to reach the four continents and 8,000 islands, it would blow the Earth with its named mountains and Sumeru the mountain king five kilometers off the ground. They might well soar fifty kilometers into the sky, and they would all be reduced to dust. Like a handful of fine chaff thrown into the air by a strong man, that great wind would likewise blow the Earth away. Those two great diamond mountain chains block this wind, preventing it from coming. Monks, you should know that those diamond mountains benefit many people. They came about as a result of the conduct of sentient beings.

102. "Moreover, the wind between those two mountain chains is blazing and intensely hot. If that wind were to reach the four continents, the sentient beings, mountains, streams, rivers, seas, plants, trees, and forests there would be scorched and wither. As when moisture leaves the plants during the height of summer and they quickly turn brown and wither, that wind would be the same. If it reached this world, the hot air would bake it in the same way. Those two diamond mountain chains block this wind, preventing it from coming. Monks, you should know that those diamond mountains benefit many people. They came about as a result of the conduct of sentient beings.

103. "Moreover, the wind between those two mountain chains is foul smelling, impure, rank, and terrible. If it were to reach this world, it would stink up the sentient beings here, and they would go blind. Those two diamond mountain chains block this wind, preventing it from coming. Monks, you should know that those diamond mountains benefit many people. They came about as a result of the conduct of sentient beings.

Another Ten Hells

104. "Moreover, there's another ten hells between those two mountains chains: First is *Abhra, second is *Nirabhra, third is *Ahaha, fourth is Why, fifth is Sheep Bleating, seventh is Sugandhika, seventh is Utpala, eighth is Kumuda, ninth is Pundarika, and tenth is Padma.

105. "What's the *Abhra Hell? Sinners in that hell are spontaneous born with bodies like thick clouds, so it's called *Abhra.

106. "What's called the *Nirabhra [Hell]? Punished sentient beings in that hell are spontaneously born with bodies like strips of meat, so it's called *Nirabhra.

107. "What's called the *Ahaha [Hell]? Punished sentient beings in that hell suffer pain from cuts to their bodies. They all say, 'Ah! Ah!' so it's called *Ahaha.

108. "What's called the Why [Hell]? Punished sentient beings in that hell suffer bitter pain from cuts and have no refuge from it. They all say, 'Why?' so it's called Why.

109. "What's called the Sheep Bleating [Hell]? Punished sentient beings in that hell suffer the pain of cuts to their bodies. They want to raise their voices and speak, but they can't move their tongues. They sound like sheep bleating, so it's called Sheep Bleating.

110. "What's called the Sugandhika [Hell]? In that hell, the whole hell is all black like the color of a sugandhika flower, so it's called Sugandhika.

111. "What's called the Utpala Hell? In that hell, the whole hell is all blue like the utpala flower, so it's called Utpala.

112. "What's called the Kumuda [Hell]? In that hell, the whole hell is all crimson like the color of a kumuda flower, so it's called Kumuda.

113. "What's called the Pundarika [Hell]? In that hell, the whole hell is all white like the color of the pundarika flower, so it's called Pundarika.

114. "What's called the Padma [Hell]? In that hell, the whole hell is red like the color of the padma flower, so it's called Padma."

The Passage of Time in the Ten Hells

115. The Buddha told the monks, "Take for example a sixty-four bushel grain bin filled up with sesame seeds. A person takes one seed from it every hundred years until it's empty. In the *Abhra Hell, their punishment wouldn't be done yet. Similarly, twenty lifetimes in the *Abhra Hell is equal to one lifetime in the *Nirabhra Hell. Twenty lifetimes in the *Nirabhra Hell is equal to one lifetime in the *Ahaha Hell. Twenty lifetimes in the *Ahaha Hell is equal to one lifetime in the Why Hell. Twenty lifetimes in the Why Hell is equal to one lifetime in the Sheep Bleating Hell. Twenty lifetimes in the Sheep Bleating Hell is equal to one lifetime in the Sugandhika Hell. Twenty lifetimes in the Sugandhika Hell is equal to one lifetime in the Utpala Hell. Twenty lifetimes in the Utpala Hell is equal to one lifetime in the Kumuda Hell. Twenty lifetimes in the Kumuda Hell is equal to one lifetime in the Pundarika Hell. Twenty lifetimes in the Pundarika Hell is equal to one lifetime in the Padma Hell. Twenty lifetimes in the Padma Hell is equivalent to one medium eon. Twenty medium eons is called a great eon.

The Monk Kokalika's Fate

116. "In the Padma Hell, the fire is bright, hot, and blazing. Even if the sinner moves a hundred yojanas away from the fire, they'd still be burned by it. From sixty yojanas away, their ears are deafened, and they hear nothing. From fifty yojanas away, both their eyes are blinded, and they don't see anything.

117. "The monk Kokalika who had harbored bad intent and slandered Sariputra and Maudgalyayana fell to the Padma Hell after his body broke up and his life ended.

118. "At the time, the Brahma King spoke in verse:

• "'A man was born
With a hatchet in his mouth
That he used to chop people
With his harsh speech.
• He praised the blameworthy
And criticized the praiseworthy.
He did bad verbal deeds
But was punished physically.
• He was skilled in getting profit;
The fault of that was small.
When he slandered noble people,
His punishment was severe.
• A hundred thousand lives in the *Nirabhra Hell
And forty-one lives in the *Abhra Hell,
That's the disaster of slandering noble people,
Which resulted from his bad intent and words.'

119. The Buddha told the monks, "That Brahma King spoke such verses, which were true words approved by the Buddha. Why is that? Now, I am a Tathagata, Arhat, and Completely Awakened One who also says about him:

• "'A man was born
With a hatchet in his mouth
That he used to chop people
With his harsh speech.
• He praised the blameworthy
And criticized the praiseworthy.
He did bad verbal deeds
But was punished physically.
• He was skilled in getting profit;
The fault of that was small.
When he slandered noble people,
His punishment was severe.
• A hundred thousand lives in the *Nirabhra Hell
And forty-one lives in the *Abhra Hell,
That's the disaster of slandering noble people,
Which resulted from his bad intent and words.'

King Yama

120. The Buddha told the monks, "King Yama's palace is inside the great diamond mountain south of Jambudvipa. That king rules an area that's 6,000 yojanas across. His city has seven walls, seven balustrades, seven nettings, and seven rows of trees … and countless birds sing to each other peacefully as before.

121. "Every three days and nights, a large copper cauldron spontaneously appears in front of that King Yama. If the cauldron appears inside his palace, the King is frightened when he sees it and leaves his palace. If the cauldron appears outside his palace, the king is frightened when he sees it and goes inside his palace.

122. "A great warden of hell then grabs King Yama and lays him down on hot iron. The warden forces his mouth open with iron forceps and pours molten copper into it. It burns his gums and tongue. From his throat to his stomach, it burns down through him. No part of him isn't burned to a crisp. After this punishment is done, he rejoins his maidens, and they entertain each other. His great ministers likewise receive the same fortunes."

The Three Heavenly Messengers

123. The Buddha told the monks, "There are three [heavenly] messengers. What are the three? The first is old age, the second is illness, and the third is death. There are sentient beings whose physical conduct is bad, whose verbal conduct is bad, and whose mental intent is bad. When their bodies break up and their lives end, they fall to Hell.

124. "The wardens of hell bring these sinners to King Yama. Upon arriving, the wardens tell the King, 'This one was summoned by the heavenly messengers. Please, great king, question them well about their account.'

125. "The King asks the sinner, 'Didn't you see the first [heavenly] messenger?'

"The sinner responds, 'I didn't.'

126. "The king again says, 'While you were among humans, didn't you see old people with white hair and teeth fallen out? Whose eyes were cataracted, whose skin was loose and wrinkled? Who used canes and groaned as they walked? Whose bodies trembled and were weak? Didn't you see those people?'

"The sinner says, 'I saw them.'

127. "The king again says, 'Didn't you think to yourself, "I'll be that way, too!"?'

"That person responds, 'I was being careless at the time and didn't realize that about myself.'

128. "The king again says to them, 'You were careless with yourself. You couldn't cultivate your body, speech, and mind or mend your evil ways and follow good ones. Now, you'll be made to recognise the pain of your carelessness!'

129. "The king also tells them, 'Now, you'll get your punishment. It wasn't your parents' mistake, not your brothers' mistake, not the Lord of Gods or your previous ancestors' mistake, not your associates', employees', or servants' mistake, nor was it the mistake of ascetics or priests. It was your own evil, and now you'll get what's coming to you.'

130. "Having questioned the sinner about the first heavenly messenger, King Yama then asks them about the second heavenly messenger. 'Didn't you see the second heavenly messenger?'

"'I didn't.'

131. "The king again asks, 'While you were human before, didn't you see people who were sick and gaunt, laying with blankets in their own excrement and urine and smelling foul? Who couldn't leave their home and needed someone to give them food and drink? Whose every joint was painful and sore? Who were crying and moaning, unable to speak? Didn't you see them?"

"They answer, 'I saw them.'

132. "The king replied, 'Well, didn't you think to yourself, 'These pains of illness will happen to me, too!"?

"The sinner responds, 'I was being careless at the time and didn't realize that about myself.'

133. "The king again says, 'You were careless with yourself. You couldn't cultivate your body, speech, and mind or mend your evil ways and follow the good ones. Now, you'll be made to recognise the pain of your carelessness!'

134. "The king also tells them, 'Now, you'll get your punishment. It wasn't your parents' mistake, not your brothers' mistake, not the Lord of Gods or your previous ancestors' mistake, not your associates', employees', or servants' mistake, nor was it the mistake of ascetics or priests. It was your own evil, and now you'll get what's coming to you.'

135. "Having questioned the sinner about the second heavenly messenger, King Yama then asks them about the third heavenly messenger. 'Didn't you see the third heavenly messenger?'

"They answer, 'I didn't.'

136. "The king also asked, 'While you were human before, didn't you see someone who died? Whose body had broken up and their life ended? Whose faculties had forever ceased? Whose body is stiff like a withered tree, thrown onto a charnel ground? That's eaten by birds and animals, dressed in a coffin, or cremated? Didn't you see them?'

"The sinner responds, 'I actually did see them.'

137. "The king replies, 'Didn't you think to yourself, "I'll die, too. I'll be no different than that!"'

"The sinner responds, 'I was being careless at the time and didn't realize that about myself.'

138. "The king again says, 'You were careless with yourself. You couldn't cultivate your body, speech, and mind or mend your evil ways and follow the good ones. Now, you'll be made to recognise the pain of your carelessness!'

139. "The king also tells them, 'Now, you'll get your punishment. It wasn't your parents' mistake, not your brothers' mistake, not the Lord of Gods or your previous ancestors' mistake, not your associates', employees', or servants' mistake, nor was it the mistake of ascetics or priests. It was your own evil, and now you'll get what's coming to you.'

140. "After questioning them about the three heavenly messengers, King Yama entrusts the sinner to the wardens of hell. The wardens leads the sinner to one of the great hells. The greats hells are a hundred yojanas across and a hundred yojanas deep."

141. The Bhagavan then spoke in verse:

• "With four gates on four sides
And streets that connect them,
That hell's walls are made of iron,
And iron nets cover it.
• The ground beneath it is iron
That spontaneously bursts in flames.
It's a hundred yojanas across,
Standing firm and immovable.
• Black smoke rises from bright fires,
Burning red, they're hard to look at.
With sixteen lesser hells,
Its fires blaze as a result of doing evil."

King Yama Wishes for Liberation

142. The Buddha told the monks, "King Yama then had this thought occur to him, 'The world's sentient beings are deluded and unaware. Their physical conduct is bad, and their verbal and mental conduct is bad. After their lives end, few of them won't experience this suffering. If the world's sentient beings could mend their evil ways and cultivate good physical, verbal, and mental conduct, they would experience happiness when their lives end as gods and spirits.

143. "If I'm born among humans after my life ends, perhaps I'll encounter a Tathagata. I'll cut off my hair and beard and put on the three Dharma robes in the correct teaching. I'll leave home and cultivate the path. I'll cultivate the pure religious life with pure faith. Having accomplished the task, I'll put an end to birth and death. I'll realize for myself in the present life that I won't be subject to another existence.'"

144. The Bhagavan then spoke in verse:

• "Though they see heaven's messengers,
Still, they are careless.
Such people always feel sorrow
And are born in despicable places.
• If they're wise people
Who see the heavenly messengers,
They stay close to the noble teaching
And don't act carelessly.
• Seeing and knowing it, they feel fearful
Of birth, old age, illness, and death.
Not experiencing those things is liberation,
The end of birth, old age, illness, and death.
• They find the place of safety
And attain the unconditioned in the present.
Having forded sorrows and fears,
They are certain to parinirvana."

CHAPTER 5: NAGAS AND GARUDAS

Introduction

1. The Buddha told the monks, "There are four kinds of naga. What are the four? The first is egg-born, the second is womb-born, the third is born of moisture, and the fourth is born spontaneously. These are the four kinds.

2. "There are four kinds of garudas. What are the four? The first is egg-born, the second is womb-born, the third is born of moisture, and the fourth is born spontaneously. These are the four kinds.

The Palaces of Nagas and Garudas

3. "At the bottom of the great ocean, the Naga King Sagara has a palace that's 80,000 yojanas across. That palace has seven walls, seven balustrades, seven nettings, and seven rows of trees encircling it with decorations made of the seven treasures … and countless birds sing to each other peacefully as before.

4. "Between Sumeru the mountain king and Mount Khadiraka, the naga kings Nanda and Upananda have their two palaces. Each is 6,000 yojanas across. Those palaces have seven walls, seven balustrades, seven nettings, and seven rows of trees that encircle them with decorations made of the seven treasures … and countless birds sing to each other peacefully as before.

5. "On the north shore of the great ocean, there's a great tree called Kutasalmali that's shared between the naga kings and garudas. The area under the tree is seven yojanas around, and it's a hundred yojanas tall. It's leaves and limbs spread out in all four directions to cover fifty yojanas.

6. "To the east of this great tree, there's an egg-born naga king's palace and an egg-born garuda's palace. Each of their palaces are 6,000 yojanas across. Those palaces have seven walls, seven balustrades, seven nettings, and seven rows of trees that encircle them with decorations made of the seven treasures … and countless birds sing to each other peacefully as before.

7. "To the south of the tree Kutasalmali, there's a womb-born naga king's palace and a womb-born garuda's palace. Each of their palaces is 6,000 yojanas across. Those palaces have seven walls, seven balustrades, seven nettings, and seven rows of trees that encircle them with decorations made of the seven treasures … and countless birds sing to each other peacefully as before.

8. "To the west of the tree Kutasalmali, there's an moisture-born naga king's palace and an moisture-born garuda's palace. Each of their palaces is 6,000 yojanas across. Those palaces have seven walls, seven balustrades, seven nettings, and seven rows of trees that encircle them with decorations made of the seven treasures … and countless birds sing to each other peacefully as before.

9. "To the north of that tree Kutasalmali, there's a spontaneously born naga king's palace and a spontaneously born garuda's palace. Each of their palaces is 6,000 yojanas across. Those palaces have seven walls, seven balustrades, seven nettings, and seven rows of trees that encircle them with decorations made of the seven treasures … and countless birds sing to each other peacefully as before.

The Way Garudas Hunt Nagas

10. "If an egg-born garuda wants to catch and eat a naga, it flies down from a eastern limb of the tree Kutasalmali. It hits the ocean's surface with its wings, and the ocean parts for a distance of 200 yojanas. It grabs and eats an egg-born naga as it likes, but it can't catch womb-born, moisture-born, or spontaneously born nagas.

11. "If a womb-born garuda wants to catch and eat an egg-born naga, it flies down from an eastern limb of the tree. It hits the ocean's surface with its wings, and the ocean parts for a distance of 200 yojanas. The garuda then grabs and eats an egg-born naga as it likes.

12. "If a womb-born garuda wants to [catch and] eat a womb-born naga, it flies down from a southern limb of the tree. It hits ocean's surface with its wings, and the ocean parts for a distance of 400 yojanas. It grabs and eats a womb-born naga as it likes, but it can't catch moisture-born or spontaneously born nagas.

13. "If a moisture-born garuda wants to [catch and] eat an egg-born naga, it flies down from an eastern limb of the tree. It hits the ocean's surface with its wings, and the ocean parts for a distance of 200 yojanas. The garuda then grabs and eats an egg-born naga as it likes.

14. "If a moisture-born garuda wants to [catch and] eat a womb-born naga, it flies down from a southern limb of the tree. It hits the ocean's surface with its wings, and the ocean parts for a distance of 400 yojanas. The garuda then grabs and eats a womb-born naga as it likes.

15. "If a moisture-born garuda wants to [catch and] eat a moisture-born naga, it flies down from a western limb of the tree. It hits the ocean's surface with its wings, and the ocean parts for a distance of 800 yojanas. The garuda then grabs and eats a womb-born naga as it likes, but it can't catch a spontaneously born naga and eat it.

16. "If a spontaneously born garuda wants to [catch and] eat an egg-born naga, it flies down from an eastern limb of the tree. It hits the ocean's surface with its wings, and the ocean parts for a distance of 200 yojanas. The garuda then grabs and eats an egg-born naga as it likes.

17. "If a spontaneously born garuda wants to [catch and] eat a womb-born naga, it flies down from a southern limb of the tree. It hits the ocean's surface with its wings, and the ocean parts for a distance of 400 yojanas. The garuda then grabs and eats a womb-born naga as it likes.

18. "If a spontaneously born garuda wants to [catch and] eat a moisture-born naga, it flies down from a western limb of the tree. It hits the ocean's surface with its wings, and the ocean parts for a distance of 800 yojanas. The garuda then grabs and eats a womb-born naga [as it likes].

19. "If a spontaneously born garuda wants to [catch and] eat a spontaneously born naga, it flies down from a northern limb of the tree. It hits the ocean's surface with its wings, and the ocean parts for a distance of 1,600 yojanas. The garuda then grabs and eats a spontaneously born naga [as it likes].

20. "Again, there are great nagas that garudas can't catch. Which are they? Naga King Sagara, Naga King Nanda, Naga King Upananda, Naga King *Airavana, Naga King Dhrtarastra, Naga King Sudarsana, Naga King *Aloka, Naga King Kakuda, Naga King *Kapila, Naga King *Apalala, Naga King *Kanu (?), Naga King *Gokanu (?), Naga King Anavatapta, Naga King Supratisthita, Naga King *Usamkavata (?), and Naga King Taksaka. These great naga kings can't be caught and eaten by garudas. Nor can garudas catch and eat the nagas who live near them."

Wrong Views about Rebirth in Heaven

21. The Buddha told the monks, "If sentient beings uphold the naga precepts, their minds turn to nagas and perfect the way of nagas, and then they are born among nagas. If sentient beings uphold the garuda precepts, their minds turn to garudas and perfect the way of garudas, and then they are born among garudas.

22. "Sometimes, sentient beings uphold the precepts of rabbits and owls, and their minds turn to perfect the ways of rabbits and owls. They then fall [to rebirth] among rabbits and owls. Suppose sentient beings uphold the precepts of dogs, the precepts of cattle, the precepts of deer, the precepts of mutes, the precepts of Manibhadra, the precepts of fire, the precepts of the moon, precepts of the sun, precepts of water, precepts of giving offerings to fire, or the law of asceticism and defilement and that they think, 'I'm upholding this … way of mutes … way of Manibhadra … way of fire … way of the sun and moon … way of water … way of giving offerings to fire … way of asceticism and defilement … I uphold these virtues in order to be born in heaven.' These are wrong views."

23. The Buddha said, "I say people with these wrong views are surely headed for two places. Either they'll be born in hell or they'll fall to an animal birth.

Various Wrong Views

24. "Sometimes, ascetics and priests have such theories and views as these: 'Self and the world are permanent. This is true; anything else is false.' 'Self and the world are impermanent. This is true; anything else is false.' 'Self and the world are both permanent and impermanent. This is true; anything else is false.' 'Self and the world are neither permanent nor impermanent. This is true; anything else is false.'

25. "'Self and the world are limited. This is true; anything else is false.' 'Self and the world are unlimited. This is true; anything else is false.' 'Self and the world are both limited and unlimited. This is true; anything else is false.' 'Self and the world are neither limited nor unlimited. This is true; anything else is false.'

26. "'The soul is the body. This is true; anything else is false.' 'The soul and the body are different. This is true; anything else is false.' '[The body] neither has a soul nor lacks a soul. This is true; anything else is false.' 'There's no soul and no body. This is true; anything else is false.'

27. "Some people say, 'There'll thus be another death [in a future life]. This is true; anything else is false.' Others say, 'There won't be another death. This is true; anything else is false.' Sometimes, they say, 'There'll thus be another death, and there won't be another death. This is true; anything else is false.' Some also say, 'It's not the case that there'll be another death or won't be another death. This is true; anything else is false.'

Views about Permanence and Impermanence

28. "Suppose those ascetics and priests create such a theory and such a view as this: '[Self and] the world are permanent. This is true; anything else is false.' They have a view of self, a view of soul, a view of body, and a view of the world regarding conditioned things. Therefore, they say, 'Self and the world are permanent.'

29. "There are those who say, '[Self and the world are] impermanent. [This is true; anything else is false.]' They have a view of self, a view of soul, a view of body, and a view of the world regarding conditioned things. Therefore, they say, 'Self and the world are impermanent.'

30. "There are those who say, '[Self and the world are] permanent and impermanent. [This is true; anything else is false.]' They have a view of self, a view of soul, a view of body, and a view of the world regarding conditioned things. Therefore, they say, '[Self and] the world are permanent and impermanent.'

31. "There are those who say, '[Self and the world are] neither permanent nor impermanent. [This is true; anything else is false.]' They have a view of self, a view of soul, a view of body, and a view of the world regarding conditioned things. Therefore, they say, 'Self and the world are neither permanent nor impermanent.'

Views about Being Limited and Unlimited

32. "There are those who say, 'Self and the world are limited. [This is true; anything else is false.]' They have a view of self, a view of soul, a view of body, and a view of the world regarding conditioned things. They say, 'The soul is limited, the body is limited, and the world is limited. From its conception in the womb until it reaches the charnel ground, the four elements possessed by the body thus change. After not more than seven births, the body and soul's actions come to an end, and the self enters the class of purity.' Therefore, they say, 'Self [and the world] are limited.'

33. "There are those who say, 'Self and the world are unlimited. [This is true; anything else is false.]' They have a view of self, a view of soul, a view of body, and a view of the world regarding conditioned things. They say, 'The soul is unlimited, the body is unlimited, and the world is unlimited. From its conception in the womb until it reaches the charnel ground, the four elements possessed by the body thus change. After not more than seven births, the body and soul's action come to an end, and the self enters the class of purity.' Therefore, they say, 'Self and the world are unlimited.'

34. "There are those who say, '[Self and] the world are both limited and unlimited. [This is true; anything else is false.]' They have a view of self, a view of soul, a view of body, and a view of the world regarding conditioned things. They say, 'The soul is both limited and unlimited, [the body is both limited and unlimited, and the world is both limited and unlimited]. From its conception in the womb until it reaches the charnel ground, the four elements possessed by the body thus change. After not more than seven births, the body and soul's action come to an end, and the self enters the class of purity.' Therefore, they say, 'Self [and the world] are both limited and unlimited.'

35. "There are those who say, 'Self and the world are neither limited nor unlimited. [This is true; anything else is false.]' They have a view of self, a view of soul, a view of body, and a view of the world regarding conditioned things. They say, 'The soul, body, [and the world] are neither limited nor unlimited. From its conception in the womb until it reaches the charnel ground, the four elements possessed by the body thus change. After not more than seven births, the body and soul's action come to an end, and the self enters the class of purity.' Therefore, they say, 'Self [and the world] are neither limited nor unlimited.'

Views about the Soul and Body

36. "There are those that say, 'The soul and the body are the same. [This is true; anything else is false.]' They have the view that their own body has a soul and the view that other bodies have souls. Therefore, they say, 'The soul and the body are the same.'

37. "[There are those] that say, 'The soul and the body are different. [This is true; anything else is false.]' They have the view that their body has a soul and the view that other bodies have no soul. Therefore, they say, 'The soul and the body are different.'

38. "There are those that say, 'The body neither has nor lacks the soul. [This is true; anything else is false.]' They have the view that this body has no soul and the view that other bodies do have souls. Therefore, they say, '[The body] neither has nor lacks [the soul].'

39. "There are those that say, 'There's no body or soul. [This is true; anything else is false.]' They have the view that this body has no soul and the view that other bodies have no souls. Therefore, they say, 'There's no soul and no body.'

Views about Present and Future Lives

40. "There are those that say, 'There is thus another death. [This is true; anything else is false.]' Those people have the view of having a soul in the present and having a body and soul that will wander in the hereafter. Therefore, they say, 'There is thus another death.'

41. "[There are those that say,] 'There isn't thus another death. [This is true; anything else is false.]' They say, 'There's a soul in the present life, but there'll be no soul in a later life.' Therefore, they say, 'There isn't thus another death.'

42. "[There are those that say,] 'There's thus another death, and there isn't thus another death. [This is true; anything else is false.]' They say, 'There's a soul in the present life that perishes, but there'll be a soul that wanders in a later life.' Therefore, they say, 'There's thus another death, and there isn't thus another death.'

43. "[There are those that say,] 'There's neither another death nor no other death. [This is true; anything else is false.]' They say, 'The body and soul in the present perish, and the body and soul in the next life perish.' Therefore, they say, 'There's neither another death nor no other death.'"

The Parable of the Blind Men and the Elephant

44. The Bhagavan then told the monks, "Long ago, there was a king named Adarsamukha. He gathered a group of men who were born blind and told them, 'All of you were born blind. Would any of you be familiar with an elephant?'

"They responded, 'Great King, we are not familiar nor know of elephants.'

45. "The king again asked, 'Would you like to know their shape?'

"They responded, 'We would like that.'

46. "The King then ordered his servants to bring an elephant and have that group of blind men touch it with their hands. When one of them felt the elephant's trunk, the king would say, 'This is an elephant.' When one of them felt the elephant's tusks … felt the elephant's ears … felt the elephant's head … felt the elephant's back … felt the elephant's belly … felt the elephant's flanks … felt the elephant's legs … felt the elephant's feet … felt the elephant's tail, the king would say, 'This is an elephant.'

47. "King Adarsamukha then had the elephant taken away. He asked the blind men, 'What was the elephant like?'

48. "Those blind men who found the elephant's trunk said, 'The elephant was like a crooked pole.' Those who found the elephant's tusks said, 'The elephant was like a pestle.' Those that found the elephant's ears said, 'The elephant was like a fan.' Those that found the elephant's head said, 'The elephant was like a kettle.' Those that found the elephant's back said, 'The elephant was like a mound.' Those that found the elephant's belly said, 'The elephant was like a wall.' Those that found the elephant's flank said, 'The elephant was like a tree.' Those that found the elephant's leg said, 'The elephant was like a pillar.' Those that found the elephant's feet said, 'The elephant was like a mortar.' Those that found the elephant's tail said, 'The elephant was like a rope.'

49. "Each of them argued with the others, saying that the others were wrong and they were right. But what they said wasn't the case. They kept repeating themselves until they began fighting. The king watched this with delight and laughed loudly.

50. "King Adarsamukha then spoke in verse:

• "'This gathering of blind men
Are arguing and fighting over this.
The elephant has a single body,
But their concepts of it are contradictory.'"

51. The Buddha told the monks, "Those of other religions and different trainings are like this. They don't know the truth of suffering, don't know the truth of its formation … the truth of its cessation … the truth of the path. They each create different views and contradict each other. They say, 'I'm right,' and then start arguments.

52. "If there are ascetics or priests who truly know the noble truth of suffering, noble truth of suffering's formation, noble truth of suffering's cessation, and noble truth of suffering's escape, they'll contemplate it and unify with each other. They'll accept the same teaching and the same teacher, becoming one and the same like water and milk. They'll light the Buddha's teaching, and its happiness will last a long time."

53. The Bhagavan then spoke in verse:

• "Suppose a person doesn't know suffering,
Doesn't know how suffering arises,
Again, they don't know place whence
Suffering can be brought to an end.
Nor can they understand
The path that ceases suffering's formation.
They miss out on liberation of their mind,
And liberation of wisdom is lost, too.
They can't reach the root of suffering,
That source of birth, old age, illness, and death.
• "If someone can truly know suffering,
They'll know what causes suffering to arise.
They can also know that place whence
Suffering can be brought to an end.
They can also well discern
The noble path that ceases suffering's formation.
They then obtain liberation of their mind
And the liberation of wisdom, too.
Such a person can reach the end
Of the root of this mass of suffering.
They'll end birth, old age, illness, and death,
And the source of becoming.

54. "Therefore, monks, apply yourselves to the methods of contemplating the noble truth of suffering, noble truth of suffering's formation, noble truth of suffering's cessation, and noble truth of suffering's escape."

CHAPTER 6: THE ASURAS

Geography

1. The Buddha told the monks, "The Asura Rahu's city is on the coast north of Mount Sumeru. It's 80,000 yojanas across and has seven fortress walls, seven balustrades, seven nettings, and seven rows of trees encircling it with decorations made of the seven treasures. The walls are 3,000 yojanas tall and 2,000 yojanas wide.

2. "The city gates are 1,000 yojanas tall and 1,000 yojanas wide. The gold walls have silver gates, the silver walls have gold gates … and countless birds sing to each other peacefully as before.

3. "That asura king governs a smaller city inside that large city called *Ksemavati, which is 60,000 yojanas across. It has seven walls, seven balustrades, seven nettings, and seven rows of trees encircling it with decorations made of the seven treasures. The walls are 3,000 yojanas tall and 2,000 yojanas wide.

4. "The city gates are 1,000 yojanas tall and 1,000 yojanas wide. The gold walls have silver gates, the silver walls have gold gates … and countless birds sing to each other peacefully as before.

5. "Inside that city, a separate discussion hall was built called Saptasirisa. The hall has seven walls, seven balustrades, seven nettings, and seven rows of trees encircling it with decorations made of the seven treasures. The foundation of that hall is made of coral.

6. "Its pillars are made entirely of the seven treasures, and the pillars inside of that hall are 1,000 yojanas around and 10,000 yojanas tall.

7. "Beneath these pillars, there's a throne of the correct Dharma that's 700 yojanas across, and it's inlaid with carvings made of the seven treasures.

8. "The hall has four doors, and it's encircled with balustrades. There are seven stairs, seven balustrades, seven nettings, and seven rows of trees encircling it with decorations made of the seven treasures … and countless birds sing to each other peacefully as before.

9. "North of that discussion hall, there's an asura palace that's 10,000 yojanas across. The palace has seven walls, seven balustrades, seven nettings, and seven rows of trees encircling it with decorations made of the seven treasures … and countless birds sing to each other peacefully as before.

10. "East of that discussion hall, there's a forest park called Sala, which is 10,000 yojanas across. That park has seven walls, seven balustrades, seven nettings, and seven rows of trees encircling it with decorations made of the seven treasures … and countless birds sing to each other peacefully as before.

11. "South of that discussion hall, there's a forest park called Most Marvelous, which is 10,000 yojanas across and like Sala Park.

12. "West of that discussion hall, there's a forest park called Salmali, which is 10,000 yojanas across and also like Sala Park.

13. "North of that discussion hall, there's a forest park called Nandana, which is 10,000 yojanas across and also like Sala Park.

14. "Between Sala Park and Most Marvelous Park grows a Parijata tree, which covers are area of seven yojanas and stands a hundred yojanas tall. It's limbs and leaves spread out in all four directions to cover fifty yojanas. That tree has seven walls, seven balustrades, seven nettings, and seven rows of trees encircling it with decorations made of the seven treasures … and countless birds sing to each other peacefully as before.

15. "Between Salmali Park and Nandana Park, there's Lake Upananda. Its water is clear and unpolluted. It's ringed by seven stepped embankments made of treasures, and it has seven balustrades, seven nettings, and seven rows of trees encircling it with decorations made of the seven treasures.

16. "In that lake grow four kinds of flowers with petals that are a yojana wide, and their sweet fragrance fills an area of a yojana. Their roots are like cart axles and produce sap that's white as milk and tastes sweet as honey. Countless birds sing to each other peacefully as before.

17. "On the shores of that lake are seven stair steps, seven gated walls, seven balustrades, seven nettings, and seven rows of trees encircling it with decorations made of the seven treasures … and countless birds sing to each other peacefully as before.

18. "That asura king's ministers have lower palaces that are 10,000 yojanas across … 9,000 … 8,000 … the smallest palace is 1,000 yojanas across. These palaces have seven walls, seven balustrades, seven nettings, and seven rows of trees encircling them with decorations made of the seven treasures … and countless birds sing to each other peacefully as before.

19. "The lesser asuras have palaces that are 1,000 yojanas across … 900 … 800 … the smallest palaces are a hundred yojanas across. These palaces have seven walls, seven balustrades, seven nettings, and seven rows of trees encircling them with decorations made of the seven treasures … and countless birds sing to each other peacefully as before.

20. "North of that discussion hall, there's a stairway made of the seven treasures that leads into the palace. There's a stairway that leads to Sala Park. There's a stairway that leads to Most Marvelous Park. There's a stairway that leads to Salmali Park. There's a stairway that leads to Nandana Park. There's a stairway that leads to the Parijata tree. There's a stairway that leads to Lake Upananda. There's a stairway that leads to the great minister's palace. There's also a stairway that leads to the palaces of lesser asuras.

Asura King Rahu

21. "When the Asura King [Rahu] wants to go sightseeing at Sala Park, he thinks of Asura King Vemacitrin. Asura King Vemacitrin then thinks, 'Asura King Rahu is thinking of me now!' He gets himself ready and rides a treasure chariot to Asura King Rahu while surrounded by a countless assembly of servants. He goes before the Asura King and then stands to one side.

22. "The Asura King also thinks of Asura King *Prahata. Asura King *Prahata also thinks to himself, 'King [Rahu] is thinking of me now!' He gets himself ready and rides a treasure chariot to Asura King Rahu while surrounded by a countless assembly of servants. He goes before the Asura King and then stands to one side.

23. "The Asura King also thinks of Asura King Sambara. Asura King Sambara then thinks to himself, 'King [Rahu] is thinking of me now!' He gets himself ready and rides a treasure chariot to Asura King Rahu while surrounded by a countless assembly of servants. He goes before the Asura King and then stands to one side.

24. "The [Asura] King also thinks of the great minister of asuras. The great minister of asuras then thinks to himself, 'King [Rahu] is thinking of me now!' He gets himself ready and rides a treasure chariot to Asura King Rahu while surrounded by a countless assembly of servants. He goes before the Asura King and then stands to one side.

25. "The [Asura] King also thinks of the lesser asuras. The lesser asuras then think to themselves, 'King [Rahu] is thinking of me now!' They get themselves ready and ride treasure chariots to Asura King Rahu with many large assemblies. They go before the Asura King and then stand to one side.

26. "King Rahu then gets himself ready by putting on precious ornaments and clothes. He rides a treasure chariot to Sala Grove while surrounded by countless great assemblies. A spontaneous wind blows the gate open, a spontaneous wind clears the ground, and another spontaneous wind scatters flowers on the ground until they're knee-deep.

27. "After entering the park, King Rahu entertains himself with the others for one day, two days … or seven days. When they're finished with their recreation, they return to their own palaces. After that, they go sightseeing at Most Marvelous Forest, Salmali Forest, and Nandana forest in the same way.

28. "King Rahu always has five great asura servants who attend to him left and right. The first is named Grasper. The second is named Great Strength. The third is named Barbaric. The fourth is named Chief. The fifth is named Vanquisher. These five great asuras are always serving him left and right.

29. "That King Rahu's palace hall is both beneath and above an ocean that's supported by four winds. The first is called the standing wind. The second is called the holding wind. The third is called the immovable wind. The fourth is called the steadfast wind. They support that ocean's water, which hangs in the sky like a floating cloud. Even the water that's 10,000 yojanas away from that asura palace never falls down. Such are the fortune, virtue, and majesty of the Asura King."

CHAPTER 7: THE FOUR GOD KINGS

(The following text mentions the measure unit cubits. A cubit was an ancient measure of length, taking the average distance from a man's elbow to the tip of his fingers. It varied from place to place but was approximately 18 inches (45.7 cm).)

Geography

1. The Buddha addressed the monks, "A thousand yojanas to the east of Sumeru the mountain king is God King Dhrtarastra's city named *Bhadrottama, which is 6,000 yojanas across. It has seven fortress walls, seven balustrades, seven nettings, and seven rows of trees encircling it with decorations made of the seven treasures … and countless birds sing to each other peacefully as before.

2. "A thousand yojanas to the south of Mount Sumeru is the God King Virudhaka's city named Sudarsana, which is 6,000 yojanas across. It has seven fortress walls, seven balustrades, seven nettings, and seven rows of trees encircling it with decorations made of the seven treasures … and countless birds sing to each other peacefully as before.

3. "A thousand yojanas to the west of Mount Sumeru is the God King Virupaksa's city called Culasudarsana, which is 6,000 yojanas across. It has seven fortress walls, seven balustrades, seven nettings, and seven rows of trees encircling it with decorations made of the seven treasures … and countless birds sing to each other peacefully as before.

4. "A thousand yojanas to the north of Mount Sumeru is the God King Vaisravana's three cities. The first is called Terrible, the second is called Heavenly Respect, and the third is called Refuge of Many. Each of them is 6,000 yojanas across. They have seven fortress walls, seven balustrades, seven nettings, and seven rows of trees encircling it with decorations made of the seven treasures … and countless birds sing to each other peacefully as before.

5. "North of the city Refuge to Many, there is a forest park called Kapivanta, which is 4,000 yojanas across. That park has seven walls, seven balustrades, seven nettings, and seven rows of trees encircling it with decorations made of the seven treasures … and countless birds sing to each other peacefully as before.

6. "Between that park and the city, there's a lake called Nalini, which is forty yojanas across. Its water is clear and unpolluted. It has steps made of the seven treasures on its banks, and seven balustrades, seven nettings, and seven rows of trees encircling it with decorations made of the seven treasures. Blue, yellow, red, and white lotus flowers grow in it, and the colors mix together and shine at a distance of half a yojana. Their fragrance is also sweet-smelling for half a yojana. Those flowers also have roots like wheel hubs, and they produce sap that's white as milk and tastes sweet as honey … and countless birds sing to each other peacefully as before.

7. "Except for the palaces of the Sun and Moon, the palace halls of the four god kings are forty yojanas across. Those palaces have seven walls, seven balustrades, seven nettings, and seven rows of trees encircling them with decorations made of the seven treasures … and countless birds sing to each other peacefully as before.

8. "Those palace halls are forty yojanas, twenty yojanas, or at least five yojanas across. From the city Refuge to Many, there's a treasure stairway that goes to the city Bhadrottama. There's a stairway that leads to the city Sudarsana. There's a stairway that leads to the city Culasudarsana. There's a stairway that leads to the city Terrible and the city Heavenly Respect. There's a stairway that leads to the park Kapivanta. There's a stairway that leads to Lake Nalini. There's also a stairway that leads to the palace of the great minister of the four god kings.

King Vaisravana

9. "If God King Vaisravana wants to go sightseeing at the park Kapivanta, he thinks about God King Dhrtarastra. God King Dhrtarastra then thinks to himself, 'King Vaisravana is thinking of me now!' He gets himself ready and rides a treasure chariot to God King Vaisravana while surrounded by countless gandharva spirits. He goes before the God King and then stands to one side.

10. "King Vaisravana thinks about God King Virudhaka. God King Virudhaka then thinks to himself, 'King Vaisravana is thinking of me now!' He gets himself ready and rides a treasure chariot to God King Vaisravana while surrounded by countless kumbhanda spirits. He goes before the God King and then stands to one side.

11. "King Vaisravana thinks about God King Virupaksa. God King Virupaksa then thinks to himself, 'King Vaisravana is thinking of me now!' He gets himself ready and rides a treasure chariot to God King Vaisravana while surrounded by countless naga spirits. He goes before the God King and then stands to one side.

12. "King Vaisravana thinks about the great minister of the four god kings. The great minister of the four god kings then thinks to himself, 'King Vaisravana is thinking of me now!' He gets himself ready and rides a treasure chariot to God King Vaisravana while surrounded by countless gods. He goes before the God King and then stands to one side.

13. "King Vaisravana then gets himself ready by putting on precious ornaments and clothes. He rides a treasure chariot to Kapivanta Park while accompanied by countless hundreds of thousands of gods and spirits. A spontaneous wind blows the gate open, a spontaneous wind clears the ground, and another spontaneous wind scatters flowers on the ground until they're knee-deep.

14. "The king entertains himself with the others there for one day, two days … or seven days. After their sightseeing is finished, they go back to their own palaces.

15. "King Vaisravana always has five great yaksa spirits who attend to him left and right. The first is called Pancala, the second is called *Dandala, the third is called Haimavata, the fourth is called *Dighra, and the fifth is called Suciroma. These five yaksa spirits are always following and serving him. Such are the fortune, virtue, and majesty of King Vaisravana."

CHAPTER 8: THE TRAYASTRIMSA GODS

Geography

1. The Buddha told the monks, "The city of the Trayastrimsa gods sits at the summit of Sumeru the mountain king, and it's 80,000 yojanas across. That city has seven walls, seven balustrades, seven nettings, and seven rows of trees encircling it with decorations made of the seven treasures. The city is a hundred yojanas tall, and it's sixty yojanas wide at the top. The city gates are sixty yojanas high and thirty yojanas wide. The gates are five hundred yojanas apart from each other, and each gate is guarded by five hundred yaksa spirits who protect the Trayastrimsa gods.

2. "The gold walls have silver gates, the silver walls have gold gates … and countless birds sing to each other peacefully as before.

3. "Inside that great city, there's a smaller city that's 60,000 yojanas across. That city has seven walls, seven balustrades, seven nettings, and seven rows of trees encircling it with decorations are made of the seven treasures. That city is a hundred yojanas tall and sixty yojanas wide. The city's gates are five hundred yojanas apart from each other, sixty yojanas high, and thirty yojanas wide. Each gate is guarded by five hundred yaksa spirits who protect the Trayastrimsa gods.

4. "The gold walls have silver gates, and the silver walls have gold gates. The crystal walls have beryl gates, and the beryl walls have crystal gates. The ruby walls have emerald gates, and the emerald walls have ruby gates. The coral walls have gates made of many treasures.

5. "The [gold] balustrades have gold balusters and silver rails. [The silver balustrades have] silver balusters and gold rails. [The crystal balustrades have] crystal balusters and beryl rails. [The beryl balustrades have] beryl balusters and crystal rails. [The ruby balustrades have] ruby balusters and emerald rails. [The emerald balustrades have] emerald balusters and ruby rails. [The coral balustrades have] coral balusters and rails made of many treasures.

6. "The balustrades have treasure nettings above them. The gold netting is hung with silver bells, and the silver netting is hung with gold bells. The beryl netting is hung with crystal bells, and the crystal netting is hung with beryl bells. The ruby netting is hung with emerald bells, and the emerald netting is hung with ruby bells. The coral netting is hung with bells made of many treasures.

7. "The gold trees have gold roots and limbs and silver leaves, flowers, and fruit. The silver trees have silver roots and limbs and gold leaves, flowers, and fruit. The crystal trees have crystal roots and limbs and beryl leaves, flowers[, and fruit]. The beryl trees have beryl roots and limbs and crystal leaves, flowers[, and fruit]. The ruby trees have ruby roots and limbs and emerald leaves, flowers[, and fruit]. The emerald trees have emerald roots and limbs and ruby leaves, flowers[, and fruit]. The coral trees have coral roots and limbs and leaves, flowers[, and fruit] made of many treasures.

8. "The city's seven walls have four gates. The gates have balustrades, and the seven walls have towers and terraces all around above them. They're surrounded by scenic parks with forests and lakes where myriad treasure flowers grow in a mix of assorted colors. The rows of treasure trees are laden with flowers and fruit, and the fragrance they produce blows in all four directions to the delight of people. Ducks, geese, cakra birds, and other rare kinds of birds in countless thousands sing to each other peacefully.

9. "The palace of the Naga Airavana is outside that smaller city, and it's 6,000 yojanas across. The palace has seven walls, seven balustrades, seven nettings, and seven rows of trees encircling it with decorations made of the seven treasures … and countless birds sing to each other peacefully as before.

10. "Inside the city of Sudarsana, there's a Sudharma Hall that's a hundred yojanas across. It has seven balustrades, seven nettings, and seven rows of trees encircling with decorations made of the seven treasures.

11. "The foundation under that hall is pure gold and covered with beryl. Inside the hall, the pillars are ten yojanas around and a hundred yojanas tall. The Lord of Gods' throne is laid beneath the pillars. It's one yojana across, has a mix of assorted colors, and made of the seven treasures. His throne is also as soft as heavenly cloth. Sixteen thrones are arranged to the left and right of his throne.

12. "The hall has four gates, and it's encircled by a balustrade made of the seven treasures. There are stairways that are five hundred yojanas across, and the gates have seven walls, seven balustrades, seven nettings, and seven rows of trees that encircle them with decorations made of seven treasures … and countless birds sing to each other peacefully as before.

13. "North of Sudarsana Hall, the palace hall of the Lord of Gods is 1,000 yojanas across. The palace has seven walls, seven balustrades, seven nettings, and seven rows of trees encircling it with decorations made of the seven treasures … and countless birds sing to each other peacefully as before.

14. "East of Sudarsana Hall, there's a forest park named Parusaka that's 1,000 yojanas across. The park has seven walls, seven balustrades, seven nettings, and seven rows of trees encircling it with decorations made of the seven treasures … and countless birds sing to each other peacefully as before.

15. "Inside Parusaka Park, there are two stone seats decorated with heavenly gold. The first is called Bhadra, and the second is called Subhadra. Each is fifty yojanas across, and the stone is as soft as heavenly cloth.

16. "South of Sudarsana Hall, there's a forest park named Citraratha that's 1,000 yojanas across. The park has seven walls, seven balustrades, seven nettings, and seven rows of trees encircling it with decorations made of the seven treasures … and countless birds sing to each other peacefully as before.

17. "Inside that park, there are two stone seats made of the seven treasures. The first is called Citra, and the second is called Sucitra. Each is fifty yojanas across, and the seats are as soft as heavenly cloth.

18. "To the west of Sudarsana Hall, there's a forest park called Misraka that's 1,000 yojanas across. The park has seven walls, seven balustrades, seven nettings, and seven rows of trees encircling it with decorations made of the seven treasures … and countless birds sing to each other peacefully as before.

19. "Inside that park, there are two stone seats. The first is called Sudarsana, and the second is called Anusudarsana (?). They're decorated with heavenly gold and made of the seven treasures. Each is fifty yojanas across and as soft as heavenly cloth.

20. "To the north of Sudarsana Hall, there's a forest park called Nandana that's 1,000 yojanas across. The park has seven walls, seven balustrades, seven nettings, and seven rows of trees encircling it with decorations made of the seven treasures … and countless birds sing to each other peacefully as before.

21. "Inside that park, there are two stone seats. The first is called Upananda, and the second is called Nandana. They have decorations made of coral, each is fifty yojanas across, and the seats are as soft as heavenly cloth.

22. "Between Parusaka Park and Citraratha Park, there's Nanda Lake that's a hundred yojanas across. Its water is crystal clear and devoid of any pollution. It's ringed by seven stepped embankments made of many treasures, and it has seven balustrades, seven nettings, and seven rows of trees encircling it with decorations made of the seven treasures. The lake has stairs with handrails on four sides, and it's encircled by balustrades studded with the seven treasures … and countless birds sing to each other peacefully as before.

23. "Four types of flowers grow in that lake: Blue, yellow, red, and white. Other colors like crimson and light blue are mixed with them, too. A single petal of those flowers is a yojana long, and their fragrance is sweet-smelling a yojana away. Their roots are like wheel hubs, and they produce sap that's as white as milk and tastes as sweet as honey. That lake also has forest parks on all four sides.

24. "Between Misraka Park and Nandana Park, there's a tree called Parijata that's seven yojanas around and a hundred yojanas tall. It's limbs and leaves spread out in all four directions to cover fifty yojanas. There's open ground around the tree that's five hundred yojanas across. It then has seven palace walls, seven balustrades, seven nettings, and seven rows of trees encircling it with decorations made of seven treasures … and countless birds sing to each other peacefully as before.

25. "The remaining Trayastrimsa Heaven palace halls are 1,000 yojanas across. The palaces have seven walls, seven balustrades, seven nettings, and seven rows of trees encircling them with decorations made of seven treasures … and countless birds sing to each other peacefully as before.

26. "Those palace halls are sometimes 900, 800 … or at least a hundred yojanas across. The palaces have seven walls, seven balustrades, seven nettings, and seven rows of trees encircling them with decorations made of seven treasures … and countless birds sing to each other peacefully as before.

27. "The lesser heavenly palaces are a hundred yojanas, ninety, eighty … or at least twenty yojanas across. Those palaces have seven walls, seven balustrades, seven nettings, and seven rows of trees encircling them with decorations made of seven treasures … and countless birds sing to each other peacefully as before.

28. "North of Sudarsana Hall, there are two stairways to the palace hall of the Lord of Gods. East of Sudarsana Hall, there are two stairways to Parusaka Park. Again, there are stairways to Citraratha Park, stairways to Misraka Park, stairways to Nandana Park, stairways to Nandana Lake, stairways to the Parijata Tree, stairways to the palaces of the Trayastrimsa gods, stairways to the palaces of other gods, and stairways to the palace of Naga King Airavana.

Sakra the Lord of Gods

29. "When Sakra the Lord of Gods wants to go sightseeing in Parusaka Park, he thinks of the Trayastrimsa heavenly ministers. The Trayastrimsa heavenly ministers then think to themselves, 'Lord Sakra is thinking of me now!' They get themselves ready and ride treasure chariots to Lord Sakra while surrounded by countless assemblies. They go before Lord Sakra and then stand to one side.

30. "Lord Sakra then thinks of the other gods, and those gods think, 'Lord Sakra is thinking of me now!' They get themselves ready and ride treasure chariots to Lord Sakra while surrounded by assemblies of gods. They go before Lord Sakra and then stand to one side.

31. "Lord Sakra then thinks of Naga King Airavana, and he also thinks to himself, 'Lord Sakra is thinking of me now!' Naga King Airavana then transforms himself into a form with thirty-three heads. Each head has six fangs, and each fang has seven pools of water. Each pool has seven large lotus flowers in it. Each flower has a hundred petals. Each flower petal has seven beautiful women playing drums, singing, and dancing on it. After changing himself into this form, that naga king goes before Lord Sakra and then stands to one side.

32. "Sakra the Lord of Gods puts ornaments made of many treasures on his body. He sits atop of Naga King Airavana, and sixteen god kings line up on each side of him, seated on nagas in their proper order.

33. "Sakra the Lord of Gods then travels to Parusaka Park with countless heavenly retinues surrounding him. A spontaneous wind blows the gate open, a spontaneous wind clears the ground, and another spontaneous wind scatters various flowers on the ground until they're knee-deep.

34. "Lord Sakra then turns his attention to the two stone seats called Bhadra and Subhadra. When he sits, each of the Trayastrimsa god kings take turns sitting with him in their order.

35. "Again, there are gods who aren't able to follow them and see that scenic park, aren't able to enter the park, nor are they entertained by the five desires there. Why is that? As a result of their past conduct, their virtue isn't equal to that of the others.

36. "Again, there are gods who can go and see that forest park, but they aren't able to enter it or be entertained by the five desires there. Why is that? As a result of their past conduct, their virtue isn't equal to that of the others.

37. "Again, there are gods who can see and enter [that forest park], but they can't be entertained by the five desires there. Why is that? As a result of their past conduct, their virtue isn't equal to that of the others.

38. "Again, there are gods who can enter and see [that forest park], and they are entertained by the five desires there. Why is that? As a result of their past conduct, their virtue is equal to that of the others.

39. "Roaming through the park, they entertain themselves with the five desires for one day, two days … for seven days. After entertaining themselves, each returns to their own palace. Sakra the Lord of Gods goes sightseeing in Citraratha Park, Misraka Park, and Nandana Park in the same way.

40. "Why is that park called 'Parusaka Park'? When they enter this park, their bodies become rough. Why is that other park named 'Citraratha Park'? When they enter this park, their bodies are spontaneously painted with a variety of colors, which delights them. Why is that other park named 'Misraka Park'? On the eighth, tenth, and fifteenth day of every month, attractive females other than female asuras are sent to accompany the gods there. They roam that park and mingle, so it's called Misraka Park. Why is that other park named 'Nandana Park'? When the gods go to this park, they entertain themselves and rejoice. So, it's called Nandana.

41. "Why is that hall named 'Sudharma Hall'? Up in this hall, they ponder the wonderful Dharma and experience pure happiness, so it's called Sudharma Hall. Why is that tree named the 'Parijata Tree'? This tree has a spirit named Manda that's always playing music to entertain itself. Therefore, it's called Parijata. Also, that huge tree spreads its limbs in all four directions, and its flowers and leaves are abundant like great treasure clouds, so it's called Parijata.

42. "Sakra the Lord of Gods has ten great gods who always follow and serve him on his left and right. Who are the ten? The first is named Indraka, the second is named Gopika, the third is named Virudhaka, the fourth is named Virupaksa, the fifth is named Daraka (?), the sixth is named Bala (?), the seventh is named Jivaka (?), the eighth is named Rohana (?), the ninth is named Mutra (?), and the tenth is named Nando (?). Such is the great miraculous power and majesty possessed by Sakra the Lord of Gods.

Things the World and Heaven Have in Common

43. "The people of Jambudvipa prize water flowers that are gentle and sweet-smelling, such as utpala flowers, padma flowers, kumuda flowers, pundarika flowers, and sugandha flowers. The land flowers that they prize are atimuktaka flowers, campaka flowers, patala flowers, sumana flowers, varsika flowers, and maiden flowers. Those in Godaniya, Uttarakuru, and Purvavideha, the naga palaces, and garuda palaces [prize] the same the water and land flowers.

44. "In the asura palaces, [they prize] gentle and sweet-smelling water flowers, such as utpala flowers, padma flowers, kumuda flowers, and pundarika flowers. The land flowers [that they prize are] beautiful flowers like bimba (?) flowers, great bimba flowers, kakara (?) flowers, great kakara flowers, mandara flowers, and great mandara flowers. The four god kings, Trayastrimsa gods, Yama gods, Tusita gods, Nirmanarati gods, and Paranirmitavasavartin gods prize the same water and land flowers.

45. "The gods have ten qualities. What are the ten? First, they fly to places of limitless distances. Second, they fly back from limitless distances. Third, nothing blocks their departures. Fourth, nothing blocks their arrivals. Fifth, their bodies have no skin, bones, sinews, veins, flesh, or blood. Sixth, their bodies have no impurities like feces or urine. Seventh, their bodies never tire. Eighth, heavenly females don't give birth. Ninth, heavenly eyes don't blink. Tenth, they color their bodies as they like. If they prefer blue, they're blue. If they prefer yellow, they're yellow. If it's red, white, or other colors, they appear as they like. These are the ten qualities of gods.

46. "Humans have seven colors. What are the seven? Some people are golden, some are fire-colored, some are blue, some are yellow, some are red, some are black, and some are white. Gods and asuras have these seven colors as well.

47. "Monks, the radiance of a firefly is not like that of a candle, and the radiance of a candle is not like that of a torch. The radiance of a torch is not like that of a bonfire. The radiance of a bonfire is not like that of the palace hall of the four god kings, nor their walled city, jewelry, clothing, or bodies.

48. "The radiance of the palaces of the four god kings and their walled city, jewelry, clothing, and bodies is not like that of the Trayastrimsa gods. The radiance of the Trayastrimsa gods is not like that of the Yama gods. The radiance of the Yama gods is not like that of the Tusita gods. The radiance of the Tusita gods is not like that of the Nirmanarati gods. The radiance of the Nirmanarati gods is not like that of the Paranirmitavasavartin gods. The radiance of the Paranirmitavasavartin gods is not like that of the palace halls, clothing, and bodies of the Brahmakayika gods.

49. "The radiance of the palace halls, clothing, and bodies of the Brahmakayika gods is not like that of the Abhasvara gods. The radiance of the Abhasvara gods is not like that of the Subhakrtsna gods. The radiance of the Subhakrtsna gods is not like that of Brhatphala gods. The radiance of the Brhatphala gods is not like that of the Asamjnika gods. The radiance of the Asamjnika gods is not like that of the Avrha gods. The radiance of the Avrha gods is not like that of the Atapa gods. The radiance of the Atapa gods is not like that of the Sudarsana gods. The radiance of the Sudarsana gods is not like that of the Mahasudarsana gods. The radiance of the Mahasudarsana gods is not like that of Akanistha gods. The radiance of the Akanistha gods is not like that of the Earth Sovereign gods. The radiance of the Earth Sovereign gods is not like that of the Buddha.

50. "From the radiance of a firefly to that of a Buddha, the sum total of those lights is not like that of the radiance of the truth of suffering, truth of its formation, truth of its cessation, and truth of the path. Therefore, monks, if you want to pursue radiance, you should pursue the radiance of the truth of suffering, truth of its formation, truth of its cessation, and truth of the path. You should train in them.

The Bodies and Clothing of People and Gods

51. "The bodies of people in Jambudvipa are three and a half cubits long, and their clothing is seven cubits long and three and a half cubits wide. The bodies of people in Godaniya and Purvavideha are also three and a half cubits long, and their clothing is seven cubits long and three and a half cubits wide. The bodies of people in Uttarakuru are seven cubits long, and their clothing is fourteen cubits long and seven cubits wide. Their clothing weighs one ounce.

52. "The bodies of asuras are one yojana long, and their clothing is two yojanas long and one yojana wide. Their clothing weighs a quarter ounce. The bodies of the four god kings are half of a yojana long, and their clothing is a yojana long and half of a yojana wide. Their clothing weighs half of an ounce. The bodies of the Trayastrimsa gods are one yojana long, and their clothing is two yojanas long and one yojana wide. Their clothing weighs a quarter ounce. The bodies of the Yama gods are two yojanas long, and their clothing is four yojanas long and two yojanas wide. Their clothing weighs three twenty-fourths of an ounce. The bodies of the Tusita gods are four yojanas long, and their clothing is eight yojanas long and four yojanas wide. Their clothing weighs a little more than a twenty-fourth of an ounce. The bodies of the Nirmanarati gods are eight yojanas long, and their clothing is sixteen yojanas long and eight yojanas wide. Their clothing weighs a twenty-fourth of an ounce. The bodies of the Paranirmitavasavartin gods are sixteen yojanas long, and their clothing is thirty-two yojanas long and sixteen yojanas wide. Their clothing weighs a forty-eighth of an ounce. The gods above them each wear clothing that fits their bodies.

The Life Spans of Sentient Beings

53. "Few people in Jambudvipa live for more than a hundred years, and many live for less. Few people in Godaniya live for more than 200 years, and many live for less. Few people in Purvavideha live for more than 300 years, and many live for less. People in Uttarakuru live for 1,000 years, and none live for more or less than that.

54. "Few hungry ghosts live for more than 70,000 years, and many live for less. Few nagas and garudas live for more than an eon, and many live for less. Few asuras live for more than 1,000 heavenly years, and many live for less.

55. "Few of the four god kings live for more than 500 heavenly years, and many live for less. Few of the Trayastrimsa gods live for more than 1,000 heavenly years, and many live for less. Few of the Yama gods live for more than 2,000 heavenly years, and many live for less. Few of the Tusita gods live for more than 4,000 heavenly years, and many live for less. Few of the Nirmanarati gods live for more than 8,000 heavenly years, and many live for less. Few of the Paranirmitavasavartin gods live for more than 16,000 heavenly years, and many live for less.

56. "The Brahmakayika gods live for one eon, sometimes for less. The Abhasvara gods live for two eons, sometimes for less. The Subhakrtsna gods live for three eons, sometimes for less. The Brhatphala gods live for four eons, sometimes for less. The Asamjnika gods live for 500 eons, sometimes for less. The Avrha gods live for 1,000 eons, sometimes for less. The Atapa gods live for 2,000 eons, sometimes for less. The Sudarsana gods live for 3,000 eons, sometimes for less. The Mahasudarsana gods live for 4,000 eons, sometimes for less. The Akanistha gods live for 5,000 eons, sometimes for less.

57. "The gods in the abode of space live for 10,000 eons, sometimes for less. The gods in the abode of consciousness live for 21,000 eons, sometimes for less. The gods in the abode of nothingness live for 42,000 eons, sometimes for less. The gods in the abode that's with and without conception live for 84,000 eons, sometimes for less.

58. "This is the extent of sentient beings, the extent of life spans, and the extent of the world. This is the extent of what's called the destinations of birth, old age, illness, death, and rebirth of those collections of elements, aggregates, and senses."

The Four Foods of Sentient Beings

59. The Buddha told the monks, "All sentient beings subsist on four kinds of food. What are the four? Physical and fine food is the first, food of contact is the second, food of thought is the third, and food of consciousness is the fourth.

60. "Various sentient beings eat different things. People in Jambudvipa have diverse meals of grains, fish, and meat that serve as their physical food. Clothing and bathes serve as their fine foods. The people of Godaniya and Purvavideha also eat diverse meals of grains, fish, and meat that serve as their physical food. Clothing and bathes serve as their fine foods. The people of Uttarakuru only eat spontaneously cooked rice that possesses heavenly flavors that serves as their physical food. Clothing and bathes serve as their fine foods.

61. "Nagas and garudas eat tortoises, crocodiles, fish, and turtles that serve as their physical food, and bathes and clothing serve as their fine foods. Asuras eat pure physical food, and bathes and clothing serve as their fine foods. The four god kings, Trayastrimsa gods, Yama gods, Tusita gods, Nirmanarati gods, and Paranirmitavasavartin gods eat pure physical food, and bathes and clothing serve as their fine foods. The gods above them take the joy and happiness of dhyana's samadhi as their food.

62. "What are the sentient beings whose food is contact? Egg-born sentient beings have contact as food. What are the sentient beings whose food is thought? There are sentient beings that subsist because of food of thought. Their faculties grow, and then their lives don't end. This is food of thought. What are [the sentient beings] whose food is consciousness? Sentient beings in hell and the formless realm are called those whose food is consciousness.

Commerce and Procreation among Sentient Beings

63. "The people of Jambudvipa use gold, silver, jewels, grain, silk, and workers to generate wealth and make their livings. The people of Godaniya use livestock and gemstones to make an easy living. The people of Purvavideha use grain, silk, and gemstones to make an easy living. The people of Uttarakuru make an easy living without any commerce.

64. "The people of Jambudvipa have courtships, the men marrying the women, who then become wives. The people of Godaniya and Purvavideha also have marriage, the men taking the women as wives. The people of Uttarakuru don't have marriage, nor do men take women as wives. Nagas, garudas, and asuras have marriage, the males taking the females as wives. The four god kings, Trayastrimsa gods … Paranirmitavasavartin gods also have marriage, the males taking females as wives. Above those heavens, there aren't any males or females.

65. "The men and women of Jambudvipa have sexual intercourse with the physical contact of their male and female organs. The people of Godaniya, Purvavideha, and Uttarakuru also do so with the physical contact of their male and female organs. Nagas and garudas have sexual intercourse with the physical contact of their male and female organs.

66. "Asuras have sexual intercourse by exchanging energy between their male and female organs while in close proximity to each other. The four god kings and Trayastrimsa gods are likewise. The Yama gods have sexual intercourse by being close to each other. The Tusita gods have sexual intercourse by holding hands. The Nirmanarati gods have sexual intercourse by looking passionately at each other. The Paranirmitavasavartin gods have sexual intercourse by glancing at each other. Above those heavens, there's no more sexual desire.

The Process of Becoming a God

67. "Suppose a sentient being commits bad physical deeds, speaks bad words, and thinks bad thoughts. Their final consciousness ceases here when their body breaks up and their life ends, and then an initial consciousness arises in Hell. Because of that consciousness, they have name and form. Because of that name and form, they have the six senses.

68. "Sometimes, a sentient being commits bad physical deeds, speaks bad words, and thinks bad thoughts. When their body breaks up and their life ends, they are born among animals. Their final consciousness ceases here, and then an initial consciousness arises in an animal. Because of that consciousness, they have name and form. Because of that name and form, they have the six senses.

69. "Sometimes, a sentient being commits bad physical deeds, speaks bad words, and thinks bad thoughts. When their body breaks up and their life ends, they are born among hungry ghosts. Their final consciousness ceases here, and an initial consciousness arises in a hungry ghost. Because of that consciousness, they have name and form. Because of those names and forms, they have the six senses.

70. "Sometimes, a sentient being commits good physical deeds, speaks good words, and thinks good thoughts. When their body breaks up and their life ends, they are born among humans. Their final consciousness ceases here, and an initial consciousness arises in a human. Because of that consciousness, they have name and form. Because of that name and form, they have the six senses.

Birth among the Four God Kings

71. "Sometimes, a sentient being commits good physical deeds, speaks good words, and thinks good thoughts. When their body breaks up and their life ends, they are born among the four god kings. Their final consciousness ceases here, and an initial consciousness arises among the four god kings. Because of that consciousness, they have name and form. Because of that name and form, they have the six senses.

72. "When those gods are first born, they're like one- or two-year-old human children. They spontaneous appear sitting on a god's knee. That god then says, 'This is my child!'

73. "As a reward for their conduct, knowledge spontaneously arises in them. They think to themselves, 'What was the conduct that caused me to be born here now?' Then they also think, 'I was once among humans and did good physical deeds, spoke good words, and had good thoughts. It was because of this conduct that I've been born as a god now. If my life were to end and I were born again among humans, I would be physically, verbally, and mentally pure. I'd redouble my efforts and cultivate these good conducts.'

74. "Not long after the child's birth, they realize that they're hungry. A treasure bowl then spontaneously appears in front of the child, which is full of spontaneously pure food with a hundred heavenly flavors. If the child has much merit, the food's color is white. If the child's merit is average, then the food's color is blue. If the child's merit is inferior, then the food's color is red. The child then takes the food and puts it in their mouth, and it's spontaneously digested like butter thrown into a fire.

75. "When the child is finished eating, they realize that they're thirsty. A treasure bowl spontaneously appears that's filled with ambrosia. If the child has much merit, the ambrosia's color is white. If the child's merit is average, then the ambrosia's color is blue. If the child's merit is inferior, then the ambrosia's color is red. The child picks up the ambrosia and drinks it, and it's spontaneously digested like butter thrown into a fire.

76. "After the child finishes eating and drinking, their body grows larger until it's equal to that of other gods. That god then goes into a pool to bathe, washing and enjoying themselves. After enjoying themselves there, the god emerges from the pool and stands under a perfume tree. The perfume tree bends down, and they take many fragrances to rub on their body.

77. "Again, the god goes to a clothing tree. The tree bends down, and they take various clothes to wear.

78. "Again, the god goes to an ornament tree. The tree bends down, and they take various ornaments to decorate their body.

79. "Again, the god goes to a garland tree. The tree bends down, and they take garlands to put over their head.

80. "Again, the god goes to a vessel tree. The tree bends down, and they take a treasure vessel.

81. "Again, the god goes to a fruit tree. The tree bends down, and they take its spontaneous fruit. They might eat it, put in their mouth, or drink its juice.

82. "Again, the god goes to a musical instrument tree. The tree bends down, and they take heavenly instruments. With wondrous voices in harmony with the music, they go to forest parks. Seeing countless goddesses singing and playing drums, they smile and chat with them.

83. "When those gods go sightseeing, they become defiled and attached. They look east and forget what's west, or they look west and forget what's east. When they're first born, they thought to themselves, 'What was the conduct that caused me to be born here now?' But when they go sightseeing, they forget all about that, and the attractive goddesses attend to them.

Birth among the Trayastrimsa Gods

84. "When a sentient being does good physical deeds, speaks good words, and thinks good thoughts, they are born in the Trayastrimsa Heaven when their body breaks up and their life ends. Their final consciousness ceases here, and an initial consciousness arises [in one of those gods]. Because of that consciousness, they have name and form. Because of that name and form, they have the six senses.

85. "When that god is first born, they're like a two- or three-year-old child in Jambudvipa. They spontaneously appears on a god's knee, and that god says, 'This is my son!' or 'This is my daughter!' in the same way.

Birth among the Yama Gods

86. "When a sentient being does good physical [deeds], speaks [good words], and thinks [good thoughts], they are born in the Yama Heaven when their body breaks up and their life ends …

87. "When that god is first born, they're like a three- or four-year-old child in Jambudvipa …

Birth among the Tusita Gods

88. "When a sentient being does good physical [deeds], speaks [good words], and thinks [good thoughts], they are born in the Tusita Heaven when their body breaks up and their life ends …

89. "When that god is first born, they're like a four- or five-year-old child in Jambudvipa …

Birth among the Nirmanarati Gods

90. "When a sentient being does good physical [deeds], speaks [good words], and thinks [good thoughts], they are born in the Nirmanarati Heaven when their body breaks up and their life ends …

91. "When that god is first born, it's like a five- or six-year-old child in Jambudvipa …

Birth among the Paranirmitavasavartin Gods

92. "When a sentient being does good physical [deeds], speaks [good words], and thinks [good thoughts], they are born in the Paranirmitavasavartin Heaven when their body breaks up and their life ends …

93. "When that god is first born, it's like a six- or seven-year-old child in Jambudvipa …"

The Three Fasting Days

94. The Buddha told the monks, "There are three fasts during a half month. What are the three? The eighth day is a fasting day, the fourteenth day is a fasting day, and the fifteenth day is a fasting day. These are the three fasts.

95. "Why is there a fast on the eighth day of the month? Every eighth day of the month, the four god kings tell their servants, 'Go check on the conduct of the world. Examine the multitude of people. Are they dutiful to their parents? Do they respect the ascetics and priests? Do they honor and serve their elders? Do they observe the fasting rules, give offerings, and aid the poor?'

96. "After hearing the kings' instruction, their servants go check on the conduct of the world to know if they are dutiful to their parents, respect the ascetics and priests, honor and serve their elders, and observe the fasting rules, give offerings, and aid the poor. After they've examined them, they see that the world's people aren't dutiful to their parents, don't respect the ascetics and priests, don't honor or serve their elders, and don't observe the fasting rules, give offerings, or aid the poor. They return to the kings and say, 'Heavenly Kings, those in the world who are dutiful to their parents, honor their elders, cultivate the fasting rules purely, give offerings, and aid the poor are very few. Very few, indeed!'

97. "When the four god kings hear this, they're distraught and unhappy. They reply, 'What!? How did this happen? Most of the world's people are bad. They aren't dutiful to their parents, don't serve their elders, don't cultivate the fasting rules, nor aid the poor. The host of gods will dwindle, and the host of asuras will grow!'

98. "Suppose their servants see that the world's people are dutiful to their parents, respect their elders, diligently cultivate the fasting rules, and aid the poor. They return and tell the god kings, 'The world's people are dutiful to their parents, respect their elders, diligently cultivate the fasting rules, and aid the poor.'

99. "When the four god kings hear this, they rejoice. They exclaim, 'Excellent! We've heard good news! The world's people are capable of being dutiful to their parents, respecting their elders, diligently cultivating the fasting rules, and aiding the poor. The host of gods will grow, and the host of asuras will dwindle!' [This is why there's a fast on the eighth day.]

100. "Why is there a fast on the fourteenth day of the month? On the fourteenth day fast, the four god kings tell their princes, 'Go check on the conduct of the world. Examine the multitudes of people. Are they dutiful to their parents? Do they honor and serve their elders? Do they observe the fasting rules and aid the poor?'

101. "After receiving the kings' instruction, the princes check on the conduct of the world. They examine the multitudes of people to know if they are dutiful to their parents, honor and serve their elders, diligently cultivate the fasting rules, and aid the poor. After they've examined them, they see that the world's people aren't dutiful to their parents, don't respect their elders, don't cultivate the fasting rules, nor aid the poor. They return and tell the kings, 'Heavenly Kings, those in the world who are dutiful to their parents, respect their elders, cultivate the fasting rules purely, give offerings, and aid the poor are very few. Very few, indeed!'

102. "When the four god kings hear this, they're distraught and unhappy. They reply, 'What!? How did this happen? Most of the world's people are bad. They aren't dutiful to their parents, don't serve their elders, don't cultivate the fasting rules, nor aid the poor. The host of gods will dwindle, and the host of asuras will grow!'

103. "Suppose the princes see that the world's people are dutiful to their parents, respect their elders, diligently cultivate the fasting rules, and aid the poor. They return and tell the god kings, 'The world's people are dutiful to their parents, respect their elders, diligently cultivate the fasting rules, and aid the poor.'

104. "When the four god kings hear this, they rejoice. They exclaim, 'Excellent! We've heard good news! The world's people are capable of being dutiful to their parents, respecting their elders, diligently cultivating the fasting rules, and aiding the poor. The host of gods will grow, and the host of asuras will dwindle!' This is why there's a fast on the fourteenth day.

105. "Why is there a fast on the fifteenth day? On the fifteenth day fast, the four god kings personally go down to check on the conduct of the world. They examine the multitude of people. 'Do the world's people prefer to be dutiful to their parents, respectful to their elders, diligently cultivate the fasting rules, and aid the poor?' They see that many of the world's people aren't dutiful to their parents, don't serve their elders, don't diligently cultivate the fasting rules, nor aid the poor.

106. "The four god king then go to the Sudharma Hall and tell Lord Sakra, 'Great King, you should know that many sentient beings in the world aren't dutiful to their parents, don't respect their elders, don't cultivate the fasting rules, nor aid the poor.'

107. "When they hear this, Lord Sakra and the Trayastrimsa gods are distraught and unhappy. They say, 'What!? How did this happen? Most of the world's people are bad. They aren't dutiful to their parents, don't respect their elders, don't cultivate the fasting rules, nor aid the poor. The host of gods will dwindle, and the host of asuras will grow!'

108. "Suppose the four god kings see that the world's people are dutiful to their parents, honor and serve their elders, diligently cultivate the fasting rules, and aid the poor. They return to the Sudharma Hall and tell Lord Sakra, 'The world's people are dutiful to their parents, honor and serve their elders, diligently cultivate the fasting rules, and aid the poor.'

109. "When they hear this, Lord Sakra and the Trayastrimsa gods rejoice. They exclaim, 'Excellent! The world's people are dutiful to their parents, honor and serve their elders, diligently cultivate the fasting rules, and aid the poor. The host of gods will grow, and the host of asuras will dwindle!' This is why there's a fast on the fifteenth day fast.

110. "These are the reasons for these three fasts.

Sakra's Verse Praising the Fasts

111. "Lord Sakra then wants the gods rejoice twice as much, so he speaks this verse:

• "'Every month on the eighth day
And the fourteenth and fifteenth days,
Those who accept and cultivate the fasting rules
Will become my equals!'"

112. The Buddha told the monks, "Lord Sakra speaks this verse, but it's neither well put nor well spoken. I wouldn't agree with it. Why is that? That Lord of Gods Sakra hasn't ended lust, anger, and delusion, and he isn't free from birth, old age, illness, death, grief, sorrow, pain, and trouble. I say such a person isn't yet free of the basis for suffering.

113. "Suppose a monk of mine is an arhat who's ended the contaminants, who's accomplished the task, put done the heavy burden, won their own reward, ended the bonds of existence, and become fully liberated. Such a monk should speak this verse:

• "'Every month on the eighth day
And the fourteenth and fifteenth days,
Those who accept and cultivate the fasting rules
Will become my equals!'"

114. The Buddha told the monks, "When that monk speaks this verse, I call it well put and well spoken. I would agree with it. Why is that? That monk has ended lust, anger, and delusion, and he's freed from birth, old age, illness, death, grief, sorrow, pain, and trouble. I say that person is free of the basis for suffering."

Yaksa Spirits that Inhabit the Earth

115. The Buddha told the monks, "The homes, dwellings, and buildings of all people have yaksa spirits. None are empty of them. Yaksa spirits are in all avenues, streets, intersections, butcher shops, markets, and graveyards. None are empty of them. All those yaksa spirits are named for their places of refuge. They're named for the people, towns, cities, countries, lands, mountains, and rivers in which they take refuge."

116. The Buddha told the monks, "All trees, even the smallest of them that are the size of wheel hubs, have yaksa spirits who take refuge in them. None of them are empty. All men and women when they are first born have yaksa spirits who protect them. At the time of their death, those guardian yaksa spirits take their spirits, and then they die."

117. The Buddha told the monks, "Suppose there are practitioners from other religions who ask, 'Gentlemen, suppose that all men and women have yaksa spirits who follow them as protectors from when they are first born. When they're about to die, those guardian yaksa spirits take their spirits, and then they die. Why are there yaksa spirits who harass people, or are there no yaksa spirits who harass people?'

118. "Supposing someone asks this question, you should answer in this way, 'Worldly people do things contrary to the Dharma, become deluded by wrong views, and commit the ten bad deeds. There may be only one yaksa spirit for every hundred or thousand of these people, just as a herd of a hundred or a thousand cattle or sheep has only one a person tending it. Those yaksa spirits are likewise for people who act contrary to the Dharma, become deluded by wrong views, and commit the ten bad deeds. There's only one spirit guarding a hundred or a thousand of those people.

119. "Suppose there are people who practice the good Dharma, who's views are correct and act according to their belief, and who perfect the ten good deeds. One such person has a hundred or a thousand spirits protecting them, just as the king or a king's minister has a hundred or a thousand people guarding them. They are likewise. A single person who practices the good Dharma and perfects the ten good deeds has a hundred or a thousand spirits protecting them. As a result of this, some worldly people are harassed by yaksa spirits, and some are not harassed by them."

Comparing Various Places to Jambudvipa

120. The Buddha told the monks, "People in Jambudvipa have three ways they are better than people in Godaniya. What are the three? First, they are courageous, have good memories, and can perform their work. Second, they are courageous, have good memories, and diligently cultivate the religious life. Third, they are courageous, have good memories, and buddhas appear in their land. These are three ways they are better than people in Godaniya.

121. "People in Godaniya have three ways they are better than people in Jambudvipa. What are the three? First, they have many cattle. Second, they have many sheep. Third, they have many treasures. These are three ways they are better than people in Jambudvipa.

122. "[People in] Jambudvipa have three ways they are better than [people in] Purvavideha. What are the three? First, they are courageous, have good memories, and can perform their work. Second, they are courageous, have good memories, and can cultivate the religious life. Third, they are courageous, have good memories, and buddhas appear in their land. These are three ways they are better than [people in] Purvavideha.

123. "[People in] Purvavideha have three ways that they are better than [people in] Jambudvipa. What are the three? First, their land is the broadest. Second, their land is the largest. Third, their land is the most wondrous. These are three ways they are better than [people in] Jambudvipa.

124. "[People in] Jambudvipa have three ways they are better than [people in] Uttarakuru. What are the three? First, they are courageous, have good memories, and can perform their work. Second, they are courageous, have good memories, and can cultivate the religious life. Third, they are courageous, have good memories, and buddhas appear in their land. These are three ways they are better than [people in] Uttarakuru.

125. "[People in] Uttarakuru have three ways they are better than [people in] Jambudvipa. What are the three? First, they have no relationship ties. Second, they are selfless. Third, they live for exactly 1,000 years. These are three ways they are better than [people in] Jambudvipa.

126. "People in Jambudvipa are also better than hungry ghosts in the above three ways.

127. "Hungry ghosts have three ways they are better than [people in] Jambudvipa. What are the three? First, they live longer. Second, they are larger. Third, they receive [merits] made by others. These are three ways they are better than [people in] Jambudvipa.

128. "People in Jambudvipa are also better than nagas and garudas in the above three ways.

129. "Nagas and garudas have three ways they are better than [people in] Jambudvipa. What are the three? First are their long life spans. Second, they are larger. Third are their palace halls. These are three ways they are better than [people in] Jambudvipa.

130. "[People in] Jambudvipa are also better than the asuras in the above three ways.

131. "Asuras have three ways they are better than [people in] Jambudvipa. What are the three? First are the height and breadth of their palace halls. Second are the decorations of their palace halls. Third is the purity of their palace halls. These are three ways they are better than [people in] Jambudvipa.

132. "People in Jambudvipa are also better than the four god kings in the above three ways.

133. "The four god kings have three ways they are better than [people in] Jambudvipa. What are the three? First are their long life spans. Second is their handsome appearance. Third are their many pleasures. These are three ways they are better than [people in] Jambudvipa.

134. "People in Jambudvipa are also better than the Trayastrimsa gods … Yama gods … Tusita gods … Nirmanarati gods … Paranirmitavasavartin gods … in the above three ways.

135. "These gods have three ways they are better than [people in] Jambudvipa. What are the three? First are their long life spans. Second are their handsome appearances. Third are their many pleasures. These are three ways they are better than [people in] Jambudvipa."

The Thirty-Eight Kinds of Beings

136. The Buddha told the monks, "The desire realm has twelve kinds of sentient beings. What are the twelve? First are those in hell. Second are those born as animals. Third are the hungry ghosts. Fourth are humans. Fifth are the asuras. Sixth are the four god kings. Seventh are the Trayastrimsa gods. Eighth are the Yama gods. Ninth are the Tusita gods. Tenth are the Nirmanarati gods. Eleventh are the Paranirmitavasavartin gods. Twelfth are the Mara gods.

137. "The form realm has twenty-two kinds of sentient beings. [What are the twenty-two?] First are the Brahmakayika gods, second are the Brahmapurohita gods, third are the Brahmaparisadhya gods, and fourth are the Mahabrahma gods. Fifth are the Abha gods, sixth are the Parittabha gods, seventh are the Apramanabha gods, and eighth are the Abhasvara gods. Ninth are the Subha gods, tenth are the Parittasubha gods, eleventh are the Apramanasubha gods, and twelfth are the Subhakrtsna gods. Thirteenth are the Adornment gods, fourteenth are the Lesser Adornment gods, fifteenth are the Measureless Adornment gods, and sixteenth are the Adornment Brhatphala gods. Seventeenth are the Asamjnika gods, eighteenth are the Avrha gods, nineteenth are the Atapa gods, twentieth are the Sudarsana gods, twenty-first are the Mahasudarsana gods, and twenty-second are the Akanistha gods.

138. "The formless realm has four kinds of sentient beings. What are the four? First are the gods who cognize space, second are the gods who cognize consciousness, third are the gods who cognize nothingness, and fourth are the gods who cognize having and not having conception."

The Spirits of the Four Gross Elements

139. The Buddha told the monks, "There are spirits of the four gross elements. What are the four? First is the earth spirit, second is the water spirit, third is the wind spirit, and fourth is the fire spirit.

140. "Once, the earth spirit had a bad view. She said, 'There's no water, fire, or wind in earth.'

141. "Knowing that the earth spirit had this thought, I went to her and said, 'Did you have this thought, "There's no water, fire, or wind in earth"?'

"The earth spirit replied, 'There really is no water, fire, or wind in earth.'

142. "I then said, 'Don't have this thought that there's no water, fire, or wind in earth. Why is that? There's water, fire, and wind in earth. It's only because there's much more earth present that it's called the earth element.'"

143. The Buddha told the monks, "That time I spoke with the earth spirit, I successively taught her the Dharma, removed her bad view by teaching, instructing, profiting, and delighting her. I discussed generosity, precepts, how to be born in heaven, that desire is impure, and the trouble of the higher contaminants. [I praised] escaping [desire] as the [most subtle, pure, and] supreme thing. I broadly explained and revealed the pure religious life to her. I then knew that her mind was pure, gentle, gladdened, devoid of the hindrances, and easy to teach. According to the eternal way of buddhas, I taught the noble truth of suffering and the truths of suffering's formation, suffering's cessation, and suffering's escape. I explained them broadly for her.

144. "The earth spirit became removed from dust and free of defilement right there on her seat, and her vision of the Dharma was purified. The earth spirit was like white cloth that readily accepts a dye. Her faith was purified, and she attained the Dharma eye without any doubts. Seeing the Dharma with certainty, she didn't fall to the unpleasant destinies, nor did she set out on some other path. Achieving fearlessness, she said to me, 'I now take refuge in the Buddha, take refuge in the Dharma, and take refuge in the Sangha. I won't kill, steal, engage in sex, lie, or drink alcohol for the rest of my life. Permit me to become an laywoman in the correct Dharma.'"

145. The Buddha told the monks, "Once, the water spirit had a bad view. She said, 'There's no earth, fire, or wind in water.'

146. "Knowing that the water spirit had this view, the earth spirit went to her and said, 'Did this view really occur to you, "There's no earth, fire, or wind in water"?'

"She replied, 'It really did.'

147. "The earth spirit then said, 'Don't have this view that there's no earth, fire, or wind in water. Why is that? There's earth, fire, and wind in water. It's only because there's much more water present that it's called the water element.'"

148. The Buddha told the monks, "The earth spirit taught the Dharma for the water spirit, removing her bad view by teaching, instructing, profiting, and delighting her. She discussed generosity, precepts, how to be born in heaven, that desire is impure, and the trouble of the higher contaminants. [She praised] escaping [desire] as the [most subtle, pure, and] supreme thing. She broadly explained and revealed the pure religious life to her. The earth spirit then knew that the water spirit's mind was gentle, gladdened, confident, purified, devoid of the hindrances, and easy to teach. According to the eternal way of buddhas, she taught the noble truth of suffering and the truths of suffering's formation, suffering's cessation, and suffering's escape. She explained them broadly for her.

149. "The water spirit became removed from dust and free of defilement right there on her seat, and her vision of the Dharma was purified. The water spirit was like white cloth that readily accepts a dye. Her faith was purified, and she attained purity of the Dharma eye without any doubts. Attaining the reward of certainty, she didn't fall to the unpleasant destinies, nor did she set out on some other path. Achieving fearlessness, she told the earth spirit, 'I now take refuge in the Buddha, take refuge in the Dharma, and take refuge in the Sangha. I won't kill, steal, engage in sex, lie, or drink alcohol for the rest of my life. Permit me to become an laywoman in the correct Dharma.'"

150. The Buddha told the monks, "Once, the fire spirit had a bad view. She said, 'There's no earth, water, or wind in fire.'

151. "Knowing that the fire spirit had this view, the earth and water spirits both went to her and said, 'Has this view really occurred to you[, "There's no earth, water, or wind in fire"]?'

"The fire spirit replied, 'It really did.'

152. "Both spirits said, 'Don't have this view [that there's no earth, water, or wind in fire.] Why is that? There's earth, water, and wind in fire. It's only because there's much more fire present that it's called the fire element.'"

153. "Those two spirits [successively] taught the fire spirit the Dharma, removing her bad view by teaching, instructing, profiting, and delighting her. They discussed generosity, precepts, how to be born in heaven, that desire is impure, and the trouble of the higher contaminants. [They praised] escaping desire as the [most subtle, pure, and] supreme thing. They broadly explained and revealed the pure religious life to her. Those two spirits then knew that the fire spirit's mind was gentle, gladdened, confident, pure, devoid of the hindrances, and easy to teach. According to the eternal way of buddhas, they taught the noble truth of suffering and the truths of suffering's formation, suffering's cessation, and suffering's escape. They explained them broadly for her.

154. "The fire spirit became removed from dust and free of defilement [right there on her seat], and her vision of the Dharma was purified. The fire spirit was like white cloth that readily accepts a dye. Her faith was purified, and she attained the Dharma eye without any doubts. Attaining the reward of certainty, she didn't fall to the unpleasant destinies, nor did she set out on some other path. Achieving fearlessness, she told the two spirits, 'I now take refuge in the Buddha, take refuge in the Dharma, and take refuge in the Sangha. I won't kill, steal, engage in sex, lie, or drink alcohol for the rest of my life. Permit me to become an laywoman in the correct Dharma.'"

155. The Buddha told the monks, "Once, the wind spirit had a bad view. She said, 'There's no earth, water, or fire in wind.'

156. "The earth, water, and fire spirits knew this thought that the wind spirit had, so they went to her and said, 'Has this view really occurred to you, "There's no earth, water, or fire in wind?"'

"The wind spirit replied, 'It really did.'

157. "Those three spirits then said, 'Don't have this view [that there's no earth, water, or fire in wind]. Why is that? There's earth, water, and fire in wind. It's only because there's much more wind present that it's called the wind element.'"

158. The Buddha told the monks, "Those three spirits [successively] taught the wind spirit the Dharma, removed her bad view by teaching, instructing, profiting, and delighting her. They discussed generosity, precepts, how to be born in heaven, that desire is impure, and the trouble of the higher contaminants. [They praised] escaping desire as the [most subtle, pure, and] supreme thing. They broadly explained and revealed the pure religious life to her. Those three spirits then knew that the wind spirit's mind was gentle, gladdened, confident, pure, devoid of the hindrances, and easy to teach. According to the eternal way of buddhas, they taught the noble truth of suffering and the truths of suffering's formation, suffering's cessation, and suffering's escape. They explained them broadly for her.

159. "The wind spirit became removed from dust and free of defilement [right there on her seat], and her vision of the Dharma was purified. The wind spirit was like white cloth that readily accepts a dye. Her faith was purified, and she attained the Dharma eye without any doubts. Attaining the reward of certainty, she didn't fall to the unpleasant destinies, nor did she set out on some other path. Achieving fearlessness, she told the three spirits, 'I now take refuge in the Buddha, take refuge in the Dharma, and take refuge in the Sangha. I won't kill, steal, engage in sex, lie, or drink alcohol for the rest of my life. Permit me to become an laywoman in the correct Dharma.'"

On Clouds, Lightning, and Rain

160. The Buddha told the monks, "There are four kinds of clouds. What are the four? The first is white-colored, the second is black-colored, the third is red-colored, and the fourth is crimson-colored. The white clouds have a large amount of earth element in them. The black clouds have a large amount of water element in them. The red clouds have a large among of fire element in them. The crimson clouds have a large among of wind element in them.

161. "Those clouds are sometimes five kilometers, ten kilometers, fifteen kilometers, twenty kilometers … 2,000 kilometers away from the Earth. The exception is right after the eon begins when the clouds go up to the Abhasvara Heaven.

162. "Lightning has four kinds. What are the four? Eastern lightning, which is called Body Light. Southern lightning, which is called Hard to Destroy. Western lightning, which is called Streaming Fire. Northern lightning, which is called Fixed Illumination.

163. "Why are there these lightning flashes in the clouds and sky? Sometimes, Body Light and Hard to Destroy touch each other. Sometimes Body Light and Stream of Fire touch each other. Sometimes the Body Light and Fixed Illumination touch each other. Sometimes Hard to Destroy and Stream of Fire touch each other. Sometimes Hard to Destroy and Fixed Illumination touch each other. Sometimes Stream of Fire and Fixed Illumination touch each other. These are the reasons that there are lightning flashes in the sky and clouds.

164. "Again, why does the sound of thunder happen in the sky and clouds? Sometimes, the earth and water elements come into contact in the sky. Sometimes, the earth and fire elements come into contact. Sometimes, the earth and wind elements come into contact. Sometimes, the water and fire elements come into contact. Sometimes, the water and wind elements come into contact. These are the reasons the sound of thunder happens in the sky and clouds.

165. "There are five causes and conditions that make predicting rain uncertain and confuse forecasters. What are the five? First, the clouds may have thunder and lightning, and a forecaster says it will rain. However, the clouds are baked by too much fire element and don't release rain. This is the first reason forecasters are mistaken.

166. "Second, the clouds may have thunder and lightning, and a forecaster says it will rain. However, a great wind rises that scatters the clouds in all four directions, blowing them into the mountains. This is the [second] reason forecasters are mistaken.

167. "Third, clouds may have thunder and lightning, and a forecaster says it will rain. However, a great asura approaches, disperses the clouds, and sends them over the ocean. This is the [third] reason forecasters are mistaken.

168. "Fourth, clouds may have thunder and lightning, and a forecaster says it will rain. However, the master of clouds and master of rain are careless and lustful, so they never release the rain. This is the [fourth] reason forecasters are mistaken.

169. "Fifth, clouds may have thunder and lightning, and a forecaster says it will rain. However, the world's population behaves contrary to the Dharma. They carelessly do impure deeds, and they are stingy, jealous, and hold deluded views. This causes the heavens not to release its rain. This is the [fifth] reason forecasters are mistaken. These are the five causes and conditions for forecasters to be uncertain about rain.

CHAPTER 9: THE THREE CATASTROPHES

(This story is parallel to the Seven Suns Sutra (cf. AN 7.66 and MA 8). Mount Sudarsana has been omitted from this section, probably an accidental copyist error given that the sizes of the mountains do not match those found in Chapter 1 from this point until it is corrected for Mount Cakravada.)

The Four Measureless Eons

1. The Buddha told the monks, "There are four periods that last a long time, that are measureless and limitless. The number of years, months, and days can't be calculated.

2. "What are the four? First is the gradual conflagration of the world. When it destroys the world, it's a very long period that's measureless and limitless. The number of years, months, and days can't be calculated. Second is the period of void after the world's destruction. There's no world for a very long time, and it extends for a great distance. The number of years, months, and days can't be calculated. Third is the initial arising of heaven and earth. When the world is forming, it's a very long period. The number of years, months, and days can't be calculated. Fourth, the period after heaven and earth lasts after it forms is a very long time that's measureless and limitless. The number of years, months, and days can't be calculated."

3. The Buddha told the monks, "The world has three catastrophes. What are the three? First is the catastrophe of fire. Second is the catastrophe of water. Third is the catastrophe of wind. There are three upper limits to these catastrophes. What are the three? First is the Abhasvara Heaven. Second is the Subhakrtsna Heaven. Third is the Brhatphala Heaven. The catastrophe of fire reaches the Abhasvara Heaven and stops there. The catastrophe of water reaches the Subhakrtsna Heaven, and stops there. The catastrophe of wind reaches the Brhatphala Heaven and stops there.

The Catastrophe of Fire

4. "What is the catastrophe of fire? When the catastrophe of fire is about to happen, the world's people all practice the correct Dharma. They have right view, aren't deluded, and cultivate the ten good deeds. When they practice these things, the people attain the second dhyana, and they leap up into the sky. Those people on the noble path, the heavenly path, and the Brahma path call out from above: 'Good people, you should know the happiness of the second dhyana without perception or examination! The second dhyana is happiness!'

"When the world's people hear this call, they look up and say to them, 'Excellent, excellent! Please explain for us the path of the second dhyana that has no perception or examination!'

5. "When the people in the sky hear that, they explain to them the way of the second dhyana without perception or examination. When the world's people hear that explanation, they cultivate the path of the second dhyana without perception or examination, and they're born in the Abhasvara Heaven when their bodies break up and their lives end.

6. "When sentient beings' punishment in hell is finished and their lives there end, they're reborn among humans. They too cultivate the second dhyana that's without perception or examination, and they're born in the Abhasvara Heaven when their bodies break up and their lives end. Sentient beings born as animals … hungry ghosts … asuras … four god kings … Trayastrimsa gods … Yama gods … Tusita gods … Nirmanarati gods … Paranirmitavasavartin gods … Brahma gods are reborn among humans when their lives end. They too cultivate the second dhyana that's without perception or examination, and they're born in the Abhasvara Heaven when their bodies break up and their lives end.

7. "As a result of these causes, the destiny of hell is ended … animals … hungry ghosts … asuras … Brahma heavens is ended.

8. "As this happens, hell disappears first, and then animal births disappear after it. After animal births are gone, the hungry ghosts disappear. After the hungry ghosts are gone, the asuras disappear. After the asuras are gone, the four god kings disappear. After the four god kings are gone, the Trayastrimsa gods disappear. After the Trayastrimsa gods are gone, the Yama gods disappear. After the Yama gods are gone, the Tusita gods disappear. After the Tusita gods are gone, the Nirmanarati gods disappear. After the Nirmanarati gods are gone, the Paranirmitavasavartin gods disappear. After the Paranirmitavasavartin gods are gone, the Brahma gods disappear. After the Brahma gods are gone, then humans disappear with none remaining. After humans are gone with none remaining, the world is destroyed when the catastrophe takes place. Afterward, no rain falls from the heavens, and the hundred grains, grasses, and trees naturally wither and die."

9. The Buddha told the monks, "You should know from this that all formed things are impermanent. They are liable to change and disintegrate, which makes them unreliable. Conditioned things are quite troublesome. You should seek the path of freedom that transcends the world.

The Seven Suns

10. "A long, long time after that, a great, dark gale rises. It blows the ocean's water, which is 84,000 yojanas deep. The wind then divides into two. They grab the palace of the sun and place it halfway up Mount Sumeru, which is 42,000 yojanas away from the earth in the orbit of the sun. As a result of this, the world then has two suns that rise. When two suns rise, all the small rivers, streams, and brooks in the world dry up."

11. The Buddha told the monks, "You should know from this that all formed things are impermanent. They are liable to change and disintegrate, which makes them unreliable. Conditioned things are quite troublesome. You should seek the path of freedom that transcends the world.

12. "A long, long time after that, a great, dark gale rises. It blows the ocean's water, which is 84,000 yojanas deep. The then wind divides into two. They grab the palace of the sun and place it halfway up Mount Sumeru, which is 42,000 yojanas away from the earth in the orbit of the sun. As a result of this, the world then has three suns that rise. When three suns rise, large rivers such as the Ganga River, Jamuna River, Barana River Aciravati River, Mahi (?) River, and Sindhu River, all dry up with nothing remaining.

13. "You should know from this that all formed things are impermanent. They are liable to change and disintegrate, which makes them unreliable. Conditioned things are quite troublesome. You should seek the path of freedom that transcends the world.

14. "A long, long time after that, a great, dark gale rises. [It blows] the ocean's water, which is 84,000 yojanas deep. The wind then divides into two. They grab the palace of the sun and place it halfway up Mount Sumeru, [which is 42,000 yojanas away from the earth] in the orbit of the sun. As a result of this, the world then has four suns that rise. When four suns rise, the springs, deep lakes, Lake Sudarsana, Lake Anavatapta, and the great lakes in all four directions, utpala lakes, kumuda lakes, pundarika lakes, and lakes that are fifty yojanas across all dry up completely.

15. "You should know from this that all formed things are impermanent. They are liable to change and disintegrate, which makes them unreliable. Conditioned things are quite troublesome. You should seek the path of freedom that transcends the world.

16. "A long, long time after that, a great, dark gale rises. It blows the ocean's water, [which is 84,000 yojanas deep]. The wind then divides into two. They grab the palace of the sun and place it halfway up Mount Sumeru, [which is 42,000 yojanas away from the earth] in the orbit of the sun. As a result of this, the world then has five suns that rise. When five sun rise, the water of the ocean is gradually reduced by a hundred yojanas to 700 yojanas.

17. "You should know from this that all formed things are impermanent. They are liable to change and disintegrate, which makes them unreliable. Conditioned things are quite troublesome. You should seek the path of freedom that transcends the world.

18. "Then, the ocean is gradually reduced until there's only 700 yojanas … 600 yojanas … 500 yojanas … 400 yojanas … a hundred yojanas of it left.

19. "You should know from this that all formed things are impermanent. They are liable to change and disintegrate, which makes them unreliable. Conditioned things are quite troublesome. You should seek the path of freedom that transcends the world.

20. "Then, the ocean is gradually reduced until there's only seven yojanas … six yojanas … five yojanas … one yojana of it left."

21. The Buddha told the monks, "You should know from this that all formed things are impermanent. They are liable to change and disintegrate, which makes them unreliable. Conditioned things are quite troublesome. You should seek the path of freedom that transcends the world.

22. "After that, the ocean is gradually reduced until it's only seven tala trees … six tala trees … one tala tree deep."

23. The Buddha told the monks, "You should know from this that all formed things are impermanent. They are liable to change and disintegrate, which makes them unreliable. Conditioned things are quite troublesome. You should seek the path of freedom that transcends the world.

24. "After that, the ocean's water dwindles to the height of seven men … six men … five men … four men … three men … two men … one man … up to a man's waist … to a man's knees … to a man's calves … to a man's ankles."

25. The Buddha told the monks, "You should know from this that all formed things are impermanent. They are liable to change and disintegrate, which makes them unreliable. Conditioned things are quite troublesome. You should seek the path of freedom that transcends the world.

26. "After that, the ocean's water is like a puddle after a spring rain or in a cow's footprint. Nearly dried up completely, it can't even wet a man's finger."

27. The Buddha told the monks, "You should know from this that all formed things are impermanent. They are liable to change and disintegrate, which makes them unreliable. Conditioned things are quite troublesome. You should seek the path of freedom that transcends the world.

28. "A long, long time after that, a great, dark gale rises. It blows on the sand at the ocean's bottom, which is 84,000 yojanas deep. The wind then divides into two whirlwinds. They grab the palace of the sun and place it halfway up Mount Sumeru, [which is 42,000 yojanas away from the earth] in the orbit of the sun. As a result of this, the world then has six suns that rise. When six suns rise, the four continents and 80,000 islands, large mountains, and the mountain king Sumeru are baked and burned like bricks in a potter's kiln. When six suns rise, it's like that."

29. The Buddha told the monks, "You should know from this that all formed things are impermanent. They are liable to change and disintegrate, which makes them unreliable. Conditioned things are quite troublesome. You should seek the path of freedom that transcends the world.

30. "A long, long time after that, a great, dark gale rises. It blows on the sand at the ocean's bottom, which is 84,000 yojanas deep. The wind then divides into two whirlwinds. They grab the palace of the sun and place it halfway up Mount Sumeru, [which is 42,000 yojanas away from the earth] in the orbit of the sun. As a result of this, the world then has seven suns that rise. When seven suns rise, the four continents, 80,000 islands, large mountains, and the mountain king Sumeru are all completely incinerated as thought burned up in a potter's kiln. When the seventh sun rises, it's like that."

31. The Buddha told the monks, "You should know from this that all formed things are impermanent. They are liable to change and disintegrate, which makes them unreliable. Conditioned things are quite troublesome. You should seek the path of freedom that transcends the world.

32. "These four continents, the 80,000 islands, and Mount Sumeru are all completely incinerated. At the same time, the palace of the four god kings, the palaces of the Trayastrimsa gods, the palaces of the Yama gods, and the palaces of the Nirmanarati gods, Paranirmitavasavartin gods, and the Brahma gods are also incinerated."

33. The Buddha told the monks, "You should know from this that all formed things are impermanent. They are liable to change and disintegrate, which makes them unreliable. Conditioned things are quite troublesome. You should seek the path of freedom that transcends the world.

34. "After the four continents … the Brahma heavens are incinerated, a wind blows the flames up to the Abhasvara Heaven.[n] The gods who had recently been born there see these flames and are afraid. They say, 'Oh! What is that?'

35. "The gods who were born before them tell the recently born gods, 'Don't be afraid! That fire has come before. It'll come right up to here and stop.' It's because they remember the brilliance of previous conflagrations that they are called 'fire remembering gods.'

36. "After the four continents … the Brahma heavens are incinerated, Sumeru the mountain king gradually crumbles by a hundred yojanas … two hundred yojanas … seven hundred yojanas."

37. The Buddha told the monks, "You should know from this that all formed things are impermanent. They are liable to change and disintegrate, which makes them unreliable. Conditioned things are quite troublesome. You should seek the path of freedom that transcends the world.

38. "After the four continents … the Brahma heavens are incinerated, then the whole earth and Mount Sumeru completely disappear without any coals or ash remaining.

39. "You should know from this that all formed things are impermanent. They are liable to change and disintegrate, which makes them unreliable. Conditioned things are quite troublesome. You should seek the path of freedom that transcends the world.

40. "After the whole earth is completely burned up, the water below the earth disappears, and the air below the water also disappears.

41. "You should know from this that all formed things are impermanent. They are liable to change and disintegrate, which makes them unreliable. Conditioned things are quite troublesome. You should seek the path of freedom that transcends the world."

42. The Buddha told the monks, "When the catastrophe of fire happens, no more rain falls from the heavens, and the hundred grains, plants, and trees naturally wither and die. Who would believe that? Only those who witnessed it would, but how could anyone know about it? Thus … the water below the earth disappears, and the wind below the water disappears. Who would believe that? Only those who witnessed it would, but how could anyone know about it? This is the catastrophe of fire.

The First Restoration of the World

43. "How is the world restored after the eon of fire? A long, long time after that, a huge black cloud in the sky releases rain everywhere up to the Abhasvara Heaven. The raindrops are the size of cartwheels. It rains like this for countless thousands of years. The water gradually accumulates countless hundreds of thousands of yojanas high, reaching the Abhasvara Heaven.

44. "Then, four great winds arise to support this water. What are the four? The first is called the standing wind. The second is called the holding wind. The third is called the immovable wind. The fourth is called the steadfast wind. After that, this water subsides by a hundred thousand yojanas, but it's still countless hundreds of thousands of yojanas deep. A great wind rises on all four sides of that water, which is called Sangha. It blows on the water and agitates it. The crashing of the waves is immense, and a mass of foam accumulates. The wind blows it off of the water and into the sky. It spontaneously hardens there, forming a heavenly palace decorated with the seven treasures. As a result of these events, the Brahmakayika Heaven's palace comes to be.

45. "That water continues to subside countless hundreds of thousands of yojanas. A great wind rises on all four sides of that water, which is called Sangha. It blows the water and agitates it. The crashing of the waves is immense, and a mass of foam accumulates. The wind blows it off of the water and into the sky. It spontaneously hardens there, forming a heavenly palace decorated with the seven treasures. As a result of these events, the Paranirmitavasavartin Heaven's palace comes to be.

46. "That water continues to subside countless [hundreds of] thousands of yojanas. A great wind rises on all four sides of that water, which is called Sangha. It blows the water and agitates it. The crashing of the waves is immense, and a mass of foam accumulates. The wind blows it off of the water and into the sky. It spontaneously hardens there, forming a heavenly palace decorated with the seven treasures. As a result of these events, the Nirmanarati Heaven's palace comes to be.

47. "That water continues to subside countless hundreds of thousands of yojanas. A great wind [rises on all four sides of that water, which is] called Sangha. It blows the water and agitates it. The crashing of the waves is immense, and a mass of foam accumulates. The wind blows it off of the water and into the sky. It spontaneously hardens there, forming a heavenly palace decorated with the seven treasures. As a result of these events, the Tusita Heaven's palace comes to be.

48. "That water continues to subside countless hundreds of thousands of yojanas. A great wind [rises on all four sides of that water, which is] called Sangha. It blows the water and agitates it. The crashing of the waves is immense, and a mass of foam accumulates. The wind blows it off of the water and into the sky. It spontaneously hardens there, forming a heavenly palace [decorated with the seven treasures.] As a result of these events, the Yama Heaven's palace comes to be.

49. "That water continues to subside countless hundreds of thousands of yojanas. The foam on the water is 68,000 yojanas deep,[n] and it's bounds are endless. It's like the foam on the water when a stream flows from an underground spring.

50. "What are the events that cause Mount Sumeru to come to be? A windstorm rises and blows the water's foam into the form of Mount Sumeru, 68,000 yojanas tall and 84,000 yojanas across. It's made of the four treasures of gold, silver, crystal, and beryl.

51. "What are the events that cause the four asura palaces to come to be? After that, a windstorm blows the great ocean's water, blowing it into a great mass of foam. On Mount Sumeru's four sides, a great palace hall arises. Each of them is 80,000 yojanas across, and they spontaneously form palace halls made of seven treasures.

52. "Again, what are the events that cause the palaces of the four god kings to come to be? After that, a windstorm blows the great ocean's water, blowing it into a great mass of foam. Halfway up the Mount Sumeru, which is 42,000 yojanas, palaces spontaneously form that are made of the seven treasures. Therefore, they're called the palaces of the four god kings.

53. "What are the events that cause the Trayastrimsa Heaven's palace to come to be? After that, a windstorm blows the foam on the water, and it spontaneously forms into a palace hall made of the seven treasures at the top of Mount Sumeru.

54. "Again, by what events does Mount Khadiraka come to be? After that, a windstorm blows a mass of foam to a place not far from Mount Sumeru, and it spontaneously forms a treasure mountain. Below it, its root goes 42,000 yojanas into the earth, and it's 42,000 yojanas across. Its bounds are endless, it has a mix of assorted colors, and it's made of the seven treasures. As a result of these events, Mount Khadiraka comes to be.

55. "Again, by what events does Mount Isadara come to be? After that, a windstorm blows a mass of foam to a place not far from Mount Khadiraka and it spontaneously forms Mount Isadara. It's 21,000 yojanas tall and 21,000 yojanas across. Its bounds are endless, it has a mix of assorted colors, and it's made of the seven treasures. As a result of these events, Mount Isadara comes to be.

56. "[Again, by what events does Mount Yugandhara come to be?] After that, a windstorm blows a mass of foam to a place not far from Mount Isadara, and it spontaneously forms Mount Yugandhara. It's 12,000 yojanas tall and 12,000 yojanas across. Its bounds are endless, it has a mix of assorted colors, and it's made of the seven treasures. As a result of these events, Mount Yugandhara comes to be.

57. "[Again, by what events does Mount Asvakarna come to be?] After that, a windstorm blows a mass of foam to a place not far from Mount Yugandhara, and it spontaneously forms Mount Asvakarna. It's 6,000 yojanas tall and 6,000 yojanas across. Its bounds are endless, it has a mix of assorted colors, and it's made of the seven treasures. As a result of these events, Mount Asvakarna comes to be.

58. "[Again, by what events does Mount Nimindhara come to be?] After that, a windstorm blows a mass of foam to a place not far from Mount Asvakarna, and it spontaneously forms Mount Nimindhara. It's 3,000 yojanas tall and 3,000 yojanas across. Its bounds are endless, it has a mix of assorted colors, and it's made of the seven treasures. As a result of these events, Mount Nimindhara comes to be.

59. "[Again, by what events does Mount Vinitaka come to be?] After that, a windstorm blows a mass of foam to a place not far from Mount Nimindhara, and it spontaneously forms Mount Vinitaka. It's 1,200 yojanas tall and 1,200 yojanas across. Its bounds are endless, it has a mix of assorted colors, and it's made of the seven treasures. As a result of these events, Mount Vinitaka comes to be.

60. "[Again, by what events does Mount Cakravada come to be?] After that, a windstorm blows a mass of foam to a place not far from Mount Vinitaka, and it spontaneously forms Mount Cakravada. It's 300 yojanas tall and 300 yojanas across. Its bounds are endless, it has a mix of assorted colors, and it's made of the seven treasures. As a result of these events, Mount Cakravada comes to be.

61. "Why is there a moon and seven sun palaces? After that, a windstorm blows a mass of foam, and it spontaneously forms a moon palace and seven sun palaces. They have a mix of assorted colors, and they're made of the seven treasures. A dark wind blows them back to their original places. As a result of these events, the moon palace and sun palace come to be.

62. "After that, a windstorm blows a mass of foam, and it spontaneously forms the four continents and 80,000 islands. As a result of these events, the four continents and 80,000 islands come to be.

63. "After that, a windstorm blows a mass of foam onto the four continents and 80,000 islands, and it spontaneously forms the great vajra mountain chain, which is 168,000 yojanas tall and 168,000 yojanas across. Its bounds are endless, and it's as hard as diamond and indestructible. As a result of these events, the great vajra mountain chain comes to be.

64. "A long, long time after that, a spontaneous cloud covers the entire sky and releases a great deluge everywhere with raindrops like cartwheels. The water rises to submerge the four continents, Mount Sumeru, and the rest.

65. "After that, a windstorm blows on the earth, gouging a great depression into it. The water fills it up, resulting in the oceans. As a result of these events, the four great oceans come to be.

Three Reasons the Oceans Are Salty

66. "There are three circumstances for the ocean's saltiness. What are the three? First, a spontaneous cloud covers the entire sky up to the Abhasvara Heaven and releases its rain everywhere. It washes over the heavenly palaces and the world. The Brahmakayika Heaven's palace, Paranirmitavasavartin Heaven's palace … Yama Heaven's palace, the four continents, 80,000 islands, mountains, great mountains, and Sumeru the mountain king are washed and cleansed. In those places, the pollutants and impure substances are bitter and salty. They flow down into the ocean and combine into a single flavor. Therefore, the ocean's water is salty.

67. "Second, a great sage in the past cast a spell on the ocean that made it grow salty and bitter so that people couldn't drink it. Therefore, it's salty and bitter.

68. "Third, that ocean's water is home to a variety of sentient beings, and their bodies grow large. Some are a hundred yojanas … two hundred yojanas … seven hundred yojanas in size. They spit, drool, urinate, and defecate in the water. Therefore, the ocean's water is salty.

69. "This is the catastrophe of fire."

The Catastrophe of Water

70. The Buddha told the monks, "What is the catastrophe of water? When the catastrophe of water happens, the world's people uphold the correct Dharma, have right view, don't have wrong views, and cultivate the ten good deeds. After they cultivate the ten good deeds, there are people who attain the third dhyana that's without joy and leap up into the sky. Those people on the noble path, the heavenly path, and the path of Brahma call out from above: 'Good people, you should know the happiness of the third dhyana without joy! The third dhyana that's without joy is happiness!'

"When the world's people hear this call, they look up and say to them, 'Excellent, excellent! Please explain for us the path of the third dhyana that's without joy!'

71. "When the people in the sky hear that, they explain the path of the third dhyana that's without joy. When the world's people hear that explanation, they cultivate the path of the third dhyana, and they're born in the Subhakrtsna Heaven when their bodies break up and their lives end.

72. "When sentient beings' punishment in hell is finished and their lives end, they're reborn among humans. They too cultivate the path of the third dhyana, and they're born in the Subhakrtsna Heaven when their bodies break up and their lives end. Sentient beings born as animals … hungry ghosts … asuras … four god kings … Trayastrimsa gods … Yama gods … Tusita gods … Nirmanarati gods … Paranirmitavasavartin gods … Brahma gods … Abhasvara gods are reborn as humans when their lives end. They too cultivate the path of the third dhyana, and they're born in the Subhakrtsna Heaven when their bodies break up and their lives end.

73. "As a result of these causes, the destiny of hell is ended … animals … hungry ghosts … asuras … the four god kings … Abhasvara Heaven is ended.

74. "As this happens, hell disappears first, and then animal births disappear after it. After animal births are gone, the hungry ghosts disappear. After the hungry ghosts are gone, the asuras disappear. After the asuras are gone, the four god kings disappear. After the four god kings are gone, the Trayastrimsa gods disappear. After the Trayastrimsa gods are gone, the Yama gods disappear. After the Yama gods are gone, the Tusita gods disappear. After the Tusita gods are gone, the Nirmanarati gods disappear. After the Nirmanarati gods are gone, the Paranirmitavasavartin gods disappear. After the Paranirmitavasavartin gods are gone, the Brahma gods disappear. After the Brahma gods are gone, then the Abhasvara gods disappear. After the Abhasvara gods are gone, then humans disappear with none remaining. After humans are gone with none remaining, the world is destroyed when the catastrophe takes place."

75. "A long, long time after that, a huge black storm rises up to the Subhakrtsna Heaven and releases a deluge everywhere. The rain is boiling hot water that cooks the heavens. It washes over all the heavenly palaces there without any exceptions. Like butter put in a fire that's cooked and melts away until nothing remains, the palace of the Abhasvara Heaven is likewise.

76. "You should know from this that all formed things are impermanent. They are liable to change and disintegrate, which makes them unreliable. Conditioned things are quite troublesome. You should seek the path of freedom that transcends the world.

77. "After that, this rain again soaks the palace of the Brahmakayika Heaven, cooking and melting it away until nothing remains. Just as when butter is put into a fire and nothing remains of it, the palace of the Brahmakayika Heaven is likewise.

78. "After that, this rain again soaks the palaces of the Paranirmitavasavartin Heaven … Nirmanarati Heaven … Tusita Heaven … Yama Heaven, cooking and melting them away until nothing remains. Just as when butter is put into a fire and nothing remains of it, those heavenly palaces are likewise.

79. "After that, this rain again soaks the four continents, 80,000 islands, the mountains, great mountains, and Sumeru the mountain king, cooking and melting them away until nothing remains. Just as when butter is put into a fire and nothing remains of it, those places are likewise.

80. "Therefore, you should know from this that all formed things are impermanent. They are liable to change and disintegrate, which makes them unreliable. Conditioned things are quite troublesome. You should seek the path of freedom that transcends the world.

81. "After that, the rain cooks the whole earth. When nothing else remains, the water beneath the earth disappears, and then the wind beneath the water disappears.

82. "Therefore, you should know from this that all formed things are impermanent. They are liable to change and disintegrate, which makes them unreliable. Conditioned things are quite troublesome. You should seek the path of freedom that transcends the world."

83. The Buddha told the monks, "The palaces [below] the Subhakrtsna Heaven are cooked and melt away, but who would believe that? Only someone who witnessed it would, but how could anyone know about it? The Brahmakayika palace cooks and melts away … the water beneath the earth disappears, and the wind beneath the water disappears. Who would believe that? Only someone who witnessed it would, but how could anyone know about it?

84. "This is the catastrophe of water.

The Second Restoration of the World

85. "How is the world restored after the catastrophe of water? A long, long time after that, a huge black cloud fills the sky up to the Subhakrtsna Heaven and releases rain everywhere. The raindrops are the size of cartwheels. It rains like this for countless hundreds of thousands of years. The water gradually accumulates [countless hundreds of thousands of yojanas high], reaching the Subhakrtsna Heaven.

86. "Then, four great winds arise to support this water. What are the four? The first is called the standing wind. The second is called the holding wind. The third is called the immovable wind. The fourth is called the steadfast wind. After that, this water subsides [by a hundred thousand yojanas], but it's still countless hundreds of thousands of yojanas deep. A great wind rises on all four sides of that water, which is called Sangha. It blows on the water and agitates it. The crashing of the waves is immense, and a mass of foam accumulates. The wind blows it off of the water and into the sky. It spontaneously hardens there, forming the Abhasvara Heaven's palace, which is decorated with the seven treasures. As a result of these events, the palace of the Abhasvara Heaven comes to be.

87. "That water continues to subside countless hundreds of thousands of yojanas. That Sangha wind rises. It blows the water and agitates it. The crashing of the waves is immense, and a mass of foam accumulates. The wind blows it off of the water and into the sky. It spontaneously hardens there, forming the Brahmakayika Heaven's palace, which is decorated with the seven treasures … Thus, the ocean's water has the single flavor of salty bitterness again as it did after the catastrophe of fire.

88. "This is the catastrophe of water."

The Catastrophe of Wind

89. The Buddha told the monks, "What is the catastrophe of wind? When the catastrophe of wind happens, the world's people uphold the correct Dharma, have right view, don't have wrong views, and cultivate the ten good deeds. After they cultivate the ten good deeds, there are people who attain the pure equanimity and mindfulness of the fourth dhyana and leap up into the sky. Those people on the noble path, the heavenly path, and the path of Brahma call out from above: 'Good people, [you should know] the happiness of the pure equanimity and mindfulness of the fourth dhyana! The pure equanimity and mindfulness of the fourth dhyana is happiness!'

90. "When the world's people hear that voice, they look up and say to it, 'Excellent, excellent! Please explain for us the path of the fourth dhyana's pure equanimity and mindfulness!'

91. "When the people in the sky hear that, they explain the path of the fourth dhyana's pure equanimity and mindfulness. When the world's people hear that explanation, they cultivate the path of the fourth dhyana, and they're born in the Brhatphala Heaven when their bodies break up and their lives end.

92. "When sentient beings' punishment in hell is finished and their lives end, they're reborn among humans. They too cultivate the path of the fourth dhyana, and they're born in the Brhatphala Heaven when their bodies break up and their lives end. Sentient beings born as animals … hungry ghosts … asuras … four god kings … [Trayastrimsa gods … Yama gods … Tusita gods … Nirmanarati gods … Paranirmitavasavartin gods … Brahma gods … Abhasvara gods] … Subhakrtsna gods are reborn as humans when their lives end. They too cultivate the path of the fourth dhyana, and they're born in the Brhatphala Heaven when their bodies break up and their lives end.

93. "As a result of these causes, the destiny of hell is ended … animals … hungry ghosts … asuras … the four god kings … Subhakrtsna Heaven is ended.

94. "As this happens, hell disappears first, and then animal births disappear after it. After animal births are gone, the hungry ghosts disappear. After the hungry ghosts are gone, the asuras disappear. After the asuras are gone, the four god kings disappear. After the four god kings are gone, the Trayastrimsa gods disappear. After the Trayastrimsa gods are gone, the Yama gods disappear. After the Yama gods are gone, the Tusita gods disappear. After the Tusita gods are gone, the Nirmanarati gods disappear. After the Nirmanarati gods are gone, the Paranirmitavasavartin gods disappear. After the Paranirmitavasavartin gods are gone, the Brahma gods disappear. After the Brahma gods are gone, then the Abhasvara gods disappear. After the Abhasvara gods are gone, the Brhatphala gods disappear. After the Brhatphala gods are gone, then humans disappear with none remaining. After humans are gone with none remaining, the world is destroyed when the catastrophe takes place.

95. "A long, long time after that, a gale rises called Great Sangha. It goes up to the Brhatphala Heaven and disperses in four directions. It blows on the Brhatphala Heaven's palace and Abhasvara Heaven's palace, causing those palaces to crash into each other. This pulverizes them to dust. Just as a strong man uses a pair of bronze hammers to smash something between them to pulverize it until nothing remains, those two palaces crashing into each other is likewise.

96. "You should know from this that all formed things are impermanent. They are liable to change and disintegrate, which makes them unreliable. Conditioned things are quite troublesome. You should seek the path of freedom that transcends the world.

97. "After that, this wind blows on the Brahmakayika Heaven's palace and the Paranirmitavasavartin Heaven's palace, causing those palaces to crash into each other. This pulverizes them to dust until nothing remains. Just as a strong man uses a pair of bronze hammers to smash something between them to pulverize it until nothing remains, those two palaces crashing into each other is likewise.

98. "You should know from this that all formed things are impermanent. They are liable to change and disintegrate, which makes them unreliable. Conditioned things are quite troublesome. You should seek the path of freedom that transcends the world.

99. "After that, this wind blows on the Nirmanarati Heaven's palace and the Tusita Heaven's palace, causing those palaces to crash the into each other. This pulverizes them to dust until nothing remains. Just as a strong man uses a pair of bronze hammers to smash something between them to pulverize it until nothing remains, those two palaces crashing into each other is likewise.

100. "You should know from this that all formed things are impermanent. They are liable to change and disintegrate, which makes them unreliable. Conditioned things are quite troublesome. You should seek the path of freedom that transcends the world.

101. "After that, this wind blows the four continents, 80,000 islands, mountains, great mountains, and Sumeru the mountain king a hundred thousand yojanas up into the sky. The mountains collide and pulverize each other to dust. Like a strong man throwing a handful of chaff into the air, the four continents, Sumeru, and the mountains are all pulverized and scatter in the same way.

102. "You should know from this that all formed things are impermanent. They are liable to change and disintegrate, which makes them unreliable. Conditioned things are quite troublesome. You should seek the path of freedom that transcends the world.

103. "After that, the wind blows the whole earth away. The water beneath the earth disappears, and then the air beneath the water disappears.

104. "You should know from this that all formed things are impermanent. They are liable to change and disintegrate, which makes them unreliable. Conditioned things are quite troublesome. You should seek the path of freedom that transcends the world."

105. The Buddha told the monks, "The Subhakrtsna Heaven's palace and Abhasvara Heaven's palace crash into each other, and they're pulverized to dust. Who would believe that? Only someone who witnessed it would, but how could anyone know about it? … Thus, the water beneath the earth disappears, and then the air beneath the water disappears. Who would believe that? Only someone who witnessed it would, but how could anyone know about it?

The Third Restoration of the World

106. "How is the world restored after the catastrophe of wind? A long, long time after that, a huge black cloud fills the sky up to the Brhatphala Heaven and releases a deluge. The raindrops are the size of cartwheels. This heavy rain lasts for countless hundreds of thousands of years. The water gradually accumulates [countless hundreds of thousands of yojanas high], reaching the Brhatphala Heaven.

107. "Then, four great winds arise to support this water. What are the four? The first is called the standing wind. The second is called the holding wind. The third is called the immovable wind. The fourth is called the steadfast wind. After that, this water gradually subsides by countless hundreds of thousands of yojanas. A great wind rises on all four sides of that water, which is called Sangha. It blows on the water and agitates it. The crashing of the waves is immense, and a mass of foam accumulates. The wind blows it off of the water and into the sky. It spontaneously hardens there, forming the Subhakrtsna Heaven's palace. It has a mix of assorted colors made of the seven treasures. As a result of these events, the palace of the Subhakrtsna Heaven comes to be.

108. "The water continues to subside countless hundreds of thousands of yojanas, and the Sangha wind rises. It blows the water and agitates it. The crashing of the waves is immense, and a mass of foam accumulates. The wind blows it off of the water and into the sky. It spontaneously hardens there, forming the Abhasvara Heaven's palace. It has a mix of assorted colors made of the seven treasures … the ocean's water has the single flavor of salty bitterness again as it did after the catastrophe of fire.

109. "This is the catastrophe of wind. These are the three catastrophes and three restorations."

CHAPTER 10: WAR

Vemacitrin's Bonds

1. The Buddha told the monks, "Once, the gods and asuras went to war. At the time, Sakra the Lord of Gods gave the Trayastrimsa gods this order: 'All of you, go and do battle with them. If you are victorious, tie up the asura Vemacitrin with five bonds and bring him to the Sudharma Meeting Hall. I want to look at him.' Accepting Lord Sakra's instructions, the Trayastrimsa gods equipped themselves [with armor and weapons].

2. "The asura Vemacitrin gave the asuras this order: 'All of you, go and do battle with them. If you are victorious, tie up Sakra the Lord of Gods with five bonds and bring him to the Saptasirisa Meeting Hall. I want to look at him.' Accepting the asura Vemacitrin's instructions, the asuras equipped themselves [with armor and weapons].

3. "The hosts of gods and asuras then fought a battle. The gods were victorious, and the asuras retreated. The Trayastrimsa gods tied up the asura king with five bonds, brought him to the Sudharma Hall, and showed him to Lord Sakra.

4. "When the asura king saw the heavens, he was delighted, and an aspiration arose in him. He thought, 'This place is supreme! Perhaps I will live here. How could I go back to the asura palace?' When that thought occurred to him, he was freed from the five bonds and was presented with five delights. When the asura had the thought to return to his own palace, then the five bonds tied him back up, and the five delights left him.

5. "The bonds tying up the asura then became quite strong. The bonds that tie up Mara are even stronger than his was. Someone who posits a self is bound by Mara. Someone who doesn't posit a self is freed from Mara's bonds. The feeling of self is a bond. The feeling of craving is a bond.[n] 'I will exist' is a bond. 'I will not exist' is a bond. 'I'll have form' is a bond. 'I'll have no form' is a bond. 'I'll have form and no form' is a bond. 'I'll have conception' is a bond. 'I'll have no conception' is a bond. 'I'll have conception and no conception' is a bond. 'Self' is a great trouble, an abscess, and a thorn.

6. "Therefore, a noble disciple knows that 'self' is a great trouble, an abscess, and a thorn. They abandon the notions of self and cultivate selfless conduct. They regard that 'self' as a heavy burden, as reckless, and as existence.

7. "Something that has a self would be conditioned, and something that has no self would be conditioned. Something with form is conditioned, and something without form is conditioned. Something with and without form is conditioned. Something with conception is conditioned, and something without conception is conditioned. Something with and without conception is conditioned. Something that's conditioned is a great trouble, an abscess, and a thorn. Therefore, a noble disciple abandons being conditioned and practices to be unconditioned."

Sakra Tolerates Vemacitrin's Insults

8. The Buddha told the monks, "Once, the gods and asuras went to war. At the time, Sakra the Lord of Gods gave the Trayastrimsa gods this order: 'All of you, go and do battle with them. If we are victorious, tie up the asura Vemacitrin with five bonds and bring him to the Sudharma Meeting Hall. I want to look at him.' Accepting Lord Sakra's instructions, the Trayastrimsa gods equipped themselves [with armor and weapons].

9. "The asura Vemacitrin gave the asuras this order: 'All of you, go and do battle with them. If you are victorious, tie up Sakra the Lord of Gods with five bonds and bring him to the Saptasirisa Meeting Hall. I want to look at him.' Accepting the asura Vemacitrin's instructions, the asuras equipped themselves [with armor and weapons].

10. "The hosts of gods and asuras then fought a battle. The gods were victorious, and the asuras retreated. The Trayastrimsa gods tied up the asura king with five bonds, brought him to the Sudharma Hall, and showed him to Lord Sakra.

11. "Roaming the Sudharma Hall, the Asura King saw Lord Sakra from a distance and spoke harsh insults about his five bonds.

12. "The attendant to the Lord of Gods was in front of Sakra, and he spoke this verse:

• "'Is the Lord of Gods afraid?
He displays his own weakness
As 'Citrin insults him to his face.
He listens quietly to his harsh words.'

13. "Sakra the Lord of Gods also spoke in verse to answer his attendant:

• "'He has no great strength,
So I'm not afraid of him.
What wise man would Argue with an ignorant person?'

14. "The attendant again spoke in verse to Lord Sakra:

• "'Don't bow to that fool now;
He may become hard to bear after this!
You ought to whip him with a cane;
Make that fool admit his mistake!

15. "Lord Sakra replied to his attendant in verse:

• "'I always speak with the wise,
But I don't argue with fools.
Fools are insulting, and the wise are silent;
Then they're honestly defeated.'

16. "The attendant again spoke in verse to Lord Sakra:

• "'The god king remains silent
To avoid damaging his wise conduct,
But that stupid person
Will say the king is afraid of him.
• The fool doesn't assess himself
And thinks himself a match for the king.
He'd rush to a certain death,
While the king wants to retreat like a bull.'

17. "Lord Sakra again replied to his attendant in verse:

• "'That fool without knowledge or vision
May say I'm afraid of him.
I behold the supreme truth
That patient silence is what's best.
• Evil comes from evil;
Anger creates more anger.
Not being angry with anger
Is better than fighting.
• A person has two purposes,
For himself and for others.
When people argue and have disputes,
The one who doesn't respond is the winner.
• A person has two purposes,
For himself and for others.
Seeing someone with no argument,
That person is taken for an idiot.
• When a person has great power,
They tolerate someone without power.
This power is the best;
It's the supreme tolerance.
• A fool claims he has power,
But his power isn't powerful.
The power of the Dharma's tolerance
Is a power that cannot be thwarted.'"

18. The Buddha told the monks, "Was Sakra the Lord of Gods another person at the time? Don't have this view. At that time, Sakra the Lord of Gods was me. I was cultivating tolerance and not behaving violently. I was constantly praising tolerant people. If some wise person wants to set out on my path, they should cultivate patient silence and not feel animosity."

Defeating the Asuras with Gentle Words

19. The Buddha told the monks, "Once, the Trayastrimsa gods and the asuras went to war. Sakra the Lord of Gods said to the asura 'Citrin, 'Friend, why are you equipped with weapons? Do you harbor ill-will and want to fight me? Now, I'll have a discussion of doctrine with you to determine who wins and who loses.'

20. "That asura 'Citrin said to Lord Sakra, 'Even if I did put down these weapons and stop to debate doctrine with you, who'd decide who won and who lost?'

21. Lord Sakra instructed him, 'We will simply hold a discussion. Those who are wise in your host and in my host of gods will decide who wins and who loses.'

22. "The asura said to Lord Sakra, 'You begin with a verse.'

"Lord Sakra replied, 'You are the elder god. You should be the first to speak.'

"The asura 'Citrin then spoke a verse to Lord Sakra:

• "'Don't bow to that fool now;
He may become hard to bear after this!
You ought to whip him with a cane;
Make that fool admit his mistake!

23. "After he said this verse, the host of asuras rejoiced and cheered, saying, 'Excellent!' The host of gods were silent and had nothing to say.

24. "The asura king said to Lord Sakra, 'It's your turn to speak a verse.'

25. "Lord Sakra then said to the asura in verse,

• "'I always speak with the wise,
But I don't argue with fools.
Fools are insulting, and the wise are silent;
Then they're honestly defeated.'

26. "After Lord Sakra spoke this verse, the Trayastrimsa gods rejoiced and cheered, saying, 'Excellent!' The host of asuras were silent and had nothing to say.

27. "Lord Sakra then said to the asura, 'It's your turn to speak a verse.'

28. "The asura again spoke in verse:

• "'The god king remains silent
To avoid damaging his wise conduct,
But that stupid person
Will say the king is afraid of him.
• The fool doesn't assess himself
And thinks himself a match for the king.
He'd rush to a certain death,
While the king wants to retreat like a bull.'

29. "After the asura king said these verses, the host of asuras celebrated, rejoiced, and cheered, saying, 'Excellent!' The host of Trayastrimsa gods were silent and had nothing to say.

30. "The king of asuras then said to Lord Sakra, 'It's your turn to speak a verse.'

31. "Sakra the Lord of Gods then spoke these verses for the asura:

• "'That fool without knowledge or vision
May say I'm afraid of him.
I behold the supreme truth
That patient silence is what's best.
• Evil comes from evil;
Anger creates more anger.
Not being angry with anger
Is better than fighting.
• A person has two purposes,
For himself and for others.
When people argue and have disputes,
The one who doesn't respond is the winner.
• A person has two purposes,
For himself and for others.
Seeing someone with no argument,
That person is taken for an idiot.
• When a person has great power,
They tolerate someone without power.
This power is the best;
It's the supreme tolerance.
• A fool claims he has power,
But his power isn't powerful.
The power of the Dharma's tolerance
Is a power that cannot be thwarted.'"

32. "After Sakra the Lord of Gods had spoken these verses, the host of Trayastrimsa gods celebrated, rejoiced, and cheered, saying, 'Excellent!' The host of asuras were silent and had nothing to say.

33. "The host of gods and host of asuras both withdrew a short distance and said to each other, 'The asura king's verses were an assault, like drawing a sword on an opponent. They create the root of conflict, increase the bond of anger, and establish the source of the three existences. Sakra the Lord of Gods' verses attack no one, like not drawing a sword against an opponent. They don't create conflict, don't increase the bond of anger, and put an end to the source for the three existences. What the Lord of Gods has said is good, and what the asura has said is not good. The gods are the winners, and the asuras are the losers!'"

34. The Buddha told the monks, "Was Sakra the Lord of Gods another person at the time? Don't have this view. Why is that? [Sakra the Lord of Gods] was me. That time, I defeated the host of asuras with gentle words."

Defeating the Asuras with Compassion

35. The Buddha told the monks, "Once, the gods and asuras again went to war. That time, the asuras were the victors, and the gods weren't their equal.

36. "Sakra the Lord of Gods road a thousand-spoked treasure chariot as he fled in terror. In the middle of the road, he saw a nest in a sal tree, and a pair of chicks was in the nest. He told his driver in verse:

• "'That tree with two birds in it,
You should steer the chariot around it.
Even if it means injuring me,
Don't injure those two birds!'

37. "Hearing Lord Sakra's verse, his driver immediately steered the chariot to avoid the birds. The chariot then was headed toward the asuras, and the host of asuras saw his treasure chariot turning around in the distance. Those soldiers then said to each other, 'Sakra the Lord of Gods is headed towards us in a thousand-spoked treasure chariot! He must want to come back and fight us! How could that be!?' The host of asuras then were routed. The gods won a victory, and the asuras retreated."

38. The Buddha told the monks, "Was Lord Sakra another person at the time? Don't have that view. Why is that? [Sakra the Lord of Gods] was me. That time, I was engendering compassion for sentient beings. Monks, you've left home to cultivate the path in my teaching. You ought to engender compassion and sympathy for all beings."

Sakra's Victory Hall

39. The Buddha told the monks, "Once, the gods and asuras went to war. That time, the gods were the victors, and the asuras retreated. Sakra the Lord of Gods returned to his palace after that victory and built a hall that he named Supremacy. It was a hundred yojanas long from east to west, and sixty yojanas wide from north to south. That hall had a hundred rooms, and the rooms had seven curtained balconies. There were seven beautiful women on each balcony, and each beautiful woman had seven servants. Sakra the Lord of Gods didn't withhold from those beautiful women any supplies of clothing, meals, or ornaments. He received these fortunes as a result of his past deeds. Being victorious in battle against the asuras, he rejoiced and built this hall, so it was called the Hall of Supremacy. No other hall was comparable to it in a thousand worlds, so it was called Supremacy."

Desire Is the Cause of Warfare

40. The Buddha told the monks, "Once the Asura [King Rahu] thought to himself, 'I have great authority, and my miraculous powers aren't few, but the Trayastrimsa, sun, and moon gods are always in the sky roam around my summit freely. Now, I think I'll take the sun and the moon and make them into earrings so I could travel freely!'

41. "The Asura King's anger flared, and he thought about the asura *Prahata. The asura *Prahata then thought to himself, 'The Asura King is thinking of me now! We should quickly get ready!' He ordered those to his right and left to equip themselves with weapons. He then rode a treasure chariot to the Asura King while surrounded by a countless host of asuras. He went before the Asura King and then stood to one side.

42. "The [Asura] King also thought about the asura Sambara. The asura Sambara then thought to himself, 'The [Asura] King is thinking of me now! We should quickly get ready!' He ordered those to his right and left to equip themselves with weapons. He then rode a treasure chariot to the Asura King while surrounded by a countless host of asuras. He went before the Asura King and then stood to one side.

43. "The [Asura] King also thought about the asura Vemacitrin. The asura Vemacitrin then thought to himself, 'The [Asura] King is thinking of me now! We should quickly get ready!' He ordered those to his right and left to equip themselves with weapons. He then rode a treasure chariot to the Asura King while surrounded by a countless host of asuras. He went before the [Asura] King and then stood to one side.

44. "The [Asura] King also thought of the great minister of asuras. The great minister of asuras thought to himself, 'The [Asura] King is thinking of me now! We should quickly get ready!' He ordered those to his right and left to equip themselves with weapons. He then rode a treasure chariot to the Asura King while surrounded by a countless host of asuras. He went before the [Asura] King and then stood to one side.

45. "The [Asura] King also thought of the lesser asuras. The lesser asuras then thought to themselves, 'The [Asura] King is thinking of me now! We should quickly get ready!' They got ready and equipped themselves with weapons. They then went to the Asura King with countless other asuras. They went before the [Asura] King and then stood to one side.

46. "The Asura King Rahu then got himself ready, donning treasure armor. He rode a treasure chariot while surrounded by countless hundreds of thousands of asuras equipped with weapons and armor. He headed out to the frontier to make war on the gods.

47. "The Naga Kings Nanda and Upananda coiled their bodies around Mount Sumeru seven times and shook the mountains and valleys. Fine clouds spread out and released a misting rain. They smacked the ocean's surface with their tails, which stirred up waves that reached the summit of Mount Sumeru.

48. "The Trayastrimsa gods then had this thought, 'Now, these fine clouds have spread out and released a misting rain … stirred up waves that reach up to here. The asuras must be coming to make war on us; that's the reason for these strange signs!'

49. "An army of countless millions of naga warriors were in the ocean, too. They were armed with lances, bows and arrows, and swords, and they wore heavy treasure armor. Being well equipped with such weapons, they opposed the asuras and fought them. Sometimes the host of nagas were victorious and chased the asuras back to their palace. Sometimes the host of nagas retreated, and the nagas couldn't return to their palace. Instead, they would run to the Karotapani yaksa spirits and tell them, 'The host of asuras are about to attack the gods. We tried to oppose them, but they just defeated us. You should arm yourselves, muster your strength, and go to battle with them!'

50. "When the yaksa spirits heard this from the nagas, they readied themselves, taking up weapons and donning heavy treasure armor. They then went with that host of nagas to fight the asuras. If they won the battle, they would chase the asuras back to their palace. If they weren't their equals, they wouldn't return to their own palace. Instead, they would run to the realm of the Maladhara yaksa spirits and tell them, 'The host of asuras are about to attack the gods. We tried to oppose them, but they just defeated us. You should arm yourselves, muster your strength, and go to battle with them!'

51. "When the Maladhara yaksa spirits heard this from the nagas, they readied themselves, taking up weapons and donning heavy treasure armor. They mustered their strength and fought the asuras. If they won the battle, they would chase the asuras back to their palace. If they weren't their equals, they wouldn't return to their own palace. Instead, they would run to the realm of the Sadamatta yaksa spirits and tell them, 'The host of asuras are about to attack the gods. We tried to oppose them, but they just defeated us. You should arm yourselves, muster your strength, and go to battle with them!'

52. "When the Sadamatta yaksa spirits heard this, they readied themselves, taking up weapons and donning heavy treasure armor. They mustered their strength and fought the asuras. If they won the battle, they would chase the asuras back to their palace. If they weren't their equals, they wouldn't return to their own palace. Instead, they would run to the four god kings and tell them, 'The host of asuras are about to attack the gods. We tried to oppose them, but they just defeated us. You should arm yourselves, muster your strength, and go to battle with them!'

53. "When the four god kings heard this, they readied themselves, taking up weapons and donning heavy treasure armor. They mustered their strength and fought the asuras. If they won the battle, they would chase the asuras back to their palace. If they weren't their equals, they wouldn't return to their own palace. Instead, the four god kings went to the Sudharma Meeting Hall to tell Lord Sakra and the Trayastrimsa gods, 'The host of asuras are about to attack the gods. We tried to oppose them, but they just defeated us. You should arm yourselves, muster your strength, and go to battle with them!'

54. "Lord Sakra then would give one of his attendant gods this order: 'Memorize my words and relay them to the Yama gods, Tusita gods, Nirmanarati gods, and Paranirmitavasavartin gods: "The Asura King and his countless host are coming to do battle with us. The gods should get ready and arm themselves. Help us fight them!"'

55. "That attendant god accepted Sakra's instruction and went to the Yama Heaven … Paranirmitavasavartin Heaven with Lord Sakra's message, telling them, 'The Asura King and his countless host are coming to do battle with us. The gods should get ready and arm yourselves. Help us fight them!'

56. "When the Yama gods heard this, they readied themselves, taking up weapons and donning heavy treasure armor. They rode treasure chariots while surrounded by a host of countless hundreds of thousands of millions of gods and took their positions on the east side of Mount Sumeru.

57. "When the Tusita gods heard this, they readied themselves, taking up weapons and donning heavy treasure armor. They rode treasure chariots while surrounded by a host of countless hundreds of thousands of millions of gods and took their positions on the south side of Mount Sumeru.

58. "When the Nirmanarati gods heard this, they readied themselves, [taking up weapons and donning heavy treasure armor. They rode treasure chariots while surrounded by a host of countless hundreds of thousands of millions of gods] and took their positions on the west side of Mount Sumeru.

59. "When the Paranirmitavasavartin gods heard this, they readied themselves, [taking up weapons and donning heavy treasure armor. They rode treasure chariots while surrounded by a host of countless hundreds of thousands of millions of gods] and took their positions on the north side of Mount Sumeru.

60. "Lord Sakra also thought of the thirty-three gods of the Trayastrimsa Heaven. Those thirty-three Trayastrimsa Heaven gods then thought, 'Lord Sakra is thinking of me now! We should quickly get ready!' They then ordered those to their right and left to equip themselves with weapons. They rode treasure chariots to Lord Sakra while surrounded by countless millions of gods. They went before Lord Sakra and then stood to one side.

61. "Lord Sakra also thought of the remaining gods of the Trayastrimsa Heaven. Those remaining gods then thought, 'Lord Sakra is thinking of me now! We should quickly get ready!' They ordered those to their right and left to equip themselves with weapons. They rode treasure chariots to Lord Sakra while surrounded by countless millions of gods. They went before Lord Sakra and then stood to one side.

62. "Lord Sakra also thought of the Visvakarma yaksa spirits. Those Visvakarma yaksa spirits then thought, 'Lord Sakra is thinking of me now! We should quickly get ready!' They ordered those to their right and left to equip themselves with weapons. They rode treasure chariots to Lord Sakra while surrounded by countless thousands of yaksas. They went before Lord Sakra and then stood [to one side].

63. "Lord Sakra also thought of Naga King Supratisthita. Naga King Supratisthita then thought, 'Lord Sakra is thinking of me now! I should go now.' He then went to stand before Lord Sakra.

64. "Lord Sakra then got himself ready, equipping weapons and donning treasure armor. Riding on the crown of Naga King Supratisthita's head while surrounded by countless gods and yaksas, and he left his heavenly palace to do battle with the asuras.

65. "They were equipped with spears, swords, pikes, bows and arrows, axes, hatchets, spinning discs, and snares. Their weapons and armor were made of the seven treasures. When they hit the asuras with their sharp swords, they only touched the asuras without injuring them.

66. "The host of asuras were armed with swords, pikes, bows and arrows, axes, hatchets, spinning discs, and snares made of the seven treasures. When they hit the gods with their sharp swords, they only touched the gods without injuring them. Thus, the gods and asuras of the desire realm fight with each other. Desire is the cause of it."

CHAPTER 11: THREE INTERIM EONS

1. The Buddha told the monks, "There are three interim eons. What are the three? The first is called the eon of warfare, the second is called the eon of famine, and the third is called the eon of plague.

The Eon of Warfare

2. "What is the eon of warfare? The people of this world originally lived for 40,000 years. After that, their life spans were reduced to 20,000 years. After that, their life spans were reduced further to 10,000 years. Their life spans became 1,000 years … 500 years … 300 years … 200 years until today when few people live for more than 100 years, and many live for less. After that, people's life spans are reduced to ten years. At that point, woman are married at five months old.

3. "In that time, there are delicious flavors in the world such as those of ghee, honey, rock honey, and black rock honey. These delicious flavors naturally disappear, the five grains stop growing, and only weeds and grass remain. In that time, superior clothing made of twilled silk, plain silk, cotton, and linen is no more. There's only crudely woven grass clothing.

4. "In that time, brambles, biting insects, scorpions, vipers, and venomous creatures appear all over the land. Gold, silver, beryl, and the rest of the seven treasures naturally disappear from the land. It's filled with just rocks, sand, and rubbish.

5. "In that time, sentient beings just increasingly do the ten bad deeds, and the names of the ten good deeds aren't heard anymore. Without names for good deeds, how could anyone practice them?

6. "People then who aren't dutiful to their parents, don't respect their elders, and do evil are given offerings, and people respect and serve them. It's just as today when people who are dutiful to their parents, respectful to their elders, and do good are given offerings, and people respect and serve them. Those people do evil and get offerings in the same way. When their lives end, they fall to animal births, just as people today [who are respected] are born up in heaven.

7. "In that time, people look at each other harboring malice, wishing only to kill each other. They're like hunters who see a herd of deer and want only to kill them. They don't have a single good thought. Those people are like that. They want only to kill each other and don't have a single good thought.

8. "In that time, the land consists of gully streams, river valleys, mountain precipices, and hills. There's not a single level plain. People travel in fear, worrying with their hair standing on end.

9. "The eon of warfare takes place in seven days. People pick up grass, wood, bricks, and stones, and they turn into swords in their hands. The swords have sharp edges, being suitable for cutting anything. They then take turns hurting each other.

10. "When intelligent people see people hurting each other with swords, they flee in terror. They go into mountain forests and caves where no one else lives and hide there for seven days. They think and say to each other, 'I won't hurt anyone! Let no one hurt me!' Those people stay alive during those seven days by eating grass, wood, and roots. After seven days have passed, they come back out of the mountain forests.

11. "At that point, someone else spots them and rejoices. They say, 'I see someone now who's alive! I see someone now who's alive!' Like a parent recognising a child whom they haven't seen for a long time, they rejoice and celebrate, unable to control themselves. That person is likewise. They rejoice and celebrate, being unable to control themselves.

12. "Those people cry and lament to each other for seven days. Then, they cheer each other up for seven days, rejoicing and congratulating each other.

13. "After their bodies break up and their lives end, those people fall to hell. Why is that? They had always harbored anger and malice toward each other, so it was because of their lack of humanity. This is eon of warfare."

The Eon of Famine

14. The Buddha told the monks, "What is the eon of famine? In that time, people often behave contrary to the Dharma. Deluded by wrong views, they commit the ten bad deeds. Because they do evil, no rain falls from the heavens. The hundred grasses wither and die, and the five grains aren't harvested, only stalks and straw.

15. "What is the famine? In that time, the people sweep up grain from fields, markets, roads, and garbage dumps to keep themselves alive. This is the famine.

16. "Again, during the famine, people go to shops, butchers, and cemetery grounds. They dig up bones and make broth from them that they drink to survive. This is the white bone famine.

17. "Again, during the eon of famine, the five grains become grass and trees when people plant them. The people then pick flowers and make broth from them to drink.

18. "Again, during the famine, plant and tree flowers fall and cover the land. People sweep the flowers up and cook them to survive. This is the grass and tree famine.

19. "In that time, sentient beings fall to the hungry ghosts when their bodies break up and their lives end. Why is that? It's because those people always harbored greediness during the eon of famine. Having no focus on generosity, they are unwilling to share [their food] and aren't mindful of other people's hardships. This is the eon of famine."

The Eon of Plague

20. The Buddha told the monks, "What is the eon of plague? In that time, the world's people cultivate the correct Dharma, have right view, don't have deluded views, and perfect the ten good deeds. A yaksa spirit comes from another world, and the yaksa spirits in this world are reckless and lustful, so they can't protect the people here. The yaksa spirit from another world then attacks and disturbs this world's people. It hits, whips, and steals their vitality. Disturbing people's minds, it drives and threatens them as it leads them away.

21. "It's like when a king orders his generals to defend the country, and bandits come from another direction to attack.

Those reckless people attack country's villages. This is likewise. A yaksa spirit from another world captures the people here by hitting and whipping them. It steals their vitality, driving and threatening them as it leads them away."

22. The Buddha told the monks, "Even if the yaksa spirits of this world aren't reckless and lustful, the yaksa that comes from another world is powerful. The yaksas of this world are afraid of it and run away. That great yaksa spirit then attacks and disturbs people. It hits and whips them, stealing their vitality. It then kills them and leaves.

23. "It's like when a king or a king's great minister sends his generals to protect the people, and the generals are careful and not reckless at all. Barbarian generals come from another direction with large armies to destroy their cities and towns, looting the people's possessions. This is likewise. Even when the yaksa spirits in this world aren't reckless and lustful, the yaksa from another world has great power. The yaksa spirits here are afraid of it and run away. That great yaksa spirit then attacks and disturbs people. It hits and whips them, stealing their vitality. It then kills them and leaves.

24. "During the eon of plague, people are born up in heaven when their bodies break up and their lives end. Why is that? It's because people in that time are kind to each other. They take turns asking, 'Are you sick? Are you in good health?' For this reason, they are born up in heaven. Therefore, this is called the eon of plague.

25. "These are the three medium eons."

CHAPTER 12: THE ORIGINS OF THE WORLD

(In this text, we find Sanskrit units of time. A ksana is a moment, perhaps a second or two in the length. A lava is roughly equivalent to a minute or two, and a muhurta is similar to an hour.)

The Repopulation of the World

1. The Buddha told the monks, "After the catastrophe of fire has passed and the earth and heavens of this world are about to reform, the remaining sentient beings' merits, actions, and lives come to an end. At the end of their lives in the Abhasvara Heaven, they are born into an empty Brahma abode. Their minds are stained by attachment to the place. Delighted by that abode, they wish other sentient beings would be born there with them. After they make that wish, the merits, actions, and lives of other sentient beings come to an end. When their bodies break up and their lives end in the Abhasvara Heaven, they're born in that empty Brahma abode.

2. "The first being born in the Brahma Heaven thinks to himself, 'I am the Brahma King, the Great Brahma Heaven King! I have no creator, I've spontaneously come to be, and I'm subject to no one. I'm the highest sovereign of a thousand worlds, skilled in various meanings, my wealth is bountiful, and I'm the creator of all things. I'm both father and mother to all sentient beings.'

3. "After that, the Brahma gods who arrive after him also think, 'He's the first Brahma god, the Brahma King, the Great Brahma Heaven King. He spontaneously came to be, and he's subject to no one. He's the highest sovereign of a thousand worlds, skilled in various meanings, his wealth is bountiful, and he's the creator of all things. He's both father and mother to all sentient beings. We've come to exist from him.' That Brahma Heaven King looked handsome and young, always like a youth. Therefore, that Brahma god was named Kumara.

4. "At a certain point, this world is restored again. The sentient beings that were born in the Abhasvara Heaven are numerous. Born here spontaneously, they're nourished by joy. Their bodies glow with their own light, and they have the miraculous ability to fly. Their happiness has no obstacle, and their life spans are very long.

5. "After that, the world forms a great body of water that fills up every place. The world then is under a great darkness. There's no sun, moon, stars, nor day and night. There's no way to count the years, months, or the four seasons.

6. "Some time after that, the world again changes. The merits, actions, and lives of more sentient beings in the Abhasvara Heaven come to an end, and they are born here when their lives end. All are born here spontaneously, and they are nourished by joy. Their bodies glow with their own light, and they have the miraculous ability to fly. Their happiness has no obstacles, and their life spans are very long.

7. "In that time, there's no male or female, noble or ignoble, high or low, or beings with different names. That host is born together in the world, so they are called 'host born.'

8. "At that point, the Earth has a spontaneously produced flavor of earth, which solidifies into earth that's like ghee. When that flavor of earth is produced, it's likewise. It's like butter that tastes as sweet as honey.

9. "After that, the sentient beings use their hands to taste what flavor it has. With the first taste, they realize they like it, and then they become attached to tasting it. Thus, they each take turns tasting it without stopping, and then they go after it greedily. They scoop it up with their hands and form it into lumps to eat, and they don't stop eating it. Other sentient beings see this and emulate them, eating it and not stopping.

10. "The bodies of these sentient beings become rough, and their glow gradually disappears. They no longer have the miraculous ability to fly, either. At that point, there has yet to be a sun or moon, so when the glow of the sentient beings goes out, the world is plunged into a darkness that's no different than before.

The Sun

11. "A long, long time after that, a windstorm blows on the ocean's water, which is 84,000 yojanas deep. It divides into two whirlwinds that grab the palace hall of the sun and place it half as high as Mount Sumeru, where it takes up the sun's orbit. It rises in the east and sets in the west, revolving around the world.

12. "When a second sun palace rises in the east and sets in the west, the sentient beings there say, 'This must be the sun from yesterday.'

"Others say, 'It's not the one from yesterday.'

13. "A third sun palace circles Mount Sumeru, rising in the east and setting in the west. Then, the sentient beings say, 'That's definitely the same sun.' The word 'sun' means the first cause of illumination; therefore, it's called the sun. 'Sun' also has two meanings. The first is to abide at a constant frequency, and the second is a palace hall.

14. "The palace hall's four sides are round because they're seen from far away. It's made of heavenly gold mixed with crystal that's neither cold nor hot. Two-thirds of it is pure and unadulterated heavenly gold, inside and out, and its light shines far away. A third of it is pure and unadulterated crystal, inside and out, and its light shines far away. The sun palace is fifty-one yojanas across, and the palace walls are made of a mineral that's as light as oak or pine wood.

15. "That palace has seven walls, seven balustrades, seven nettings, seven treasure bells, and seven rows of trees encircling it with decorations made of the seven treasures.

16. "The gold walls have silver gates, and the silver walls have gold gates. The beryl walls have crystal gates, and the crystal walls have beryl gates. The ruby walls have emerald gates, and the emerald walls have ruby gates. The coral walls have gates made of many treasures.

17. "Those balustrades have gold balusters and silver rails, silver balusters and gold rails, crystal balusters and beryl rails, beryl balusters and crystal rails, ruby balusters and emerald rails, emerald balusters and ruby rails, and coral balusters with rails made of many treasures.

18. "The gold nettings have silver bells, and the silver nettings have gold bells. The beryl nettings have crystal bells, and the crystal nettings have beryl bells. The ruby nettings have emerald bells, and the emerald nettings have ruby bells. The coral nettings have bells made of many treasures.

19. "The gold trees have silver leaves, flowers, and fruit. The silver trees have gold leaves, flowers, and fruit. The beryl trees have crystal [leaves], flowers, and fruit. The crystal trees have beryl [leaves], flowers, and fruit. The ruby trees have emerald [leaves], flowers, and fruit. The emerald trees have ruby [leaves], flowers, and fruit. The coral trees have [leaves], flowers, and fruit made of many treasures.

20. "The palace walls have four gates. The gates have seven stair steps, and they're encircled by balustrades, towers, terraces, forest parks, and lakes alongside each other in that order. Myriad treasure flowers grow in rows along with a variety of fruit trees with flowers and leaves of assorted colors. The fragrance of the trees is sweet-smelling and spreads far away in all directions. Flocks of various birds sing to each other peacefully.

21. "There are five winds that hold the sun palace up. First is the holding wind, second is the sustaining wind, third is the receiving wind, fourth is the turning wind, and fifth is the controlling wind.

22. "The sun god stands in his correct hall, which is made of pure gold and sixteen yojanas tall. The hall has four doors with balustrades encircling it. The sun god's throne is a half yojana across, made of the seven treasures, and pure and soft as heavenly cloth. The sun god's own body emits light that shines on his golden hall. The golden hall's light then shines on the sun palace, and the sun palace's light shines on the four continents.

23. "The sun god lives for 500 heavenly years, and his descendants who succeed him are no different. His palace is indestructible until it ends after one eon.

24. "As the sun palace moves, the sun god has no notion of that motion. He says, 'Walking or standing still, I'm always enjoying myself with the five desires.' As the sun palace moves, countless hundreds of thousands of great gods and spirits are ahead of it leading the way. They do so gladly without tiring of it, being delighted by its speed. This is the reason the sun god is named 'Quickness.'

25. "The sun god's body emits 1,000 rays of light. 500 rays shine downwards and 500 rays shine horizontally. As a result of the virtue of his past deeds, he has 1,000 rays of light. Therefore, the sun god is called '1,000 Rays of Light.'

26. "What are the virtues of his past deeds? Sometimes, a person gives offerings to ascetics and priests and gives aid to the poor. He gives gifts of meals, clothing, medicine, horses and elephants, vehicles, housing, lamps, and candles. When he distributes such things, he does so according to what's needed and doesn't go contrary to people's wishes. He supports noble people who observe the precepts.

27. "As a result these diverse and countless causes of Dharma joy and light, his heart is good, and he's joyful. He's like a water-anointed king who has just ascended to the throne. His heart is good, and he's joyful in the same way. When his body breaks up and his life ends, he becomes the sun god and attains the sun palace hall because of these circumstances. Because he possesses 1,000 rays of light, these are said to be the good deeds that obtain 1,000 rays of light.

28. "Again, what's called the past deeds of light? Some people don't kill beings, don't steal, don't engage in sexual misconduct, don't speak duplicitously, harshly, falsely, or frivolously, aren't greedy or hateful, and don't have wrong views. Because of these circumstances, their hearts are good, and they're joyful. It's like a major crossroads with a large bathing pool that's clear and unpolluted. People traveling from far away are exhausted, hot, and thirsty when they arrive at the pool. They go in to bathe and refresh themselves, rejoicing and delighting in it. Those ten good deeds make their hearts good, and they're joyful in the same way. When such people's bodies break up and their lives end, they become the sun god. Dwelling in the sun palace, they possess 1,000 rays of light. For these reasons, [these deeds] are called good deeds of light.

29. "Again, what is the reason for called them '[good deeds of] 1,000 rays of light'? Some people don't kill, don't steal, don't engage in sex, don't lie, and don't drink alcohol. Because of these causes, their hearts are good, and they're joyful. When their bodies break up and their lives end, they become the sun god. Dwelling in the sun palace, they possess 1,000 rays of light. For these reasons, they are called the good deeds of 1,000 rays of light.

30. "Sixty ksanas are called a lava. Thirty lavas are called a muhurta. A hundred muhurtas are called an upama. The sun palace moves south for six months. The sun moves fifteen kilometers to the south, not going beyond Jambudvipa. The sun travels north in the same way.

Ten Reasons Sunlight Is Hot

31. "What are the reasons for sunlight to be hot? There are ten causes for this. What are the ten? First, Mount Khadiraka outside of Mount Sumeru is 42,000 yojanas tall and 42,000 yojanas across. Its bounds are measureless, and it's made of the seven treasures. The sun's light shines on that mountain, and it creates heat when they come into contact. This is one reason for sunlight to be hot.

32. "Second, Mount Isadara outside of Mount Khadiraka is 21,000 yojanas tall and 21,000 yojanas across. Its circumference is measureless, and it's made of the seven treasures. The sun's light shines on that mountain, and it creates heat when they come into contact. This is the second reason for sunlight to be hot.

33. "Third, Mount Yugandhara outside of Mount Isadara is 12,000 yojanas tall and 12,000 yojanas across. Its circumference is measureless, and it's made of the seven treasures. The sun's light shines on that mountain, and it creates heat when they come into contact. This is the third reason for sunlight to be hot.

34. "Fourth, Mount Sudarsana outside of Mount Yugandhara is 6,000 yojanas tall and 6,000 yojanas across. Its circumference is measureless, and it's made of the seven treasures. The sun's light shines on that mountain, and it creates heat when they come into contact. This is the fourth reason for sunlight to be hot.

35. "Fifth, Mount Asvakarna outside of Mount Sudarsana is 3,000 yojanas tall and 3,000 yojanas across. Its circumference is measureless, and it's made of the seven treasures. The sun's light shines on that mountain, and it creates heat when they come into contact. This is the fifth reason for sunlight to be hot.

36. "Sixth, Mount Nimindhara outside of Mount Asvakarna is 1,200 yojanas tall and 1,200 yojanas across. Its circumference is measureless, and it's made of the seven treasures. The sun's light shines on that mountain, and it creates heat when they come into contact. This is the sixth reason for sunlight to be hot.

37. "Seventh, Mount Vinitaka outside of Mount Nimindhara is 600 yojanas tall and 600 yojanas across. Its circumference is measureless, and it's made of the seven treasures. The sun's light shines on that mountain, and it creates heat when they come into contact. This is the seventh reason for sunlight to be hot.

38. "Eighth, Mount Cakravada outside of Mount Vinitaka is 300 yojanas tall and 300 yojanas across. Its circumference is measureless, and it's made of the seven treasures. The sun's light shines on that mountain, and it creates heat when they come into contact. This is the seventh reason for sunlight to be hot.

39. "Furthermore, 10,000 yojanas above, there's a heavenly palace called the stellar constellations that's made of crystal. The sun's light shines on that palace, and it creates heat when they come into contact. This is the ninth reason for sunlight to be hot.

40. "Furthermore, the sun palace's light shines on the earth, and it creates heat when they come into contact. This is the tenth reason for sunlight to be hot."

41. The Bhagavan then spoke in verse:

• "For these ten reasons,
The sun is called a thousand lights.
It's light is fiery and hot,
As described by the Buddha sun."

Thirteen Reasons for Cold Weather in Sunlight

42. The Buddha told the monks, "Why is the sun palace cold and distant during winter, and the weather is freezing even with light? There are thirteen reasons that it's freezing even with light. What are the thirteen? First, there's a lake between Mount Sumeru and Mount Khadiraka that's 84,000 yojanas wide. Its circumference is measureless, and various flowers grow in its water, such as utpala, kumuda, padma, pundarika, and sugandha flowers. When the sun's light shines on it, it becomes cold on contact. This is the first reason for sunlight to be cold.

43. "Second, there's a lake between Mount Khadiraka and Mount Isadara that's 42,000 yojanas wide. Its circumference is measureless, and various flowers grow in its water … When the sun's light shines on it, it becomes cold on contact. This is the second reason for sunlight to be cold.

44. "Third, there's a lake between Mount Isadara and Mount Yugandhara that's 21,000 yojanas wide. Its circumference is measureless, and various flowers grow in its water … When the sun's light shines on it, it becomes cold on contact. This is the third reason for sunlight to be cold.

45. "Fourth, there's a lake between Mount Sudarsana and Mount Yugandhara that's 12,000 yojanas wide. Its circumference is measureless, and various flowers grow in its water … When the sun's light shines on it, it becomes cold on contact. This is the fourth reason for sunlight to be cold.

46. "Fifth, there's a lake between Mount Sudarsana and Mount Asvakarna that's 6,000 yojanas wide. Its circumference is measureless, and various flowers grow in its water … When the sun's light shines on it, it becomes cold on contact. This is the fifth reason for sunlight to be cold.

47. "Sixth, there's a lake between Mount Asvakarna and Mount Nimindhara that's 1,200 yojanas wide. Its circumference is measureless, and various flowers grow in its water … When the sun's light shines on it, it becomes cold on contact. This is the sixth reason for sunlight to be cold.

48. "[Seventh,] there's a lake between Mount Nimindhara and Mount Vinitaka that's 600 yojanas wide. Its circumference is measureless, and various flowers grow in its water … When the sun's light shines on it, it becomes cold on contact. This is the seventh reason for sunlight to be cold.

49. "[Eighth,] there's a lake between Mount Vinitaka and Mount Cakravada that's 300 yojanas wide. Its circumference is measureless, and various flowers grow in its water … When the sun's light shines on it, it becomes cold on contact. This is the eighth reason for sunlight to be cold.

50. "Furthermore, the sun's light shines on the ocean, rivers, and streams here in Jambudvipa, and it becomes cold on contact. This is the ninth reason for sunlight to be cold.

51. "Furthermore, the sun's light shines on a few rivers in the lands of Jambudvipa and many rivers in the lands of Godaniya, and it becomes cold on contact. This is the tenth reason for sunlight to be cold.

52. "[Furthermore,] the sun's light shines on a few rivers in Godaniya and many rivers in Purvavideha, and it becomes cold on contact. This is the eleventh reason for sunlight to be cold.

53. "[Furthermore,] the sun's light shines on a few rivers in Purvavideha and many rivers in Uttarakuru, and it becomes cold on contact. This is the twelfth reason for sunlight to be cold.

54. "[Furthermore,] the sun palace's light shines on the great ocean's water, and it becomes cold on contact. This is the thirteenth reason for sunlight to be cold."

55. The Buddha then spoke in verse:

• "For these thirteen reasons,
The sun is called a thousand lights.
Its light is refreshing and cool,
As described by the Buddha sun."

The Moon

56. The Buddha told the monks, "There are times when the moon palace's round form waxes and wanes, and its light decreases and disappears. Therefore, the moon palace is named for its reduction. 'Moon' has two meanings. The first is to abide in eternal liberation. The second is the palace hall.

57. "It's round because it's seen from far away in all four directions. It's made of heavenly silver and beryl that's neither cold nor hot. Two-thirds of it is pure and unadulterated heavenly silver, inside and out, and it's light shines far away. One-third of it is pure and unadulterated beryl, inside and out, and its light shines far away.

58. "The moon palace is forty-nine yojanas across. The palace's walls are a mineral that's light as oak or pine wood. The palace has seven walls, seven balustrades, seven nettings, seven treasure bells, and seven rows of trees encircling it with decorations made of seven treasures … and countless birds sing to each other peacefully.

59. "There are five winds that hold the moon palace up. First is the holding wind, second is the sustaining wind, third is the receiving wind, fourth is the turning wind, and fifth is the controlling wind.

60. "The moon god stands in his correct hall, which is made of beryl and sixteen yojanas tall. That hall has four doors with balustrades encircling it. The moon god's throne is a half yojanas across, made of the seven treasures, and pure and as soft as heavenly cloth. The moon god's own body emits light that shines on his beryl hall. The beryl hall's light then shines on the moon palace, and the moon palace's light shines on the four continents.

61. "The moon god lives for 500 heavenly years, and his descendants who succeed him are no different. His palace is indestructible until it ends after one eon.

62. "As the moon palace moves, the moon god has no notion of that motion. He says, 'Walking or standing still, I'm always enjoying myself with the five desires.' As the moon palace moves, countless hundreds of thousands of great gods and spirits are ahead of it leading the way. They do so gladly without tiring of it, being delighted by its speed. This is the reason the moon god is called 'Quickness.'

63. "The moon god's body emits 1,000 rays of light. 500 rays shine downwards and 500 rays shine horizontally. As a result of the virtue of his past deeds, he has 1,000 rays of light. Therefore, the moon god is called '1,000 Rays of Light.'

64. "What are the virtues of his past deeds? Sometimes, a worldly person gives offerings to ascetics and priests and gives aid to the poor. He gives gifts of meals, clothing, medicine, horses and elephants, vehicles, housing, lamps, and candles. When he distributes such things, he does so according to what's needed and doesn't go contrary to people's wishes. He supports noble people who observe the precepts.

65. "As a result these diverse and countless causes of Dharma joy and light, his heart is good, and he's joyful. He's like a water-anointed king who has just ascended to the throne. His heart is good, and he's joyful in the same way. When his body breaks up and his life ends, he becomes the moon god and attains the moon palace hall because of these circumstances. Because he possesses 1,000 rays of light, these are said to be the good deeds that obtain 1,000 rays of light.

66. "Again, what are called the deeds of 1,000 rays of light? Some worldly people don't kill beings, don't steal, don't engage in sexual misconduct, don't speak duplicitously, harshly, falsely, or frivolously, aren't greedy or hateful, and don't have wrong views. Because of these circumstances, their hearts are good, and they're joyful. It's like a major crossroads with a large bathing pool that's clear and unpolluted. People traveling from far away are exhausted, hot, and thirsty when they arrive at the pool. They go in to bathe and refresh themselves, rejoicing and delighting in it. Those ten good deeds make their hearts good, and they're joyful in the same way. When such people's bodies break up and their lives end, they become the moon god. Dwelling in the moon palace, they possess 1,000 rays of light. For these reasons, [these deeds] are called good deeds of 1,000 rays of light.

67. "Again, what are the causes for obtaining 1,000 rays of light? Some worldly people don't kill, don't steal, don't engage in sex, don't lie, and don't drink alcohol. Because of these causes, their hearts are good, and they're joyful. When their bodies break up and their lives end, they become the moon god. Dwelling in the moon palace, they possess 1,000 rays of light. For these reasons, they are called the good deeds of 1,000 rays of light.

68. "Sixty ksanas are called a lava. Thirty lavas are called a muhurta. A hundred muhurtas are called an upama. The sun palace moves south for six months. The sun moves fifteen kilometers to the south, not going beyond Jambudvipa. The moon palace then moves south for half a year, not going beyond Jambudvipa. The moon travels north in the same way.

The Waxing and Waning of the Moon

69. "What's the reason the moon palace gradually decreases and disappears? There are three causes for the moon palace to decrease and disappear. First is when the moon rises diagonally. This is the first reason the moon decreases and disappears.

70. "Furthermore, the great ministers put on blue robes inside the moon palace. Where they stand becomes blue, so the moon decreases. This is the second reason the moon disappears day by day.

71. "Furthermore, the sun palace has sixty rays of light that shine on the moon palace. They outshine it, which makes it disappear. As parts of the moon are dimmed, it decreases and disappears. This is the third reason the moon's light decreases and disappears.

72. "Again, what's the reason the moon's light gradually becomes full? There are three causes that make the moon's light gradually become full. What are the three? First, the moon's facing is a perfect square, so the moon's light becomes full.

73. "Second, the moon palace's ministers take off their blue robes. The moon god sits in his place on the fifteenth day to entertain himself. His light then shines everywhere and blocks the light of the heavens, so it's light is completely full. It's just as when the flame of a large torch among lit lamps blocks the light of the lamps. That moon god is likewise. On the fifteenth day, the myriad lights of the host of gods are blocked. The moon's light is the only one that shines in the same way. This is the second reason.

74. "Third, although the sun god has sixty rays of light that shine on the moon palace, the moon god is able to counteract them on the fifteenth day so that the moon's light isn't obscured. This is the third cause for the moon palace to become completely full without any decrease.

75. "Again, what's the reason for a dark shadow to be on the moon? When the moon is in the shadow of the Jambu tree, that causes the moon to have a shadow on it."

76. The Buddha told the monks, "One's mind should be like the moon, clear and unheated. When going to a donor's home, be mindful and unconfused.

Other Features of the World

77. "Again, what's reason for the great rivers to exist? It's because the sun and moon have heat. That heat causes hot [weather]. Hot weather causes sweating. The sweat forms large rivers, so the world has great rivers.

78. "What's the reason for the world's five types of seed? There are great windstorms that don't destroy the world. They blows seeds into the world, and they grow in the lands here. The first are root seeds, second are stem seeds, third are joint seeds, fourth are the hollow seeds, and fifth are embryonic seeds. These are the five seeds. For this reason, five types of seed arise in the world.

79. "At noon here in Jambudvipa, the sun is setting in Purvavideha, the sun is rising in Godaniya, and it's midnight in Uttarakuru. At noon in Godaniya, the sun is setting in Jambudvipa, the sun is rising in Uttarakuru, and it's midnight in Purvavideha. At noon in Uttarakuru, the sun is setting in Godaniya, the sun is rising in Purvavideha, and it's midnight in Jambudvipa. At noon in Purvavideha, the sun is setting in Uttarakuru, the sun is rising in Jambudvipa, and it's midnight in Godaniya.

80. "What's east in Jambudvipa is west in Purvavideha. What's west in Jambudvipa is east in Godaniya. What's west in Godaniya is east in Uttarakuru. What's west in Uttarakuru is east in Purvavideha.

81. "Jambudvipa is named after the Jambu [tree]. Under it, there's a mountain of gold that's 30 yojanas tall and causes the Jambu tree to grow, so it's called Jambu's gold. The Jambu tree has fruit that resembles mushrooms and tastes as sweet as honey.

82. "That tree has five large corners. On it's four sides are four corners, and one corner is above it. Gandharvas eat the fruit on the east corner. People from the seven countries eat the fruit on the south corner. The first country is Kuru, the second is Koravya (?), third is Videha, fourth is Suvideha (?), fifth is Manda (?), sixth is Baranasi, and seventh is Parikha (?). Sea serpents eat the fruit on the west corner. Animals eat the fruit on the north corner. Gods of the stellar constellations eat the fruit from the top corner.

83. "North of the seven great countries, there are seven great black mountains. The first is Bare Land, second is White Stork, third is Palace Protector, fourth is Sage Mountain, fifth is High Mountain, sixth is Dhyana Mountain, and seventh is Land Mountain. On these seven black mountains, there are seven priestly sages. These seven sages who live on them are named Good Lord, Good Light, Palace Protector, Sage, Palace Defender, Ganana, and Increase."

The Devolution of Sentient Beings

84. The Buddha told the monks, "The first sentient beings of the eon eat the flavor of the earth, and they live in the world for a long time. Those that often eat it become cruder in appearance, and those that seldom eat it are shiny in appearance. After a while, they notice that the appearance of the other sentient beings has become superior or inferior, and they argue with each other. 'I am superior to you! You are not my equal!' Self and other enter their minds. Because they maintain grudges, the earth flavor dries up.

85. "Next, the earth grows a skin shaped like thin rice cakes, and it's color, flavor, and aroma is pure. At that point, the sentient beings gather in one place and feel miserable, lament, and beat their breasts. They say, 'Oh, what a disaster! The flavor of the earth is nowhere to be found now!' It's like present-day people who discover a rich and delicious flavor, and they praise it as delicious and good. Later, they miss it and are saddened. Those sentient beings are likewise, feeling miserable and regretful.

86. "After they eat the earth skin, they slowly get its flavor. Those that often eat it become cruder in appearance, and those that seldom eat it are shiny in appearance. After a while, they notice that the appearance of the other sentient beings has become superior or inferior, and they argue with each other. 'I'm superior to you! You are not my equal!' Self and other enter their minds. Because they harbor grudges, the earth skin dries up.

87. "After that, another earth skin is produced that's even cruder. It has the color of heavenly flowers, it's as soft as heavenly cloth, and its flavor is like honey. The sentient beings again take and eat it, and they live in the world for a long time. Those that often eat it become degraded in appearance, and those that seldom eat it are shiny in appearance. After a while, they notice that the appearance of the other sentient beings has become superior or inferior, and they argue with each other. 'I'm superior to you! You are not my equal!' Self and other enter their minds. Because they harbor grudges, the earth skin dries up.

88. "After that, there's spontaneous rice that lacks any chaff or husks, doesn't need to be seasoned, and possesses many delicious flavors. At that point, the sentient beings gather and say, 'Oh, what a disaster! The earth skin is nowhere to be found now!' They are like present-day people who encounter some unfortunate difficulty and exclaim, 'What a pain!' Those sentient beings likewise feel miserable and sigh.

Families and Homes Arise

89. "After that, the sentient beings take the rice and eat it, and their bodies become uglier, having male and female forms. They look at each other and chase after notions of desire. They go to private places together and do impure things. Other sentient beings that see them say, 'Oh, this is wrong! How can those sentient beings go and do such things together?' They go to the impure males and rebuke them, telling them to repent their mistake. 'What you did was wrong!' Then, they throw them to the ground.

90. "When the female sees that male thrown to the ground, their repentance doesn't happen. Instead, the woman brings him food. Other sentient beings that see this ask the woman, 'Who are you going to give that food you're carrying?'

91. "The woman answers, 'That repentant sentient being who fell into unwholesome conduct. I'm bringing this food to him.' Because she says this, the name 'unwholesome master' comes to be in the world. Because she brings this food to that man, the name 'wife' comes to be.

92. "After that, sentient beings pursue their lust indulgently and unskillful qualities increase. In order to conceal themselves, they build houses. As a result of this, the term 'home' comes to be.

93. "After that, sentient beings increasingly indulge in lust, and they seek to become husband and wife. The life span, conduct, and merits of other sentient beings in the Abhasvara Heaven come to an end. When their lives end, they're reborn here in a mother's womb. As a result, the term 'womb' comes to exist in the world.

Cities Are Built and Property Is Invented

94. "At that point, the city of Campa is built. Next, the city of Kasi is built, and then the city of Rajagrha is built. They begin building them when the sun rises and complete them when the sun rises. As a result, the world has the names of large cities and districts that are governed by kings.

95. "Sentient beings begin eating the spontaneous rice. When they gather it in the morning, it's ripe again by evening. When they gather it in the evening, and it's ripen again by morning. After they gather it, the rice grows back again without stems or stalks.

96. "Some sentient beings then silently think to themselves, 'I gather this rice every day. It's tiresome for me to do that. Now, I'll gather enough to supply myself for several days.' Then, when they gather the rice, they accumulate enough for several days.

97. "Later, someone else asks that person, 'Do you want to go gather rice together?'

"They reply, 'I've already stockpiled it, so I don't need to gather more. If you want to collect it, go do as you like.'

98. "Afterward, that person thinks, 'I gathered two days of rice before. Why not gather three days of rice?' They then accumulate three days' worth of rice.

99. "Again, someone else says, 'Let's go gather rice together!'

"They reply, 'I've already gathered three days' worth of rice. If you want to gather rice, do as you like.'

100. "The other person then thinks, 'That man can gather three days' worth of rice. Why couldn't I gather five days' worth of rice?' Afterward, they gather five days' worth of rice.

101. "Because of these sentient beings competing to accumulate rice, the rice begins to grow chaff and husks, and it doesn't grow back after being gathered anymore. Instead, it turns to withered stalks.

102. "At that point, the sentient beings gathered in one place and felt miserable, lamenting and beating their breasts. They said, 'Oh, what a disaster!' They reproach themselves, saying, 'Originally, we were born spontaneously and were nourished with thought. Our bodies glowed with their own light, and we had the miraculous ability of flight. Our happiness had no obstacles.

103. "'After that, the flavor of the earth first arose, which was perfect in color and flavor. We ate this flavor of the earth, and we lived in the world for a long time. Those that often ate it became cruder in appearance, and those that seldom ate were still shiny in appearance. Sentient beings held [notions] of self and other in their minds, and they became arrogant. They said, "My form is superior! Your form isn't equal to mine!" We fought because of arrogance about our forms, and the flavor of the earth disappeared.

104. "'Then, the earth skin grew, and it's form, aroma, and flavor were perfect. Once again, we took it and ate, and we lived in the world for a long time. Those that often ate it became cruder in appearance, and those that seldom ate it were still shiny in appearance. Sentient beings held [notions] of self and other in their minds, and they became arrogant. They said, "My form is superior! Your form isn't equal to mine!" We fought because of arrogance about our forms, and the earth skin disappeared.

105. "'Then, the earth crust grew, becoming a cruder substance, but it's color, aroma, and flavor were perfect. Once again, we took it and ate, and we lived in the world for a long time. Those that often ate it became cruder in appearance, and those that seldom ate it were still shiny in appearance. Sentient beings held [notions] of self and other in their minds, and they became arrogant. They said, "My form is superior! Your form isn't equal to mine!" We fought because of arrogance about our forms, and the earth crust disappeared.

106. "'Then, spontaneous rice grew, and it's color, aroma, and flavor were perfect. Again, we took and ate it. When we gathered it in the morning, it was ripe again by evening. When we gathered it in the evening, and it was ripe again by morning. We would gather it, and it would grow back when we didn't store what we gathered. It grew chaff and husks when we competed with each other's stockpiles, and then it didn't grow back when we gathered it. It turned to withered stalks. Now, we ought to assign fields to houses and make boundaries between the fields.' They then divide the land into different demarcated fields and assign them to others and themselves.

Law and Crime Are Invented

107. "After that, one of them proceeds to store their own rice and steal from other's fields. When other sentient beings see this, they say, 'You are a wrongdoer! You are a wrongdoer! Why are you stealing other's property when you have your own stores and things?' Then they rebuke them, 'Don't ever do that again!'

108. "Still, that person doesn't stop stealing. The other people again rebuke them, 'You were doing wrong! Why didn't you stop?' They then hit the thief with their hand, lead them to an assembly, and tell the assembled people, 'This person has their own store of rice and stole from another's field.'

"The thief also says, 'They hit me!'

109. "When they see this happen, the assembled people are saddened and cry. They beat their breasts and say, 'The world has become evil! How did this evil come about?' The bonds of sorrow and distress arise, resulting in pain. This is the origin of birth, old age, illness, and death as well as falling to bad destinies. As a result of farmland being divided with boundaries, this fighting happens. No one can decide what brought about these resentments and reprisals. 'Now, we should designate one equitable chief to safeguard the people, reward those who are good, and punish those who are evil. Our assembly will provide for him to reduce the harm to all of us.'

110. "A man was then selected from that assembly who was physically large, handsome in appearance, and imposing in authority. He said to the people, 'Now, you've made me chief to safeguard the people, reward those who are good, and punish those who are evil. You've provided for this to reduce the harm to everyone.'

111. "Those people listened to him and accepted him as their chief who would reward what should be rewarded and punish what should be punished. It's then that the name 'chief of the people' first comes to be.

The Lineages of Kings

112. "The first chief of the people had a son named Treasure. Treasure had a son name Superb Flavor. Superb Flavor had a son named Tranquil Purification. Tranquil Purification had a son named Born from the Crown. Born from the Crown had a son named Good Conduct. Good Conduct had a son named Household Conduct. Household Conduct had a son named Wonderful Flavor. Wonderful Flavor had a son named Lord of Flavor. Lord of Flavor had a son named Water Sage. Water Sage had a son named Hundred Knowledge. Hundred Knowledge had a son named Fondness. Fondness had a son named Good Desire. Good Desire had a son named Cutting Bonds. Cutting Bonds had a son named Great Cutting Bonds. Great Cutting Bonds had a son named Treasure Trove. Treasure Trove had a son named Sudarsana. Sudarsana had a son named Asoka. Asoka had a son named Island. Island had a son named Planted Life. Planted Life had a son named Hill. Hill had a son named Spirit God. Spirit God had a son named Bestowing Power. Bestowing Power had a son named Solid Cart. Solid Cart had a son named Ten Carts. Ten Carts had a son named Hundred Carts. Hundred Carts had a son named Solid Bow. Solid Bow had a son named Hundred Bows. Hundred Bows had a son named Nurturance. Nurturance had a son named Good Intent.

113. "From the time of Good Intent, there were ten tribes of noble wheel-turning kings whose lineages was continuous and unbroken. The first [tribe] was named Ganotsaha (?), the second was named Uttarapati (?), the third was named Asmaka, the fourth was named Gandhara (?), the fifth was named Kalinga, the sixth was named Campa, the seventh was named Kuru, the eighth was named Pancala, the ninth was named Mithila, and the tenth was named Iksvaku (?).

114. "The Ganotsaha kings had five noble wheel-turning kings. The Uttarapati kings had five noble wheel-turning kings. The Asmaka kings had seven noble wheel-turning kings. The Gandhara kings had seven noble wheel-turning kings. The Kalinga kings had nine noble wheel-turning kings. The Campa kings had fourteen noble wheel-turning kings. The Kuru kings had thirty-one noble wheel-turning kings. The Pancala kings had thirty-two noble wheel-turning kings. The Mithila kings had 84,000 noble wheel-turning kings. The Iksvaku kings had 101 noble wheel-turning kings. The last of these kings was named Born From Great Good.

115. "That Iksvaku king had a son named Aurava (?). Aurava had a son named Gaurava (?). Gaurava had a son named Nipura. Nipura had a son named Simhahanu. Simhahanu had a son named King Suddhodana. King Suddhodana had a son named Bodhisattva. Bodhisattva had a son named Rahula. As a result of this history, the name 'ksatriya' came to be.

The Origins of the Four Castes

116. "At that point, there's a sentient being who thinks, 'The homes, families, and various things in the world are all thorns and sores. It would be good to seclude myself from it now. I'll go to the mountains and practice the path in quietude and contemplation.'

117. "He then went far away from the thorns of home to the mountains and lived in quietude. He contemplated under a tree on the mountain and left each day to solicit alms in a village. After the people in the town met him, they treated him with respect and supported him. The people all praised his goodness, 'This man was able to renounce the ties to home, go to the mountains, and pursue the path. Doing so, he has secluded himself from bad and unskillful things.' As a result of this praise, he was called 'brahmana.'

118. "Among the assembly of priests, some weren't capable of practicing dhyana. When they left the mountain forests, they would travel among the people and say of themselves, 'I'm not able to sit in dhyana.' As a result of this, they were called 'priests without dhyana.' They would travel down to the villages and do unskillful and poisonous things. As a result, the name 'poison' came into being. As a result of these causes, the world came to have the priestly caste.

119. "Among those sentient beings, those who practice various occupations to support themselves arise. As a result, the householder caste arises in the world.

120. "Among those sentient beings, those who practice the arts and crafts to make their living arise. As a result of this, the worker caste arises in the world.

121. "After the Sakya tribe had come into the world, they became the ascetic caste. Among the warrior caste, some people thought to themselves, 'Worldly love is defiling and impure. What use are these greedy attachments?' They then abandoned their homes, cut off their hair and beards, put on Dharma robes, and sought the path. [They said,] 'I am an ascetic! I am an ascetic!'

122. "Among the assemblies of priests, householders, and workers, some people think to themselves, 'Worldly love is defiling and impure. What use are these greedy attachments?'

123. "They then abandoned their homes, cut off their hair and beards, put on Dharma robes, and sought the path. [They said,] 'I am an ascetic! I am an ascetic!'

The Arising of Arhats in the World

124. "Suppose the physical conduct, verbal conduct, and mental conduct of someone in the warrior assembly isn't good. After they do things that aren't good, their bodies break up and their lives end, and they only experience suffering. Suppose the physical conduct, verbal conduct, and mental conduct of someone in the priestly assembly, householder assembly, or worker assembly isn't good. After they do things that aren't good, their bodies break up and their lives end, and they only experience suffering.

125. "If the physical conduct, verbal conduct, and mental conduct of someone in the warrior assembly is good … they only experience happiness. If the physical conduct, verbal conduct, and mental conduct of someone in the priestly assembly, householder assembly, or worker assembly is good … they only experience happiness.

126. "Suppose someone in the warrior assembly has both kinds of physical, verbal, and mental conduct. They will experience results of suffering and happiness when their bodies break up and their lives end. Suppose someone in the priestly, householder, and worker assemblies has both kinds of physical, verbal, and mental conduct. They will experience results of suffering and happiness when their bodies break up and their lives end.

127. "Suppose someone in the warrior assembly cuts off their hair and beard, puts on the three-piece Dharma robe, leaves home, and seeks the path. They cultivate the seven factors of awakening, leave home for the path with firm faith, and cultivate the unsurpassed religious life. They realize about themselves in the present life, 'My births and deaths have been ended, the religious life has been established, and the task has been accomplished. I won't be subject to another existence.'

128. "Suppose a priest, householder, or worker cuts off their hair and beard, puts on the three-piece Dharma robe, leaves home, and seeks the path. They cultivate the seven factors of awakening, leave home for the path with firm faith, and cultivate the unsurpassed religious life. They realize in the present life, 'My births and deaths have been ended, the religious life has been established, and the task has been accomplished. I won't be subject to another existence.'

129. "Those among these four castes who accomplish the practice of insight become the best of arhats.

130. "Brahma then says this verse:

• "'Those born of warriors are the best,
Being able to bring together the other castes.
Those who completely accomplish insight,
Are the best among gods and humans!'"

131. The Buddha told the monks, "That verse that Brahma says is well spoken, not unskillfully spoken. It's well put, not unskillfully put. I approve of it. Why is that? Now, I am the Tathagata, Arhat, and Completely Awakened One, and I also say this verse:

• "Those born of warriors are the best,
Being able to bring together the other castes.
Those who completely accomplish insight,
Are the best among gods and humans!"

132. Thereupon, the monks who heard what the Buddha taught rejoiced and approved.

133. The Long Discourses is complete. Homage to all knowledge and the happiness of all beings. May sentient beings dwell in the unconditioned, and let me be an example for them!

DEIR 'ALLA INSCRIPTION

Deir 'Alla Plaster Inscription, or Balaam Inscription, or Bal'am Son of Be'or Inscription, known as KAI 312
Language: Deir Alla Hebrew-Aramaic
Language group: Central Semitic, Northwest Semitic
Discovered at Balqa, Jordan, 1967
by Hoftijzer and Van der Kooij, Netherlands
Present location: Amman, Amman Governorate, Jordan
Translation: B. A. Levine, 2003
Estimated Range of Dating: c. 13th century B.C.

(The Deir 'Alla Plaster Inscription (or Balaam Inscription, or Bal'am Son of Be'or Inscription), also known as KAI 312, is a inscription discovered during a 1967 excavation in the Iron Age town of Deir 'Alla, Jordan. Deir 'Alla is situated in western Jordan, about 8 km east of the river Jordan, and about 1 km north of the Jabbok. The excavators found a very large Bronze Age sanctuary that had suffered in the period of wide-spread destruction in the 13th or 12th centuries BC, probably by an earthquake during the Persian period. Unlike other settlements, which were abandoned, Deir 'Alla remained in use well into the fifth century BC. It is currently at the Jordan Archaeological Museum. It is written in a peculiar Northwest Semitic dialect, and has provoked much debate among scholars and had a strong impact on the study of Canaanite and Aramaic inscriptions.

The wall inscription was telling a story about the visions of Bal'am, son of Be'or, a "seer of the gods", a servant working for the Moabite king Balak. He may be the same non-Israelite prophet Balaam mentioned in Numbers 22–24 and in other passages of the Bible. The text refers to divine visions and signs of future destruction, in a language that is close to that of the Bible. For example, we read about the "Shaddai gods", an expression that is close to the Biblical El Shaddai, "God Almighty". On the other hand, the setting is not monotheistic: we read, for instance, about a gathering of a group of gods. The Deir Alla inscription's take on Bala'am differs from that given in the Book of Numbers. Bal'am's god is associated with the goddess Šagar-we-Ishtar. Deities with such names, "Šagar-and-Ishtar", certainly are known to history, but quite separately. The enigmatic narrative also foregrounds the "Shaddayin" (gods and goddesses) who establish a council. It also features the word "Elohin", taken to mean "gods" in the plural rather than the Hebrew deity. So, this inscription proves that the word Elohim, which in today's Bible understanding (although plural) refers to one God, has refered in pre-biblical times really to more than one god as shown in the Deir 'Alla text.

Remember, monotheism was first introduced to the Holy Land by Pharao Amenhotep IV, better known as Akhenaton ("One Useful to Aton"), who ruled from 1353 to 1336 BC. He was the most controversial of all the kings of Egypt because of that. The polytheist Canaanites in the Holy Land did not receive any support from Akhenaton (see: Amarna Letters, p. 2139ff). After his rule, Egypt returned to her ancient gods. The next who tried to establish monotheism was King Hezekiah of Judah (reigned c. 715 to 686 BC; Hebrew: Hizqiyya, Greek: Ezekias) who wanted to use it as unifying tool for his country that was under severe threat by the Assyrian Empire. The next one who established finally, successful and by law, was Ezra; as governor of the Persian province Judah, he had the backing of the Persian Emperor. It seems that the Bible editors, did not dare to change the word Elohim for Yahweh when they were finalising the Hebrew Bible in their Babylonian captivity; they rather changed the interpretation of that plural word into singular.

Reconstruction and Translation

The inscription was on ink on plastered wall; as in the plaster inscriptions at Kuntillet Ajrud, black and red inks were used. Red apparently emphasised certain parts of the text. The inscriptions were written with a broad nibbed pen with ink, an extremely early example. They represent the earliest point of evidence in the history of the West Semitic alphabet. The Oxford Handbook of Biblical Studies describes it as "the oldest example of a book in a West Semitic language written with an alphabet, and the oldest piece of Aramaic literature."

When the text was found, it was broken into fragments, which were lying on the ground. The fragments are poorly preserved, and only a part of the text has been found. In all, 119 pieces of ink-inscribed plaster were recovered. The wall, near the summit of the tel, was felled by a tremor.

Scholars have succeeded in arranging many of the fragments into two large 'combinations'. At least to some extent, they had use of information about which fragments were found close together or wide apart on the ground. Still, uncombined fragments remain. For the reading of damaged or missing parts of the text, they sometimes had to guess; however, where the same group of words seems to appear in several places, but with different parts damaged in different occurrences, they could reasonably reconstruct a combined text.

Reconstructing the contents is difficult, but it is clear that Bileam learns from the gods that the world will be destroyed, an apocalyptic event that is described with metaphors from bird life. Somehow, Bileam and his people seem to have averted this disaster. There is also a description of the Underworld.

The first complete translation and reconstruction of the inscription was published in 1981. Today, the text in modern Hebrew letters is available online. The text is difficult to read and to interpret. Here is one reconstruction and translation of the first combination:)

1. [This is] the book of [Ba]laam, [son of Beo]r, a seer of the gods. To him came the gods at night. [And they spoke to] him
2. according to the utterance of El, and they spoke to [Bala]am, son of Beor, thus: [...]

The Babylonian Legends of the Creation and the Fight between Bel and the Dragon
As told by Assyrian Tablets from Nineveh
Translation: E. A. Wallis Budge, 1921.
Estimated Range of Dating: mid-3rd millenium B.C.

The following documents are about stories that are well-known to Bible readers: The Babylonian Legends of the Creation and the Fight between Bel and the Dragon as told by Assyrian Tablets from Nineveh. Genesis 11:28 states that Abraham's land of his nativity is in Ur of the Chaldees. That is an ancient city state nearby Erech or Uruk in Sumer, Mesopotamia, present-day Iraq. Abraham left Sumer with his clan for Harran in southern Turkey shortly after 2000 B.C., probably due to the war caused by the invasion of the Iranian Elamites. [* Abraham or "(h)abirahim" is ancient Semitic (Phoenician-Hebrew) and means "a multitude of people." Everybody in Sumer knew the Creation Myth, the 100 comandments, known as "Instructions of Shuruppak" (and the likely origin of the Ten Commandments), the Flood Story as told in the Gilgamesh Epic. Would it really be such a surprise when Abraham and his successors told and retold those stories again and over again? These texts were passed from one generation to the next and they were well-loved in the entire Middle East. Thanks to translators like E. A. Wallis Budge, these voices from a distant past can reach our ears and our minds once again.*

Sir Ernest Alfred Thompson Wallis Budge, better known as E. A. Wallis Budge, (1857-1934) was an English Egyptologist, Orientalist, and philologist who worked as curator (1894–1924) of Egyptian and Assyrian antiquities at the British Museum, London, for which he collected vast numbers of cuneiform tablets, Egyptian papyri, and Greek, Coptic, Arabic, Syriac, and Ethiopic manuscripts. He entered the museum's service in 1883 and subsequently made many trips to Mesopotamia, Egypt, and the Sudan to conduct archaeological excavations. He published many dozen works, including translations of ancient texts such as the Egyptian Book of the Dead.

Budge studied at Cambridge from 1878 to 1883. His subjects included Semitic languages: Hebrew, Syriac, Ge'ez and Arabic; he continued to study Assyrian independently. Budge worked closely during these years with William Wright, a noted scholar of Semitic languages, among others. In 1883, Budge entered the British Museum, working within the recently renamed Department of Egyptian and Assyrian Antiquities. Initially appointed to the Assyrian section, he soon transferred to the Egyptian section. He studied the Egyptian language with Samuel Birch.

Between 1886 and 1891, Budge was assigned by the British Museum to search and purchase all cuneiform tablets and other documents he fould get. Budge returned from his many missions to Egypt and Iraq with: large collections of cuneiform tablets; Syriac, Coptic, and Greek manuscripts; and significant collections of hieroglyphic papyri.

Budge was also a prolific author, and he is especially remembered today for his works on ancient Egyptian and Mesopotamian religion and translated cuneiform tablets, papyri and other documents that cn explain biblical accounts. In 1895, Budge was elected an International Member of the American Philosophical Society. Budge was knighted in the 1920 New Year Honours for his distinguished contributions to the British Museum, Middle East Studies and his educational publications on ancient Egypt and Mespotamia.)

The Babylonian Legends Of The Creation
And The Fight Between Bel And The Dragon
As Told By Assyrian Tablets From Nineveh
By E. A. Wallis Budge

DISCOVERY OF THE TABLETS.

THE baked clay tablets and portions of tablets which describe the views and beliefs of the Babylonians and Assyrians about the Creation were discovered by Mr. (later Sir) A. H. Layard, Hormuzd Rassam and George Smith, Assistant in the Department of Oriental Antiquities in the British Museum. They were found among the ruins of the Palace and Library of Ashurbanipal (B.C. 668-626) at Kuyunjik (Nineveh), between the years 1848 and 1878. Between 1866 and 1870, the great "find" of tablets and fragments, some 20,000 in number, which Rassam made in 1852, was worked through by George Smith, who identified many of the historical inscriptions of Shalmaneser II, Tiglath-Pileser III, Sargon II, Sennacherib, Esarhaddon, and other kings mentioned in the Bible, and several literary compositions of a legendary character, fables, etc. In the course of this work he discovered fragments of various versions of the Babylonian Legend of the Deluge, and portions of several texts belonging to a work which treated of the beginning of things, and of the Creation. In 1870, Rawlinson and Smith noted allusions to the Creation in the important tablet K.63, but the texts of portions of tablets of the Creation Series at that time available for study were so fragmentary that it was impossible for these scholars to find their correct sequence. During the excavations which Smith carried out at Kuyunjik in 1873 and 1874 for the proprietors of the Daily Telegraph and the Trustees of the British Museum, he was, he tells us, fortunate enough to discover "several fragments of the Genesis Legends." In January, 1875, he made an exhaustive search among the tablets in the British Museum, and in the following March he published, in the Daily Telegraph (March 4th), a summary of the contents of about twenty fragments of the series of tablets describing the creation of the heavens and the earth. In November of the same year he communicated to the Society of Biblical Archaeology (See the Transactions, Vol. IV, Plates I-VI, London, 1876.) copies of: (1st) the texts on fragments of the First and Fifth Tablets of Creation; (2nd) a text describing the fight between the "Gods and Chaos"; and (3rd) a fragmentary text which, he believed, described the Fall of Man. In the following year he published translations of all the known fragments of the Babylonian Creation Legends in his "Chal-dean Account of Genesis" (London, 1876, 8VO, with photographs). In this volume were included translations of the Exploits of Gizdubar (Gilgamish), and some early Babylonian fables and legends of the gods.

PUBLICATION OF THE CREATION TABLETS.

The publication of the above-mentioned texts and translations proved beyond all doubt the correctness of Rawlinson's assertion made in 1865, that "certain portions of the Babylonian and Assyrian Legends of the Creation resembled passages in the early chapters of the Book of Genesis." During the next twenty years, the Creation texts were copied and recopied by many Assyriologists, but no publication appeared in which all the material available for reconstructing the Legend was given in a collected form. In 1898, the Trustees of the British Museum ordered the publication of all the Creation texts contained in the Babylonian and Assyrian Collections, and the late Mr. L. W. King, Assistant in the Department of Egyptian and Assyrian Antiquities, was directed to prepare an edition. The exhaustive preparatory search which he made through the collections of tablets in the British Museum resulted in the discovery of many unpublished fragments of the Creation Legends, and in the identification of a fragment which, although used by George Smith, had been lost sight of for about twenty-five years. He ascertained also that, according to the Ninevite scribes, the Tablets of the Creation Series were seven in number, and vhat several versions of the Legend of the Creation, the works of Babylonian and Assyrian editors of different periods, must have existed in early Mesopotamian Libraries. King's edition of the Creation Texts appeared in "Cuneiform Texts from Babylonian Tablets in the British Museum," Part XIII, London, 1901. As the scope of this work did not permit the inclusion of his translations, and commentary and notes, he published these in a private work entitled, "The Seven Tablets of Creation, or the Babylonian and Assyrian Legends concerning the contained much new material which had been found by him since the appearance of the official edition of the texts, and in fact doubled the number of Creation Texts known hitherto.

THE OBJECT OF THE BABYLONIAN LEGEND OF THE CREATION

A perusal of the texts of the Seven Tablets of Creation, which King was enabled, through the information contained in them, to arrange for the first time in their proper sequence, shows that the main object of the Legend was the glorification of the god Marduk, the son of Ea (Enki), as the conqueror of the dragon Tiamat, and not the narration of the story of the creation of the heavens, and earth and man. The Creation, properly speaking, is only mentioned as an exploit of Marduk in the Sixth Tablet, and the Seventh Tablet is devoted wholly to the enumeration of the honorific titles of Marduk. It is probable that every great city in Babylonia, whilst accepting the general form of the Creation Legend, made the greatest of its local gods the hero of it. It has long been surmised that the prominence of Marduk in the Legend was due to the political importance of the city of Babylon. And we now know from the fragments of tablets which have been excavated in recent years by German Assyriologists at Kal'at Shark at (or Shargat, or Shar'at), that in the city of Ashur, the god Ashur, the national god of Assyria, actually occupied in texts (See the duplicate fragments described in the Index to Ebeling, Keilschrifttexte aus Assur, Leipzig, 1919 fol.) of the Legend in use there the position which Marduk held in four of the Legends current in Babylonia. There is reason for thinking that the original hero of the Legend was Enlil (Bel; also known as Baal), the great god of Nippur (the Nafar, or Nufar of the Arab writers), and that when Babylon rose into power under the First Dynasty (about 2300 B.C.), his position in the Legend was usurped at Babylon by Marduk.

VARIANT FORMS OF THE BABYLONIAN LEGEND OF THE CREATION.

The views about the Creation which are described in the Seven Tablets mentioned above were not the only ones current in Mesopotamia, and certainly they were not necessarily the most orthodox. Though in the version of the Legend already referred to the great god of creation was Enlil, or Marduk, or Ashur, we know that in the Legend of Gilgamish (Second Tablet) it was the goddess Aruru who created Enkidu (Eabani) from a piece of clay moistened with her own spittle. And in the so-called "bilingual" version* of the Legend, we find that this goddess assisted' Marduk as an equal in the work of creating the seed of mankind. (* The text is found on a tablet from Abu Habbah, Brit. Mus., No.93,014 (82-5-22, 1048).) This version, although Marduk holds the position of pre-eminence, differs in many particulars from that given by the Seven Tablets, and as it is the most important of all the texts which deal directly with the creation of the heavens and the earth, a rendering of it is here given.

THE "BILINGUAL" VERSION OF THE CREATION LEGEND.

1. The holy house, the house of the gods in the holy place had not yet been made.
2. No reed had sprung up, no tree had been made.
3. No brick had been laid, no structure of brick had been erected.
4. No house had been made, no city had been built.
5. No city had been made, no creature had been constituted.
6. Enlil's city, Nippur, had not been made, had not been built,
7. Erech had not been made, E-Anna had not been built,
8. The Deep* (Apsu or Abyss) had not been made, had not been built. (* It is doubtful if Apsu here really means the great abyss of waters from out of which the world was called. It was, more probably, a ceremonial object used in the cult of the god, something like the great [purification] basin, or "sea," in the court of the temple of King Solomon, mentioned in 1 Kings 7:23; 2 Kings 25:13, etc.; See The Holy Bible, KJV, The Lord Henfield Edition, Appendices, pp. 1248ff; 1353-1367)
9. Of the holy house, the house of dwelling-place had not been made.
10. All the lands were sea.
11. At the time that the mid-most sea was [shaped like] a trough,
12. At that time Eridu [in Sumer] was made, and E-sagil was built,
13. The [temple of] E-sagil where in the midst of the Deep the god Lugal-dul-azaga* dwelleth (* This is a name under which Marduk was worshipped at Eridu.),
14. Babylon was made, [the temple of] E-sagil was completed.
15. The gods the Anunnaki he created at one time.
16. They proclaimed supreme the holy city, the dwelling of their heart's happiness.
17. Marduk laid a rush mat upon the face of the waters,
18. He mixed up earth and moulded it upon the rush mat,
19. To enable the gods to dwell in the place where they fain would be
20. He fashioned man.
21. The goddess Aruru with him created the seed of mankind.
22. He created the beasts of the field and [all] the living things in the field.
23. He created the river Idiglat (Tigris) and the river Purattu (Prath; Euphrates), and he set them in their places,
24. He proclaimed their names rightly.
25. He created grass, the vegetation of the marsh, seed and shrub;
26. He created the green plants of the plain,
27. Lands, marshes, swamps,
28. The wild cow and the calf she carried, the wild calf, the sheep and the young she carried, the lamb of the fold,
29. Plantations and shrub land,
30. The he-goat and the mountain goat. . . .
31. The [god] Lord Marduk piled up a dam in the region of the sea (i.e., he reclaimed land)
32. He . . . a swamp, he founded a marsh.
33. . . . he made to be
34. Reeds he created, trees he created,
35. . . . in place he created
36. He laid bricks, he built a brick work,
37. He constructed houses, he formed cities.
38. He constructed cities, creatures he set [therein].
39. [the City of] Nippur he made, E-Kur he built.
40. [Erech (Uruk) he made, E-Anna] he built.

[The remainder of the text is fragmentary, and shows that the text formed part of an incantation which was recited in the Temple of E-Zida, possibly the great temple (ziggurat) of Nabu at Borsippa (nearby Babylon).]

THE LEGEND OF THE CREATION
ACCORDING TO BEROSUS AND DAMASCIUS.

Versions in Greek of the Legends found by George Smith had long been known to classical scholars, owing to the preservation of fragments of them in the works of later Greek writers, e.g., Eusebius, Syncellus, and others. The most important of these is derived from the History of Babylonia, which was written in Greek by BEROSUS, a priest of Bel-Marduk, i.e., the "Lord Marduk," at Babylon, about 250 B.C. In this work Berosus reproduced all the known historical facts and traditions derived from native sources which were current in his day. It is therefore not surprising to find that his account of the Babylonian beliefs about the origin of things corresponds very closely with that given in the cuneiform texts, and that it is .of the greatest use in explaining and partly in expanding these texts. His account of the primeval abyss, out of which everything came, and of its inhabitants reads:

"There was a time in which there existed nothing but darkness and an abyss of waters, wherein resided most hideous beings, which were produced on a two-fold principle. There appeared men, some of whom were furnished with two wings, others with four, and with two faces. They had one body but two heads; the one that of a man, the other of a woman; and likewise in their several organs both male and female. Other human figures were to be seen with the legs and horns of goats; some had horses' feet; while others united the hind-quarters of a horse with the body of a man, resembling in shape the hippo-centaurs. Bulls likewise were bred there with the heads of men; and dogs with fourfold bodies, terminated in their extremities with the tails of fishes; horses also. with the heads of dogs; men too and other animals, with the heads and bodies of horses and the tails of fishes. In short, there were creatures in which were combined the limbs of every species of animals. In addition to these, fishes, reptiles, serpents, with other monstrous animals, which assumed each other's shape and countenance. Of all which were preserved delineations in the temple of Belus at Babylon."

DAMASCIUS THE SYRIAN, THE NEO-PLATONIST.
[THE SLAUGHTER OF THE QUEEN OF THE ABYSS.]

"The person, who presided over them, was a woman named OMOROCA; which in the Chaldean language is THALATTH; in Greek THALASSA, the sea; but which might equally be interpreted the Moon. All things being in this situation, Belus came, and cut the woman asunder: and of one half of her he formed the earth, and of the other half the heavens; and at the same time destroyed the animals within her. All this (he says) was an allegorical description of nature."

[THE CREATION OF MAN.]

"For, the whole universe consisting of moisture, and animals being generated therein, the deity above-mentioned* took off his own head: upon which the other gods mixed the blood, as it gushed out, with the earth; and from whence were formed men. On this account it is that they are rational and partake of divine knowledge." (* The god whose head was taken off was not Belus, as is commonly thought, but the god who the cuneiform texts tell us was called "Kingu.")

[BELUS CREATES THE UNIVERSE.]

"This Belus, by whom they signify Jupiter, divided the darkness, and separated the Heavens from the Earth, and reduced the universe to order. But the animals not being able to bear the prevalence of light, died. Belus upon this, seeing a vast space unoccupied, though by nature fruitful, commanded one* of the gods to take off his head, and to mix the blood with the earth; and from thence to form other men and animals, which should be capable of bearing the air. Belus formed also the stars, and the sun, and the moon, and the five planets. Such, according to Polyhistor Alexander, is the account which Berosus gives in his first book." (See Cory, Ancient Fragments, London, 1832, pp. 24-26.)

In the sixth century of our era DAMASCIUS the SYRIAN, the last of the Neo-Platonic philosophers, wrote in Greek in a work on the Doubts and Solutions of the first Principles, in which he says: "But the Babylonians, like the rest of the Barbarians, pass over in silence the One principle of the Universe, and they conceive Two, TAUTHE and APASON; making APASON the husband of TAUTHE, and denominating her the mother of the gods. And from these proceeds an only-begotten son, MOYMIS, which I conceive is no other than the Intelligible world proceeding from the two principles. From these, also, another progeny is derived, DACHE and DACHUS; and again, a third, KISSARE and ASSORUS, from which last three others proceed, ANUS, and ILLINUS, and Aus. And of Aus and DAUCE is born a son called Belus, who, they say, is the fabricator of the world, the Demiurgus." (See Cory, Ancient Fragments, London, 1832, p. 318.)

THE SEVEN TABLETS OF CREATION.
DESCRIPTION OF THEIR CONTENTS.

In the beginning nothing whatever existed except APSI, which may be described as a boundless, confused and disordered mass of watery matter; how it came into being is unknown. Out of this mass there were evolved two orders of beings, namely, demons and gods. The demons had hideous forms, even as Berosus said, which were part animal, part bird, part reptile and part human. The gods had wholly human forms, and they represented the three layers of the comprehensible world, that is to say, heaven or the sky, the atmosphere, and the underworld. The atmosphere and the underworld together formed the earth opposed, to the sky or heaven. The texts say that the first two gods to be created were LAKHMU and LAKHAMU. Their attributes cannot at present be described, but they seem to represent two forms of primitive matter. They appear to have had no existence in popular religion, and it has been thought that they may be described as theological conceptions containing the notions of matter and some of its attributes.

After countless aeons had passed the gods ANSHAR and KISHAR came into being; the former represents the "hosts of heaven," and the latter the "hosts of "earth."

After another long and indefinite period the independent gods of the Babylonian pantheon came into being, e.g., ANU, EA, who is here called NUDIMMUD and'others.

As soon as the gods appeared in the universe "order" came into being. When APSU, the personification of confusion and disorder of every kind, saw this "order," he took counsel with his female associate TIAMAT with the object of finding some means of destroying the "way" or "order" of the gods.

Fortunately the Babylonians and Assyrians have supplied us with representations of Tiamat, and these show us what form ancient tradition assigned to her. She is depicted as a ferocious monster with wings and scales and terrible claws, and her body is sometimes, that of a huge serpent, and sometimes that of an' animal. In the popular imagination she represented all that was physically terrifying, and foul, and abominable; she was nevertheless the mother of everything (Muallidat gi'inrishun), and was the possessor of the DUP SHIMATI or "TABLET OF DESTINIES." No description of this Tablet or its contents is available, but from its name we may assume that it was a sort of Babylonian Book of Fate*. (* It is probable that the idea of this Tablet is perpetuated in the " Preserved Tablet " of the Kur'an (Surah x, 62), on which the destiny of every man was written at or before the creation of the world. Nothing that is written (maktdb) there can be erased, or altered, or fail to take effect.) Theologically, Tiamat represented to the Babylonians the same state in the develop ment of the universe as did tohu wd-bhohii (Genesis i. 2), i.e. formlessness and voidness, of primeval matter, to the Hebrews She is depicted both on bas-reliefs and on cylinder seals in a form which associates her with LABARTU (Cun. Texts, Part XXIV, Plate 44, 1. 142), a female devil that prowled about the desert at night suckling wild animals but killing men. And it is tolerably certain that she was the type, and symbol, and head of the whole community of fiends, demons and devils.

In the consultation which took place between APSU and TIAMAT, their messenger MU-UM-MU took part; of the history and attributes of this last-named god nothing is known. The result of the consultation was that a long struggle began between the demons and the gods, and it is clear that the object of the powers of darkness was to destroy the light. The whole story of this struggle is the subject of the Seven Tablets of Creation. The gods are deifications of the sun, moon, planets and other stars, and APSU, or CHAOS, and his companions the demons, are personifica tions of darkness, night and evil. The story of the fight between them is nothing more nor less than a picturesque allegory of natural phenomena. Similar descriptions are found in the literatures of other primitive nations, and the story of the great fight between Her-ur, the great god of heaven, and Set, the great captain of the hosts of darkness, may be quoted as an example. Set regarded the "order" which Her-ur was bringing into the universe with the same dislike as that with which Apsti contemplated the beneficent work of Sin, the Moon-god, Shamash, the Sun-god, and their brother gods. And the hostility of Set and his allies to the gods, like that of Tiamat and her allies, was everlasting.

At this point a new Text fills a break in the First Tablet, and describes the fight which took place between Nudimmud or Ea, (the representative of the established "order" which the rule of the gods had introduced into the domain of Apsu and Tiamat) and Apsu and his envoy Mummu. Ea went forth to fight the powers of darkness and he conquered Apsu and Mummu. The victory over Apsu, i.e., the confused and boundless mass of primeval water, represents the setting of impassable boundaries to the waters that are on and under the earth, i.e., the formation of the Ocean. The exact details of the conquest cannot be given, but we know that Ea was the possessor of the "pure (or white, or holy) incantation" and that he overcame Apsu and his envoy by the utterance of a powerful spell. In the Egyptian Legend of Ra and Aapep, the monster is rendered spell-bound by the god Her-Tuati, who plays in it exactly the same part as Ea in the Babylonian Legend.

When Tiamat heard of Ea's victory over Apsu and Mummu she was filled with fury, and determined to avenge the death of Apsu, her husband.

The first act of TIAMAT after the death of Apsu was to increase the number of her allies. We know that a certain creature called "UMMU-KHUBUR" at once spawned a brood of devilish monsters to help her in her fight against the gods. Nothing is known of the origin or attributes of UMMU-KHUBUR, but some think she was a form of TiAMAT. Her brood probably consisted of personifications of mist, fog, cloud, storm, whirlwinds and the blighting and destroying powers which primitive man associated with the - desert. An exact parallel of this brood of devils is found in Egyptian mythology where the allies of Set and Aapep are called "Mesu betshet", "spawn of "impotent revolt." They are depicted in the form of serpents, and some of them became the "Nine Worms of Amend" that are mentioned in the Book of the Dead (Chapter 1a).

TIAMAT ESTABLISHES THE FIRST ZODIAC.

Not content with Ummu-Khubur's brood of devils, Tiamat called the stars and powers of the air to her aid, for she " set up " (1st) the Viper, (2nd) the Snake, (3rd) the god Lakhamu, (4th) the Whirlwind, (5th) the ravening Dog, (6th) the Scorpion-man, (7th) the mighty Storm-wind, (8th) the Fish-man, and (9th) the Horned Beast. These bore (10th) the "merciless, invincible weapon," and were under the command of (11th) Kingu, whom Tiamat calls " her husband." Thus Tiamat had Eleven mighty Helpers besides the devils spawned by Ummu-Khubur. We may note in passing that some of the above-mentioned Helpers appear among the Twelve Signs of the Zodiac which Marduk " set up" after his conquest of Tiamat, e.g., the Scorpion-man, the Horned Beast, etc. This fact suggests that the first Zodiac was " set up" by Tiamat, who with her Eleven Helpers formed the Twelve Signs; the association of evil with certain stars may date from that period. That the Babylonians regarded the primitive gods as powers of evil is clear from the fact that Lakhamu, one of them, is enumerated among the allies of Tiamat.

The helpers of Tiamat were placed by her under the command of a god called KINGU who is TAMMUZ. He was the counterpart, or equivalent, of ANU, the Sky-god, in the kingdom of darkness, for it is said in the text "Kingu" was exalted and received the power of Ann," i.e., he possessed the same power and attributes as Anu. When Tiamat appointed Kingu to be her captain, she recited over him a certain spell or incantation, and then she gave him the TABLET OF DESTINIES and fastened it to his breast, saying, "Whatsoever goeth forth from thy mouth shall be established." Armed with all the magical powers conferred upon him by this Tablet, and heartened by all the laudatory epithets which his wife Tiamat heaped upon him, Kingu went forth at the head of his devils.

When Ea heard that Tiamat had collected her forces and was determined to continue the fight against the gods which Apsu and Mummu had begun, and that she had made her husband Kingu her champion, he was "afflicted" and "sat in sorrow." He felt unable to renew the fight against the powers of darkness, and he therefore went and reported the new happenings to Anshar, representative of the "host of heaven," and took counsel with him. When Anshar heard the matter he was greatly disturbed in mind and bit his lips, for he saw that the real difficulty was to find a worthy antagonist for Kingu and Tiamat. A gap in the text here prevents us from knowing exactly what Anshar said and did, but the context suggests that he summoned Anu, the Sky-god, to his assistance. Then, having given him certain instructions, he sent him on an embassy to Tiamat with the view of conciliating her. When Anu reached the place where she was he found her in a very wrathful state, and she.was muttering angrily; Anu was so appalled at the sight of her that he turned and fled. It is impossible at present to explain this interlude, or to find any parallel to it in other ancient Oriental literature.

When Anu reported his inability to deal with Tiamat, a council of the gods was called, and Ea induced his son Marduk to be present. We next find Anshar in converse with the god Marduk, who offers to act as the champion of the gods and to fight Tiamat and her allies. Marduk being a form of the Sun-god, the greatest of all the powers of light, thus becomes naturally the protagonist of the gods, and the adversary of Tiamat and her powers of darkness. Then Anshar summoned a great council of the gods, who forthwith met in a place called "Upshukkinaku" which may be described as the Babylonian Olympus. It was all-important for Marduk to appear at the council of the gods before he undertook his task, because it was necessary for him to be formally recognised by them as their champion, and he needed to be endowed by them with magical powers.

The primitive gods Lakhmu and Lakhamu, and the Igigi who may be regarded as star-gods, were also summoned. A banquet was prepared, and the gods attended, and having met and kissed each other they sat down, and ate bread and drank hot and sweet sesame wine. The fumes of the wine confused their senses, but they continued to drink, and at length " their spirits were exalted." They appointed Marduk to be their champion officially, and then they proceeded to invest him with the power that would cause every command he spake to be followed immediately by the effect which he intended it to produce. Next Marduk, with the view of testing the new power which had been given him, commanded a garment to disappear and it did so; and when he commanded it to reappear it did so.

Then the gods saluted him as their king, and gave him the insignia of royalty, namely, the sceptre, the throne and the pala, whatever that may be. And as they handed to him these things they commanded him to go and hack the body of Tiamat in pieces, and to scatter her blood to the winds. Thereupon Marduk began to arm himself for the fight. He took a bow, a spear, and a club; he filled his body full of fire and set the lightning before him. He took in his hands a net wherewith to catch Tiamat, and he placed the four winds near it, to prevent her from escaping from it when he had snared her. He created mighty winds and tempests to assist him, and grasped the thunderbolt in his hand; and then, mounting upon the Storm, which was drawn by four horses, he went out to meet and defeat Tiamat. It seems pretty certain that this description of the equipment of Marduk was taken over from a very ancient account of the Fight with Tiamat in which the hero was Enlil, i.e., the god of the air, or of the region which lies between heaven and hell. Marduk approached and looked upon the "Middle" or "Inside" or "Womb" of Tiamat [a drop-shaped, Egyptian star constellation by the name of "Khat Nut" or "the belly of Nut"] and divined the plan of Kingu who had taken up his place therein. In the Seventh Tablet (l. 108) Marduk is said to have "entered into the middle of Tiamat," and because he did so'he is called "Nibiru," i.e., "he who entered in," and the "seizer of the middle." What the words "middle of Tiamat" meant to the Babylonian we are not told, but it is clear that Marduk's entry into it was a signal mark of the triumph of the god. When Kingu from the "middle of Tiamat" saw Marduk arrayed in his terrible panoply of war, he was terrified and trembled, and staggered about and lost all control of his legs; and at the mere sight of the god all the other fiends and devils were smitten with fear and reduced to helplessness. Tiamat saw Marduk and began to revile him, and when he challenged her to battle she flew into a rage and attempted to overthrow him by reciting an incantation, thinking that her words of power would destroy his strength. Her spell had no effect on the god, who at once cast his net over her. At the same moment he made a gale of foul wind to blow on her face, and entering through her mouth it filled her body; whilst her body was distended he drove his spear into her, and Tiamat split asunder, and her womb fell out from it. Marduk leaped upon her body and looked on her followers as they attempted to escape. But the Four Winds which he had stationed round about Tiamat made all their efforts to flee of no effect. Marduk caught all the Eleven allies of Tiamat in his net, and he trampled upon them as they lay in it helpless. Marduk then took the TABLET OF DESTINIES from Kingu's breast, and sealed it with his seal and placed it on his own breast.

Then returning to the dead body of Tiamat he smashed her skull with his club and scattered her blood to the north wind, and as a reward for his destruction of their terrible foe, he received gifts and presents from the gods his fathers.

The text then goes on to say that Marduk "devised a cunning plan," i.e., he determined to carry out a series of works of creation. He split the body of Tiamat into two parts; out of one half he fashioned the dome of heaven, and out of the other he constructed the abode of Nudimmud, or Ea, which he placed over against Apsu, i.e., the deep. He also formulated regulations concerning the maintenance of the same. By this "cunning plan" Marduk deprived the powers of darkness of the opportunity of repeating their revolt with any chance of success. Having established the framework of his new heaven and earth Marduk, acting as the celestial architect, set to work to furnish them. In the first place he founded E-Sharra or the "mansion of heaven", and next he set apart and arranged proper places for the old gods of the three realms Anu, Bel and Ea.

The text of the Fifth Tablet, which would undoubtedly have supplied details as to Marduk's arrangement and regulations for the sun, the moon, the stars, and the Signs of the Zodiac in the heavens is wanting. The prominence of the celestial bodies in the history of creation is not to be wondered at, for the greater number of the religious beliefs of the Babylonians are grouped round them. Moreover, the science of astronomy had gone hand in hand with the superstition of astrology in Mesopotamia from time immemorial; and at a very early period the oldest gods of Babylonia were associated with the heavenly bodies. Thus the Annunaki and the Igigi, who are bodies of deified spirits, were identified with the stars of the northern and southern heaven, respectively. And all the primitive goddesses coalesced and were grouped to form the goddess Ishtar, who was identified with the Evening and Morning Star, or Venus. The Babylonians believed that the will of the gods was made known to men by the motions of the planets, and that careful observation of them would enable the skilled seer to recognize in the stars favourable and unfavourable portents. Such observations, treated from a magical point of view, formed a huge mass of literature which was being added to continually. From the nature of the case this literature enshrined a very considerable number of facts of pure astronomy, and as early as the period of the First Dynasty (about 2000 B.C.), the Babylonians were able to calculate astronomical events with considerable accuracy, and to reconcile the solar and lunar years by the use of epagomenal months. They had by that time formulated the existence of the Zodiac, and fixed the "stations" of the moon, and the places of the planets with it; and they had distinguished between the planets and the fixed stars. In the Fifth Tablet of the Creation Series (l. 2) the Signs of the Zodiac are called Lumashi1 (This is the original of the Syriac word for the Signs of the Zodiac malwdshe (plural of malwdsha). The Syrians added to it an m, thus giving it a participial form.), but unfortunately no list of their names is given in the context. Now these are supplied by the little tablet (No. 77,821) of the Persian Period of which a reproduction is here given. It has been referred to and discussed by various scholars, and its importance is very great. The transcript of the text, which is now published (see p. 68) for the first time, will be acceptable to the students of the history of the Zodiac. Egyptian, Greek, Syriac and Arabic astrological and astronomical texts all associate with the Signs of the Zodiac twelve groups, each containing three stars, which are commonly known as the "Thirty-six Dekans." (Dekanoi. They were well known to the Egyptians, who, as early as the fourteenth century B.C., possessed a full list of them. See Richard Lepsius, Chronologie, Berlin, 1848, and Brugsch, Thesaurus (Astronomische und Astrologische Inschriften), Leipzig, 1883.) The text of line 4 of the Fifth Tablet of the Creation Series proves that the Babylonians were acquainted with these groups of stars, for we read that Marduk "set up for the twelve" months of the year three stars apiece." In the List of Signs of the Zodiac here given, it will be seen that each Sign is associated with a particular month.

At a later period, say about 500 B.C., the Babylonians made some of the gods regents of groups of stars, for Enlil ruled 33 stars, Anu 23 stars, and Ea 15 stars. They also possessed lists of the fixed stars, and drew up tables of the times of their heliacal risings. Such lists were probably based upon very ancient documents, and prove that the astral element in Babylonian religion was very considerable.

The accompanying illustration, which is reproduced from the Boundary Stone of Ritti-Marduk (Brit. Mus., No. 90,858), supplies much information about the symbols of the gods, and of the Signs of the Zodiac in the reign of Nebuchadnezzar I, King of Babylon, about 1120 B.C. Thus in Register 1, we have the Star of Ishtar, the crescent of the Moon-god Sin and the disk of Shamash the Sun-god. In Register 2 are three stands (?) surmounted by tiaras, which represent the gods Anu, Enlil (Bel) and Ea respectively. In Register 3 are three altars (?) or shrines (?) with a monster in Nos. i and 2. Over the first is the lance of Marduk, over the second the mason's square of Nabu, and over the third is the symbol of the goddess Ninkharsag, the Creatress. In Register 4 are a standard with an animal's head, a sign of Ea; a two-headed snake = the Twins; an unknown symbol with a horse's head, and a bird, representative of Shukamuna and Shumalia. In Register 5 are a seated figure of the goddess Gula and the Scorpion-man; and in Register 6 are forked lightning, symbol of Adad, above a bull, the Tortoise, symbol of Ea (?), the Scorpion of the goddess Ishkhara, and the Lamp of Nusku, the Fire-god. Down the left-hand side is the serpent-god representing the constellation of the Hydra.

The mutilated text of the Fifth Tablet makes it impossible to gain further details in connection with Marduk's work in arranging the heavens. We are, however, justified in assuming that the gaps in it contained statements about the grouping of the gods into triads. In royal historical inscriptions the kings often invoke the gods in threes, though they never call any one three a triad or trinity. It seems as if this arrange ment of gods in threes was assumed to be of divine origin.

In the Fourth Tablet of Creation, one triad "Anu-Bel-Ea" is actually mentioned, and in the Fifth Tablet, another is indicated, " Sin-Shamash-Ishtar." In these triads Anu represents the sky or heaven, Bel or Enlil the region under the sky and including the earth, Ea the underworld, Sin the Moon, Shamash the Sun, and Ishtar the star Venus. When the universe was finally constituted several other great gods existed, e.g., Nusku, the Fire-god, Enurta (Formerly known as Ninip.), a solar god, Nergal, the god of war and handicrafts, Nabu, the god of learning, Marduk of Babylon, the great national god of Babylonia, and Ashur, the great national god of Assyria.

When Marduk had arranged heaven and earth, and had established the gods in their places, the gods complained that their existence was barren, because they lacked worshippers at their shrines and offerings. To make a way out of this difficulty Marduk devised another "cunning plan," and announced his intention of creating man out of "blood and bone" DAMI ISSIMTUM. We have already quoted (see p. n) the statement of Berosus that man was created out of the blood of a god mixed with earth; here, then, is the authority for his words. Marduk made known to Ea his intention of creating man, and Ea suggested that if one of the gods were sacrificed the remainder of them should be set free from service, presumably to Marduk. Thereupon Marduk summons a council of the gods, and asks them to name the instigator of the fight in which he himself was the victor. In reply the gods named Kingu, Tiamat's second husband, whom they seized forthwith, and bound with fetters and carried to Ea, and then having " inflicted "punishment upon him they let his blood." From Kingu's blood Ea fashioned mankind for the service of the gods.

Now among the texts which have been found on the tablets at Kal'at Sharkat is an account of the creation of man which differs from the version given in the Seven Tablets of Creation, but has two features in common with it. These two features are: (1st) the council of the gods to discuss the creation of man; (2nd) the sacrifice which the gods had to make for the creation of man. In the variant version two (or more) gods are sacrificed, Ilu Nagar Ilu Nagar, i.e., "the workmen gods," about whom nothing is known. The place of sacrifice is specified with some care, and it is said to be "Uzu-mu-a, or the bond of heaven and earth." Uzu-mu-a may be the bolt with which Marduk locked the two halves of Tiamat into place.

The Anunnaki, wishing to give an expression of their admiration for Marduk's heroism, decided to build him a shrine or temple. To this Marduk agreed, and chose Babylon, i.e., the "Gate of God," for its site. The Anunnaki themselves made the bricks, and they built the great temple of E-Sagila at Babylon. When the temple was finished, Marduk reenacted the scene of creation; for, as he had formerly assigned to each god his place in the heavens, so now he assigned to each god his place in E-Sagila. The tablet ends with a long hymn of praise which the Anunnaki sang to Marduk, and describes the summoning of an assembly of the gods to proclaim ceremonially the great Fifty Names of this god. Thus the gods accepted the absolute supremacy of Marduk.

From the above it is clear that a dispute broke out between Marduk and the gods after he had created them, and the tradition of it has made its way into the religious literatures of the Hebrews, Syrians, Arabs, Copts and Abyssinians. The cuneiform texts tell us nothing about the cause of the dispute, but tradition generally ascribes it to the creation of man by the supreme God; and it is probable that all the apocryphal stories which describe the expulsion from heaven of the angels who contended against God under the leadership of Satan, or Satnael, or Iblis, are derived from a Babylonian original which has not yet been found. The "Fifty Names," or laudatory epithets mentioned above, find parallels in "Seventy-five Praises of Ra," sung by the Egyptians under the 19th dynasty, and in the "Ninety-nine Beautiful Names of Allah," which are held in such great esteem by the Muhammadans (Koran, chapter 7, verse 179). The respect in which the Fifty Names were held by the Babylonians is well shown by the work of the Epilogue on the Seventh Tablet, where it is said, "Let them be held in remembrance, let the first-comer (i.e., any and every man) proclaim them; let the wise and the understanding consider them together. Let the father repeat them and teach them to his son. Let them be in the ears of the herdsman and the shepherd."

The object of the writer of the Fifty Names was to show that Marduk was the " Lord of the gods," that the power, qualities and attributes of every god were enshrined in him, and that they all were merely forms of him. This fact is proved by the tablet (No. 47,406; King, Cuneiform Texts, Part 25, Plate 50.), which contains a long list of gods who are equated with Marduk in his various forms (Thus he is equated with En-Urta, Nergal, En-lil, Nabu, Sin, Shamash, Adad, etc.). The tendency in the later Babylonian religion to make Marduk the god above all gods has led many to think that monotheistic conceptions were already in existence among the Babylonians as early as the period of the First Dynasty, about 2000 B.C. It is indisputable that Marduk obtained his pre-eminence in the Babylonian Pantheon at this early period. But some authorities deny the existence of monotheistic conceptions among the Babylonians at that time, and attribute Marduk's kingship of the gods to the influence of the political situation of the time, when Babylon first became the capital of the country, and mistress of the greater part of the known world. Material for deciding this question is wanting, but it may be safely said that whatever monotheistic conceptions existed at that time, their acceptance was confined entirely to the priests and scribes. They certainly find no expression in the popular religious texts.

Both the source of the original form of the Legend of the Fight between Ea and Apsu, and Marduk and Tiamat, and the period of its composition are unknown, but there is no doubt that in one form or another it persisted in Mesopotamia for thousands of years. The apocryphal book of "Bel and the Dragon" shows that a form of the Legend was in existence among the Babylonian Jews long after the Captivity, and the narrative relating to it associates it with religious observances.

But there is no foundation whatsoever for the assertion which has so often been made that the Two Accounts of the Creation which are given in the early chapters in Genesis are derived from the Seven Tablets of Creation described in the preceding pages. It is true that there are many points of resemblance between the narratives in cuneiform and Hebrew, and these often illustrate each other, but the fundamental conceptions of the Babylonian and Hebrew accounts are essentially different.

In the former the earliest beings that existed were foul demons and devils, and the God of Creation only appears at a later period, but in the latter the conception of God is that of a Being Who existed in and from the beginning, Almighty and Alone, and the devils of chaos and evil are His servants.

Among the primitive Semitic peoples there were probably many versions of the story of the Creation; and the narrative told by the Seven Tablets is, no doubt, one of them in a comparatively modern form. It is quite clear that the Account of the Creation given in the Seven Tablets is derived from very ancient sources, and a considerable amount of literary evidence is now available for reconstructing the history of the Legend. Thus in the Sumerian Account the narrative of the exploits of the hero called Ziusudu begins with a description of the Creation and then goes on to describe a Flood, and there is little doubt that certain passages in this text are the originals of the Babylonian version as given in the Seven Tablets. In the Story of ZIUSUDU, however, there is no mention of any Dragon. And there is reason to think that the Legend of the Dragon had originally nothing whatever to do with the Creation, for the texts of fragments of two distinct Accounts2 of the Creation describe a fight between a Dragon and some deity other than Marduk. In other Accounts the Dragon bears a strong resemblance to the Leviathan of Psalm 114:26; Job 41:1. In the one text he is said to be 50 Biru (the distance which a man would travel in two hours.) in length, and 1 biru in thickness; his mouth was 6 cubits (about 9 ft; 3 m) wide, and the circumference of his ears 12 cubits (18 ft; 6 m). He was slain by a god whose name is unknown, and the blood continued to. flow from his body for three years, three months, one day and one night.

In the second text the Dragon is 60 biru long and his thick ness is 30 biru; the diameter of each eye is half a biru, and his paws are 20 biru long. Thus there is every reason for believing that the Legend as it is given in the Seven Tablets is the work of some editor, who added the Legend of the Creation to the Legend of the Dragon in much the same way as the editor of the Gilgamish Legends included an account of the Deluge in his narrative of the exploits of his hero. All forms of the Legend of the Creation and of the Dragon were popular in Babylonia, and one of them achieved so much notoriety that the priest employed recited it as an incantation to charm away the toothache.

The literary form of the text of the Seven Tablets fulfils the requirements of Semitic poetry in general. The lines usually fall into couplets, the second line being the antiphon of the first, e.g.:

"When in the height heaven was not named,
And the earth beneath did not yet bear a name."

Each line, or verse, falls into two halves, and a well-marked csesura divides each line, or verse, into two equally accented parts. And the half-lines can be further resolved into two halves, each containing a single accented word or phrase. This is proved by tablet Spartali ii, 265A, where the scribe writes his lines and spaces the words in such a way as to show the subdivision of the lines. Thus we have:

enuma — elish \\ Id ndbii — shamamu
shaplish — ammatum \\ shuma — Id zakrat

Here there is clearly a rhythm which resembles that found in the poems of the Syrians and Arabs, but there are many instances of its inconsistent use in several parts of the text. Both rhyme and alliteration appear to be used occasionally.

NOTES.

1. There are in the British Museum several fragments of Neo-Babylonian copies of the Seven Tablets ot Creation, the exact position of which is at present uncertain. One of these (S. 2013) is of some importance because it speaks of one object which was in the "upper Tiamat" and of another which was in the "lower Tiamat". This shows that the Babylonians thought that one half of the body of Tiamat, which was split up by Marduk, was made into the celestial ocean, and the other half into the terrestrial ocean, in other words, into "the waters that were above" and "the waters that were beneath" the firmament respectively.

2. When George Smith published his "Chaldean Account of Genesis" in 1876, he was of opinion that the Creation Tablets in the British Museum contained descriptions of the Temptation of Eve by the serpent and of the building and overthrow of the Tower of Babel. The description of Paradise in Genesis 2 seems to show traces of Babylonian influence, and the cylinder seal, Brit. Mus. No. 89,326, was thought to be proof that a Babylonian legend of the Temptation existed. In fact, George Smith printed a copy of the seal in his book (p. 91). But it is now known that the tablet which was believed to refer to man's eating of the fruit of the Tree of Knowledge (K.3,473 + 79:7-8, 296 + R.615) describes the banquet of the gods to which they invited Marduk. In like manner the text on K.3657, which Smith thought referred to the Tower of Babel, is now known to contain no mention of a tower or building of any sort. It was also thought by him that K.3364 contained a set of instructions which God gave to Adam and Eve after their creation, but it is now known and admitted by all Assyriologists that the text on this tablet contains moral precepts and has nothing to do with the Creation Series. Enquiries are from time to time made at the Museum for tablets which deal with the Temptation of Eve, and the destruction of the Tower of Babel, and the Divine commands to Adam and Eve; it is perhaps not superfluous to say that nothing of the kind exists.

THE SEVEN TABLETS OF CREATION. TRANSLATION.

FIRST TABLET*

(This translation is made from transcripts of the British Museum fragments, Cuneiform Texts, Part 13, and transcripts of the Berlin fragments, Ebeling, Keilschriftexte aus Assur, Nos. 117, 118.)*

1. When the heavens above were yet unnamed (The name of an object was the object itself, and it was believed that nothing could exist apart from its name.),
2. And the name of the earth beneath had not been recorded,
3. Apsu, the oldest of beings, their progenitor,
4. "Mummu" Tiamat, who bare each and all of them
5. Their waters were merged into a single mass.
6. A field had not been measured, a marsh had not been searched out,
7. When of the gods none was shining,
8. A name had not been recorded, a fate had not been fixed,
9. The gods came into being in the midst of them.
10. The god Lakhmu and the goddess Lakhamu were made to shine, they were named.
11. [Together] they increased in stature, they grew tall.
12. Anshar and Kishar came into being, and others besides them.
13. Long were the days, the years increased.
14. The god Anu, their son, the equal of his fathers, [was created].
15. The god Anshar made his eldest son Anu in his own image.
16. And the god Anu begat Nudimmud (Ea) the image of himself.
17. The god Nudimmud was the first among his fathers,
18. Endowed with understanding, he who thinketh deeply, the orator
19. Exceedingly mighty in strength above his father Anshar who begat him.
20. Unrivalled amongst the gods his brothers . . .
21. The confraternity of the gods was established.
22. Tiamat was troubled and she . . . their guardian.
23. Her belly was stirred up to its uttermost depths.
24. . . . . .
25. Apsu (the watery abyss) could not diminish their brawl
26. And Tiamat gathered herself together . . . . .
27. She struck a blow, and their works . . . . . .
28. Their way was not good, ...
29. At that time Apsu, the progenitor of the great gods,
30. Shouted out and summoned Mummu, the steward of his house, saying
31. "[O] Mummu, my steward, who makest my liver to rejoice,"
32. "Come, to Tiamat we will go."
33. They went, they lay down [on a couch] facing Tiamat.
34. They took counsel together about the gods [their children].
35. Apsu took up his word and said,
36. To Tiamat, the holy (?) one, he made mention of a matter, [saying],
37. ". . . . their way . . . . . .
38. "By day I find no peace, by night I have no rest.
39. "Verily I will make an end of their way, I will sweep them away,
40. "There shall be a sound of lamentation; lo, then we shall rest."
41. Tiamat on hearing this
42. Was stirred up to wrath and shrieked to her husband (* Tiamat's wrath was roused by Apsu, who had proposed to slay the gods, her children. She took no part in the first struggle of Apsu and Mummu against the gods, and only engaged in active hostilities to avenge Apsu.),
43. . . . . unto sickness. She raged all alone,
44. She uttered a curse, and unto [Apsu, spake, saying,],
45. "Whatsoever we have made we will destroy.
46. "Verily their way shall be filled with disaster; Lo, then we shall rest."
47. Mummu answered and gave counsel unto Apsu,
48. The counsel of Mummu was . . . and dire [in respect of the gods]:
49. "Come, [do thou destroy] their way which is strong.
50. "Then verily by day thou shalt find peace, [and] by night thou shalt have rest."
51. Apsu heard him, his face grew bright,
52. For that they were planning evil against the gods, his children.
53. Mummu embraced his neck . . . . . .
54. He took him on his knee, he kissed him ....
55. They (i.e. M ummu and Apsu) planned the cursing in the assembly,
56. They repeated the curses to the gods their eldest sons.
57. The gods made answer . . . . . .
58. They began a lamentation . . . . . .
59. [Endowed] with understanding, the prudent god, the exalted one,
60. Ea, who pondereth everything that is, searched out their [plan].
61. He brought it to nought (?), he made the form of everything to stand still.
62. He recited a cunning incantation, very powerful and holy.

(In the British Museum tablets lines 63-108 are either wanting entirely, or are too broken to translate, and the last 130 lines of the Berlin fragment are much mutilated. The fragments of text show that Ea waged war against Apsu and Mummu. Ea recited an incantation which caused Apsu to fall asleep. He then " loosed the joints " of Mummu, who in some way suffered, but he was strong enough to attack Ea when he turned to deal with Apsu. Ea overcame both his adversaries and divided Apsu into chambers and laid fetters upon him. In one of the chambers of Apsu a god was begotten and born. According to the Ninevite theologians Ea begat by his wife, who is not named, his son Marduk, and according to the theologians of the City of Ashur, Lakhmu begat by his wife Lakhamu a son who is no other than Anshar, or Ashur. A nurse was appointed to rear him, and he grew up a handsome child, to the great delight of his father. He had four ears and four eyes, a statement which suggests that he was two-headed, and resembled the Latin god Janus.)

109. They formed a band, and went forth to battle to help Tiamat.
110. They were exceedingly wroth, they made plots by day I and by night without ceasing.
111. They offered battle, fuming and raging.
112. They set the battle in array, they uttered cries of hostility (Literally, "they excited themselves to hostility."),
113. Ummu-Khubur (A title of Tiamat.), who fashioned all things,
114. Set up the unrivalled weapon, she spawned huge serpents,
115. Sharp of tooth, pitiless in attack (?)
116. She filled their bodies with venom instead of blood,
117. Grim, monstrous serpents, arrayed in terror,
118. She decked them with brightness, she fashioned them in exalted forms,
119. So that fright and horror might overcome him that looked upon them,
120. So that their bodies might rear up, and no man resist their attack,
121. She set up the Viper, and the Snake, and the god Lakhamu,
122. The Whirlwind, the ravening Dog, the Scorpion-man,
123. The mighty Storm-wind, the Fish-man, the horned Beast (Capricorn?)
124. They carried the Weapon* which spared not, nor flinched from the battle. (These nine monsters with the (Thunderbolt?) Weapon and Kingu form the Eleven Allies of Tiamat, and it is clear that she and her Allies represent the Twelve Signs of the Zodiac. When Marduk destroyed Tiamat and her associates, he found it necessary to fix the stars, the images of the great gods, in their places, as the Twelve Signs of the Zodiac. (See the Fifth Tablet of Creation.)
125. Most mighty were Tiamat's decrees, they could not be resisted,
126. Thus she caused eleven [monsters] of this kind to come into being,
127. Among the gods, her first-born son who had collected her company,
128. That is to say, Kingu, she set on high, she made him the great one amongst them,
129. Leader of the hosts in battle, disposer of the troops,
130. Bearer of the firmly grasped weapon, attacker in the fight,
131. He who in the battle is the master of the weapon,
132. She appointed, she made him to sit down in [goodly apparel]
133. [Saying], "I have uttered the incantation for thee. I have magnified thee in the assembly of the gods.

134. "I have filled his [sic, read 'thy'] hand with the sovereignty of the whole company of the gods.
135. "Mayest thou be magnified, thou who art my only spouse,
136. "May the Anunnaki make great thy renown over all of them."
137. She gave him the TABLET OF DESTINIES, she fastened it on his breast, [saying],
138. "As for thee, thy command shall not fall empty, whatsoever goeth forth from thy mouth shall be established."
139. When Kingu was raised on high and had taken the heavens (literally, the god Anutum)
140. He fixed the destinies for the gods his sons,
141. Open your mouths, let the Fire-god* be quenched,
142. He who is glorious in battle and is most mighty, shall do great deeds.
(* The god here alluded to is Marduk, who, in one aspect, is a fire-god; see Tablet IV, 11. 39, 40.)

SECOND TABLET.
1. Tiamat made solid that which she had moulded.

138. The one half he raised up and shaded the heavens therewith,
139. He pulled the bolt, he posted a guard,
140. He ordered them not to let her water escape.
141. He crossed heaven, he contemplated the regions thereof.
142. He betook himself to the abode of Nudimmud (Ea) that is opposite to the Deep (Apsu),
143. The Lord Marduk measured the dimensions of the Deep,
144. He founded E-Sharra, a place like unto it,
145. The abode E-Sharra, which he made to be heaven.
146. He made the- gods Anu, Bel and Ea to inhabit their [own] cities.

FIFTH TABLET.

1. He appointed the Stations for the great gods,
2. He set in heaven the Stars of the Zodiac which are their likenesses.
3. He fixed the year, he appointed the limits thereof.
4. He set up for the twelve months three stars apiece.
5. According to the day of the year he ... figures.
6. He founded the Station of Nibir (Jupiter) to settle their boundaries,
7. That none might exceed or fall short.
8. He set the Station of Bel and Ea thereby.
9. He opened great gates under shelter on both sides.
10. He made a strong corridor on the left and on the right,
11. He fixed the zenith in the heavenly vault (?)
12. He gave the god Nannar (i.e., the Moon-god) his brightness and committed the night to his care.
13. He set him for the government of the night, to deter mine the day
14. Monthly, without fail, he set him in a crown (i.e., disk) [saying]:
15. "At the beginning of the month when thou risest over the land,
16. "Make [thy] horns to project to limit six days of the month]
17. "On the seventh day make thyself like a crown.
18. "On the fourteenth day . . . . . .

(Lines 19-26 dealt further with Marduk's instructions to the Moon-god, but are too fragmentary to translate. After line 26 comes a break in the text of 40 lines; lines 66-74 are too fragmentary to translate, but they seem to have described further acts of Creation.)

75. The gods, his (Marduk's) fathers, looked on the net which he had made,
76. They observed how craftily the bow had been constructed,
77. They extolled the work which he had done.
78. [Then] the god Anu lifted up [the bow] in the company of the gods,
79. He kissed the bow [saying]: " That . . . ."
80. He proclaimed [the names] of the bow to be as follows:
81. "Verily, the first is'Long Wood,'the second is . . .
82. "Its third name is ' Bow Star in heaven '. . . ."
83. He fixed a station for it . . . . . .

[Of the remaining 57 lines of this tablet only fragments of 17 lines are preserved, and these yield no connected sense.]

SIXTH TABLET.

1. On hearing the words of the gods, the heart of Marduk moved him to carry out the works of a craftsman.
2. He opened his mouth, he spake to Ea that which he had planned in his heart, he gave counsel [saying]:
3. "I will solidify blood, I will form bone.
4. "I will set up man, ' Man ' [shall be] his name.
5. "I will create the man ' Man.'
6. "The service of the gods shall be established, and I will set them (i.e., t he gods) free.
7. "I will make twofold the ways of the gods, and I will beautify [them].
8. " They are [now] grouped together in one place, but they shall be partitioned in two."
9. Ea answered and spake a word unto him
10. For the consolation of the gods (i.e., "to cause the gods to be content.") he repeated unto him a word of counsel [saying]:
11. "Let one brother [god of their number] be given, let him suffer destruction that men may be fashioned.
12. "Let the great gods be assembled, let this [chosen] one be given in order that they (i.e., the other gods) may be established."
13. Marduk assembled the great gods, [he came near] graciously, he issued a decree,
14. He opened his mouth, he addressed the gods; the King spake a word unto the Anunnaki [saying];
15. "Verily, that which I spake unto you aforetime was true.
16. "[This time also] I speak truth. [Some there were who] opposed me (Literally " they (indefinite) opposed me.").
17. "Who was it that created the strife,
18. "Who caused Tiamat to revolt, to join battle with me?
19. "Let him who created the strife be given [as sacrifice],
20. "I will cause the axe in the act of sinking to do away his sin."
21. The great gods, the Igigi, answered him,
22. Unto the King of the gods of heaven and of earth, the Prince of the gods, their lord [they said]:
23. "[It was] Kingu who created the strife,
24. "Who made Tiamat to revolt, to join battle [with thee]."
25. They bound him in fetters [they brought] him before Ea, they inflicted punishment on him, they let his blood,
26. From his blood he (i.e., Ea) fashioned mankind for the service of the gods, and he set the gods free.
27. After Ea had fashioned man he . . . . laid service upon him.
28. [For] that work, which pleased him not, man was chosen: Marduk . . . .
29. Marduk, the King of the gods, divided . . . . he set the Anunnaki up on high.
30. He laid down for Anu a decree that protected [his] heart . . . . as a guard.
31. He made twofold the ways on the earth [and in the heavens?]
32. By decrees . . . . . .
33. The Anunnaki who . . . . . .
34. The Anunnaki . . . . . .
35. They spake unto Marduk, their lord, [saying]:
36. "O thou Moon-god* (Nannaru), who hast established our splendour, (* See Cuneiform Texts, Part 24, Plate 50, where it is said that the god Sin is "Marduk, who maketh bright the night.")
37. "What benefit have we conferred upon thee?
38. "Come, let us make a shrine, whose name shall be renowned;
39. "Come [at] night, our time of festival, let us take our ease therein,
40. "Come, the staff shall rule . . . . . .
41. "On the clay that we reach [thereto] we will take our ease therein."
42. On hearing this Marduk . . . . . .
43. The features of his face [shone like] the day exceedingly.
44. [He said], (Lines 44 and 45 announce Marduk's determination to build Babylon.) "Like unto . . . . Babylon, the construction whereof ye desire
45. "I will make . . . . a city, I will fashion a ' splendid shrine."
46. The Anunnaki worked the mould [for making bricks], their bricks were . . . .
47. In the second year [the shrine was as high as] a hill, and the summit of E-Sagila reached the [celestial] Ocean.
48. They made the ziggurat* [to reach] the celestial Ocean; unto Marduk, Enlil, Ea [shrines] they appointed, (* This is the word commonly used for "temple-tower." The famous ziggurat of E-Sagila here mentioned was built in Seven Stages or Steps, each probably having its own distinctive colour. It was destroyed probably soon after the capture of Babylon by Cyrus (539 B.C.) and when Alexander the Great reached Babylon he found it in ruins.)
49. It (i.e., the ziggurat) stood before them majestically: at the bottom and [at the top] they observed its two horns. (This is the first known mention of the "horns" of a ziggurat, and the exact meaning of the word is doubtful [cattle horn were the symbol of the deity and they were displayed on the temple roof on top of the step-pyramid as well as around the base of the pyramid.].)
50. After the Anunnaki had finished the construction of E-Sagila, and had completed the making of their shrines,
51. They gathered together from the .... of the Ocean (Apsu). In BAR-MAH, the abode which they had made,
52. He (i.e., Marduk) made the gods his fathers to take their seats . . . . [saying]: "This Babylon shall be your abode.
53. "No mighty one [shall destroy] his house, the great gods shall dwell therein.

(After line 53 the middle portions of several lines of text are obliterated, but from what remains of it it is clear that the gods partook of a meal of consecration of the shrine of E-Sagila, and then proceeded to issue decrees. Next Marduk assigns seats to the Seven Gods of Fate and to Enlil and Anu, and then he lays up in E-Sagila the famous bow which he bore during his fight against Tiamat. When the text again becomes connected we find the gods singing a hymn of praise to Marduk.)

94. "Whatever is .... those gods and goddesses shall bear (?)
95. "They shall never forget, they shall cleave to the god (?)
96. ". . . . they shall make bright, they shall make shrines.
97. "Verily, the decision (concerning) the Black-headed [belongeth to] the gods
98. ". . . . all our names have they called, he (Marduk) is most holy (elli)
99. ". . . . they proclaimed and venerated (?) his names.
100. "His .... is exceedingly bright, his work is ....
101. "Marduk, whose father Anu proclaimed [his name] from his birth,
102. "Who hath set the day at his door .... his going,
103. "By whose help the storm wind was bound ....
104. "Delivered the gods his fathers in the time of trouble.
105. "Verily, the gods have proclaimed his sonship.
106. "In his bright light let them walk for ever.
107. "[On] men whom he hath formed, the created things fashioned by his fingers
108. "He hath imposed the service of the gods, and them he hath set free
109. ". . . . . .
110. ".... they looked at him,
111. "[He is] the far-seeing (mayuku) god, verily . . . .
112. "Who hath made glad the hearts of the Anunnaki, who hath made them to . . . .
113. "The god Marudukku verily, he is the object of trust of his country . . .
114. "Let men praise him . . . . . .
115. "The 'King of the Protecting Heart,' (?), hath arisen and hath [bound]
the SERPENT . . . . . .
116. "Broad is his heart, mighty [his] belly.
117. "King of the gods of heaven and of earth, whose name our company hath proclaimed,
118. "We will fulfil (?) the utterance of his mouth. Over his fathers the gods,
119. "Yea, [over] the gods of heaven and earth, all of them,
120. "His kingship [we will exalt].
121. "[We] will look unto the King of all the heaven and the earth at night when the place of all the gods is darkness (literally sadness).
122. "He hath assigned our dwelling in heaven and in earth in the time of trouble,
123. "He hath allotted stations to the Igigi and the Anunnaki.
124. "The gods themselves are magnified by his name; may he direct their sanctuaries.
125. "ASAR-LU-DUG is his name by which his father Anu hath named him.
126. "Verily, he is the light of the gods, the mighty . . .

128. "By a mighty combat he saved our dwelling in the time of trouble.
129. "ASAR-LU-DUG, the god who made him (i.e. man) to live, did the god .... call him in the second place
130. "[And] the gods who had been formed, whom he fashioned as though [they were] his offspring.
131. "He is the Lord who hath made all the gods to live by his holy mouth."
(Lines 132-139 are too fragmentary to translate, but it is clear from the text that remains that Lakhmu, and Lakhamu, and Anshar all proclaimed the names of Marduk. When the text again becomes connected Marduk has just been addressing the gods.)
140. In Up-shukkinaku* he appointed their council for them. (* From this text it seems clear that Up-shukkinaku was the name of a chamber in the temple of E-Sagila. This name probably means the "chamber of the shakkanaku," i.e., the chamber in which the governor of the city (shakkanaku) went annually to embrace the hands of the god Bel-Marduk, from whom he thereby received the right of sovereignty over the country.)
141. [They said]: "Of [our] son, the Hero, our Avenger,
142. " We will exalt the name by our speech."
143. They sat down and in their assembly they proclaimed his rank.
144. Every one of them pronounced his name in the sanctuary.

SEVENTH TABLET.
1. O ASARI, giver of plantations, appointer of sowing time,
2. Who dost make grain and fibrous plants, who makest garden herbs to spring up.
3. O ASARU-ALIM who art weighty in the council chamber, who art fertile in counsel,
4. To whom the gods pay worship (?) reverent . . . .
5. O ASARU-ALIM-NUNA the adored light of the Father who begat him,
6. Who makest straight the direction of Anu, Bel, [and Ea]. (This line seems to imply that Marduk was regarded as the instructor of the "old" gods; the allusion is, probably, to the "ways" of Anu, Bel and Ea, which are treated as technical terms in astrology.)
7. He is their patron who fixed [their] ....
8. Whose drink is abundance, who goeth forth ....
9. O TUTU creator of their new life,
10. Supplier of their wants, that they may be satisfied [or, glad],
11. Let but [Tutu] recite an incantation, the gods shall be at rest;
12. Let but [the gods] attack him (i.e., Tutu) in wrath, he shall resist them successfully;
13. Let him be raised up on a high throne in the assembly of the gods ....
14. None among the gods is like unto him.
15. O god TUTU, who art the god ZI-UKKINA, life of the host of the gods,
16. Who stablished the shining heavens for the gods,
17. He founded their paths, he fixed [their courses].
18. Never shall his deeds be forgotten among men.
19. O god TUTU, who art ZI-AZAG, was the third name they gave him holder (i.e., possessor) of holiness,
20. God of the favourable wind, lord of adoration and grace,
21. Creator of fulness and abundance, stablisher of plenty,
22. Who turneth that which is little into that which is much.
23. In sore straits we have felt his favouring breeze.
24. Let them (the gods) declare, let them magnify, let them sing his praises.
25. O TUTU, who art the god AGA-AZAG in the fourth place let men exult.
26. Lord of the holy incantation, who maketh the dead to live,
27. He felt compassion for the gods who were in captivity.
28. He riveted on the gods his enemies the yoke which had been resting on them.
29. In mercy towards them he created mankind,
30. The Merciful One in whose power it is to give life.
31. His words shall endure for ever, they shall never be forgotten,
32. In the mouth of the Black-headed* whom his hands have made. (* Here the title "Black-headed" refers to all mankind, but it is sometimes used by the scribes to distinguish the population of the Euphrates Valley from foreign peoples of light complexions.)
33. O God TUTU, who art the god MU-AZAG in the fifth place let their mouth recite a holy incantation [to him],
34. Who by his own holy incantation hath destroyed all the evil ones.
35. O god SHAZU, the wise heart of the gods, who searchest the inward parts of the belly,
36. Who dost not permit the worker of evil to go forth by his side,
37. Establisher of the company of the gods . . . their hearts.
38. Reducer of the disobedient ....
(Lines 39-106 are wanting. The positions of the fragmentary lines supplied by duplicate fragments are uncertain; f'n any case they give no connected sense.)
107. Verily, he holdeth the beginning and the end of them, verily .....
108. Saying, "He who entered into the middle of Tiamat resteth not;
109. "His name shall be ' Nibiru,' the seizer of the middle,
no. "He shall set the courses of the stars of the heavens,
in. "He shall herd together the whole company of the gods like sheep.
112. "He shall [ever] take Tiamat captive, he shall slit up her treasure (variant, life), he shall disembowel her." (These lines suggest that the fight between Marduk and Tiamat was recurrent; it is incorrect to translate the verbal forms as preterites.)
113. Among the men who are to come after a lapse of time,
114. Let [these words] be heard without ceasing, may they reign to all eternity,
115. Because he made the [heavenly] places and moulded the stable [earth].
116. Father Bel proclaimed his name, " Lord of the Lands."
117. All the Igigi repeated the title.
118. Ea heard and his liver rejoiced,
119. Saying, " He whose title hath rejoiced his fathers
120. "Shall be even as I am ; his name shall be Ea.
121. "He shall dispose of all the magical benefits of my rites,
122. "He shall make to have effect my instructions."
123. By the title of " Fifty times " the great gods
124. Proclaimed his names fifty times, they magnified his going.

EPILOGUE.
125. Let the first comer take them and repeat them;
126. Let the wise man and the learned man meditate upon all of them;
127. The father shall repeat them to his son that he may lay hold upon them.
128. Let them (i.e., the names) open the ears ("To open the ears" = to give understanding.) of the shepherd and the herdsman.
129. Let [man] rejoice in Marduk, the Lord of the Gods,
130. That his land may be fertile and he himself abide in security.
131. His word is true, his command altereth not.
132. No god hath ever brought to the ground that which issueth from his mouth.
133. They (i.e., the gods) treated him with contempt, he turned not his back [in flight],
134. No god could resist his wrath at its height.
135. His heart is large, his bowels of mercy are great.
136. Of sin and wickedness before him ....
137. The first comer utters his complaint of humiliation before him.

(There is no-one who can explain the legal foundation of Judaism better then the German orientalist Eduard Meyer. This is the reason why we place a large excerpt of his work The Elephantine Papyrus Find into this Bible. The following stort biography about the author shows how he gained his ability to explain the facts in such a wonderfully interconnected way.

Eduard Meyer (1855 - 1930) was a German specialist on ancient history. Meyer's initial study goal was to learn as many languages of the ancient Near East as possible so that they could be used for historical studies. Similar to E. A. Wallis Budge, he was one of the few historians to write comprehensive scientific accounts of antiquity, that did not only include Greco-Roman antiquity but a much wider range. Besides English, French and Italian, he studied a dozen antique languages, among them: Latin, Greek, Turkish, Arabic, Old English, Old High German, Egyptian, Akkadian, Hebrew, Aramaic, Syriac, Persian, and Sanskrit.

In addition to Indo-European and Semitic linguistics, Meyer also turned to ancient religious history. He studied history, philosophy and ethnography as well. Meyer saw it as a healing compulsion, which ultimately led him to deal with ancient history in its entirety and within the other ancient cultures. The plan for an overall history of antiquity emerged. The first volume appeared in 1884 and established the author's outstanding reputation in professional circles. By examining the historical development in the entire Middle East, he placed it in a comprehensive political, economic, religious and cultural historical framework.

Among others, Meyer's main work is The Origin of Judaism (1896) and his monomental work The History of Antiquity (in 5 large volumes, 1884–1902). He was a significant contributor to the Encyclopaedia Biblica (1903), the Encyclopaedia Britannica (1911); and sections of The Historians' History of the World.)

Excerpt from Eduard Meyer's Foreword

The finds of Jewish papyri from Elephantine have occupied my most lively interest ever since they first became known in the summer of 1907. In the following years, I gave lectures on this subject several times, both in Germany and in America, where, thanks to the kindness of my esteemed colleague Mr. [Eduard] Sachau and the courtesy of the officials of the Royal [Prussian] Museums, I already could provide some important information from the as yet unpublished texts. So I was delighted to follow my publisher's request to arrange a comprehensible overview of these unique finds and their significance to wider circles in this publication.

The Emergence of Judaism and the Elephantine Papyri

Judaism is a creation of the Persian Empire [introduced by Ezra as a law code in 445 BC] that influences us still today. It was possible to impose this law onto the rebellious Jews in Jerusalem and the surrounding region of Judaea, who all were completely preoccupied with different interests, only because the wealthy and influential Jews of Babylonia managed to gain the authority of the Persian king [emperor] to carry out the religious demands that one of their members, the priest Ezra, "the scribe of the law book of the God of Heaven," formulated [in the Torah, Pentateuch] as a revelation given to Moses. We call this code of law the "Priestly Code", and it includes the second part of the book of Exodus, the whole of Leviticus and the first part of the book of Numbers. Ezra received from the Persian king Artaxerxes I [Artakhshasa I, 465-424 BC] and his councilors a firman in 458 BC, which gave him the authority "to make an investigation into Judah and Jerusalem according to the law of your God, which is in your hand," and this law in "the whole people in the province of Syria", appointing judges, in order to "make judgements on everyone who does not obey the law of your God and the law of the [Persian] king." At first, Ezra proved unable to carry out his legal mission because his attempt to annul marriages between Jews and women from other peoples (Gentiles) led to conflicts with the neighbours, especially the Samaritans. Then, as the Jews set about rebuilding the walls of Jerusalem in order to be resistant to impending attacks, the Jewish cupbearer Nehemiah used an opportune moment in 445 BC to request a permission the rebuild the walls of Jerusalem from the good-natured [Persian] king and that he may appoint him as governor to Judaea with far-reaching authority. After his arrival in Jerusalem he immediately went to work. Unconcerned about the opposition of the Samaritans (headed by Sinuballit of Betchoron), he rebuilt the walls of Jerusalem and forced the unwilling Jews, who were rarely among the "peoples of the land", including, above all, the very worldly-minded priesthood, to take part. Then, after the danger of being taken by surprise by the opponents had been eliminated, he had the law read out by Ezra, and on the 24th of Tishri (30th of October) 445 BC, the entire people committed themselves to obeying the law in a solemn act; the document recorded above was signed and sealed by Nehemiah and Zedekiah (probably the chairman of the council of Jerusalem) and by the heads of all the families of priests, Levites and laymen with the names of their families. As his governorship continues, Nehemiah has quelled all the twitches of opposition, which resisted the harsh demands of the law that went against the natural conditions of life everywhere; and gradually the law was accepted by the Jews as the irrefutable requirement of their God and finally became second nature to them.

We owe the knowledge of these events to the books of Ezra and Nehemiah preserved in the Old Testament, [supplemented by the Apocryphal (not included in the Jewish and most Protestant canons of the Old Testament) book of I Esdras (Latin Vulgate form of the name Ezra), which preserves the Greek text of Ezra and a part of Nehemiah. The knowledge was confirmed by the Elephantine papyri found on 1904.]. These were originally the conclusion of a religious historical work written in around 200 BC. of which the first part is the so-called Books of Chronicles [Divrei Hayamim, Paralipomenon]. The author takes every opportunity to let his religious imagination run wild and has no idea at all about the real events and their inner connexion. But he used excellent source material, especially the memoirs of the characters themselves, Ezra and Nehemiah, some of which were recorded in their original form, some of which were shortened and converted from the first to the third person. In addition, from the negotiations with the Persian government, both in the above-mentioned events and previously in the construction of the temple under Darius I [Darayavahush I], several documents, submissions from Persian officials and decrees of the king are word-for-word communicated. These documents and the information in the memoirs of Ezra and Nehemiah, which we can extract from the chronicler's work, form the material from which historical research can determine the events and gain a picture of the processes through which Judaism came into being.

But modern theological criticism, as it developed in the course of the 19th century, has declared these documents to be forgeries, and has even occasionally disputed the authenticity of the remains of the memoirs of Ezra and Nehemiah, rejected the chronological dates contained in them, and tried to replace tradition with numerous combinations. In contrast, in 1896, I demonstrated in a historical study "The Origin of Judaism" that the objections raised against the authenticity of the documents were methodologically untenable and that they actually correspond to everything we know about the Persian Empire, its institutions and its history, and that a completely reliable picture of development can be obtained from them. The unbiased historical investigation had given me the conviction that the documents of the Persian period should look exactly like the documents handed down in the book of Ezra, and in defence of the harsh attacks after hearing my evidence from the school that calls itself the critical one, I said: "If we were once presented with larger numbers of Persian government decrees, these impulses would probably disappear completely."

This prediction has now come true in an unexpected way and to a extent that I even in my wildest imagination could never have dreamed of. An Egyptian city, the border fortress Elephantine, has provided us with a large number of documents from a Jewish community in the Persian period, including, in addition to numerous private documents, letters, etc., several decrees from the Persian government and submissions from the Jewish community to them; and these documents, which have been resurrected from the rubble, agree in their wording with the documents preserved in the book of Ezra down to the last detail that there can no longer be any doubt about their authenticity. More than that: some of the same personalities appear here who appear in the biblical accounts, so that we now have completely authentic information about them and their time, completely independent of the Old Testament, which contains the data given in the latter and what comes from the image obtained is confirmed and supplemented in all details; and at the same time we receive rich information here about both the ancient Jewish folk religion as well as the religious reform carried out under the Persian Empire, which the results of historical research prove to be correct everywhere and further illuminate and supplement them.

In terms of general interest, the material discovered in Elephantine surpasses anything that the abundant finds in the most diverse areas of ancient Near Eastern research have brought us in recent years. We will see in the further course of this discussion that at the same time they have brought new, unexpected insights of the greatest importance in a completely different direction.

The Discovery of the Papyri

For about twelve years, during fertiliser excavations in the rubble mounds that cover the ancient city of Elephantine, located on a Nile island on the southern border of Egypt, scraps of papyrus and shards of jars with Aramaic writing have come to light several times and been brought into antiquity trade. In 1904 a larger find of intact papyrus documents was acquired by Mr. Robert Mond, others by Lady William Cecil from traders in the city of Aswan (Syene), opposite Elephantine, and published in Oxford in 1906 by Mr. Sayce and Cowley (Aramaic Papyri discovered at Aswan, edited by A. H. Sayce with the assistance of A. E. Cowley, London 1906). Some fragments of another historically very important document had already been acquired for Strasbourg in 1898 and published by Euting in 1903 (J. Euting, Notice sur un papyrus egypto-aramden de la Bibliotheque imperiale de Strasbourg, presentes a l'Academie des Inscriptions XI, 2e. partie.). All of these documents came from the period of Persian rule and were largely dated after the years of the reign of the Persian kings of the fifth century; The people featured in them, from whose business and private life they came, were mostly Jews who lived in Elephantine and Syene (Aswan) and had a temple to their national god here. This gave these papyri a very special interest; The desire arose to increase the newly discovered material through systematic excavations and to save it from being destroyed or wasted by the fertiliser diggers who were constantly active here.

The first campaign, in February 1906, led by Dr. O. Rubensohn, brought a series of well-preserved Greek private documents from the early Ptolemaic period, including the oldest dated Greek manuscript that has been found to date, a marriage contract from 311 BC (Elephantine Papyri, edited by O. Rubensohn (Egyptian Documents from the Royal Museums in Berlin, special issue), Berlin 1907). However, in the second campaign (December 1906 to February 1907), Rubensohn came across house ruins in two places that contained numerous Aramaic papyri of the same period and type as those previously available, some intact and others in fragments. In addition, from all over the rubble site, there were masses of shards (ostraca) with Aramaic and Phoenician inscriptions. A third campaign, October 1907 to January 1908, led by Dr. Zucker and the architect W. Honroth, have provided some grateful information about the ruins of the houses and the temple of the god Khnubis, but have not yielded any further yield of papyri.

The City of Elephantine and its Remains

We now want to learn more about the site and its history in more detail.

A few kilometres below the first cataract, opposite the city of Aswan, the old Syene, on the east bank of the Nile, there is an island about three kilometers long covered with palm trees. At the time of the Pharaonic Empire, the "elephant city" of Yeb [or Yebu] was located on its southern tip, translated by the Greeks as Elephantine, an Egyptian settlement in the midst of the predominantly Nubian population of these border areas in ancient times and today. A great Egyptian god had his seat in it, Khnumu [Latin: Chnum] or, in later pronunciation, Khnub, [Greek: Khnubis], a god of procreation and fertility, who took the form of a ram with long, wavy, curved horns - in contrast to the crooked horn of Amon's ram — revealed to the believers from whom he repelled the Nubian enemies and for whom he protected the borders. So he is the "Lord of the Cataract Land", from whose vortices, "the source holes of the Nile", according to Egyptian belief, he allows the Nile to flow; Two goddesses who live here on the small rocky islands, Satis and Anukis, assist him in the cult. In later times he, like most of the great gods of Egypt, was identified by theology with the world-ruling sun god Re, and was also interpreted as the creator of the world and the shaper of people. [Archaeologists found the inconspicuous ruins of a small temple, just besides the Khnum-Temple, a little away from it and near the bank of the island, see photo p.1248. The temple is 7.30m long, 5.80m wide and circa 4.5m high. Today it is called Kalabsha Temple. Archaeologists restored it, before the entrance was once a porch with pillars; its platform is still there as well as the stone material that were used as pillars and roof. Opposite of the Kakabsha Temple's entrance are the ruins of another small temple that has not been restored; either or both of them could have been the temple of the Jewish Elephantine soldiers.]

As a border fortress - the "Southern Gate" of Egypt in the texts - Elephantine acquired great importance early on. The royal officials who resided here and who gradually grew into hereditary princes at the time of the pyramid builders [Old Kingdom, c.2650 – c.2465 BC] undertook military campaigns and trade trips far into the upper reaches in the service of the pharaohs Nile Valley, which they report in the inscriptions of their stately rock tombs on the western bank of the Nile. When in the Middle Kingdom [c.1938 – c.1630 BC] the Nubian Nile Valley—the 'Land of Kush of the Egyptians,' the 'Ethiopia* of the Greeks', up over the second cataract and in the New Kingdom [c.1539 – 1075 BC] even further up to the fourth cataract and the border fortress Napata on the holy mountain [Jebel] Barkal [also in Sudan] —was incorporated into the Pharaonic Empire and colonised by the Egyptians, Elephantine's military importance declined. But it always remained the first city in Egypt proper, where unhindered navigation on the Nile began and the goods of the upper Nile Valley were exported. In addition, the valuable granite from the quarries of Syene [Aswan] and many other valuable stones were obtained from here, and the acacia wood, which was important for shipbuilding, came from the desert land behind it. Then followed the long period of decline, the dissolution of the empire into numerous small states under the rule of the Libyan mercenaries, the "warrior caste" of the Greek accounts, and finally the temporary subjugation of Egypt by the Kushites of Napata and Meroe [the 25th Dynasty of Egypt], and then the invasion of the Assyrians, who drove the Cushites out of the country and made the local dynasts into vassals. [* There is a certain discontinuity when it comes to using names. Before the the beginning of the 20th century: Ethiopia was the today's Sudan, Abyssinia was the today's Ethiopia, Nubia also was the today's Sudan, and Sudan was the today's Sahel Zone in West Africa.]

But when Psammetichus I of Sais [Psamtik I, 664-610 BC], with the help of the Greek and Carian mercenaries sent to him by the Lydian king Gyges, shook off the Assyrian yoke, subdued the petty kings and re-established the pharaonic empire, Elephantine regained its old importance as a border fortress and retained it , when Psammetichus II (595-589 BC) undertook his subjugation campaign against Ethiopia [Nubia], which became famous through the inscriptions of the Greek, Carian and Phoenician soldiers on the colossi of the rock temple of Abu Simbel, and the Nubian foothills, the "Twelve Mile Land" (Dodekaschoinos) up to the "City of the Sacred Mulberry Tree" (Hierasykaminos).

The Egyptians were never a warlike people. In the wars of the pharaohs, the country's army usually played only a fairly modest role. The core troops that decided the battles were predominantly paid troops, partly from the Negroes and the Bedja tribes of Nubia, partly from Libyans and the Semites of Syria; In the New Kingdom, the most useful element was the teams from the pre-Greek tribes of the Mediterranean world armed with swords and bucklers [round shields], especially the Shirdana. When the Pharaonic Empire collapsed, as already mentioned, Shoshenq I (the Sisaq of the Old Testament), the founder of the 22nd dynasty, around 940 BC, the Libyan mercenaries became masters of the country, like the Mamluks two thousand years later; They receive the main part of the property, insofar as it did not belong to the gods, and form a hereditary warrior class, which appears in the Greek reports as a "warrior caste". The restored Pharaonic Empire of the 26th dynasty relied against them again on the foreign mercenaries who had already The Ionians [Greeks] and Carians mentioned and the soldiers brought in from Syria also tried to win over the priesthood internally through a cleverly and carefully implemented religious restoration policy and at the same time make the local army, the "warrior caste", dependent on them. They could not eliminate the kings, but they held them down and pushed them aside whenever possible. When Herodotus tells us that under Psammetichus I, 240,000 Egyptian warriors revolted because they were not relieved after three years of occupation and emigrated to Ethiopia, deep into the south, the distortions and exaggerations in this report are obvious. But just as little can be doubted that it contains a genuinely historical core. The rivalry against the foreign mercenaries would have been a main reason. Of course, even these were by no means necessarily reliable, and if their pay remained in arrears or their self-confidence was hurt, there may have been plenty of unrest among them too. From an inscription under Apries (588-569 BC) we learn that the mercenaries of the Elephantine garrison revolted and also intended to move to Ethiopia, but were brought back into submission by the "Governor of the Southern Gate" Ashor and the ringleaders were punished In the revolution that overthrew Apries and elevated Amasis to the throne (569 BC), the rivalry between the Egyptian warriors and the foreign mercenaries played a major role as the leader of the National Party in the fight against the mercenaries came to power; but he could no more do without it than his predecessors; rather, as soon as he had secured his position, he confirmed and increased their privileges.

In the Ashor inscription, the tribes to which the rebellious mercenaries belonged are referred to in the sought-after manner of the conventional Egyptian style with archaic names that have long since disappeared from real life, which we can represent for example as "Palestinians, Greeks, Syrians and others"— the "others" are primarily the Carians. One of the inscriptions of the Greek mercenaries in Abu Simbel names the three corps into which Psammetichus II's army fell during the Ethiopian campaign: Egyptians under Amasis, Greeks under Psammetichus [Psamtik], the son of Theokies, and "foreign speakers" under an officer with an Egyptian name , Potasimto; the latter apparently include the Carians and Phoenicians, who scratched their names in the same place. The documents have now shown us how strong the Jewish element was among the Asian mercenaries.

These conditions did not change much under Persian rule (525-405 BC). Elephantine and in the east of the delta Daphne, in the west Marea (near what later became Alexandria) remained the border fortresses of Egypt, which were manned by strong garrisons. The garrison of Elephantine consisted mainly of soldiers, apart from the numerous Persians in the army. However, we no longer find Greeks and Carians among them, but we still find the strong Jewish contingent and numerous other Semites, especially with Babylonian names. In addition to the Nubian border, this force also has to keep the whole of Upper Egypt in order, and therefore draws its supplies in kind from there, especially grain and meat. Their commander, who has the Persian title pratarak (the "supreme"), has his seat in Elephantine. But next to it, on the mainland on the eastern bank, the "marketplace" Syene, today's Aswan, has now become increasingly important. Here is the seat of the Persian civil administration and the judicial authorities of the southernmost administrative district of Egypt, which bears the name Tashandres "the South Canal" and, as in the Pharaonic era, extends as far as Hermonthis, south of Thebes. This explains why The Upper Egyptian army is referred to several times in the documents as "the Syenensian army", although the headquarters of the command was still Elephantine. Syene was also fortified, and under Darius II (Darayavahush II) we find a military commander Nephajan here, while at the same time his father Hydarnes (Widarnag) was the Pratarak and commander of Elephantine and apparently his superior.

All the documents we are considering come from the Persian period; the dates contained in them range from the 27th year of the first Darius (Darayavahush I; 494 BC) through the reigns of Xerxes (Khshayarsa I; 485-465), Artaxerxes I (Artakhshasa I; 465-424 BC) and Darius II. (Darayavahush II; 424-405 BC) to a business document from the fifth year of Amyrtaios (400 BC), the first of the local pharaohs after shaking off the Persian yoke. In terms of content, they are divided into official documents — decrees of the Persian government and documents from the Jewish community, private business documents, invoices and lists of names, letters and private notes, and literary texts. Quite a few have been preserved completely intact, including some private documents about debt contracts and the like. were found in their original state, rolled up and wrapped with a raffia cord, which was sealed with a seal in clay — in this form, which ensured against subsequent alteration or forgery, they were presented to the court in the event of a dispute. [Such rolled-up Aramaic documents were also found in Bactria, the Indo-Persian border region, where there were also Jewish garrisons, see p.1218.]. Ordinary scarabs with randomly chosen hieroglyphic characters and symbols were used for sealing. Other papyri, however, were torn to shreds or fell apart into small pieces when found. But it was precisely these heaps of tiny fragments that were of the greatest value. The skill of Mr. Hugo Ibscher, to whom so many Egyptian and Greek papyri owe their reappearance and preservation, and indeed their resurgence from what appeared to be hopeless dusty debris, has succeeded in getting even out of this desolate mass through careful observation of the colouring and grain of the papyrus. the shape of the broken edges, the shape of the lettering, through an intuitive eye for what belongs together, step by step, putting together large and ever larger pieces. It was of the greatest interest to observe how in the Berlin Museum under his hand the small fragments from day to day connected and complemented each other, grew into complete pages and long columns, how letter joined letter to letter and scrap to scrap, how Often a single character that could be recreated from atoms gave the most far-reaching insights, how words, sentences, entire stories arose from seemingly hopeless fragments, until finally entire texts, such as the great Jewish list of names, the Aramaic version of the Behistün inscription, the The story of the wise Achiqar was, so to speak, recreated by him from nothing and is now, if not completely, at least widely available for scientific processing in a clean and understandable way. The language of all these documents is Aramaic. This northernmost dialect of the Semitic languages, which is similar to Hebrew and Phoenician as Spanish is to Italian, was already widespread in the Assyrian period, especially in merchant circles and, it seems, in diplomatic traffic. Then the Persians, who urgently needed a universally understandable and easily written lingua franca for their empire, [replaced Akkadian and] made Aramaic the imperial language for the entire western half of their empire [and parts in the Bactrian and Indian east], not only for the area of the Semitic peoples, but also for Egypt and Asia Minor - of all the native languages only Greek was recognised and used by them as legitimate. Otherwise, all decrees of the central government, if they were written in Persian, were provided with an official Aramaic translation, the written communication between the local authorities and with their subjects took place in Aramaic, and all judicial documents and therefore as a rule also private documents Sales and loans, marriage contracts, gifts, etc. were written in Aramaic. In addition, the Egyptians used their native language and script, Demotic, for such documents, including for entries such as: B. from priests to the Persian government; and the subordinate officials who came from the local population could only write and speak Aramaic imperfectly or not at all and therefore occasionally made notes in demotic script in our papyri. But among the Persians, as later among the Ptolemies, demotic was always only tolerated and never officially recognised as having equal status with the imperial language.

These things were known for a long time - the Persian documents in the Book of Ezra are also written in Aramaic, and the very corruptly handed down note on one of these documents, which is in the Book of Ezra 4:7, probably originally read: "and the dispatch was written in Persian and translated into Aramaic translated", is therefore sent in duplicate. Despite all this, what was surprising was that, as we now see, the Jews in Elephantine — and the same will apply to the Jews in the other cities of Egypt — in the fifth century were already exclusively in private communication spoke and wrote in Aramaic, that they read Aramaic literary works, and that there is no longer any trace of Hebrew among them - apart from their proper names and individual Hebraisms.

The Hebrew language, which they must have spoken when they immigrated to Egypt, was already extinct among them at that time. How quickly this process took place, which is understandable given the close relationship between the two dialects, is explained by the fact that Nehemiah (13:23) complains that in his time the existence of Hebrew in the Holy Land was already threatened, that Jewish Children from mixed marriages can no longer speak the Jewish language. He campaigned energetically against this, but without lasting success: in the Greek period, as is well known, Hebrew was also a dead language in the Holy Land, only used in church services — where a translation had to be added to the holy texts so that the believers could understand them — and is used in religious literature. Furthermore, as is well known, the Jews in Egypt (and also in the rest of the Diaspora) gave up Aramaic just as quickly: in the Greek period they only spoke Greek in the synagogues, and even the scholars no longer spoke Hebrew. From this comes the Greek translation of the Bible [from the early 3rd century BC], the so-called Septuagint, emerged.

The Jews always went with the ruling people and adapted to the conditions given by them - until the opposition to the mass of the people among whom they lived and the persecution of the Jews emanating from them brought about the retrograde movement.

Papyrus rolls have been produced in large quantities and cheaply in Egypt since ancient times. But at least a roll or even just a single sheet had to be bought for money. Even if in our private lives paper is the item in which the spirit of saving is revealed particularly energetically and often in a downright bizarre way, this was the case to an even greater extent among the stingy population of Egypt, who usually lived in poor conditions. However, for business documents that were intended to serve as documents in court, such as debt deeds, purchase and donation contracts, marriage contracts, etc., a clean sheet of paper was taken and only written on the carefully smoothed front in beautiful and even large letters - in general, that is Aramaic writing on all documents from the Persian period is extraordinarily beautiful and clear, with carefully observed word separation, and shows nothing of the slurring and fleeting abbreviation of the letters that became more and more widespread in later times. The same applies, of course, to submissions to the government, to official decrees, and also to invoices and lists of names in the administration offices, although it is not uncommon for the back of such documents to be written on. On the other hand, in private communication, for letters, for petitions to the Jewish community and especially for records for household use, old paper was possibly used, writing on the back of completed invoices and documents, etc. It was also not uncommon for the writing and the remains of an old roll to be washed off then shine through between the lines of the new writing, as later with the palimpsests of the parchments. Example: when the Jewish community held a large collection for their God, its leader Jedoniah took an old scroll inscribed with demotic accounts of deliveries, washed off the writing, and recorded on it the contributions of the members of the community. Likewise, a literary text, the story of the sage Achiqar, is written on the front of a scroll previously inscribed on both sides with Aramaic notes. This copy was not produced in a bookstore, but rather copied for home use by a man with a literary interest. These are all things that are very common in the Egyptian and Greek papyri at all times.

But there was also a writing material that cost nothing at all and was therefore used a lot in everyday life: these were the ostraca, the shards of the countless clay pots that had been broken in domestic use and were found in enormous masses on the rubbish heaps in front of the towns accumulated. As everywhere in Upper Egypt, in Elephantine they were often used for letters and also for other records, such as lists of names (of workers or those obliged to do work or other services), sometimes only described on one, sometimes on both sides; As already mentioned, they are lying around in the piles of rubble everywhere. The vessels from which they come are usually large jugs, such as those used for fetching water and storing supplies, wine, oil, grain, fruit and vegetables, but e.g. B. the papyrus rolls were also used. Some of these jugs could be almost completely reassembled from the fragments.

The inscriptions on the jugs themselves must be clearly distinguished from these ostraken. These jar inscriptions are entirely Phoenician. Often there is only a Phoenician personal name on it, such as Eshmunjaton, Baal'azar, Abd-eli ben Eljaton, Abdbaal ben Challur, etc., apparently the name of the merchant in Sidon, Tire or Byblos from whom the goods were purchased. The name of the recipient is often added, e.g. "the Gerbaal ben Jatonchapi". And here you can often find names that are formed from the names of Egyptian gods (Ptah, Osiris, Apis, Isis, Bast, etc.), and several times also Aramaic names; sometimes there are two or three such names among themselves. These are the traders in Egypt who got the goods from Phoenicia. The note "to the king" can often be found, as is also the case on jar shards in the Holy Land, i.e. deliveries to the government. Thus we see that there was a lively Phoenician import into Egypt, whose products were distributed as far as Elephantine. This confirms a statement made by Herodotus in this regard. [ Phoenician differs from Aramaic not only linguistically - here "son [of]" means ben, as in Hebrew, but in Aramaic it is bar - but also in the writing, which shows a different and older form of the Semitic alphabet than The Aramaic script also contains the well-known Phoenician names of God, Melqart, Ba'al, Eshmun, etc.]

The Jewish Military Colony in Elephantine

The Jews of Elephantine are referred to in the documents as "the Jewish army." From a petition that they addressed to the governor of Judaea in the year 407 BC, we see that their ancestors have been here "since the days of the kings of Egypt." were resident and had built a temple for their god Yahu. They therefore came to Egypt as mercenaries during the 26th Dynasty, at the time when Psammetichus I [Psamtik I] and his successors attempted to regain a firm footing in Syria following the example of the ancient pharaohs during the decline of the Assyrian Empire. At that time, Psammetichus I (664 - 609 BC), as Herodotus tells us, besieged the Philistine city of Ashdod for 29 years until he took it when his son Necho II defeated King Josiah of Judah at Megiddo in 608 BC, installed Jehoiakim as king in Judah and advanced to the Euphrates, but was defeated by Nebuchadnezzar at Carchemish in 604 and driven out of Syria.

The next king, Psammetichus II (Psamtik II, 593-588 BC), also moved to Syria in 590 BC, as a Demotic document from the Persian period teaches, as did his son Apries (588-569 BC), who later attacked Sidon and Tyre and the King Zedekiah of Jerusalem supported Nebuchadnezzar, but did not dare to give him a field battle, but left Jerusalem to its fate. A Jewish novel from the Greek period, the "Letter of Aristeas", which tells the fable of the "translation of the Bible by the seventy interpreters" (meaning: it was part of the Greek Bible canon called Septuagint, "translated by 70 or LXX scholars" between 285 and 250 BC), contains the information that Psammetichus—that, as we know, is Psammetichus II—in his campaign against the Ethiopian (Kushite) king received Jewish auxiliary troops and since then they have been based in Egypt as an occupation; He adds that many Jews also came with the Persians, although their numbers did not come close to the masses of Jews transplanted to Egypt by Ptolemy I (allegedly 100,000). This information is undoubtedly correct, but not exhaustive; Rather, we know that the influx of Jews continued uninterrupted under the 26th Dynasty, that in the year 586 BC numerous Jews "dwelt in Migdol, Daphne, Memphis and Upper Egypt (Patros)," and after the destruction of Jerusalem and the slaying of Nebuchadnezzar The appointment of Bailiff Qedalja by the escaped Jewish army colonels was followed by a new supply, in which Jeremiah was also dragged to Egypt. The provision of Jewish troops to Psammetichus II was by no means the first such mission; rather, there was a trace of much older ones in the The Jewish code of law, Deuteronomy, published in 621 BC, summarises the ideas of religious reform and, as is well known, formed the basis for the development of Judaism. The regulations for kingship are given here in chapter 17: the king should not be a foreigner , but rather be a member of the people, he should not have many wives, nor accumulate masses of silver and gold, he should constantly read the book of the law and follow it exactly. In between, however, there is verse 16: "Only he should not keep many horses or lead the people back into Egypt to increase the number of his horses, since the LORD has said to you: You must never go back this way again." This previously almost incomprehensible passage now becomes completely clear: the Jewish kings carried out a lively trade in soldiers with Egypt and, as an equivalent, received horses from the Pharaoh. This is the origin of the Jewish military colony in Elephantine. Of course, the provisions of the lawbook were of little use in the long run; rather, (after Josiah, who introduced the code of laws in 621 BC, failed in his attempt at an independent policy between the great powers and fell in the battle against Necho at Megiddo), Judah initially came to be dependent on Egypt for three years, and continued to seek it in the following period here again and again leaned against the Chaldean rule and therefore, as already mentioned, repeatedly supplied the Pharaoh with troops.

Furthermore, Egypt was the refuge for all those compromised in the fight against the Chaldeans [Babylonians], and many Jews also emigrated from the confines of their homeland in order to earn their living abroad. However, these elements probably mostly moved to the cities of the Nile Delta [and to Bactria and the northwest of India]. So we see that a strong Jewish diaspora had already formed in Egypt in the seventh and sixth centuries, which then grew to an ever greater extent under Persian rule and even more so under the Ptolemy-Dynasty.

The Jews who settled in Elephantine had received permission from the government to build a temple to their national god Yahweh - in the documents he is always called Yahu (or even just Yo) in an abbreviated form. This was something unheard of from the standpoint of later Jewish orthodoxy and later never occurred to the Jews of the diaspora in Babylonia and further in the world of the East and West: for only in the place that Yahweh has chosen for his name to dwell there In Jerusalem, he can have a temple and be worshiped through sacrifices; everywhere else the Jews have to make do with prayer houses (synagogues). But when the military colony at Elephantine [and other colonies in Ethiopia, Yemen and India] came into being, this commandment did not yet exist. At that time, in the Holy Land and especially in Judah, Yahweh had his temple or sacrificial altar in every town and "on every height and under every green tree." It was not until the Deuteronomy of 621 BC that the new commandment was introduced and all these places of worship were abolished in favour of the one temple in Jerusalem. Until then, no Israelite or Jew could be offended by building a sacrificial altar or a temple to his national god; on the contrary, this was a confession of his piety and belonging to Yahweh. In a proclamation in the to Egypt related oracle of Isaiah, this older view has found a very significant expression: "On that day five cities in Egypt will speak the language of Canaan and swear by Yahweh of the [Jewish] legions. On that day there will be an altar of Yahweh in the midst of Egypt and a stone of God (Masseba) near its border, and this will be a sign and a testimony to Yahweh of the [Jewish] legions in Egypt: when they cry out to Yahweh because of their adversaries, he will send them a Saviour [a messiah; Hebrew mashiakh, "anointed one", yehoshua, yeshua, Greek soter, kristos] who will fight and deliver them."

The conditions that are announced here are precisely those that developed in the seventh and sixth centuries BC; and the saying will probably have come into being during this time.

Regarding the temple of Yahweh in Elephantine, the above-mentioned papyrus further reports that "when Cambyses went into Egypt, he found this temple built; and while all the temples of the Egyptian gods were destroyed, no one did anything to this temple" — a very interesting note, which completely agrees with the stories of Herodotus about the appearance of Cambyses in Egypt and shows that in fact the memory of this ruler of was exposed to the Persian government, similar to that of those Roman emperors whose memory was officially condemned, such as Nero and Domitian; otherwise the Jews could not speak like that in a letter to a Persian governor.

The appearance of the temple is also described to us. The walls were apparently built of unfired air brick [or undecorated ashlars], but the [six] pillars [of the porch] and the reveals of its five doors [passages of the porch] were of stone; the wooden doors [of the temple entrance behind the porch] rested on copper [or bronze] hinges; It [the temple] was roofed with cedar beams [which, arranged crosswise, formed a stable coffered ceiling]. So it must have been a pretty stately [portly] building. [In other words: It looked not huge but stable like the Kalabsha Temple of Elephantine, or the temples of Yeha or Marib.] The inventory included offering bowls made of gold and silver. On the associated altar, food offerings, incense and burnt offerings were presented, as in the cult of Jerusalem.

The Jews of Elephantine formed a cult community and as such had their own special organisation in addition to the military one. At the head was a leader, at the time of Darius II it was Jedoniah, son of Gemariah, alongside whom one or two other names are occasionally mentioned, apparently his assistants. Among his "comrades" with whom he discusses all important matters, such as the Persian officials, "the priests (of Yahu) in the fortress of Elephantine" are particularly highlighted several times. The community is divided into hundreds, which are named after their leaders [It is very striking that they mostly have Babylonian names: Shiniddin and Nabuaqab (Pap. 18, 1, 19f.); Nabu-ushaliv (Pap. 25, 8); also Bet'elteqem (Pap. 25, 6, 10).]; but they hardly really consisted of a hundred members. At a collection for the deity, which we will talk about later, a total of 130 members paid, including around 35 women, of course those who had their own assets. We do not know whether all members of the community who were able to pay took part; In any case, the poorer people who could not pay must also be added, so that the community, including the women and children, may have easily been around 600 to 800 strong, if not more.

We have already become acquainted with the living conditions of the community, the employment, and the prosperity that some gained. When Jeremiah once compares his mercenaries in an oracle against Egypt to fattened "stable calves" who cannot stand against the enemy (46:21), this obviously also applies quite well to the Jewish garrison of Elephantine.

The personal names are usually the same as those known from the Old Testament or are formed in the same way. Babylonian, Aramaic and Egyptian personal names can also be found occasionally. The fact that the Jews adopted foreign names without hesitation, even if they contained foreign names of God, is also known from the Old Testament and the later history of the Jews (The Christians were not afraid of this either; think of names like Demetrius, Isidore, Apollos.). Some of the bearers of these names may have been proselytes. We have already seen that marriage to non-Jews was by no means frowned upon, but also that in the case mentioned the Egyptian husband converted to Judaism.

The Introduction of Jewish Law

While in Elephantine the popular Jewish cult remained essentially unchanged, although people remained in constant contact with their homeland, the greatest upheavals gradually took place in Judah and Jerusalem. In the year 597 BC, Nebuchadnezzar led King Jehoiakin and the elite of the people, the officials and the landowners subject to military service, along with the blacksmiths and locksmiths, 10,000 men, into exile in Babylonia. In 586 BC Jerusalem was destroyed and the majority of the population still in the country, at least 30,000 to 40,000 men, were deported there, and several thousand others soon afterwards moved to Egypt [and other places]. Then in 538 BC, after Kurush II's [Cyrus the Great's] conquest of Babel [Babylon], came the return of a colony of 42,300 adults — including 30,000 men — with 7,337 male and female slaves, and the rebuilding of Jerusalem and the Yahweh Altar under the leadership of a son of Jehoiakin named Sin-bal-usur (mis-written as Sheshbassar in our Bible texts) who, as Persian governor, took over the government of the small province of Judah. When, after the fall of Cambyses and the overthrow of the magus [Persian: "wise man"] Smerdis by Darius [Darayavahush], the great revolt of the Iranian tribes, the Babylonians and Armenians against the new ruler seemed to hold out the prospect of the downfall of the world empire and a complete revolution in the world situation (521 to 519 BC), Messianic hopes arose; The prophets Haggai and Zechariah called for the building of the temple and held the royal crown ready for Prince Zerubbabel, a nephew of Sinbal-usur, who had succeeded him in the governorship. But Darius quickly put down the rebellions and restored the unity of the empire; once again the messianic hopes for an indefinite future had to be postponed. Darius was generous enough to ignore the desire for independence, whose meaninglessness he saw, and to allow the completion of the temple; It was consecrated on the 3rd of Adar (10th March) 515 BC. Otherwise everything remained the same, and the colony had to go through all the material hardships that, especially in a country so unfavoured by nature, are inherent in every new founding, all the more so the more exuberant the expectations with which they were had moved out. They were increased by the disputes with the neighbours, who of course looked askance at the establishment of the new settlement. The semi-nomadic tribes in the south, Kaieb, Jerahme'el, the Recabites, now pushed north into the ancient Jewish land by the Arab Edomites [Idumaeans], who had been driven out of their old homes by the equally Arab Nabataeans, had long been zealous worshipers of Yahweh and joined him without any resistance new community with which they gradually merged completely. But their neighbors to the east, the Moabites and Ammonites, were hostile to them, as were the inhabitants of the ancient Philistine cities on the coastal plain; and just as little could one get along with the neighbours to the north, the descendants of the ancient Israelites in the province of Samaria, who were now often mixed with the colonists brought into the country by the Assyrians. The old, never balanced antagonism between Israelites and Jews [Judaeans] revived under Persian rule: the Samaritans viewed themselves as the real Israel, they did not want to know anything about the tendencies now prevailing among the Jews and especially about the temple in Jerusalem and viewed their much older national shrine on [Mount] Gerizim near Shechem as the true seat of the deity. So there was constant friction and complaints to the Persian government.

The Jewish community could not help itself on its own; the tendencies on which it was founded came to a complete standstill, and especially among the better-off and especially among the priests there were quite a few who took things as they were, turned to the practical tasks of the day, and sought peace with their neighbors and became in-laws with them, the conscience of one or the other might also be struck by such a marriage alliance, which was frowned upon by the law.

The Babylonian Jews intervened. Their religious views urgently required — if they were to prosper on earth and continue to prosper in their businesses, that at present, until God himself intervenes in the future and establishes the messianic kingdom, in the holy land and the city in which God had chosen his place of residence — everything should happen exactly according to the commandments that God himself had given. Their rich material resources (in addition to the literary tradition, the numerous business documents from [the cuneiform archive of] Nippur from the Persian period provide a very clear picture of the prosperity that the Jews achieved in Babylonia.) and their connexions at court and in The civil service, where they were readily used as useful people and some Jews achieved very influential positions, gave them the opportunity to take decisive action. They achieved in 458 BC. BC from King Artaxerxes I and his councilors, the authority — apparently it cost them a lot of money — that the priest Ezra introduce the code of law he had written in Judah and Jerusalem, as his mission was initially based on the conflict in which they were about to enter the intermarriage with the neighbours ended, and the attempt to rebuild the walls of Jerusalem came to nothing, but then in 445 BC the royal cupbearer Nehemiah achieved his appointment as governor of Judah, built the walls of Jerusalem, and on October 30th in 445 BC the law code was introduced in a solemn act as the basic law of the people.

These processes are also confirmed and further supplemented by the Elephantine documents. We owe the new information primarily to a letter that the Jews of Elephantine addressed to Bagoas, the governor of Judah, in 407 BC.

As Eduard Sachau recognised, this Bagoas was already known to us before. The only information that Josephus' tradition has preserved from Jewish history in the century between Nehemiah and Alexander the Great is that the high priest Yohanan [John], the grandson of the high priest Eliashib, who was in office at the time of Nehemiah, met his brother Jesus (Yeshua, Yehoshua) in the temple itself because he feared that he would be placed on his slopes by his friend Bagoas*, "the general of Artaxerxes". (* The name, written "Bagohi" in the papyrus, is an ordinary Persian Name derived from baga "God", just like Hebrew names have the ending yahu for "God." The name was adopted as early as 538 BC by one of the Jews who headed the colony returning to Palestine [Ezra 2:2; Nehemiah 7:7, in Masoretic Text and in our Bibles incorrectly vocalised Bigwai, in the Greek Bible Baguai]; one of the Jewish families has the same name.) As a punishment for this, Bagoas imposed a tax of 50 drachmas on the Jews for each lamb slaughtered at the daily sacrifice and seven years after Jesus ' [Yeshua's] murder entered the temple, unconcerned with the ideas of the Jews, who, as is well known, see the fact that an unbeliever enters the sanctuary as a monstrous sacrilege: "he is purer than the fratricide who acts as a priest." Until now we thought that Bagoas was the powerful minister who served in the last years of Artaxerxes III. (359-338) the Persian Empire ruled, just as Josephus' information and the chronology were here incorrect. Now we see that he was a successor to Nehemiah as governor of Judah. [Eusebius of Caesarea (Constantine's right-hand man) and the chronicles based on him reported a visitation of the Jews under Artaxerxes III. and transplanting part of them to Hyrcania*. [Hyrcania (Persian: Varkana, "Wolf's Land"), ancient Iranian (Persian) region located on the southeastern shore of the Caspian Sea. Its capital was Zadracarta (Astrabad, modern Gorgān), and it formed part of the various Persian (Iranian) empires. In the list of Persian satrapies given by the Greek historian Herodotus, the Paricanians may have been the Hyrcanians. Hyrcania was also the name of a town in Lydia (at the western coast of modern Turkey), said by the Greek geographer Strabo to have derived its title from a (military) colony of Hyrcanians settled there by the Persians.] If he was in office in 407 BC, it is natural that we should have a grandson of Eliashib, the high priest of the time of Nehemiah (445 B.C.), next to him find; and the same John (Jochanan) is also mentioned as high priest in the letter from Elephantine, thus proving Josephus' statement to be chronologically correct. (The hereditary succession of the high priests Eliashib, Jehoiada, Jochanan [Yohanan, mis-written in vers 12 as Jonathan], Jaddua is also listed in the family lists c. 12. 10f. 22 given by the chronicler at the end of the book of Nehemiah.)

In the letter from 407 B.C. it is said that the Jews of Elephantine had earlier (in the year 410) "sent a letter to our Lord (i.e. the addressee of Bagoas) and to Yohanan the high priest, and his companions the priests in Jerusalem, and to Ostanes , the brother of Anant, and the nobles of the Jews". This address of the letter at that time, in which, as was the case under the Persian administration, the colleges supporting them are named alongside the highest officials, is entirely consistent with the information we have received from the books of Ezra and Nehemiah about the organisation of the Jewish community under Persian rule.

While the actual government lies in the hands of the governor, the community independently manages its own and especially the religious affairs under his control. At its head is a council, the later Sanhedrin, in which the heads (the "elders") of the land-owning lay families and the priests have a seat and a vote. Originally, the priestly families were quite distant, and in pre-exilic times they did not belong to the community of the Freemen at all, but were committee members (metoken, gerim) without property who lived from their services to the community and received a share of the offerings as a fee from private individuals. The heads of the lay families, on the other hand, are the "eminent" (the "free" or "nobles", chorim), and a secular leader, a president of the council, has the top position. This is obviously the position occupied by Ostane, the brother of Anani, in the letter we are discussing. We don't know anything else about him; The fact that he has a Persian name does not prove that he was a Persian; rather, his brother's name shows that he was a Jew. This Anani, after whom he is referred to, contrary to all other custom (otherwise the father's name is always added to personal names), must have been a very respected personality; and so the assumption made by Eduard Sachau is probably that he was a descendant of the old royal family mentioned in the family tree of the Davidians (This family tree has come down to us [Chronicles 1:3, 17, etc.] in a very unreliable form.)

With the introduction of Judaism in 445 BC, the hierarchy of the lineages was reversed: while in the list of those returning from exile the lineage of laymen have priority, in the lists given in his memoirs, Ezra puts the priests first, and the commitment to the law is signed by the (now reorganised) priestly families before those of the laity. Through the law, the leadership of the people transformed into a church community is increasingly transferred into the hands of the clergy and the high priest at their head. [In other words: the theocratical structure gains the upper hand and later turns into the totalitarian mindset that is typical for monotheism.] The same order, as we have seen, also applies to the writing of the Jews of Elephantine.

Another personality known from the Old Testament appears in the letter from the year 407: Nehemiah's main opponent, who tries to thwart the construction of the wall and is in close contact with the secular party in Jerusalem, Sin-uballit (Sanballat). We learn here that he was governor of Samaria.

This is never mentioned by Nehemiah as he assumes that the readers knew it. (Titus Flavius Josephus [Antiquities XI 7, 2, 302] places him unknowingly in the wrong time of the last Darius [called Codomannus; Darayavahush III, reigned 336-330 BC], but calls him correctly "Satrap of Samaria.). The statement "Then Sinuballit spoke before his brothers and the crew (chail) of Samaria, etc." [Nehemiah 3:34] only now makes us understand; as governor, he stands at the head of the levy of his province.) — It sheds new light on the events he recounts: it is the governor of the neighbouring area who is trying to cause him all sorts of difficulties, even though he was not allowed to intervene directly in his sphere of power. If he was still alive in 407, he must have been very old; and so the Jews of Elephantine turn to his sons Delaiah and Shelemiah, who apparently actually ran the business for their father. Now we can turn to writing itself and its motivation.

The Destruction of the Jewish Temple at Elephantine

It is understandable enough that there was a lively rivalry between the Egyptians and the foreigners living among them, and especially the Jews [as they might have remembered that the Habiru (Hebrew) from Canaan wanted to get the whole country under their control some hundred years ago]. For a long time the Egyptians had become more and more exclusive towards foreigners, whom they viewed as unclean [impure]. And when, after the fall of the New Kingdom [1539–1075 BC], the distress of the time and foreign rule generated a national reaction that saw salvation in the return to the orders and cult forms of the oldest times and everything foreign. This includes ideologies and the gods who had invaded from abroad, in so far when they were recognised as such, eliminated as creatures and associates of the evil Seth, the enemy of Osiris, and eradicated from the Egyptian religion, this rejection of foreigners and the embarrassing observation of purity regulations and local cult orders became completely dominant. After decades of chaos, the Restoration under the 26th Dynasty recognised and carried out these principles, and the news of the Greeks is full of them. But this behaviour had already been noticed by the Israelites, who had no idea at the time that they would arrive at exactly the same standpoint a few centuries later. [This is a law of human nature, the more a particualar zeitgeist swings to one extreme, the more vengeful it swings back later.] The Yahwist (one of the 4 authors of the Pentateuch; around 850 BC) notes in the story of Joseph that "the Egyptians are not allowed to eat together with the Hebrews, since this is an abomination to the Egyptians" (Gen. 43:32), and that "to the Egyptians all shepherds are an abomination" (Gen. 46:34); When, during the plagues, Pharaoh made the concession that the Israelites should offer the required sacrifice to their God, not in the desert, as they demanded, but in Egypt itself, he had Moses say: "We cannot do that; for what we sacrifice to Yahweh our God is an abomination to the Egyptians; If we should sacrifice before their eyes, as is an abomination to the Egyptians, would they not stone us?" (Exodus 8:22).

Meanwhile, the Jews in Palestine were under the laws of 621 and 445 BC. The Jews in Elephantine have also become just as exclusive, and the Jews in Elephantine have not remained untouched by this zeitgeist, although they will not have gone as far as the Orthodox in their homeland.

But they also did not lack for provocations: they also stayed away from contact with people of other faiths in their interactions and at meals, they also showed contempt for their religion, and above all they also diligently caught proselytes of which the papyri bear witness through the numerous Jews whose fathers or grandfathers bear Egyptian names, and through the conversion of Mibtachiah's Egyptian husband to Judaism. So where-ever Egyptians and Jews sat together in the same city, there would have been as little lack of daily friction and riots as there is today between the various Christian denominations in the Holy Land [of the 19th century]. And just as here the Islamic [Ottoman] government stands above them, in a proudly awareness and illusion of having a much higher religion, looking down on them with contempt and yet forced to take their pretensions into account and keep order among them, so in Egypt the Persians, the professers of the pure teachings of Zoroaster. Cambyses showed complete contempt for the Egyptian religion and persecuted it; that has abandoned the wise policy of his successors, which Darius founded, and has tried to make amends with all his might; But one can imagine how contemptible the actions of the rabble that took place at his feet must have seemed to the proud Persian, despite the generous spirit that permeates the entire imperial administration, or rather precisely as a result of this.

Papyrus 10 provides some insight into this game of intrigue in everyday life, a letter addressed to the Jewish community in which an agent of the community reports on the events affecting them at the satrap court in Memphis. Unfortunately, only the right half of all the lines has been preserved. The entry reads: "To my lords Yedoniah, Mauziah, Uriah and the army of your servant [legion of God] greet you at all times. We are doing well here. And now, every day, the . . ." No further coherent text can be produced; but we see that Arsames is talking about the Egyptians' intrigues, against which the sender is powerless: "[about that] we can [not do anything] because the Egyptians — them women (probably of Arsames) — give bribes", and later: "we are frightened because we are short of money". The Egyptians also put their hope in the governor of the Thebaid "and so they say: a Mazdajasnian (i.e. a worshiper of Mazda, the religion of Zoroaster) is he, placed over the province.

Here we get an idea of the role that the rivalry between different religions played in the life of the Persian era. There will never have been a lack of such friction; And hand in hand with them goes the ever-living striving of the Egyptians to regain their national independence, despite all of Darius I's concessions or perhaps precisely as a result of his policy, which, in contrast to Cambyses [Kambujiya], was as accommodating to the Egyptian priests as possible and thereby enormously increased their influence, which had already led to great revolts twice, in the years 487-484 BC and 459-454 BC, and after the death of Darius II in 405 BC. The permanent shaking off of the foreign yoke was achieved. A few years earlier, in 410 BC, this led to a movement in Elephantine which was directly aimed against the Jews and of which we learn from our documents.

The process was as follows. While the satrap Arsames had gone to the king's court, the priests of Khnubis of Elephantine managed to obtain the consent of the Persian general, the pratarak Hydarnes, to strike against the Jews.

He ordered his son Nephayan, who commanded in Syene, to send Egyptian troops to attack the Temple of Yahweh. They attacked the sanctuary, plundered its valuables and completely destroyed it. It is possible that other intentions besides hatred of Jews played a part in this undertaking, that the Jews were the mainstay of the Persian government and that the Persian commander was won over to take a measure that would ultimately lead to an uprising against the Persians themselves can hardly be doubted.

At least that's how the Jews portrayed it. In the Strasbourg papyrus published by J. Euting, the fragments of a petition "from the Jewish army" to the Persian government, perhaps to the satrap Arsames himself or to his deputy [Of course, the surviving document is not the original petition, but a copy taken from it and retained.] is it [called:

" . . . flags of the Egyptians have revolted; we did not leave our post and no harm could be proven against us. In the year 14 of King Darius (410 BC), when our lord Arsames had gone up to the king, this is the mefait (I represent the Persian word 'dushkarta' used in the text here by the following using French words.), which the priests of Khnubis committed in the fortress of Jeb, a conspiracy with Vidarnag (Hydarnes), who was pratarak (general) here. They gave him silver and valuables. There was a remnant of that . . . (There is an unknown word here.) . . . They destroyed the king of Yeb, who was in the fortress; and a wall was built in the breach of the stronghold of Yeb, and now this wall is built in the breach of the stronghold. There was a well built in the midst of the fortress, and it never ran out of water to water the army; when they are assiegp, they drink the water from this well; those priests of Khnubis have buried this well. When information is collected from the judges, officials and policemen (literally "the listeners," goschak, a Persian office that the Greeks render as "the king's ears.") employed in the province of Tashadres, our Lord (i.e. to the addressee) will be notified in accordance with what we have said. Also we give an exact report. . ."

Only isolated words survive from the sequel; As far as we can see, the looting and destruction of the temple was primarily reported here.

The government appears to have energetically suppressed the disturbances after Arsame's return; Hydarnes and Nephayan and their accomplices were executed. But the Jews could not regain their rights. For three years they tried in vain to obtain permission to rebuild the temple. A letter to Bagoas and the Jews in Jerusalem asking them to support their request went unheeded — understandably enough: since modern Orthodoxy had now achieved full dominance here, and a temple to Yahweh outside Jerusalem was an abomination of pagan idolatry. So in the year 407 BC they finally turned again in the surviving letter to the governor Bagoas of Judah with the request to intercede on their behalf with Arsames, and at the same time to the sons of Sin-uballit of Samaria.

This is also very significant for the situation. For the Believers of the Old Judaism in Elephantine there is no sharp contrast to the [equally old-fashioned] Samaritans that has now developed in Palestine. The Samaritans and Sinuballit themselves were by no means harshly hostile to the colonists in the south, no matter how uncomfortable they were and how much they were repelled by the fanaticism of the strictly religious party. They tried to get along with them and had a variety of connexions and family relationships with the aristocracy and especially with the secular priesthood.

Tobit was related by marriage to prominent families and the high priest Eliashib to him. — when Nehemiah returned to Judah (around 430 BC), he threw him out (Nehemiah 13:4...) — , so has a grandson of Eliashib married a daughter of Sin-uballit (Nehemiah 13:28...).

"I chased him away from me," says Nehemiah in the account of his second governorship; "Remember them, my God, of the defilements of the priesthood and of the ordinances of the priesthood and of the Levites!" He withholds his name, he only hints at his crime: it is Manasseh, the first high priest of the Samaritans at the temple on Mount Gerizim of Shechem. The Samaritans also accepted God's revelation of the new code of laws that Ezra had brought with him — they could not escape the power of the new religious ideas. Only they were never able to recognise the Jews' claim to be the only true Israel and the claim of the upstart Jerusalem, but instead clung to their much older central sanctuary. So the Jewish sect of the Samaritans came alongside Orthodox Judaism.

It is quite understandable that the Jews of Elephantine could expect more accommodation here than from the devout Jews of Jerusalem, to whom they had initially turned; and this hope did not betray her.

The letter to Bagoas from the year 407 is preserved in two copies, which differ in small details of expression. It says:

"To our lord Bagohi, governor of Judah, your servants Yedoniah and his companions, the priests in the fortress of Yeb [Elephantine]. May our Lord the God of Heaven greet you at all times and sit in grace before King Darius and the sons of the (royal) house a thousand times more than now, and grant you long life and be happy and healthy at all times. Now your servants Yedoniah and his companions say this:

In the month of Tammuz, in the year 14 of King Darius (July 410 BC), when Arsames had gone away and gone to the king, the priests of the god Chnub in the fortress of Yeb conspired with Vidarnag, who was pratarak here, namely: let the temple of God Yahu in the fortress of Yeb be removed from there.* (* The verb "make" is omitted. The parallel text has: "they gave silver and treasures to Vidarnag.") Then this Vidarnag, the Accursed One, sent a message to his son

Nephayan, who was colonel in the fortress of Syene with the words: The temple of the god Yahu in the fortress of Yeb should be destroyed. Then Nephajan brought Egyptians with other warriors; They came into the fortress of Yeb with their weapons, and they entered that temple and destroyed it to the ground, and they broke down the stone pillars that were there. They also broke down the five stone doors (the jambs, in contrast to the door leaves. The parallel text says "mighty doors") built of stone blocks that were in that temple, and they lifted up their door leaves and the brass hinges of those door leaves, and the roof of cedar, with the remainder of the equipement, and whatever else was there, they burned all with fire; and the gold and silver bowls, and all the things that were in that temple, they took away and confiscated them. Since the days of the kings of Egypt our fathers had built that temple in the fortress of Yeb; and when Cambyses [Kambujiya] went against Egypt, he found that temple built. And while all the temples of the gods of Egypt were destroyed, no one did anything to that temple. And since they have done this, we, with women and children, wear mourning clothes and fast and pray to Yahu, the Lord of heaven, who has brought us news of that Vidarnag: the dogs have torn off the bonds from his feet (Vidarnag was executed and his corpse was given to the dogs that tore it apart) and and all the treasures which he had acquired perished, and all the people who had wished evil upon that temple were slain, and we saw it with delight.

Even before this, at the time when this evil was done to us, we sent a letter to our Lord (the addressee), and to Yohanan the high priest and his companions the priests in Jerusalem, and to Ostan the brother of Anani, and the nobles of the Jews; but they did not send us a letter.

We have also been wearing mourning clothes and fasting since the month of Tammuz in the year 14 of King Darius to this day. Our wives are like widows (i.e. we abstain from marital intercourse.) We do not anoint ourselves with oil and we do not drink wine. Nor have we offered any oblation, incense, or burnt offering in that temple from that time until now, the year 17 of King Darius.

Now your servants Yedoniah and his companions and all the Jews, inhabitants of Yeb, say this: 'If it seems good to our Lord, remember to build that temple, since we are not permitted to build it. Look at the recipients of Your blessings and graces here in Egypt. Let a letter be sent to them from You concerning the temple of the God Yahu, to build it in the fortress of Yeb, just as it was built before, and they will give the offerings, the incense, and the burnt offering on the altar of the God Yahu Your name. And we want to pray for you at all times, we and the women and children and all the Jews who are here when that temple is built. And you will earn for yourself greater merit before Yahweh, the God of heaven, than a man who offers to him burnt offerings and sacrifices worth a 1,000 talents. And concerning the gold, concerning it We have sent and given knowledge.

We also communicated the whole matter in a letter on our behalf to Delaiah and Shelemiah, the sons of Sin-ubalht, governor of Samaria.

Furthermore, Arsames knows nothing of all that has happened to us.

On the 20th Marcheshwan of the year 17 of King Darius (28 November, 407 BC)."

Whether Bagoas cared much for all the beautiful promises of divine blessing that the Jews made to him may seem quite questionable. In any case, the material gain that was offered to him, the gold, which is mentioned at the end of the letter, was more effective. But here the Jews had to be careful: they could not know how much Bagoas would demand, and just as they could offer him too little, it could turn out that he would have been available cheaper than they had expected. So they are careful not to name a specific sum, but only indicate that they gave their messenger gold and instructions: such things could only be successfully negotiated orally.

In any case, the negotiations in the Holy Land achieved their goal; In a meeting with the Jewish negotiator, Bagoas and Delaja — his brother apparently left the matter to him — declared their willingness to support the Jewish proposal. We also have information about this negotiation: we have the minutes in which the Jewish negotiator recorded the statements of the two Persian officials and which he brought with him to Elephantine. It is said:

"Record of what Bagohi and Delaja told me.

Record with the following wording: You have to speak in Egypt regarding the altar house of the god of heaven, which was formerly built in the Fortress of Yeb, before Cambyses, which that accursed Vidarnag destroyed in the year 14 of King Darius, to build it on its site as it was before, and they shall offer offerings and incense on that altar, just as they used to do before."

You can see that the two Persian officials express themselves very correctly. They avoid the name "Yahweh", nor do they speak of a temple, like the Jews, but of the "house of the altar"; but because they recognise that it dates from ancient times, before the conquest of Cambyses, The fact that his privilege is therefore not infringed by the Persian government also means that it has been unlawfully destroyed and must be restored, in accordance with the principle consistently followed by the Persian government of protecting the existing conditions and not overturning a decision once made.

In exactly the same way, Darius I allowed the construction of the temple in Jerusalem because in the archives at Egbatana he found the protocol of Cyrus' decree by which he allowed the reconstruction of this temple in the year 538 BC (Ezra 6). — This only differs in one point The decision depends on the Jews' request. They say that so far three types of sacrifices have been offered to their god in the temple, mincha, incense and ola, and they expect that these can be offered again after the temple is restored. Of these three types, the incense offering needs no explanation; Ola is the burnt offering in which the slaughtered animal is burned on the altar; mincha "gift", is originally any sacrifice (in which the sacrificers, along with the sacrificial priest, themselves eat the meat of the slaughtered animal), but in the cult of Jerusalem it became exclusively the name of the vegetable "meal offering" (bread, cake, fruit), a usage of language that is then strictly enforced by the law (which, incidentally, emphasises burnt offerings wherever possible). We see that here too the cult of Elephantine completely corresponds to that of Jerusalem.

Now the minutes of the negotiation with Bagoas and Delaja only talk about mincha and incense; Lidzbarski first rightly concluded from this that they did not want to allow burnt offerings on the altar of the restored temple. This corresponds to another document, the copy of a petition to a man of one foot — the name is not mentioned — which unfortunately only survives in a garbled form, for the restoration of the sacrificial cult (Pap. 5). The text says:

"Your servants Yedoniah son of Gemariah, Ma'uzi son of Nathan, Shema'iah son of Chaggai, Hoshea son of Yatom, Hoshea son of Natun, five men in all, Syenenes, who live in the fortress of Yeb, say thus: If our Lord [intercedes for us, or something like that] and the temple of the god Yahu [will be rebuilt] in the fortress of Yeb, as it was built before, and sheep, oxen, goats, . . . are not offered there, but incense and food offerings (mincha) are. . . . , and our Lord gives information . . ., then we will go to the house of our Lord. . . Deliver 1,000 species (bushels) of barley".

This letter, which also proves that its five authors were quite wealthy, adopts the formulation given by Bagoas, not only in the positive, but also to the negative side. Apparently the Jews saw that they would not be able to obtain permission for sacrifices and burnt offerings and acquiesced. So it is very likely that this petition was only drawn up after the Bagoas' decision was received, when further support was sought from influential personalities — probably a high Persian official — in order to finally obtain the concession for the construction of the temple from Arsames.

But that the Jews of Elephantine could not obtain permission to offer sacrifices burned in fire in their temple is very strange indeed. One must probably assume that the government has thereby made a concession to the Egyptians' anti-Jewish sentiment. However, one should completely avoid the idea that is occasionally expressed as if animal sacrifice itself was offensive to the Egyptians and as if the sacredness of animals in Egyptian religion played a role in this. Of course, in Egypt the animals are cared for and protected, and killing some animals, such as the ibis, the falcon, the cat, the cow, is forbidden under penalty of death. But oxen and sheep, the chief animals of the Jewish sacrifice, have been slaughtered in Egypt at all times. Instead of all other evidence, it is sufficient to refer to Herodotus, who (II, 37-42) describes these things very clearly, in full agreement with the monuments. Cattle sacrifices are quite common in Egypt, and the burning of the carcass filled with bread, fruits and spices, which Herodotus (II, 40) describes, perhaps only entered Egypt in the late period from the Semitic cult. In addition to bread and geese, the priests in particular receive their daily ration of beef from the temple property. Herodotus only says of the inhabitants of the Theban district that they were not allowed to slaughter sheep because they were sacred to Amon, but instead sacrificed goats, just as, conversely, the inhabitants of the district of Mendes in the Delta, whose god was a goat, spared the goats and slaughtered sheep. If we assume — which is not unreasonable — that the inhabitants of Elephantine did not slaughter sheep because their god Khnubis had the shape of a ram, then this would only lead to a ban on sheep sacrifice, but not on animal sacrifice as a whole. So it is not the animal sacrifice itself, but the way in which it is carried out, and in general the entire cult of a foreign god, which is "an abomination" to the Egyptians and the reason or pretext for the unrest gave.

If the Persians refused to grant concessions for animal sacrifices, it may have been because they were also offensive to them for a completely different reason. For according to the teachings of Zoroaster, the burning of animal corpses was a defilement of the holiest and purest element, the fire. However, we find out nothing else about such an intervention in foreign cults, as one would then assume, under the Achaemenids — later, under the Sassanids, When the religion of Zoroaster organized itself completely as a church, things were different. But it is not unthinkable that such tendencies had already arisen at that time, as Cambyses clearly showed his contempt for Egyptian religion.

Perhaps such views, along with bribery, played a part in Hydarnes agreeing to the destruction of the Jewish temple at Elephantine. It can also be pointed out that the Egyptians, in their intrigues against the Jews, count on the fact that the governor of Thebais is a Mazdajasnian, and that Bagoas imposes a heavy tax on the Jews in Jerusalem for every sheep sacrificed during the daily service imposed. But we have no certainty here and cannot go beyond hypotheses.

We do not know whether the Jews' efforts were successful and whether they received permission to rebuild the Temple. But it was hardly completed. Because a few years later, in 405 B.C. BC, the new revolt of the Egyptians followed, which led to the establishment of the rule of Amyrtaeus. A partially preserved and almost incomprehensible document perhaps refers to these processes (Pap. 15. The first surviving word, Khnum, can only be the remainder of a proper name [Pa]khnum [a remainder of the P has also been preserved], not for example the name of God, since this is written Khnub), in which a list of Jewish men is given, headed by the community leader Jedoniah, son of Gemariah, "who were found at the gate and were killed", as well as women who were perhaps taken prisoner. Perhaps we are talking about a catastrophe that came to the community, which would probably have taken place in the year 405 BC, but everything is too sketchy to be able to say with certainty that the Jewish people were eradicated At least not at that time, because we have, as the youngest of the documents, a debt document from the 5th year of Amyrtaos, 400 BC, which a Jew, Menachem, son of Shallum, the "Aramaean of the fortress of Yeb, from the flag of Nabukudurri" issued to a Jewess called Selua (Pap. 35).

DRAFT PETITION FOR RECONSTRUCTION OF TEMPLE

B17; TAD A4.5 Cowley 27 (Strasbourg P. Aramaic. 2 = Sachau Plate 75); similar document: B19; TAD A4.7 Cowley 30 (Sachau Plates 1-2) called: Request For Letter Of Recommendation

DESCRIPTION:
DATE: 25 November, 407 BC
SIZE: 32 cm wide by 24.5 cm high
LINES: 30 (= 17, perpendicular to the fibres on the recto, parallel to the joins; 13 on verso parallel to the fibres); folded from bottom to top
PLACE: Elephantine
PARTIES: From Jedaniah and his colleagues the priests to Bagavahya governor of Judah
OBJECT: Reconstruction of the Temple of Elephantine

Historically, this is the most significant of all the Elephantine Aramaic texts. It is a well-balanced, carefully constructed bipartite petition (Report and Petition) addressed by Jedaniah, the priests, and all the Jews of Elephantine to Bagavahya, governor of Judah. It opens with a Fourfold Salutation (welfare, favor, longevity, happiness and strength) and concluded with a Threefold Blessing (sacrifice, prayer, merit). The Report has three parts: Demolition (lines 4-13), Precedents (lines 13-14), Aftermath (lines 15-22). The Demolition delineates the plot hatched between the Egyptian Khnum priests and the local Persian authorities, the Chief Vidranga and his son the Troop Commander Naphaina, and relates the demolition in abab sequence (smashed ... there; demolished ... Temple; burned ... there; took ... Temple). The Precedents were twofold: Egyptian Pharaohs authorized the Temple's construction and the Persian conqueror approved of its existence. The Aftermath relates the situation following the destruction: punishment of the perpetrators in response to prayer and fasting; silence of all Jerusalem authorities in the face of earlier petition; continued communal mourning; cessation of cult. The Petition set forth the Threefold Request (take thought, regard, write), which, if successful, would lead, as indicated, to a Threefold Blessing. The letter concludes with a twofold Addendum and the Date. The scribe was well-skilled in Aramaic rhetorical style and cognisant of all the appropriate rhetorical formulae. Its single-line message is that the perpetrator was "wicked" while the Jews were "men of goodness." Curiously, the first eleven lines were written by one scribe (Scribe A) while a second scribe (Scribe B) began writing in line 12 in the middle of a sentence and continued until the end of the letter. He also wrote the second draft (TAD A4.8 [B20]) and the two were stored together. A semiological analysis seeks to trace the "script" back to Neo-Assyrian complaints and petitions.

RECTO

To our lord Bagavahya (Bagoas) governor of Judah, your servants Jedaniah and his colleagues the priests who are in Elephantine the fortress.

The welfare of our lord may the God of Heaven seek after abundantly at all times, and favor may He grant you before Darius the king and the princes more than now a thousand times, and long life may He give you, and happy and strong may you be at all times.

"Now,1 3 your servant Jedaniah and his colleagues thus say: In the month of Tammuz, year 14 of Darius the king, when Arsames had departed and gone to the king, the priests of Khnuowno are in Elephantine the fortress, in agreement with Vidranga who was Chief here , (said), saying: "The Temple of YHWH the God which is in Elephantine the fortress let them remove from there."

Afterwards, that Vidranga, the wicked, a letter sent to Naphaina his son, who was Troop Commander in Syene the fortress, saying: "The Temple which is in Elephantine the fortress let them demolish."

Afterwards, Naphaina led the Egyptians with the other troops. They came to the fortress of Elephantine with their implements, broke into that Temple, demolished it to the ground, and the pillars of stone which were there — they smashed

Moreover, it happened (that the) gateways of stone, built of hewn stone, which were in that Temple, they demolished. And their standing doors, and the hinges of those doors, (of) bronze, and the roof of wood of cedar — all (of these) which, with the rest of the Fittings and other (things), which were there — all (of these) with fire they burned. But the basins of ^old and silver and the (other) things which were in that Temple — all (of these) took and made their own.

Precedents And from4 5 the days of the king(s) of Egypt our fathers had built that Temple in Elephantine the fortress and when Cambyses entered Eg — that Temple, built he found it. And the temples of the gods of Egypt, all (of them), they overthrew, but anything in that Temple one did not damage.

And when this had been done (to us), we with our wives and our children sackcloth were we ar ing and fasting and praying to YHWH the Lord of Heaven who let us gloat over that Vidranga, the cur. They removed the fetter from his feet and all goods which he had acquired were lost. And all persons who sought evil for that Temple, all (of them), were killed and we gazed upon them.

Moreover, before this, at the time that this evil . . .

VERSO

. . . was done to us, a letter we sent (to) our lord, and to Jehohanan Ijhe High Priest and his colleagues the priests who are in Jerusalem, and to Ostares brother of Anani and the nobles of the Jews. A letter they did not send us.

Moreover, from the month of Tammuz, year 14 of Darius the king and until this day, we, sackcloth are wearing and are fasting; the wives of ours as widow(s) are made; (with) oil (we) do not anoint (ourselves), and wine do not drink.

Moreover, from that (time) and until (this) day, year 17 of Darius the king, meal offering and ince[n]se and burnt-offering they did not make in that Temple.

Now, your servants Jedaniah and his colleagues and the Jews, all (of them) citizens of Elephantine, thus say:

If to our lord it is good, take thought of that Temple to (re)build (it) since they do not let us (re)build it. Regard your ob ligees and your friends were in Egypt. May a letter from you be sent to them about the Temple of YHWH the God to (re)build it in Elephantine the fortress just as it had been built formerly.

And the meal-offering and the incense and the burnt-offering they will offer on the altar of YHWH the God in your name and we shall pray for you at all times.

— we and our wives and our children and the Jews, all (of them) who are here. If thus they do until that Temple be (re)built, amerit you will have before YHWH the God of Heaven more than a person who will offer him burnt-offering and sacrifices (whose) worth is as the worth of silver, one thousand talents and about gold.

About this we have sent (and) informed (you).

Moreover, all the(se) things in a letter we sent in our name to Delaiah and Shelemiah sons of Sanballat governor of Samaria.

Moreover, about this which was done to us Arsames did not know [as he was far away in Persia].

On the 20th of Marcheshvan, year 17 of Darius the king.

(The Mount Nemrut or Nemrud Dagh (Turkish: Nemrut Dağı; Kurdish: Çiyayê Nemrûdê; Greek: Oros Nemrout), is a mountain in the southeast of Turkey, not far from the upper reaches of the Euphrates. The name Nemrud refers to the fabulous King Nimrod, found in the Bible. It belongs to the Taurus Mountains and is 86 kilometers northeast of Adıyaman in the province of the same name. At 2150 meters he is one of the highest surveys of northern Mesopotamia. The region was declared a national park in 1988.

A monumental combination of sanctuary and tomb rises at his summit. It was erected by the late Hellenistic King Antioch I. Theos (69–36 BC). The sanctuary should be the center of a new religion that united Persian and Greek mythology. Shortly after his crowning glory, Antioch himself gave himself the addition Theos (God), a self-devotion, not unusual in Antiquity (See: Apotheosis, deification of Julius Caesar by Augustus, the deification of Vespasian by Titus, the Roaman Imperial Cult, Pontifex Maximus, etc.). In two long Greek inscriptions, the king determined how exactly he should be worshiped during his lifetime and after his death. He traced his origin back to the Achaemenid Dynasty on his father's side and on his mother's side to Alexander the Great as ancestor.

The cult site was rediscovered in 1881 by the German engineer Karl Sester. Since then, Turkish, American and German archaeologists have carried out excavations here. The first researchers of the Hierothesions were Otto Puchstein and Carl Humann in 1882/83, followed by a German-American excavation team with Friedrich Karl Dörner and Theresa Goell from the American Schools of Oriental Research in the 1950s and 1960s. In 1987 the burial sanctuary was included in the UNESCO list of the World Heritage. Since then, various groups, including the International Nemrud Foundation and most recently the members of the Commagene Nemrut Conservation and Development Program from the Technical University of the Middle East on the mountain.

The tomb consists of a tumulus made of fist-size limestone pebbles. It has a diameter of 150 and a height of 45 meters above the natural summit of the mountain. The gravel hill is surrounded by three terraces: one in the west, one in the east, and a little one in the northeast. Large statues of gods can be seen standing in a row on the western and on the eastern terrace, which represent King Antiochos in the company of Greek-Persian gods. In addition, there are various rows of reliefs that represent the king's ancestral gallery and other relatives, as well as illustrations of ritual acts. Around 300,000 m³ of massive rock were moved to make room for the construction of the sanctuary. Processional routes lead to three directions on the mountain.

Over time, earthquakes, storms and numerous visitors have contributed to the fact that a large part of the reliefs destroyed and that are once headless today 8–10 m high. The heads are set up in front of the statues. A burial chamber is suspected in the hill, which, however, regardless of many attempts to penetrate into the interior of the hill, has not yet been proven. The tomb of Antiochos has not been found yet.

History of Discovery

The Nemrut Dağı was examined by German archaeologists; it was mapped by Helmuth von Moltke in the early 19th century, who was in the Ottoman Empire as a military consultant. Although he certainly paid attention to the testimonies of antiquity and used the mountain as a landmark in his land recordings, the sanctuary had escaped him on the summit. In 1881 the road construction engineer Karl Sester reported in a letter to the Royal Prussian Academy of Sciences in Berlin of Assyrian monuments on the mountain. The archaeologist Otto Puchstein was then commissioned in 1882 by Alexander Conze, the Secretary General of the German Archaeological Institute, to travel to Nemrut Dağı on behalf of the Academy. On May 4, 1882, they first arrived on the mountain, which they found covered with deep snow. Puchstein nevertheless found the Greek inscription on the back of the statues and started copying. Because of the weather that disabled their investigations, they soon left and Puchstein returned in June of the same year. On October 19, he made a report before the philosophical-historical class of the academy. The following year, Carl Humann traveled to Nemrut Dağı on behalf of the academy accompanied by Puchstein and Felix von Luschan. From 8th June to the 23rd, 1883, they created drawings and photographs of the monuments and brought numerous plasterprints to the royal museums to Berlin. On their way, they visited and researched other places of the Commag seizures, including the Hierothesia of Karakuş and Sesönk, Samosata, Perrhe as well as the Späthethiti foundations of Sakçagözü and Zincirli. The Turkish archaeologist Osman Hamdi Bey, who had learned from the company and also wanted to meet Commagene, was already on the mountain in May, accompanied by the sculptor Osgan Efendi and had carried out research work despite high snow. Her report Le Tumulus de Nemroud-Dagh: Voyages, Description, Inscriptions published the imperial-Ottoman museum founded by Osman Hamdi Bey in autumn 1883. The research results of Humann and Puchstein appeared in 1890 under the title trip in Asia Minor and Northern Syria.

The German old historian Friedrich Karl Dörner broke up in 1938 with the building researcher and architect Rudolf Naumann on a research trip through the landscape of Commencils and attended the sanctuary, but was initially unable to continue his planned work because of the outbreak of the Second World War. It was not until 1951 that he traveled there again with the intention of exploring the possibilities of excavations on the Nemrut Dağı. On the way from Kahta to the town of Horik, which was to form the base station for the work on the Nemrut Dağı, he received indications of an image stone in a village. This led to the discovery of the Committees Residence City of Arsameia on the Nymphaios with the hierothesion there and the large cult inscription. The American archaeologist Theresa Goell also dealt with the Nemrut Dağı in 1939 and first visited him in 1947. In 1951, with the support of the American Schools of Oriental Research, she was, together with the German old oriental talist Albrecht Götze, on the way there without meeting Dörner. When Goell and Dörner learned from each other, after a two -year correspondence, they decided to carry out the investigations in committees together. After Dörner received the permission of the Turkish Republic for excavations in Arsamia in 1953, Goell worked as an architect in Arseamia from 1953 to 1956, while Dörner was involved in the research on the summit as an epigraphician. The excavations continued until 1964. After that, Goell returned a few times, in 1967 measuring and photography work was carried out and the main altar was restored in 1973. For 1976, radar examinations of the tumulus and the rock under the gravel were planned by the Stanford Research Institute, with the aim of finding the king's burial chamber, but they failed due to financing problems.

Friedrich Karl Dörner once again returned to Nemrut Dağı for restoration work on the western terrace, but the work could not continue for health reasons. Under the direction of Dörner's students Sencer Şahin, Jörg Wagner and Elmar Schwertheim, the subsequent head of the research center Asia Minor founded by Dörner, the German-Turkish Nemrut-Dağı project worked from 1987 to 1991 to research and secure the monuments. In 1998 the Dutch architect Maurice Crijns founded the International Nemrud Foundation (INF) in cooperation with Herman A. G. Brijder from the University of Amsterdam. She devoted herself to work on the mountain until 2003. The Turkish Ministry of Culture and Tourism withdrew in 2004 the excavation permit of the INF and in 2005 was Niverity in Ankara created the commodal Nemrut Conservation and Development Program under the direction of the architect Şahin Güçhan. The aim of the project is not only the further archaeological examination and maintenance of the sanctuary, but also the improvement of tourist and general infrastructure in the area of the national park around the Nemrut Dağı. The plans also include the construction of a museum below the summit. According to the suggestions of Sencer Şahin, it is said to contain a tumulus simulation under a dome building, on which the monuments, protected from the dangers of the weather, are placed. The originals on the mountain itself are to be replaced by replicas.

Historical Background

The historical landscape of Commagene is located in today's Southeast Turkey in the corner between the Euphrates in the east and the anti -restaurant with the Malatya Dağları in the northwest. In the south it extends to the Euphrates crossing at Zeugma, near today's Birecik and to Doliche in modern Gaziantep. After the end of the Iron Age Luwian kingdom of Kummuḫ, the country was Assyrian, later Babylonian province, until Babylon's conquest by the Persian Empire of Achämeniden in 539 BC. After two centuries belonging to the Persian Empire followed the rule of Alexander the Great, the Armenian and finally the Seleucids. In 163 BC, the governor Ptolemaios got rid of the Seleucid Empire and justified the independent kingdom of commit to. During the reign of his successor Mithridates Kallinikos and his son Antioch I was, Commencing was between the interests of the Roman Empire in the west and the Parther. Influences from this prehistory and the current location in a tension area were decisive for the royal cult, the antiochos introduced, and thus also for the design of the hierothesion, which, presumably towards the end of his rule, in the second half of the 1st century BC.BC had the Nemrut Dağı built.

Tumulus and Terraces

Below the large tumulus are three artificially created terraces in the northeast, in the southwest and northwest, or briefly referred to as Eastern, West and north terrace. The eastern terrace is almost rectangular, its central courtyard measures about 21 × 26 meters, including all the monuments and the large altar, it is about 50 × 50 meters tall. The western terrace, which is about ten meters, has total dimensions of 50 × 30 meters and is partly artificially undertaking to the west to make room for the equipment. According to the calculations by geologist Hans-Gert Bachmann, around 300,000 tons of rubble must have been moved for the tumulus. Part of it should have been incurred when working out the terraces from the mountain as to whether the summit itself was processed for it. The monumental statues, the guards and the base of the steles are also made from local limestone, on the southeastern slope below the eastern terrace there are still traces of quarry work. Greenish sandstone was used for the reliefs of the ancestors, which was obtained at a source northeast of the mountain at a distance of about an hour and a half.

Monumental statues of the Eastern terrace

The throne of the large sculptures are partly preserved on the eastern terrace to the shoulder height, on the western terrace there are only the three lower layers of the stones in place. The heads have all fallen down and set up in front of the seats. The monumental seat statues of the gods stood with their backs to the tumulus and overlooked the respective terrace. The statues on both terraces are almost the same. The arrangement of the gods is from left to right Antioch, Committees, Zeus Oromases, Apollon-Mitras-Helios-Hermes and Herakles-Artagnes-Ares. They are flanked on both sides by an eagle, which is also sized by survival and the outside of a lion. They were composed of limestone blocks in seven layers with a height of about one meter. The top layer consisted of only one block of 2.5 to 3 m, which formed the head of the figure. The figures thus reached a height of over eight meters. The base area of the throne, is a little over 3 m in the square. The Zeus statue, is a little larger than the other ones with a height of 8.75 m (and on the western terrace 9.65 m), the basis is also the greatest with 3.82 × 3.32 m.

The clothing of the male gods consists of a tunic and is held together on the right shoulder by a plate brisk. The feet are in a kind double-laced boots. On the heads there was a Persian tiara, a conical headgear that has emerged from the Phrygian hat, the tip of which has been bent forward. Ear and neck protection hang down to the shoulder layer. In contrast to this, Antiochos is the only one to wear an "Armenian" tiara. This is flattened on the sides and runs upwards, whereby five radiation -like triangles were visible at the top, of which there are only four. In addition, the ears and neck parts are folded up. The gods carry an approximately 15 cm wide tiadem over the tiara, which is tied together. On the front of the headgear, a tape with round slices runs from below to the tip. Apollon, Zeus and Antiochos hold a bundle of two in the left hand lying on the lap. Herakles holds an upright club in the left hand that extends to the shoulders. The conical hats indicate that the whole site was influenced by the Mithras Cult which had its origin in a Zoroastrian angel deity called Mitra that had its origin in the Hindu deity Mitra.

Cult Inscriptions

On the back of the thrones there is a large cult inscription of the Antioch on both terraces. According to a heading that the king himself gives, it is referred to as Nomos inscription (Greek: nomos = law). It comprises two of the limestone blocks on the western terrace, on the eastern terrace is the execution a little more monumental and fills out the lower three of the blocks that form the gods. In terms of content, the two texts, apart from individual letters, are identical, the western version is better preserved, so that smaller failures of the Osttexte could be supplemented.

Antiochos initially introduces itself in the inscription with descent and all titles and epitheta: "The great king Antiochos the God, the righteous, epiphanes, friend of the Romans and Hellenen, son of the King Mithradate Kalliniko and the Queen Laodike, goddess, the brother-loving, daughter of the King Antioch Epiphanes, the mother-loving, victorious, drawn ontilated throne base imperishable letters of his own grace - for eternal times."

In the following he describes his life, especially emphasising his constant piety, which he considers "to be the most loyal protection and his inimitable delight". For this reason, he builds his grave and a site of the worship of the gods "around the summit of the gorges of the Tauros". Then he gives instructions for the implementation of the cult acts in the hierothesion in the Nomos. The priest he determined by him is intended to create Persian robes on the set holidays and crown his helpers with golden wreaths. Victims on herbs, incense, wine and dishes are to be performed on the altars. The assembled crowd is to be received courteously and at a enjoyable festival with food and drinks is supplied and maintained with music. He also states that the persons he intended for the celebrations may not be enslaved or otherwise sold for all times. The villages responsible for supplying the festivities, "which I consecrated as the inviolable possession of the gods", must not be attacked or damaged. It closes with the threat of the irreconcilable anger of the gods and the deholersed ancestors for anyone who contradicts this arrangement. Likewise, the ferocious grows of the gods should be safe. The classic philologist Eduard North describes the inscription as "the most important monument of Greek prose at a time from which almost nothing is preserved".)

The following translation and images are from: International Nemrud Foundation. The text appears on the back of the seated images of the following personages, on the East and West terraces.

5. King Antiochos I Theos

1. ARTAGNES / HERAKLES / ARES

The Great King Antiochos, the God, the Righteous One, the Manifest (Deity), the Friend of the Romans and the Greeks, the Son of King Mithridates Kallinikos and of Laodike the Brother-loving Goddess, the Daughter of King Antiochos Epiphanes, the Mother-loving, the Victorious, has recorded for all time, on consecrated pedestals with inviolable letters the deeds of his clemency.

I have come to believe that, for mankind, of all good things piety is both the most secure possession and also the sweetest enjoyment. This judgement became, for me, the cause of fortunate power and its blessed use; and during my whole life I have appeared to all men as one who thought holiness the most secure guardian and the unrivaled delight of my reign (or kingdom). By this means I have, contrary to all expectations, escaped great perils, have easily become master of hopeless situations, and in a blessed way have attained to the fullness of a long life.

After taking over my father's dominion, I announced, in the piety of my thought, that the kingdom subject to my throne should be the common dwelling place of all the gods, in that by means of every kind of art I decorated the representations of their form, as the ancient lore of Persians and of Greeks -- the fortunate roots of my ancestry -- had handed them down (to us), and honoured them with sacrifices and festivals, as was the primitive rule and the common custom of all mankind; in addition my own just consideration has further devised still other and especially brilliant honors.

And as I have taken forethought to lay the foundation of this sacred tomb1, which is to be indestructible by the ravages of time, in closest proximity to the heavenly throne, wherein the fortunately preserved outer form of my person, preserved to ripe old age, shall, after the soul beloved by God has been sent to the heavenly thrones of Zeus Oromasdes, rest through immeasurable time, ...

2. APOLLO / MITHRAS / HELIOS / HERMES

.... so I chose to make this holy place a common consecrated seat of all the gods; so that not only the heroic company of my ancestors, whom you behold before you, might be set up here by my pious devotion, but also that the divine representation of the manifest deities might be consecrated on the holy hill and that his place might likewise not be lacking in witness to my piety.

Therefore, as you see, I have set up these divine images of Zeus-Oromasdes and of Apollo-Mithras-Helios-Hermes and of Artagnes-Herakles-Ares, and also of my all-nourishing homeland Kommagene; and from one and the same quarry, throned likewise among the deities who hear our prayers, I have consecrated the features of my own form, and have caused the ancient honor of great deities to become the coeval of a new Tyche. Since I thereby, in an upright way, imitated the example of the divine Providence, which as a benevolent helper has so often been seen standing by my side in the struggles of my reign.

Adequate property in land and an inalienable income therefrom have I set aside for the ample provision of sacrifices; an unceasing cult and chosen priests arrayed in such vestments as are proper to the race of the Persians have I inaugurated, and I have dedicated the whole array and cult in a manner worthy of my fortune and the majesty of the gods.

I have decreed the appropriate laws to govern the sacred observances thus established for everlasting, so that all the inhabitants of my realm may offer both the ancient sacrifices, required by age-old common custom, and also new festivals in honor of the gods and in my honor. The birthday of my natural body, the sixteenth of Audnaios, and the tenth of Loos, the day of my accession to the throne, I have consecrated to the manifestation of the great deities, who were my guides in a prosperous beginning and have been the source of universal blessing for my whole kingdom.

1.3. ZEUS / OROMASDES

Because of the multitude of offering and the magnificence of the celebration I have consecrated two additional days, each of them as an annual festival. The population of my empire I have divided up for the purpose of these assemblies, festival gatherings, and sacrifices, and directed them to repair by villages and cities to the nearest sanctuaries, whichever is most conveniently located for the festival observance.

Moreover, I have appointed under the same title that, in addition to the observance just named, my birth on the sixteenth and my accession on the tenth shall be observed every month by the priests. Now that these regulations have been established, to be observed continually as the pious duty of men of understanding, not only in my honor but also in the blessed hope of their own good fortune, I have, in obedience to the inspiration of the gods, ordered to be inscribed upon sacred, inviolable stelae a holy law, which shall be binding upon all generations of mankind who in the immeasurable course of time, through their special lot in life, shall successively be destined to dwell in this land; they must observe it without violation, knowing that the stern penalty of the deified royal ancestors will pursue equally the impiety occasioned by neglect as that occasioned by folly and that disregard of the law decreed for the honor of the heroes brings with it inexorable penalties. For the pious it is all a simple matter, but godlessness is followed by backbreaking burdens. This law my voice has proclaimed, but it is the mind of the gods that has given it authority.

NOMOS - LAW

The priest who is appointed by me for these gods and heroes, whom I have dedicated at the sacred tomb of my body, on the topmost ridges of the Taurus range, and who shall at a later time hold this office, he, set free from very other duty, shall without let or hindrance and with no excuse for evasion keep watch at his memorial and devote himself to the care and the proper adornment of these sacred images.

On the birthdays which I have established forever as monthly and annual festivals of the gods and of my own person, throughout the whole year he shall, himself decently garbed in Persian raiment, as my benefaction and the ancestral custom of our race have provided, crown them all with the gold crowns which I have dedicated as the sacred honors due the deified ancestors; and out of income from the villages, which I have designated for the sacred honors of the heroic race, he shall offer on these altars rich additional offerings of incense and aromatic herbs, and also splendid sacrifices in honor of the gods and in my honor, ...

4. KOMMAGENE

... in worthy wise setting up sacred tables with appropriate foods and filling jars from the winepress with precious drink (that is, wine mixed with water).

He shall hospitably welcome the whole of the assembled people, both the native and the foreigners who stream hither, and he shall provide for the common enjoyment of the feast by the assembled multitudes, in that, as is the custom, he shall take for himself a portion, as a gift in honor of the priestly office, and then distribute the rest of my benefaction to the others for their free enjoyment, so that during the holy days everyone may receive a never failing sustenance and may thus be able to celebrate the festival without running the risk of malicious calumny. The drinking cups, which I have dedicated, are to be used by them as long as they remain in the holy place and participate in the general assembly for the feast.

The group of musicians whom I have chosen for the purpose and those who may later be consecrated, their sons and daughters, and also their descendants shall all learn the same art and be set free from the burden of every other responsibility; and they are to devote themselves to the observances which I have established to the end, and without any evasion are to continue their services as long as the assembly requests it. No one, no king or ruler, no priest or official shall ever make slaves of these hierodules, whom I have, in accordance with the divine will, consecrated to the gods and to my own honors, or their children or the descendants of their children, who shall continue their family to all later time; he shall neither enslave them to himself nor alienate them to anyone else in any way, nor injure one of them, nor deprive him of this ministry; but the priests shall take care of them, and the kings, officials, and all private persons shall stand by them, and the favor of the gods and heroes will be laid up for them as a reward for their piety.

5. KING ANTIOCHOS I THEOS

It is equally not permitted for anyone to appropriate or to alienate the villages which I have dedicated to these gods, to sell them or to devote them to some other purpose, or in any way to injure those villages; or to reduce the income from them, which I have dedicated to the gods as an inviolable possession.

Nor shall anyone go unpunished who shall devise in his mind against our honor some other scheme of violence or of disparaging or suspending the sacrifices and festal assemblies which I have established. Whoever shall presume to rescind or to injure or guilefully to misinterpret the just tenor of this regulation or the heroic honors which an immortal judgement has sanctioned, him the wrath of the daemons and of all the gods shall pursue, both himself and his descendants, irreconcilably, with every kind of punishment.noble example of piety, which it is a matter of sacred duty to offer to gods and ancestors, I have set before the eyes of my children and grandchildren, as through many other, so too through this work; and I believe that they will emulate this fair example by continually increasing the honors appropriate to their line and, like me, in their riper years adding greatly to their personal fame.

For those who do so I pray that all the ancestral gods, from Persia and Macedonia and from the native hearth of Kommagene, may continue to be gracious to them in all clemency. And whoever, in the long time to come, takes over this reign as king or dynast, may he, if he observes this law and guards my honor, enjoy, through my intercession, the favor of the deified ancestors and all the gods. But if he, in his folly of mind, undertakes measures contrary to the honor of the gods, may he, even without my curse, suffer the full wrath of the gods.

MOSAIC OF REHOB
Inscription of Tel Rehov
Location: Khirbet Farwana, Israel
Region: Beit She'an, Israel
Excavation: Yaakov Sussmann, Shaul Lieberman, Fanny Vitto, 1973
Estimated Range of Dating: 3rd or 4th century AD

(The Mosaic of Rehob (Hebrew: k'tovet rechov, also known as the Tel Rehov inscription and the Baraita of the Boundaries, is a late 3rd–6th century AD mosaic discovered in 1973. The mosaic, written in late Mishnaic Hebrew, describes the geography and agricultural rules of the local Jews of the era. It was inlaid in the floor of the foyer or narthex of an ancient synagogue near Tel Rehov, 4.5 km (2.8 mi) south of Beit She'an and about 6.5 km (4.0 mi) west of the Jordan River. The mosaic contains the longest written text yet discovered in any Hebrew mosaic in Israel, and also the oldest known Talmudic text.

Unlike other mosaics found in the region, the Rehob mosaic has very little in the form of ornate design and symmetric patterns, but is unique due to its inscription. The inscription is considered by scholars to be one of the most important epigraphical findings discovered in the Holy Land in the last century. Its text sheds invaluable light on the historical geography of Palestine during the Late Roman and Byzantine periods, as well as on Jewish and non-Jewish ethnographic divisions in Palestine for the same periods.

The mosaic describes the body of Jewish law regulating the use of farm products grown in different regions. In Jewish tradition, certain laws are only applicable within the Land of Israel proper. By delineating the boundaries of the Land of Israel at the time, the mosaic seeks to establish the legal status of the country in its various parts from the time of the Jewish people's return from the Babylonian captivity. It describes whether or not local farm products acquired by Jews from various sources are exempt from the laws of Seventh Year produce, and gives guidelines for dealing with demai produce (produce whose tithing status is uncertain).

History

The mosaic was located in an ancient synagogue within a Late Roman and Eastern Roman period Jewish village located about 1 km (0.6 mile) northwest of Tel Rehov in what is now northeast Israel. The area preserved the old name in the form of Rehov (Hebrew) or Roob (Latin).

According to excavator F. Vitto, the village synagogue underwent three phases of construction and reconstruction. It was first built as a basilical hall in the 4th century AD. The hall was destroyed by a fire and rebuilt in the following century, with the addition of a bemah, of a new mosaic floor and a plaster coating for the walls and pillars, decorated with several inscriptions. In the last phase, dating to the 6th or 7th century AD, the narthex was added, on whose floor the mosaiced inscription was laid. Others put the creation of the halakhic inscription in the late 3rd century AD at the earliest. The synagogue was probably abandoned after being destroyed in an earthquake.

The site of the ancient Jewish village was later the location of the Palestinian village of Farwana, documented at least since the Ottoman period, and depopulated during the 1948 war. Kibbutz Ein Ha-Netziv was established in 1946 on land including the ancient site.

The remains of the ancient synagogue were first discovered by members of Kibbutz Ein Ha-Netziv while preparing their lands for cultivation in the late 1960s. An archaeological excavation of the site in 1973, led by a team under IAA's Fanny Vitto, revealed the mosaic and its content, which has been on display at the Israel Museum in Jerusalem since 1978.

Description of mosaic

The mosaic pieces are made of black limestone tesserae contrasted against a white background. The mosaic measures 4.30 m by 2.75 m (14.1 ft × 9.0 ft), with an accompanying text written on 29 lines, comprising a total of 364 words, with an average length of 4 metres (13 ft) to each line. It begins with the salutation Shalom ("Peace") followed by a long halakhic text, and ends with Shalom once more. It is followed by an appendix where it lists some eighteen towns in the vicinity of Sebaste (the ancient city of Samaria) whose fruits and vegetables were exempt from tithes and the stringencies applied to Seventh Year produce. There is little uniformity in the size of the letters, and the spelling of some words is faulty. Portions of the main text contain elements that are related to late second-century rabbinic literature, particularly that found in the Tosefta (Shevi'it 4:8–11), the Jerusalem Talmud (Demai 2:1; Shevi'it 6:1) and Sifrei on Deuteronomy 11:24, although the mosaic of Reḥob expands on aspects of each. Some scholars have raised the hypothesis that the content of the mosaic was copied from a letter sent by the Sages of Israel to the heads of the synagogue. At any rate, it is the largest known text found on any Hebrew mosaic in Israel to date, as well as the oldest known Talmudic text. The more ancient text in the Reḥob mosaic has been used to correct errors in transmission of extant rabbinic texts.

From a philological perspective, the system of spelling in the mosaic follows the Beth-Shean practice of enunciation, where 'ayin (ע) is often interchanged with aleph (א), and ḥet (ח) is often interchanged with he (ה), as is alluded to in the Jerusalem Talmud (Berakhot 2:4).

Legal (halakhic) background

The text in the Reḥob mosaic is best understood in the context of Jewish law at the time, which required the tithing of agricultural produce six years out of a seven-year cycle, as well as the observance of Seventh Year law strictures on the same produce once in every seven years.

The underlying principle in Jewish law states that when the exiles returned from the Babylonian captivity in the 6th century BC, the extent of territories resettled by them in Galilee and in Judea did not equal nor exceed the territory originally conquered by the Israelite people according to the biblical book of Joshua, more commonly referred to as "those who came-up from Egypt." The eight regions described by the mosaic are: the area of Scythopolis (now Beit She'an) and the Jordan Valley, Susita (Hippos) and its neighbouring settlements on the east bank of the Sea of Galilee, Naveh (now Nawa, Syria) in the Roman province of Arabia Petraea, Tyre, Lebanon and its neighbouring cities to the south, the Land of Israel proper, the cities of Paneas and Caesarea Maritima, and finally villages in the vicinity of Sebaste.

The practical bearing of this restructuring of boundaries (although still part of the biblical Land of Israel proper)[b] meant that places then settled by non-Jewish residents in the land (whether Phoenicians, Syrians, Greeks, or otherwise) and not taken by Israel were not deemed as consecrated land.[c] Therefore, fruits and vegetables grown in such places and purchased by Jews were exempt from the laws of tithing, and of Seventh Year restrictions. However, if fruits and vegetables were purchased by gentile vendors from Israelites in their respective places and transported into these non-consecrated places in order to be sold in the marketplaces, they were still made subject to tithing as demai-produce by prospective Jewish buyers.

Beit She'an was a frontier city along the country's eastern front with Transjordan, and since it was not initially settled by Israelites upon their return from Babylon (although later Israelites had joined the local inhabitants[d]) all home-grown fruits and vegetables there were made exempt from tithing in the days of Judah HaNasi. Rabbi Judah HaNasi also made Beit Gubrin exempt from tithes and from the seventh-year observance, since that stretch of country had been settled by the Idumaeans (Esau's descendants) when the Jewish people returned from the Babylonian captivity.)

Translation of the ancient text

Shalom. These fruits are forbidden in Beit She'an during the Seventh Year, but during other years of the seven-year cycle they are tithed as demai-produce*: cucumbers, watermelons, muskmelons, parsnip (carrots), mint that is bound by itself, the Egyptian broad beans that are bound with reed grass, wild leeks between Shavuot and Hanukkah, the seed kernels,[k] black cumin, sesame, mustard, rice, cumin, dried lupines, large-sized peas that are sold by measure, garlic, scallions of the city that are sold by measure, grape hyacinths, late-ripening dates, wine, [olive] oil, on the Seventh Year the seventh-year laws apply [to them]; on the [other] years of the seven-year cycle, they are tithed as demai-produce, and [if there was] a loaf of bread, the Dough portion (Heb. hallah) is always [separated from it]. The boundaries of the Land of Israel, [that is to say], the place h[eld][65] by those returning from Babylonia, [are as follows]: The passage of Ashkelon,[66] the wall of Sharoshan Tower [of Caesarea],[aj] Dor,[ak] the wall of Akko, the source of the spring of Ǧiyāto[67] and Ǧiyāto itself,[68] Kabri[tha],[69] [B]eit Zanitha,[70] the Castle of Galilee,[71] Quba'ya of Ayata,[72] Mamṣi' of Yarkhetha,[73] Miltha of Kurayim,[74] Saḥratha of Yatī[r],[75] [the riveri]ne brook of Baṣāl,[76] Beit 'Ayit,[77] Barashatha,[78] Awali of Battah,[79] the mountain pass of 'Iyyon,[80] Massab Sefanḥa,[81] the walled city of B[ar-Sa]nnigora,[82] the Upper Rooster of Caesarion,[83] Beit Sabal,[84] Ḳanat,[85] Reḳam,[86] Trachonitis[al] [of] Zimra[87] which is in the region of Buṣrah,[88] Yanqah,[39] Ḥeshbon,[am] the brook of Zered,[89] Igor Saḥadutha,[90] Nimrin,[an] Melaḥ of Zayzah, Reḳam of Ǧayāh,[91][ao] the Gardens of Ashkelon[92] and the great road that leads into the desert.[93] These are the fruits that are prohibited in Paneas[94] on the sabbatical-year,[ap] but in the remaining years of the seven-year cycle they are tithed entirely as demai-produce: Rice, walnuts, sesame, Egyptian broad beans,[29] [and] there are those who also say early ripening Damascene plums,[95] lo! These are [all] to be treated on the Seventh Year as seventh-year produce,[aq] but in the remaining years of the seven-year cycle they are tithed as produce that has certainly been left untithed, and even [had they been brought] from the Upper Rooster[96] and beyond.[31]

These fruits are tithed as demai-produce in Caesarea: wheat and [if] bread stuffs the dough-portion is always removed, but as for wine and [olive] oil, dates, rice and cumin, lo! These are permitted during the Seventh Year in Caesarea, but on the remaining years of the seven-year cycle they are mended by separating [only] the demai tithe. Now there are some who prohibit [eating] white-petal grape hyacinths[99] that come from the King's Mountain.[at] Unto which place [is it considered] 'within the parameters' of Caesarea? Unto Ṣuwarnah and the Inn of Ṭabitha and [the Inn of] 'Amuda,[au] and Dor and Kefar Saba,[av] and if there is any place purchased by an Israelite,[aw] our masters (i.e. the rabbis) are apprehensive concerning it [i.e. in what concerns the requirement to separate tithes]. Shalom.[31][ax]

The towns that are permitted in the region of Sebaste [are as follows]: Ikbina [Aqabah in Samaria], Kefar Kasdiya [Khurbet Kashdeh in Samaria], Ir [Sir], Azeilin [unidentified], Shafīrīn [Kh. esh-Sheikh Safiryan], Ananin [Kh. Anahum in Samaria], the Upper Bal'am [Kh. Bal'ameh in Samaria, located 1.6 km (1 mi) south of Jenin], Mazharu [Qaṣr Maḥrun, Samaria], Dothan [Tell Duthan], Kefar Maya [er-Rame or Kh. er-Rāme], Shilta [Silat edh-Dhahr, 4–5 km. north of Shomron], Pentakumewatha [Fandaqumiyya, Samaria],

Libiya [unidentified], Fardeseliya [Kh. el-Farisiyye],

Yasat [Yasid, Samaria], Arbanūrin [unidentified], Kefar Yehūdit [Kh. Yahudah in Samaria], Mūnarit [Kh. el-Minuniyye,], and half of Shelaf.

In Jewish Mishnaic law, the Samaritans were obligated to separate tithes from their produce, and where they were negligent, Jews who purchased such fruits and vegetables were required to separate the tithes before they could be eaten. The towns in Samaria that were exempt from tithing have been understood to mean that they were farmsteads owned by non-Jewish landlords, which made the fruits grown in those villages permitted to be taken in the Seventh-year and in other years (see supra). Sussmann holds that they were "typically Grecian towns." In contrast, the Mishnah, compiled by Rabbi Judah HaNassi in 189 AD, mentions other cities and towns of Samaria, such as Badan and Geba‘, that require tithing of produce.

(Introduction

The Twelve Conclusions of the Lollards are preserved in their original Middle English form (other Latin summaries survive) in Roger Dymok's "Against the Twelve Heresies" of the Lollards, an elaborate refutation of each of the heresies, written in 1396-97 for Richard II. The Twelve Conclusions of the Lollards is a Middle English religious text containing statements by leaders of the English medieval movement, the Lollards, inspired by teachings of John Wycliffe. The Conclusions were written in 1395.

The text was presented to the Parliament of England and nailed to the doors of Westminster Abbey and St Paul's Cathedral as a placard (a typical medieval method for publishing). The manifesto suggests the expanded treatise Thirty-Seven Conclusions (Thirty-seven Articles against Corruptions in the Church) for those that wished more in-depth information. The text summarises twelve areas in which the Lollards argued that the institutional Christian Church in England needed to be reformed by parliament: the church being "leprous and blind under the maintenance of the proud prelates" bolstered by the flattering of monks ("private religion".)

LOLLARDY

Lollardy, also known as Lollardism or the Lollard movement, was a proto-Protestant Christian religious movement that was active in England from the mid-14th century until the 16th-century English Reformation. It was initially led by John Wycliffe, a Catholic theologian who was dismissed from the University of Oxford in 1381 for criticism of the Roman Catholic Church. The Lollards' demands were primarily for reform of Western Christianity. They formulated their beliefs in the Twelve Conclusions of the Lollards.

Etymology

Lollard, Lollardi, or Loller was the popular derogatory nickname given to those without an academic background, educated (if at all) only in English, who were reputed to follow the teachings of John Wycliffe in particular, and were energized by the translation of the Bible into the English language. By the mid-15th century, "lollard" had come to mean a heretic in general. The alternative, "Wycliffite", is generally accepted to be a more neutral term covering those of similar opinions, but having an academic background.

The term lollard most likely derives from lollaerd ("mumbler, mutterer"), from a Middle Dutch / Low German verb lallen or lollen ("to mutter, mumble"). The verb became a colloquial name for a group of buriers of the dead during the Black Death, in the 14th century, known as Alexians, Alexian Brothers or Cellites. These were known colloquially as lollebroeders (Middle Dutch for "mumbling brothers"), or Lollhorden, from Old High German: lollon ("to sing softly"), from their chants for the dead. Middle English loller (akin to the verb loll, lull, the English cognate of Dutch lollen "to mutter, mumble") is recorded as an alternative spelling of Lollard, while its generic meaning "a lazy vagabond, an idler, a fraudulent beggar" is not recorded before 1582.

The word lollard reflects the consequence of the Black Death. The Black Death was a pandemic that ravaged Europe first between 1347 and 1351, taking a proportionately greater toll of life than any other known epidemic or war up to that time-often more than 50% of the educated city population. There were recurrences of the plague in 1361–63, 1369–71, 1374–75, 1390, and 1400. It was this continuation that led to the death of Latin clerics to a point that they almost were wiped out. Fewer and fewer were able to read and understand Latin, which was for hundreds of years the only language that was allowed to be used in Church matters and liturgy; this includes the only covenant and law-book of the Church at the time: The Holy Bible. There is no difficulty to assume that church services either were not performed or that quickly-educated "assistant clerics" performed them by muttering or lolling just something that sounded like Latin but was not. John Wycliffe, a philosopher and theologian of the University of Oxford, who has seen almost all his colleagues die from the plague, understood that Christianity was doomed if fundamental change would not come. The economy under severe after-plague strain, with demands for higher wages and more freedom, was at its breaking point and hyper-expensive Latin education was not available in abundance anymore.

One way out of that misery was finally making English the language of the church and consequently of the Bible as well. John Wycliffe took the only bible at his disposal, the Latin Vulgate, and organised it to be translated into English by some trusted colleagues and himself. The Bible was not noly a sacred but also a secret book. Only trusted people could do that task because translating the Bible was forbidden; it was a crime that carried the death penalry and gruesome torture before it. The Church would lose its intellectual and worldly power it everybody could read the Bible just on their own.

Due to all these activities, the Catholic church doctrine suffered greatly. Denial of sacraments and sacramentals was one of them. The Lollards did not believe that the church practices of baptism and confession were necessary for salvation. Believing in a universal priesthood, the Lollards challenged the Church's authority to invest or to deny the divine authority to make a man a priest. Denying any special status to the priesthood, Lollards thought confession to a priest was unnecessary since according to them priests did not have the ability to forgive sins. Lollards challenged the practice of clerical celibacy and believed priests should not hold government positions as such temporal matters would likely interfere with their spiritual mission. They considered praying to saints and honouring of their images to be a form of idolatry. Oaths, fasting and prayers for the dead were thought to have no scriptural basis. They had a poor opinion of the trappings of the Catholic Church, including holy water, bells, organs, and church buildings. They rejected the value of papal pardons.

Vernacular Scripture

Lollardy became a religion of common English language. Lollards believed that people deserved access to a copy of their own Bible. They opposed many practices of the Catholic church. Lollards did not observe fasting and abstinence in the Catholic Church. In heresy proceedings against Margery Baxter it was presented as evidence that a servant girl found bacon in a pot of oatmeal on the first Saturday of Lent. Non-observance of dietary restrictions was used as evidence of heresy in another Norfolk case against Thomas Mone, where it was alleged that a piglet was eaten for Easter dinner when eating meat was forbidden. Special vows were considered to be in conflict with the divine order established by Christ and were regarded as anathema. Lollards also had a tendency toward iconoclasm. Some Lollards believed work was permissible on Sundays.

Although Lollardy was denounced as a heresy by the Catholic Church, initially Wycliffe and the Lollards were sheltered by John of Gaunt and other anti-clerical nobility, who may have wanted to use Lollard-advocated clerical reform to acquire new sources of revenue from England's monasteries. The University of Oxford also protected Wycliffe and similar academics on the grounds of academic freedom and, initially, allowed such persons to retain their positions despite their controversial views.

Lollards first faced serious persecution after the Peasants' Revolt in 1381. While Wycliffe and other Lollards opposed the revolt, one of the peasants' leaders, John Ball, preached Lollardy. Prior to 1382, Wycliffite beliefs were tolerated in government as they endorsed in royal superiority to bishops.[clarification needed] However, the government and royals were hesitant, as they did not want to encourage subjects to criticize religious powers.

After 1382, royalty and nobility found Lollardy to be a threat not only to the Church, but to English society in general. The Lollards' small measure of protection evaporated. This change in status was also affected by the departure of John of Gaunt (Duke of Lancaster, patron of Chaucer and protector of John Wycliffe) who left England in 1386 to pursue the Crown of Castile. A group of gentry active during the reign of Richard II (1377–99) were known as "Lollard Knights" either during or after their lives due to their acceptance of Wycliffe's claims.

Legal response

Religious and secular authorities strongly opposed Lollardy. In eventual response to the revolting Lollards, the law De heretico comburendo was enacted in 1401 during the reign of Henry IV; traditionally heresy had been defined as an error in theological belief, but this statute equated theological heresy with sedition against political rulers. By the early 15th century, stern measures were undertaken by Church and state which drove Lollardy underground. One such measure was the 1410 burning at the stake of John Badby, a layman and craftsman who refused to renounce his Lollardy. He was the first layman to suffer capital punishment in England for the crime of heresy.

Late Lollardy in the 1500s

Lollards were effectively absorbed into Protestantism during the English Reformation, in which Lollardy played a role. Since Lollards had been underground for more than a hundred years, the extent of Lollardy and its ideas at the time of the Reformation is uncertain and a point of debate. Ancestors of Blanche Parry (the closest person to Elizabeth I for 56 years) and of Blanche Milborne (who raised Edward VI and Elizabeth I) had Lollard associations. Many critics of the Reformation, including Thomas More, equated Protestants with Lollards. Leaders of the English Reformation, including Archbishop Thomas Cranmer, referred to Lollardy as well, and Bishop Cuthbert Tunstall of London, a polymath in the spying businness, called Lutheranism the "foster-child" of the Wycliffite heresy. Scholars debate whether Protestants actually drew influence from Lollardy or whether they referred to it to create a sense of tradition. A variety of other martyrs for the Lollard cause were executed during the next century. The similarity between Lollards and later English Protestant groups, such as the Baptists, Puritans, and Quakers, also suggests some continuation of Lollard ideas through the Reformation.

The Lollard Teaching in the Twelve Conclusions

The most complete statement of early Lollard teaching appeared in the Twelve Conclusions, drawn up to be presented to the Parliament of 1395. They began by stating that the church in England had become subservient to her "stepmother the great church of Rome." The present priesthood was not the one ordained by Christ, while the Roman ritual of ordination had no warrant in Scripture. Clerical celibacy occasioned unnatural lust, while the "feigned miracle" of transubstantiation led men into idolatry. The hallowing of wine, bread, altars, vestments, and so forth was related to necromancy. Prelates should not be temporal judges and rulers, for no man can serve two masters. The Conclusions also condemned special prayers for the dead, pilgrimages, and offerings to images, and they declared confession to a priest unnecessary for salvation. Warfare was contrary to the New Testament, and vows of chastity by nuns led to the horrors of abortion and child murder. Finally, the multitude of unnecessary arts and crafts pursued in the church encouraged "waste, curiosity, and disguising." The Twelve Conclusions covered all the main Lollard doctrines except two: that the prime duty of priests is to preach and that all men should have free access to the Scriptures in their own language. The Lollards were responsible for a translation of the Bible into English, by Nicholas of Hereford, and later revised by Wycliffe's secretary, John Purvey.

Contents

One group of Lollards petitioned Parliament with The Twelve Conclusions of the Lollards by posting them on the doors of Westminster Hall in February 1395. While by no means a central statement of belief of the Lollards, the Twelve Conclusions reveal certain basic Lollard ideas. The first Conclusion rejects the acquisition of temporal wealth by Church leaders, as accumulating wealth leads them away from religious concerns and towards greed. The fourth Conclusion deals with the Lollard view that the Sacrament of the Eucharist is a debatable doctrine that is not clearly defined in the Bible. Whether the bread remains bread or becomes the literal body of Christ is not specified uniformly in the gospels. The sixth Conclusion states that officials of the Church should not concern themselves with secular matters when they hold a position of power within the Church, since this constitutes a conflict of interest between matters of the spirit and matters of the State. The eighth Conclusion points out the ludicrousness, in the minds of Lollards, of the reverence that is directed toward images of Christ's suffering. "If the cross of Christ, the nails, spear, and crown of thorns are to be honoured, then why not honour Judas's lips, if only they could be found?" Expensive church artwork was seen as an excess; they believed effort should be placed on helping the needy and preaching rather than working on expensive decorations. Icons were also seen as dangerous since many seemed to be worshipping the icons more fervently than they worshipped God.

Versions

According to some scholars, the Twelve Conclusions were likely written in Middle English, translated to Latin for presentation to Parliament, and translated to Latin independently again for the Fasciculi zizaniorum (ascribed to Thomas Netter) which John Foxe then re-translated back to (Elizabethan, Early Modern) English for his Acts and Monuments collection.

General Prologue to the Wycliffe Bible

The so-called General Prologue of the Wycliffe Bible found on some later version (LV) manuscripts (1395) gives an allusion to the Lollard Twelve Conclusions by the use of the words "last parliament". It gives an indication that the General Prologue was written in 1395–1397 for the previous parliament that just took place in 1395 and before the next parliament that took place in 1397. The Twelve Conclusions and its expanded version of Thirty-Seven Conclusions have been attributed to the presumed author of the General Prologue of the Wycliffe Bible, John Purvey, written 1395.)

THE TWELVE CONCLUSIONS OF THE LOLLARDS

We poor men, treasurers of Christ and his Apostles, denounce to the Lords and the Commons of the Parliament certain conclusions and truth for the reformation of the Holy Church of England, the which has been blind and leprous many years by the maintenance of the proud prelacy, borne up with flattering of private religion, the which is multiplied to a great charge and onerous [to] people here in England.

The First Conclusion:
State of The Church

[The first conclusion asserts that the English Church has become too involved in affairs of temporal power ("to dote in temperalte"), led by the bad example of the Church of Rome, its stepmother. These deadly sins remove its legitimacy ("challengith the title of heritage").]

When the Church of England began to dote in temporality after her stepmother, the great Church of Rome, and churches were slain by appropriation to diverse places. Faith, Hope, and Charity began for to flee out of our Church. For Pride with his sorry genealogy of deadly sins challengeth it by title of heritage. This conclusion is general and proved by experience, custom, and manner, as you shall after hear.

The Second Conclusion:
The Priesthood

[The second conclusion asserts that the ceremonies used for the ordination of priests and bishops are without scriptural basis and not the priesthood Christ ordained the apostles into. ("For the presthood of Rome is mad (made) with signis, rytis, and bisschopis blissingis." Holy orders are "the leveree (livery) of antecryst.").]

The Second Conclusion is this: Our usual priesthood, the which began in Rome feigned of a power higher than angels, is not the priesthood the which Christ ordained to his Apostles. This conclusion is proved: for the priesthood of Rome is made with signs, rites, and bishops' blessings, and that is of little virtue. nowhere ensampled in the Holy Scripture, for the bishops ordinals in the New Testament be little of record. And we can not see that the Holy Ghost, for any such signs, gives any gifts, for he and his noble gifts may not stand with deadly sin in no matter person. The corollary of this conclusion is that it is full uncouth to many that be wise to see bishops play with the holy ghost in making of their orders, for they give crowns in characters in stead of white harts, and that is the livery of Antichrist, brought into Holy Church to color idleness.

The Third Conclusion:
Clerical Celibacy

[The third conclusion asserts that the practice of clerical celibacy has encouraged sodomy among the clergy. Churchmen need purgation or worse from their lifestyles of decadent "delicious metis and drinkis"; men who like these "like non wymmen". It is true of monks too.]

The Third Conclusion, sorrowful to hear, is: That the law of continence annexed to priesthood, that in prejudice of women was first ordained, induces sodomy in Holy Church; but we excuse us by the Bible, for the suspect decree that says we should not name it. Reason and experience prove this conclusion. For delicious meats and drinks of men of Holy Church will have needful purgation or worse. Experience for the privy assay of such men is that they like not women. The corollary of this conclusion is that the private religions. beginners of this sin, were most worthy to be annulled but God, for his might, of privy sin send open vengeance.

The Fourth Conclusion:
Transubstantiation

[The fourth conclusion asserts that the doctrine of transubstantiation induces idolatry (of the communion bread). "Frere Thomas" (Aquinas)' Feast of Corpus Christi service is "untrewe".]

The Fourth Conclusion that most harms the innocent people is this: That the sacrament of bread induces all men but a few to idolatry, for they ween that Christ's body, that never shall out of heaven, by virtue of the priest's word should be essentially enclosed in a little bread, that they show to the people. But would God that they would believe that the Doctor Evangelicus says in his Trialogue, quod panis materialis est habitudinaliter corpus Christi. For we suppose that on this wise may every true man and woman in God's law make the sacrament of the bread without any such miracle. The corollary of this conclusion is that if Christ's body be endued with everlasting joy, the service of Corpus Christi made by Friar Thomas is untrue and painted full of false miracles, and that is no wonder, for Friar Thomas that same time, holding with the Pope, would have made a miracle of a hen's egg, and we know well that every lie openly preached turns itself to villainy that ever was true and without lack.

The Fifth Conclusion
Exorcisms and Hallowings

[The fifth conclusion asserts that the exorcisms and hallowings of substances, objects and pilgrims' staves carried out by priests are a practice of necromancy (shamanism) rather than of Christian theology. Nothing can be changed to be of higher virtue than its kind.]

The fifth conclusion is this: that exorcisms and hallowings, made in the church, of wine, bread, and wax, water, salt, oil and incense, the stone of the altar, upon vestment, miter, cross, and pilgrim staffs be the very practice of necromancy rather than of the holy theology. This conclusion is proved thus: For by such exorcisms creatures be charged to be of higher virtue than their own kind, and we see no thing of change in no such creature that is so charmed but by false belief, the which is the principal of the Devil's craft. The corollary of this, that is the book that charmeth holy water spread in Holy Church were all true, us thinks verily that holy water used in holy church should be the best medicine to all manner of sickness. Cuius contrarium experimur.

The Sixth Conclusion:
Clerics in Secular Offices

[The sixth conclusion asserts that it is prideful for men who hold high spiritual office in the Church to simultaneously hold positions of great temporal power: "Us thinketh that hermofodrite or ambidexter were a god name for sich manere of men of duble astate." The parliament should fully excuse all curates (pastors) "bothe heye and lowe" from temporal office, so they can look after the cure of souls and nothing else.]

The sixth conclusion that maintaineth much pride is: that a king and a bishop all in one person, a prelate and a justice in temporal cause, a curate and an officer in worldly service, make every realm out of good rule. This conclusion is openly showed, for temporality and spirituality be two parts of Holy Church and therefore he that hath taken him to the one should not meddle him with the other, quia nemo potest duobus dominis servire. Us thinketh that hermaphrodite or ambidexter were a good name to such men of double estate. The corollary is that for we, procurators of God, for this cause pursue to this Parliament that all manner of curates, both high and low, be fully excused of temporal office and occupy them with their cure and naught else.

The Seventh Conclusion:
Prayers for the Dead

[The seventh conclusion asserts that prayers for the souls of specific individual deceased persons is uncharitable, since it implicitly excludes all the other blessed dead who are not being prayed for, and that the practice of requesting prayers for the dead by making financial contributions is a sort of bribery that corrupts the Church. The industry of prayers for the dead is simony and idleness: "all almes houses of Ingolond ben wikkidly igrounded".]

The Seventh conclusion that we mightily affirm is: that special prayers for dead men's souls made in our church, preferring one by name more than another, this is the false ground of alms deeds, on the which all alms houses in England be wickedly grounded. This conclusion is proven by two skills. One is for prayer meritorious and of value should be a work proceeding from high charity, and perfect charity accepts no persons, quia diliges proximum tuum, etc. Wherefore us thinks that the gifts of temporal goods to priests and to alms houses is the principal cause of special prayers, the which is not far from simony. Another skill for special prayer made for men damned to everlasting pain is to God greatly displeasing, and though it be doubt, it is lightly to true Christian people that the founders of the alms houses for their venomous donation be for the most part passed the broad way. The corollary is the prayer of value s[ringing out of perfect charity should embrace in general all those that God would have saved and leave their merchandise now used for special prayers made to mendicants and possessioners and other souls' priests, the which be a people of great charge to all the realm maintained in idleness, for it was proved in a book that the king heard that an hundred of alms houses sufficed to the realm and thereof should fall the greatest increase possible to temporal part.

The Eighth Conclusion:
Pilgrimages

[The eighth conclusion asserts that the practices of pilgrimage, images, crucifixes, images of the trinity, and the veneration of relics approach idolatry and are far from alms-giving. Offerings should be given instead as alms to the needy, who are "the image of God in a more likenesse" than the stick or the stone.]

The eighth conclusion needful to tell the people beguiled is the pilgrimage, prayers, and offerings made to blind roods and deaf images of tree and stone be near kin to idolatry and far from alms deeds. And though this forbidden imagery be a book of errors to the lewd people, yet the image used of Trinity is most abominable. This conclusion God openly showeth, commanding to do almsdeeds to men that be needy. for they be the image of God in a more likeness than the stock of the stone, for God sayeth not Faciamus lignum ad ymaginem et similitudinem nostram aut lapidem, but faciamus hominem etc. For the high worship that clerks call latria longeth to the godhead alone and the lower worship that is called dulia longeth to man and to angel and to lower creatures. The corollary is that the service of the Rood, done twice every year in our church, is fulfilled of idolatry, for if the Rood tree, nails, and the spear, and the crown of God should be so holy worshipped, then were Judas' lips, whoso might them get, a wonder great relic. But we pray thee, pilgrim, us to tell when thou first offerest to saints' bones enshrined in any place, whether relieves thou the saint that is in bliss or the alms house that is so well endowed. For men be canonized, God knows how, and for to speak more in plain, true Christian men suppose that the points of that noble man that men call Saint Thomas, were no cause of martyrdom.

The Ninth Conclusion:
Confession

[The ninth conclusion asserts that the practice of confession for the absolution of sins is blasphemous because only God has the power to forgive sins and because if priests did have that power it would be cruel and uncharitable of them to withhold that forgiveness from anyone, even if they refused to confess.]

The ninth conclusion that holdeth the people low is, that the articles of confession that is said necessary to the salvation of man, with a feigned power of absolution enhanceth priests' pride, and giveth them opportunity of calling other than we will not say. For lords and ladies be arrested that for fear of their confessors, that they dare not say a truth, and in time of confession is the best time of wooing and of privy continuance of deadly sin. They say that they be commissaries of God to deem of every sin, to foul and cleanse whomso they like. They say that they have the keys of heaven and of hell, they may curse and bless, bind and unbind at their own will, in so much that for a bushel of wheat or twelve pence by year they will sell the bliss of heaven by charter of clause of warranty, ensealed with the common seal. This conclusion is seen in use that it needeth none other proof. Correlarium: The Pope of Rome that feigneth him high treasurer of holy church, having the worthy jewel of Christ's passion in his keeping, with the deserts of all hallows of heaven, by which he giveth the pardon a pena et a culpa. He is a treasurer most banished out of charity, since he may deliver the prisoners that be in pain at his own will, and make himself so that he shall never come there, Here may every true Christian well see that there is much privy falseness hid in our church.

The Tenth Conclusion:
War, Battle, and Crusades

[The tenth conclusion asserts that, absent a special revelation, Christians should refrain from battle and in particular wars that are given religious justifications, such as crusades, are blasphemous because Christ taught men to love and forgive their enemies. Furthermore, lords who purchase indulgences for their army's actions are robbing the poor of those funds. Similarly wrong are knights who run to slay heathens (i.e. Crusaders) for glory.]

The tenth conclusion is that manslaughter by battle or law of righteousness for temporal cause or spiritual with out special revelation is express contrary to the New Testament, the which is a law of grace and full of mercy. This conclusion is openly proved by example of Christ's preaching here on earth. the which most taught to love and to have mercy on his enemies. and not for to slay them. The reason is of this, that for the more party, there men fight, after the first stroke charity is broken; and who so dyeth out of charity goth the high way to hell. And over this, we know well that no clerk can find by scripture or by reason lawful punishment of death for one sin and not for another. But the law of mercy, that is the New Testament, forbade all manslaughter: in euangelio dictum est antiquis. Non occides. The corollary is: it is an holy robbing of poor people when lords purchase indulgences a pena et a culpa to them that helpeth with his host. and gathereth to slay the Christian men in far lands for good temporal, as we have seen. And knights, that run to heathenness to get them a name in slaying of men, get much maugré of the King of Peace; for the meekness and sufferance our belief was multiplied, and fighters and manslayers Jesu Christ hateth and menaceth. Qui gladio percutit, gladio peribit.

The Eleventh Conclusion:
Female Vows of Continence and Abortion

[The eleventh conclusion asserts that women in the Church who have made vows of celibacy, being fickle and unperfect, become pregnant and then seeking abortions ("the most horrible synne possible to man kynde") to conceal the fact that they had broken their vows, a practice which the text strongly condemns. They should be married.]

The eleventh conclusion is shameful for to speak: that a vow of continence made in our church of women, the which be fickle and imperfect in kind, is cause of bringing in of most horrible sin possible to man kind. For though slaying of children ere they be christened, abortion, and destroying of kind by medicine be full sinful, yet knowing with themselves [i.e., having intercourse with] or [either] unreasonable beast or creature that beareth no life passeth in worthiness to be punished in pains of hell. The corollary is that widows and which as have taken the mantle and the ring, deliciously fed, we would they were wedded for we can not excuse them from privy sins.

The Twelfth Conclusion:
Arts and Crafts

[The twelfth conclusion asserts that the multitude of crafts used by the Church causes waste, curiosity (distraction by non-essentials) and "disgysing". Only crafts necessary for simple living should be tolerated. "Us thinketh that goldsmethis and amoreris and all manere craftis nout nedeful to man…schulde be distroyd."]

The twelfth conclusion is that the multitude of crafts not needful used in our church nourisheth much sin in waste, curiosity, and disguising. This showeth experience, and reason proveth, for nature with a few crafts sufficeth to need of man. The corollary is, since Saint Paul sayeth, we having our bodily food and clothing, we should hold ourselves satisfied, us thinketh that goldsmiths and armourers and all manner crafts not needful to men, after [according to] the Apostle, should be destroyed for the increase of virtue. For though to these crafts named were much more needful in the Old Law, the New testament hath voided these and many others.

This is our embassy, that Christ has commanded us to pursue, at this time most acceptable for many causes. And though these matters be here shortly knit they be in another book longly declared, and may another more, all in our language, the which we would were communed to all true Christian men. We pray God of his endless goodness reform our church. all out of joint, to the perfections of the first beginning. Amen.

(The Schmalkald or Schmalkaldic Articles are one of the confessions of faith of Lutheranism, written by Martin Luther in 1536. The articles were prepared as the result of a bull issued by Pope Paul III calling for a general council of the Roman Catholic Church to deal with the Reformation movement. (The council was actually postponed several times until it met in Trent in 1545.) John Frederick I, Lutheran elector of Saxony, wished to determine what issues could be negotiated with the Roman Catholics and what could not be compromised. He asked Luther to review earlier statements of faith by the Reformers to determine what was absolutely essential to the faith. After Luther had prepared the articles, he invited several Reformers to Wittenberg to discuss them, and after some minor changes eight theologians signed them. They were then sent to the Elector in January 1537.

In February 1537 the Protestant secular heads of state who were members of the Schmalkaldic League met with several theologians at Schmalkalden to decide how to deal with a council of the Roman Catholic Church. Luther became ill and could not attend, but John Frederick I presented Luther's articles to the gathering. Because of Luther's somewhat controversial doctrine of the Lord's Supper, Melanchthon urged that the Augsburg Confession and its Apology, previously presented to Emperor Charles V, adequately presented the Reformer's faith and that additional statements should not be added. This decision was adopted and the Schmalkaldic Articles were not officially accepted. They were, however, circulated and read, and 44 theologians signed them as an expression of their personal faith. Subsequently, they were included in the Book of Concord (1580).

The Schmalkaldic Articles are divided into three sections. The first discusses the unity of God, the Trinity, the Incarnation, and Christ, and on these subjects Luther believed there was no real controversy between Roman Catholics and Protestants. The second section dealt with Christ and justification by faith. According to Luther, "On this article rests all that we teach and practice against the pope, the devil, and the world." This section also discusses the mass, monastic orders, and the papacy. The third section discusses 15 articles that could be considered by Roman Catholics and Protestants. It includes such subjects as sin, the Law, repentance, the sacraments, confession, the ministry, and a definition of the church.)

Articles of Christian Doctrine which were to have been presented on our part to the Council, if any had been assembled at Mantua or elsewhere, indicating what we could accept or yield, and what we could not.

Preface by Dr. Martin Luther.

Since Pope Paul III convoked a Council last year, to assemble at Mantua about Whitsuntide, and afterwards transferred it from Mantua, so that it is not yet known where he will or can fix it, and we on our part either had to expect that we would be summoned also to the Council or [to fear that we would] be condemned unsummoned, I was directed to compile and collect the articles of our doctrine [in order that it might be plain] in case of deliberation as to what and how far we would be both willing and able to yield to the Papists, and in what points we intended to persevere and abide to the end.

I have accordingly compiled these articles and presented them to our side. They have also been accepted and unanimously confessed by our side, and it has been resolved that, in case the Pope with his adherents should ever be so bold as seriously and in good faith, without lying and cheating, to hold a truly free [legitimate] Christian Council (as, indeed, he would be in duty bound to do), they be publicly delivered in order to set forth the Confession of our Faith.

But though the Romish court is so dreadfully afraid of a free Christian Council, and shuns the light so shamefully, that it has [entirely] removed, even from those who are on its side, the hope that it will ever permit a free Council, much less that it will itself hold one, whereat, as is just, they [many Papists] are greatly offended and have no little trouble on that account [are disgusted with this negligence of the Pope], since they notice thereby that the Pope would rather see all Christendom perish and all souls damned than suffer either himself or his adherents to be reformed even a little, and his [their] tyranny to be limited, nevertheless I have determined meanwhile to publish these articles in plain print, so that, should I die before there would be a Council (as I fully expect and hope, because the knaves who flee the light and shun the day take such wretched pains to delay and hinder the Council), those who live and remain after me may have my testimony and confession to produce, in addition to the Confession which I have issued previously, whereby up to this time I have abided, and, by God's grace, will abide.

For what shall I say? How shall I complain? I am still living, writing, preaching, and lecturing daily; [and] yet there are found such spiteful men, not only among the adversaries, but also false brethren that profess to be on our side, as dare to cite my writings and doctrine directly against myself, and let me look on and listen, although they know well that I teach otherwise, and as wish to adorn their venom with my labor, and under my name to [deceive and] mislead the poor people. [Good God!] Alas! what first will happen when I am dead?

Indeed, I ought to reply to everything while I am still living. But, again, how can I alone stop all the mouths of the devil? especially of those (as they all are poisoned) who will not hear or notice what we write, but solely exercise themselves with all diligence how they may most shamefully pervert and corrupt our word in every letter. These I let the devil answer, or at last Gods wrath, as they deserve. I often think of the good Gerson who doubts whether anything good should be [written and] published. If it is not done, many souls are neglected who could be delivered: but if it is done, the devil is there with malignant, villainous tongues without number which envenom and pervert everything, so that nevertheless the fruit [the usefulness of the writings] is prevented. Yet what they gain thereby is manifest. For while they have lied so shamefully against us and by means of lies wished to retain the people, God has constantly advanced His work, and been making their following ever smaller and ours greater, and by their lies has caused and still causes them to be brought to shame.

I must tell a story. There was a doctor sent here to Wittenberg from France, who said publicly before us that his king was sure and more than sure, that among us there is no church, no magistrate, no married life, but all live promiscuously as cattle, and each one does as he pleases. Imagine now, how will those who by their writings have instilled such gross lies into the king and other countries as the pure truth, look at us on that day before the judgement-seat of Christ? Christ, the Lord and Judge of us all, knows well that they lie and have [always] lied, His sentence they in turn, must hear; that I know certainly. God convert to repentance those who can be converted! Regarding the rest it will be said, Woe, and, alas! eternally.

But to return to the subject. I verily desire to see a truly Christian Council [assembled some time], in order that many matters and persons might be helped. Not that we need It, for our churches are now, through God's grace, so enlightened and equipped with the pure Word and right use of the Sacraments, with knowledge of the various callings and of right works, that we on our part ask for no Council, and on such points have nothing better to hope or expect from a Council. But we see in the bishoprics everywhere so many parishes vacant and desolate that one's heart would break, and yet neither the bishops nor canons care how the poor people live or die, for whom nevertheless Christ has died, and who are not permitted to hear Him speak with them as the true Shepherd with His sheep. This causes me to shudder and fear that at some time He may send a council of angels upon Germany utterly destroying us, like Sodom and Gomorrah, because we so wantonly mock Him with the Council.

Besides such necessary ecclesiastical affairs, there would be also in the political estate innumerable matters of great importance to improve. There is the disagreement between the princes and the states; usury and avarice have burst in like a flood, and have become lawful [are defended with a show of right]; wantonness, lewdness, extravagance in dress, gluttony, gambling, idle display, with all kinds of bad habits and wickedness, insubordination of subjects, of domestics and laborers of every trade, also the exactions [and most exorbitant selling prices] of the peasants (and who can enumerate all?) have so increased that they cannot be rectified by ten Councils and twenty Diets. If such chief matters of the spiritual and worldly estates as are contrary to God would be considered in the Council, they would have all hands so full that the child's play and absurdity of long gowns [official insignia], large tonsures, broad cinctures [or sashes], bishops' or cardinals' hats or maces, and like jugglery would in the mean time be forgotten. If we first had performed God's command and order in the spiritual and secular estate we would find time enough to reform food, clothing, tonsures, and surplices. But if we want to swallow such camels, and, instead, strain at gnats, let the beams stand and judge the motes, we also might indeed be satisfied with the Council.

Therefore I have presented few articles; for we have without this so many commands of God to observe in the Church, the state and the family that we can never fulfil them. What, then, is the use, or what does it profit that many decrees and statutes thereon are made in the Council, especially when these chief matters commanded of God are neither regarded nor observed? Just as though He were bound to honor our jugglery as a reward of our treading His solemn commandments under foot. But our sins weigh upon us and cause God not to be gracious to us; for we do not repent, and, besides, wish to defend every abomination.

O Lord Jesus Christ, do Thou Thyself convoke a Council, and deliver Thy servants by Thy glorious advent! The Pope and his adherents are done for; they will have none of Thee. Do Thou, then, help us, who are poor and needy, who sigh to Thee, and beseech Thee earnestly, according to the grace which Thou hast given us, through Thy Holy Ghost who liveth and reigneth with Thee and the Father, blessed forever. Amen.

THE FIRST PART

Treats of the Sublime Articles Concerning the Divine Majesty, as:

I. That Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, three distinct persons in one divine essence and nature, are one God, who has created heaven and earth.

II. That the Father is begotten of no one; the Son of the Father; the Holy Ghost proceeds from Father and Son.

III. That not the Father nor the Holy Ghost but the Son became man.

IV. That the Son became man in this manner, that He was conceived, without the cooperation of man, by the Holy Ghost, and was born of the pure, holy [and always] Virgin Mary. Afterwards He suffered, died, was buried, descended to hell, rose from the dead, ascended to heaven, sits at the right hand of God, will come to judge the quick and the dead, etc. as the Creed of the Apostles, as well as that of St. Athanasius, and the Catechism in common use for children, teach.

Concerning these articles there is no contention or dispute, since we on both sides confess them. Therefore it is not necessary now to treat further of them.

THE SECOND PART

Treats of the Articles which Refer to the Office and Work of Jesus Christ, or Our Redemption.

The first and chief article is this,

That Jesus Christ, our God and Lord, died for our sins, and was raised again for our justification, Rom. 4, 25.

And He alone is the Lamb of God which taketh away the sins of the world, John 1, 29; and God has laid upon Him the iniquities of us all, Is. 53, 6.

Likewise: All have sinned and are justified without merit [freely, and without their own works or merits] by His grace, through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus, in His blood, Rom. 3, 23 f.

Now, since it is necessary to believe this, and it cannot be otherwise acquired or apprehended by any work, law, or merit, it is clear and certain that this faith alone justifies us as St. Paul says, Rom. 3, 28: For we conclude that a man is justified by faith, without the deeds of the Law. Likewise v. 26: That He might be just, and the Justifier of him which believeth in Christ.

Of this article nothing can be yielded or surrendered [nor can anything be granted or permitted contrary to the same], even though heaven and earth, and whatever will not abide, should sink to ruin. For there is none other name under heaven, given among men whereby we must be saved, says Peter, Acts 4, 12. And with His stripes we are healed, Is. 53, 5. And upon this article all things depend which we teach and practice in opposition to the Pope, the devil, and the [whole] world. Therefore, we must be sure concerning this doctrine, and not doubt; for otherwise all is lost, and the Pope and devil and all things gain the victory and suit over us.

Article II: Of the Mass.

That the Mass in the Papacy must be the greatest and most horrible abomination, as it directly and powerfully conflicts with this chief article, and yet above and before all other popish idolatries it has been the chief and most specious. For it has been held that this sacrifice or work of the Mass, even though it be rendered by a wicked [and abandoned] scoundrel, frees men from sins, both in this life and also in purgatory, while only the Lamb of God shall and must do this, as has been said above. Of this article nothing is to be surrendered or conceded, because the first article does not allow it.

If, perchance, there were reasonable Papists we might speak moderately and in a friendly way, thus: first, why they so rigidly uphold the Mass. For it is but a pure invention of men, and has not been commanded by God; and every invention of man we may [safely] discard, as Christ declares, Matt. 15, 9: In vain do they worship Me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men.

Secondly. It is an unnecessary thing, which can be omitted without sin and danger.

Thirdly. The Sacrament can be received in a better and more blessed way [more acceptable to God], (yea, the only blessed way), according to the institution of Christ. Why, then, do they drive the world to woe and [extreme] misery on account of a fictitious, unnecessary matter, which can be well obtained in another and more blessed way?

Let [care be taken that] it be publicly preached to the people that the Mass as men's twaddle [commentitious affair or human figment] can be omitted without sin, and that no one will be condemned who does not observe it, but that he can be saved in a better way without the Mass. I wager [Thus it will come to pass] that the Mass will then collapse of itself, not only among the insane [rude] common people, but also among all pious, Christian, reasonable, God-fearing hearts; and that the more, when they would hear that the Mass is a [very] dangerous thing, fabricated and invented without the will and Word of God.

Fourthly. Since such innumerable and unspeakable abuses have arisen in the whole world from the buying and selling of masses, the Mass should by right be relinquished, if for no other purpose than to prevent abuses, even though in itself it had something advantageous and good. How much more ought we to relinquish it, so as to prevent [escape] forever these horrible abuses, since it is altogether unnecessary, useless, and dangerous, and we can obtain everything by a more necessary, profitable, and certain way without the Mass.

Fifthly. But since the Mass is nothing else and can be nothing else (as the Canon and all books declare), than a work of men (even of wicked scoundrels), by which one attempts to reconcile himself and others to God, and to obtain and merit the remission of sins and grace (for thus the Mass is observed when it is observed at the very best; otherwise what purpose would it serve?), for this very reason it must and should [certainly] be condemned and rejected. For this directly conflicts with the chief article, which says that it is not a wicked or a godly hireling of the Mass with his own work, but the Lamb of God and the Son of God, that taketh away our sins.

But if any one should advance the pretext that as an act of devotion he wishes to administer the Sacrament, or Communion, to himself, he is not in earnest [he would commit a great mistake, and would not be speaking seriously and sincerely]. For if he wishes to commune in sincerity, the surest and best way for him is in the Sacrament administered according to Christ's institution. But that one administer communion to himself is a human notion, uncertain, unnecessary, yea, even prohibited. And he does not know what he is doing, because without the Word of God he obeys a false human opinion and invention. So, too, it is not right (even though the matter were otherwise correct) for one to use the common Sacrament of [belonging to] the Church according to his own private devotion, and without God's Word and apart from the communion of the Church to trifle therewith.

This article concerning the Mass will be the whole business of the Council. [The Council will perspire most over, and be occupied with this article concerning the Mass.] For if it were [although it would be] possible for them to concede to us all the other articles, yet they could not concede this. As Campegius said at Augsburg that he would be torn to pieces before he would relinquish the Mass, so, by the help of God, I, too, would suffer myself to be reduced to ashes before I would allow a hireling of the Mass, be he good or bad, to be made equal to Christ Jesus, my Lord and Savior, or to be exalted above Him. Thus we are and remain eternally separated and opposed to one another. They feel well enough that when the Mass falls, the Papacy lies in ruins. Before they will permit this to occur, they will put us all to death if they can.

In addition to all this, this dragon's tail, [I mean] the Mass, has begotten a numerous vermin-brood of manifold idolatries.

First, purgatory. Here they carried their trade into purgatory by masses for souls, and vigils, and weekly, monthly, and yearly celebrations of obsequies, and finally by the Common Week and All Souls Day, by soul-baths so that the Mass is used almost alone for the dead, although Christ has instituted the Sacrament alone for the living. Therefore purgatory, and every solemnity, rite, and commerce connected with it, is to be regarded as nothing but a specter of the devil. For it conflicts with the chief article [which teaches] that only Christ, and not the works of men, are to help [set free] souls. Not to mention the fact that nothing has been [divinely] commanded or enjoined upon us concerning the dead. Therefore all this may be safely omitted, even if it were no error and idolatry.

Copyright © 2018 by Lord Henfield, Guildford Scientific Press

The Papists quote here Augustine and some of the Fathers who are said to have written concerning purgatory, and they think that we do not understand for what purpose and to what end they spoke as they did. St. Augustine does not write that there is a purgatory nor has he a testimony of Scripture to constrain him thereto, but he leaves it in doubt whether there is one, and says that his mother asked to be remembered at the altar or Sacrament. Now, all this is indeed nothing but the devotion of men, and that, too, of individuals, and does not establish an article of faith, which is the prerogative of God alone.

Our Papists, however, cite such statements [opinions] of men in order that men should believe in their horrible, blasphemous, and cursed traffic in masses for souls in purgatory [or in sacrifices for the dead and oblations], etc. But they will never prove these things from Augustine. Now, when they have abolished the traffic in masses for purgatory, of which Augustine never dreamt, we will then discuss with them whether the expressions of Augustine without Scripture [being without the warrant of the Word] are to be admitted, and whether the dead should be remembered at the Eucharist. For it will not do to frame articles of faith from the works or words of the holy Fathers; otherwise their kind of fare, of garments, of house, etc., would have to become an article of faith, as was done with relies. [We have, however, another rule, namely] The rule is: The Word of God shall establish articles of faith, and no one else, not even an angel.

Secondly. From this it has followed that evil spirits have perpetrated much knavery [exercised their malice] by appearing as the souls of the departed, and with unspeakable [horrible] lies and tricks demanded masses, vigils, pilgrimages, and other alms. All of which we had to receive as articles of faith, and to live accordingly; and the Pope confirmed these things, as also the Mass and all other abominations. Here, too, there is no [cannot and must not be any] yielding or surrendering.

Thirdly. [Hence arose] the pilgrimages. Here, too, masses, the remission of sins and the grace of God were sought, for the Mass controlled everything. Now it is indeed certain that such pilgrimages, without the Word of God, have not been commanded us, neither are they necessary, since we can have these things [the soul can be cared for] in a better way, and can omit these pilgrimages without any sin and danger. Why therefore do they leave at home [desert] their own parish [their called ministers, their parishes], the Word of God, wives, children, etc., who are ordained and [attention to whom is necessary and has been] commanded, and run after these unnecessary, uncertain, pernicious will-o'-the-wisps of the devil [and errors]? Unless the devil was riding [made insane] the Pope, causing him to praise and establish these practices, whereby the people again and again revolted from Christ to their own works, and became idolaters, which is worst of all; moreover, it is neither necessary nor commanded, but is senseless and doubtful, and besides harmful. Hence here, too, there can be no yielding or surrendering [to yield or concede anything here is not lawful], etc. And let this be preached, that such pilgrimages are not necessary, but dangerous; and then see what will become of them. [For thus they will perish of their own accord.]

Fourthly. Fraternities [or societies], in which cloisters, chapters, vicars have assigned and communicated (by a legal contract and sale) all masses and good works, etc., both for the living and the dead. This is not only altogether a human bauble, without the Word of God, entirely unnecessary and not commanded, but also contrary to the chief article, Of Redemption. Therefore it is in no way to be tolerated.

Fifthly. The relics, in which there are found so many falsehoods and tomfooleries concerning the bones of dogs and horses, that even the devil has laughed at such rascalities, ought long ago to have been condemned, even though there were some good in them; and so much the more because they are without the Word of God; being neither commanded nor counseled, they are an entirely unnecessary and useless thing. But the worst is that [they have imagined that] these relics had to work indulgence and the forgiveness of sins [and have revered them] as a good work and service of God, like the Mass, etc.

Sixthly. Here belong the precious indulgences granted (but only for money) both to the living and the dead, by which the miserable [sacrilegious and accursed] Judas, or Pope, has sold the merit of Christ, together with the superfluous merits of all saints and of the entire Church, etc. All these things [and every single one of them] are not to be borne, and are not only without the Word of God, without necessity, not commanded, but are against the chief article. For the merit of Christ is [apprehended and] obtained not by our works or pence, but from grace through faith, without money and merit; and is offered [and presented] not through the power of the Pope, but through the preaching of God's Word.

Of the Invocation of Saints.

The invocation of saints is also one of the abuses of Antichrist conflicting with the chief article, and destroys the knowledge of Christ. Neither is it commanded nor counseled, nor has it any example [or testimony] in Scripture, and even though it were a precious thing, as it is not [while, on the contrary, it is a most harmful thing], in Christ we have everything a thousandfold better [and surer, so that we are not in need of calling upon the saints].

And although the angels in heaven pray for us (as Christ Himself also does), as also do the saints on earth, and perhaps also in heaven, yet it does not follow thence that we should invoke and adore the angels and saints, and fast, hold festivals, celebrate Mass in their honor, make offerings, and establish churches, altars, divine worship, and in still other ways serve them, and regard them as helpers in need [as patrons and intercessors], and divide among them all kinds of help, and ascribe to each one a particular form of assistance, as the Papists teach and do. For this is idolatry, and such honor belongs alone to God. For as a Christian and saint upon earth you can pray for me, not only in one, but in many necessities. But for this reason I am not obliged to adore and invoke you, and celebrate festivals, fast, make oblations, hold masses for your honor [and worship], and put my faith in you for my salvation. I can in other ways indeed honor, love, and thank you in Christ. If now such idolatrous honor were withdrawn from angels and departed saints, the remaining honor would be without harm and would quickly be forgotten. For when advantage and assistance, both bodily and spiritual, are no more to be expected, the saints will not be troubled [the worship of the saints will soon vanish], neither in their graves nor in heaven. For without a reward or out of pure love no one will much remember, or esteem, or honor them [bestow on them divine honor].

In short, the Mass itself and anything that proceeds from it, and anything that is attached to it, we cannot tolerate, but must condemn, in order that we may retain the holy Sacrament pure and certain, according to the institution of Christ, employed and received through faith.

Article III: Of Chapters and Cloisters.

That chapters and cloisters [colleges of canons and communistic dwellings], which were formerly founded with the good intention [of our forefathers] to educate learned men and chaste [and modest] women, ought again to be turned to such use, in order that pastors, preachers, and other ministers of the churches may be had, and likewise other necessary persons [fitted] for [the political administration of] the secular government [or for the commonwealth] in cities and countries, and well-educated, maidens for mothers and housekeepers, etc.

If they will not serve this purpose, it is better that they be abandoned or razed, rather than [continued and], with their blasphemous services invented by men, regarded as something better than the ordinary Christian life and the offices and callings ordained by God. For all this also is contrary to the first chief article concerning the redemption made through Jesus Christ. Add to this that (like all other human inventions) these have neither been commanded; they are needless and useless, and, besides, afford occasion for dangerous and vain labor [dangerous annoyances and fruitless worship], such services as the prophets call Aven, i.e., pain and labor.

Article IV: Of the Papacy.

That the Pope is not, according to divine law or according to the Word of God the head of all Christendom (for this [name] belongs to One only, whose name is Jesus Christ), but is only the bishop and pastor of the Church at Rome, and of those who voluntarily or through a human creature (that is, a political magistrate) have attached themselves to him, to be Christians, not under him as a lord, but with him as brethren [colleagues] and comrades, as the ancient councils and the age of St. Cyprian show.

But to-day none of the bishops dare to address the Pope as brother as was done at that time [in the age of Cyprian]; but they must call him most gracious lord, even though they be kings or emperors. This [Such arrogance] we will not, cannot, must not take upon our conscience [with a good conscience approve]. Let him, however, who will do it, do so without us [at his own risk].

Hence it follows that all things which the Pope, from a power so false, mischievous, blasphemous, and arrogant, has done and undertaken, have been and still are purely diabolical affairs and transactions (with the exception of such things as pertain to the secular government, where God often permits much good to be effected for a people, even through a tyrant and [faithless] scoundrel) for the ruin of the entire holy [catholic or] Christian Church (so far as it is in his power) and for the destruction of the first and chief article concerning the redemption made through Jesus Christ.

For all his bulls and books are extant, in which he roars like a lion (as the angel in Rev. 12 depicts him), [crying out] that no Christian can be saved unless he obeys him and is subject to him in all things that he wishes, that he says, and that he does. All of which amounts to nothing less than saying: Although you believe in Christ, and have in Him [alone] everything that is necessary to salvation, yet it is nothing and all in vain unless you regard [have and worship] me as your god, and be subject and obedient to me. And yet it is manifest that the holy Church has been without the Pope for at least more than five hundred years, and that even to the present day the churches of the Greeks and of many other languages neither have been nor are yet under the Pope. Besides, as often remarked, it is a human figment which is not commanded, and is unnecessary and useless; for the holy Christian [or catholic] Church can exist very well without such a head, and it would certainly have remained better [purer, and its career would have been more prosperous] if such a head had not been raised up by the devil. And the Papacy is also of no use in the Church, because it exercises no Christian office; and therefore it is necessary for the Church to continue and to exist without the Pope.

And supposing that the Pope would yield this point, so as not to be supreme by divine right or from Gods command, but that we must have [there must be elected] a [certain] head, to whom all the rest adhere [as their support] in order that the [concord and] unity of Christians may be preserved against sects and heretics, and that such a head were chosen by men, and that it were placed within the choice and power of men to change or remove this head, just as the Council of Constance adopted nearly this course with reference to the Popes, deposing three and electing a fourth; supposing, I say, that the Pope and See at Rome would yield and accept this (which, nevertheless, is impossible; for thus he would have to suffer his entire realm and estate to be overthrown and destroyed, with all his rights and books, a thing which, to speak in few words, he cannot do), nevertheless, even in this way Christianity would not be helped, but many more sects would arise than before.

For since men would have to be subject to this head, not from God's command, but from their personal good pleasure, it would easily and in a short time be despised, and at last retain no member; neither would it have to be forever confined to Rome or any other place, but it might be wherever and in whatever church God would grant a man fit for the [taking upon him such a great] office. Oh, the complicated and confused state of affairs [perplexity] that would result!

Therefore the Church can never be better governed and preserved than if we all live under one head, Christ, and all the bishops equal in office (although they be unequal in gifts), be diligently joined in unity of doctrine, faith, Sacraments, prayer, and works of love, etc., as St. Jerome writes that the priests at Alexandria together and in common governed the churches, as did also the apostles, and afterwards all bishops throughout all Christendom, until the Pope raised his head above all.

This teaching shows forcefully that the Pope is the very Antichrist, who has exalted himself above, and opposed himself against Christ because he will not permit Christians to be saved without his power, which, nevertheless, is nothing, and is neither ordained nor commanded by God. This is, properly speaking to exalt himself above all that is called God as Paul says, 2 Thess. 2, 4. Even the Turks or the Tartars, great enemies of Christians as they are, do not do this, but they allow whoever wishes to believe in Christ, and take bodily tribute and obedience from Christians.

The Pope, however, prohibits this faith, saying that to be saved a person must obey him. This we are unwilling to do, even though on this account we must die in God s name. This all proceeds from the fact that the Pope has wished to be called the supreme head of the Christian Church by divine right. Accordingly he had to make himself equal and superior to Christ, and had to cause himself to be proclaimed the head and then the lord of the Church, and finally of the whole world, and simply God on earth, until he has dared to issue commands even to the angels in heaven. And when we distinguish the Pope s teaching from, or measure and hold it against, Holy Scripture, it is found [it appears plainly] that the Pope s teaching, where it is best, has been taken from the imperial and heathen law and treats of political matters and decisions or rights, as the Decretals show; furthermore, it teaches of ceremonies concerning churches, garments, food, persons and [similar] puerile, theatrical and comical things without measure, but in all these things nothing at all of Christ, faith, and the commandments of God. Lastly, it is nothing else than the devil himself, because above and against God he urges [and disseminates] his [papal] falsehoods concerning masses, purgatory, the monastic life, one's own works and [fictitious] divine worship (for this is the very Papacy [upon each of which the Papacy is altogether founded and is standing]), and condemns, murders and tortures all Christians who do not exalt and honor these abominations [of the Pope] above all things. Therefore, just as little as we can worship the devil himself as Lord and God, we can endure his apostle, the Pope, or Antichrist, in his rule as head or lord. For to lie and to kill, and to destroy body and soul eternally, that is wherein his papal government really consists, as I have very clearly shown in many books.

In these four articles they will have enough to condemn in the Council. For they cannot and will not concede us even the least point in one of these articles. Of this we should be certain, and animate ourselves with [be forewarned and made firm in] the hope that Christ, our Lord, has attacked His adversary, and he will press the attack home [pursue and destroy him] both by His Spirit and coming. Amen.

For in the Council we will stand not before the Emperor or the political magistrate, as at Augsburg (where the Emperor published a most gracious edict, and caused matters to be heard kindly [and dispassionately]), but [we will appear] before the Pope and devil himself, who intends to listen to nothing, but merely [when the case has been publicly announced] to condemn, to murder and to force us to idolatry. Therefore we ought not here to kiss his feet, or to say: Thou art my gracious lord, but as the angel in Zechariah 3, 2 said to Satan: The Lord rebuke thee, O Satan.

THE THIRD PART OF THE ARTICLES.

Concerning the following articles we may [will be able to] treat with learned and reasonable men, or among ourselves. The Pope and his [the Papal] government do not care much about these. For with them conscience is nothing, but money, [glory] honors, power are [to them] everything.

I. Of Sin.

Here we must confess, as Paul says in Rom. 5, 11, that sin originated [and entered the world] from one man Adam, by whose disobedience all men were made sinners, [and] subject to death and the devil. This is called original or capital sin.

The fruits of this sin are afterwards the evil deeds which are forbidden in the Ten Commandments, such as [distrust] unbelief, false faith, idolatry, to be without the fear of God, presumption [recklessness], despair, blindness [or complete loss of sight], and, in short not to know or regard God; furthermore to lie, to swear by [to abuse] God's name [to swear falsely], not to pray, not to call upon God, not to regard [to despise or neglect] God's Word, to be disobedient to parents, to murder, to be unchaste, to steal, to deceive, etc.

This hereditary sin is so deep and [horrible] a corruption of nature that no reason can understand it, but it must be [learned and] believed from the revelation of Scriptures, Ps. 51, 5; Rom. 6, 12 ff.; Ex. 33, 3; Gen. 3, 7 ff. Hence, it is nothing but error and blindness in regard to this article what the scholastic doctors have taught, namely:

That since the fall of Adam the natural powers of man have remained entire and incorrupt, and that man by nature has a right reason and a good will; which things the philosophers teach.

Again that man has a free will to do good and omit evil, and, conversely, to omit good and do evil.

Again, that man by his natural powers can observe and keep [do] all the commands of God.

Again, that, by his natural powers, man can love God above all things and his neighbor as himself.

Again, if a man does as much as is in him, God certainly grants him His grace.

Again, if he wishes to go to the Sacrament, there is no need of a good intention to do good, but it is sufficient if he has not a wicked purpose to commit sin; so entirely good is his nature and so efficacious the Sacrament.

[Again,] that it is not founded upon Scripture that for a good work the Holy Ghost with His grace is necessary.

Such and many similar things have arisen from want of understanding and ignorance as regards both this sin and Christ, our Savior and they are truly heathen dogmas, which we cannot endure. For if this teaching were right [approved], then Christ has died in vain, since there is in man no defect nor sin for which he should have died; or He would have died only for the body, not for the soul, inasmuch as the soul is [entirely] sound, and the body only is subject to death.

II. Of the Law

Here we hold that the Law was given by God, first, to restrain sin by threats and the dread of punishment, and by the promise and offer of grace and benefit. But all this miscarried on account of the wickedness which sin has wrought in man. For thereby a part [some] were rendered worse, those, namely, who are hostile to [hate] the Law, because it forbids what they like to do, and enjoins what they do not like to do. Therefore, wherever they can escape [if they were not restrained by] punishment, they [would] do more against the Law than before. These, then, are the rude and wicked [unbridled and secure] men, who do evil wherever they [notice that they] have the opportunity.

The rest become blind and arrogant [are smitten with arrogance and blindness], and [insolently] conceive the opinion that they observe and can observe the Law by their own powers, as has been said above concerning the scholastic theologians; thence come the hypocrites and [self-righteous or] false saints.

But the chief office or force of the Law is that it reveal original sin with all its fruits, and show man how very low his nature has fallen, and has become [fundamentally and] utterly corrupted; as the Law must tell man that he has no God nor regards [cares for] God, and worships other gods, a matter which before and without the Law he would not have believed. In this way he becomes terrified, is humbled, desponds, despairs, and anxiously desires aid, but sees no escape; he begins to be an enemy of [enraged at] God, and to murmur, etc. This is what Paul says, Rom. 4, 15: The Law worketh wrath. And Rom. 5, 20: Sin is increased by the Law. [The Law entered that the offense might abound.]

III. Of Repentance.

This office [of the Law] the New Testament retains and urges, as St. Paul, Rom. 1, 18 does, saying: The wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men. Again, 3, 19: All the world is guilty before God. No man is righteous before Him. And Christ says, John 16, 8: The Holy Ghost will reprove the world of sin.

This, then, is the thunderbolt of God by which He strikes in a heap [hurls to the ground] both manifest sinners and false saints [hypocrites], and suffers no one to be in the right [declares no one righteous], but drives them all together to terror and despair. This is the hammer, as Jeremiah says, 23, 29: Is not My Word like a hammer that breaketh the rock in pieces? This is not activa contritio or manufactured repentance, but passiva contritio [torture of conscience], true sorrow of heart, suffering and sensation of death.

This, then, is what it means to begin true repentance; and here man must hear such a sentence as this: You are all of no account, whether you be manifest sinners or saints [in your own opinion]; you all must become different and do otherwise than you now are and are doing [no matter what sort of people you are], whether you are as great, wise, powerful, and holy as you may. Here no one is [righteous, holy], godly, etc.

But to this office the New Testament immediately adds the consolatory promise of grace through the Gospel, which must be believed, as Christ declares, Mark 1,15: Repent and believe the Gospel, i.e., become different and do otherwise, and believe My promise. And John, preceding Him, is called a preacher of repentance, however, for the remission of sins, i.e., John was to accuse all, and convict them of being sinners, that they might know what they were before God, and might acknowledge that they were lost men, and might thus be prepared for the Lord, to receive grace, and to expect and accept from Him the remission of sins. Thus also Christ Himself says, Luke 24, 47: Repentance and remission of sins must be preached in My name among all nations.

But whenever the Law alone, without the Gospel being added exercises this its office there is [nothing else than] death and hell, and man must despair, like Saul and Judas; as St. Paul, Rom. 7, 10, says: Through sin the Law killeth. On the other hand, the Gospel brings consolation and remission not only in one way, but through the word and Sacraments, and the like, as we shall hear afterward in order that [thus] there is with the Lord plenteous redemption, as Ps. 130, 7 says against the dreadful captivity of sin.

However, we must now contrast the false repentance of the sophists with true repentance, in order that both may be the better understood.

Of the False Repentance of the Papists.

It was impossible that they should teach correctly concerning repentance, since they did not [rightly] know the real sins [the real sin]. For, as has been shown above, they do not believe aright concerning original sin, but say that the natural powers of man have remained [entirely] unimpaired and incorrupt; that reason can teach aright, and the will can in accordance therewith do aright [perform those things which are taught], that God certainly bestows His grace when a man does as much as is in him, according to his free will.

It had to follow thence [from this dogma] that they did [must do] penance only for actual sins such as wicked thoughts to which a person yields (for wicked emotion [concupiscence, vicious feelings, and inclinations], lust and improper dispositions [according to them] are not sins), and for wicked words and wicked deeds, which free will could readily have omitted.

And of such repentance they fix three parts contrition, confession, and satisfaction, with this [magnificent] consolation and promise added: If man truly repent, [feel remorse,] confess, render satisfaction, he thereby would have merited forgiveness, and paid for his sins before God [atoned for his sins and obtained a plenary redemption]. Thus in repentance they instructed men to repose confidence in their own works. Hence the expression originated, which was employed in the pulpit when public absolution was announced to the people: Prolong O God, my life, until I shall make satisfaction for my sins and amend my life.

There was here [profound silence and] no mention of Christ nor faith; but men hoped by their own works to overcome and blot out sins before God. And with this intention we became priests and monks, that we might array ourselves against sin.

As to contrition, this is the way it was done: Since no one could remember all his sins (especially as committed through an entire year), they inserted this provision, namely, that if an unknown sin should be remembered later [if the remembrance of a concealed sin should perhaps return], this also must be repented of and confessed etc. Meanwhile they were [the person was] commended to the grace of God.

Moreover, since no one could know how great the contrition ought to be in order to be sufficient before God, they gave this consolation: He who could not have contrition, at least ought to have attrition, which I may call half a contrition or the beginning of contrition, for they have themselves understood neither of these terms nor do they understand them now, as little as I. Such attrition was reckoned as contrition when a person went to confession.

And when it happened that any one said that he could not have contrition nor lament his sins (as might have occurred in illicit love or the desire for revenge, etc.), they asked whether he did not wish or desire to have contrition [lament]. When one would reply Yes (for who, save the devil himself, would here say No?), they accepted this as contrition, and forgave him his sins on account of this good work of his [which they adorned with the name of contrition]. Here they cited the example of St. Bernard, etc.

Here we see how blind reason, in matters pertaining to God, gropes about, and, according to its own imagination, seeks for consolation in its own works, and cannot think of [entirely forgets] Christ and faith. But if it be [clearly] viewed in the light, this contrition is a manufactured and fictitious thought [or imagination], derived from man's own powers, without faith and without the knowledge of Christ. And in it the poor sinner, when he reflected upon his own lust and desire for revenge, would sometimes [perhaps] have laughed rather than wept [either laughed or wept, rather than to think of something else], except such as either had been truly struck by [the lightning of] the Law, or had been vainly vexed by the devil with a sorrowful spirit. Otherwise [with the exception of these persons] such contrition was certainly mere hypocrisy, and did not mortify the lust for sins [flames of sin]; for they had to grieve, while they would rather have continued to sin, if it had been free to them.

As regards confession, the procedure was this: Every one had [was enjoined] to enumerate all his sins (which is an impossible thing). This was a great torment. From such as he had forgotten [But if any one had forgotten some sins] he would be absolved on the condition that, if they would occur to him, he must still confess them. In this way he could never know whether he had made a sufficiently pure confession [perfectly and correctly], or when confessing would ever have an end. Yet he was pointed to his own works, and comforted thus: The more fully [sincerely and frankly] one confesses, and the more he humiliates himself and debases himself before the priest, the sooner and better he renders satisfaction for his sins; for such humility certainly would earn grace before God.

Here, too, there was no faith nor Christ, and the virtue of the absolution was not declared to him, but upon his enumeration of sins and his self-abasement depended his consolation. What torture, rascality, and idolatry such confession has produced is more than can be related.

As to satisfaction, this is by far the most involved [perplexing] part of all. For no man could know how much to render for a single sin, not to say how much for all. Here they have resorted to the device of imposing a small satisfaction, which could indeed be rendered, as five Paternosters, a day's fast, etc.; for the rest [that was lacking] of the [in their] repentance they were directed to purgatory.

Here, too, there was nothing but anguish and [extreme] misery. [For] some thought that they would never get out of purgatory, because, according to the old canons seven years' repentance is required for a single mortal sin. Nevertheless, confidence was placed upon our work of satisfaction, and if the satisfaction could have been perfect, confidence would have been placed in it entirely, and neither faith nor Christ would have been of use. But this confidence was impossible. For although any one had done penance in that way for a hundred years, he would still not have known whether he had finished his penance. That meant forever to do penance and never to come to repentance.

Here now the Holy See at Rome, coming to the aid of the poor Church, invented indulgences, whereby it forgave and remitted [expiation or] satisfaction, first, for a single instance, for seven years, for a hundred years and distributed them among the cardinals and bishops, so that one could grant indulgence for a hundred years and another for a hundred days. But he reserved to himself alone the power to remit the entire satisfaction.

Now, since this began to yield money, and the traffic in bulls became profitable he devised the golden jubilee year [a truly goldbearing year], and fixed it at Rome. He called this the remission of all punishment and guilt. Then the people came running, because every one would fain have been freed from this grievous, unbearable burden. This meant to find [dig up] and raise the treasures of the earth. Immediately the Pope pressed still further, and multiplied the golden years one upon another. But the more he devoured money, the wider grew his maw.

Later, therefore, he issued them [those golden years of his] by his legates [everywhere] to the countries, until all churches and houses were full of the Golden Year. At last he also made an inroad into purgatory among the dead, first, by founding masses and vigils, afterwards, by indulgences and the Golden

Year, and finally souls became so cheap that he released one for a farthing.

But all this, too, was of no avail. For although the Pope taught men to depend upon, and trust in, these indulgences [for salvation], yet he rendered the [whole] matter again uncertain. For in his bulls he declares: Whoever would share in the indulgences or a Golden Year must be contrite, and have confessed, and pay money. Now, we have heard above that this contrition and confession are with them uncertain and hypocrisy. Likewise, also no one knew what soul was in purgatory, and if some were therein, no one knew which had properly repented and confessed. Thus he took the precious money [the Pope snatched up the holy pence], and comforted them meanwhile with [led them to confidence in] his power and indulgence, and [then again led them away from that and] directed them again to their uncertain work.

If, now [although], there were some who did not believe [acknowledge] themselves guilty of such actual sins in [committed by] thoughts, words, and works,—as I, and such as I, in monasteries and chapters [fraternities or colleges of priests], wished to be monks and priests, and by fasting, watching, praying, saying Mass, coarse garments, and hard beds, etc., fought against [strove to resist] evil thoughts, and in full earnest and with force wanted to be holy, and yet the hereditary, inborn evil sometimes did in sleep what it is wont to do (as also St. Augustine and Jerome among others confess),—still each one held the other in esteem, so that some, according to our teaching, were regarded as holy, without sin and full of good works, so much so that with this mind we would communicate and sell our good works to others, as being superfluous to us for heaven. This is indeed true, and seals, letters, and instances [that this happened] are at hand.

[When there were such, I say] These did not need repentance. For of what would they repent, since they had not indulged wicked thoughts? What would they confess [concerning words not uttered], since they had avoided words? For what should they render satisfaction, since they were so guiltless of any deed that they could even sell their superfluous righteousness to other poor sinners? Such saints were also the Pharisees and scribes in the time of Christ.

Here comes the fiery angel, St. John [Rev. 10], the true preacher of [true] repentance, and with one [thunderclap and] bolt hurls both [those selling and those buying works] on one heap, and says: Repent! Matt. 3, 2. Now, the former [the poor wretches] imagine: Why, we have repented! The latter [the rest] say: We need no repentance. John says: Repent ye, both of you, for ye are false penitents; so are these [the rest] false saints [or hypocrites], and all of you on either side need the forgiveness of sins, because neither of you know what true sin is not to say anything about your duty to repent of it and shun it. For no one of you is good; you are full of unbelief, stupidity, and ignorance of God and God's will. For here He is present of whose fulness have all we received, and grace for grace, John 1, 16, and without Him no man can be just before God. Therefore, if you wish to repent, repent aright- your penance will not accomplish anything [is nothing]. And you hypocrites, who do not need repentance, you serpents' brood, who has assured you that you will escape the wrath to come? etc. Matt. 3, 7; Luke 3, 7.

In the same way Paul also preaches, Rom. 3, 10-12: There is none righteous, there is none that understandeth, there is none that seeketh after God, there is none that doeth good, no not one; they are all gone out of the way; they are together become unprofitable. And Acts 17, 30: God now commandeth all men everywhere to repent. "All men," he says; no one excepted who is a man. This repentance teaches us to discern sin, namely, that we are altogether lost, and that there is nothing good in us from head to foot [both within and without], and that we must absolutely become new and other men.

This repentance is not piecemeal [partial] and beggarly [fragmentary], like that which does penance for actual sins, nor is it uncertain like that. For it does not debate what is or is not sin, but hurls everything on a heap, and says: All in us is nothing but sin [affirms that, with respect to us, all is simply sin (and there is nothing in us that is not sin and guilt)]. What is the use of [For why do we wish] investigating, dividing, or distinguishing a long time? For this reason, too, this contrition is not [doubtful or] uncertain. For there is nothing left with which we can think of any good thing to pay for sin, but there is only a sure despairing concerning all that we are, think, speak, or do [all hope must be cast aside in respect of everything], etc.

In like manner confession, too, cannot be false, uncertain, or piecemeal [mutilated or fragmentary]. For he who confesses that all in him is nothing but sin comprehends all sins excludes none, forgets none. Neither can the satisfaction be uncertain, because it is not our uncertain, sinful work, but it is the suffering and blood of the [spotless and] innocent Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world.

Of this repentance John preaches, and afterwards Christ in the Gospel, and we also. By this [preaching of] repentance we dash to the ground the Pope and everything that is built upon our good works. For all is built upon a rotten and vain foundation, which is called a good work or law, even though no good work is there, but only wicked works, and no one does the Law (as Christ, John 7, 19, says), but all transgress it. Therefore the building [that is raised upon it] is nothing but falsehood and hypocrisy, even [in the part] where it is most holy and beautiful.

And in Christians this repentance continues until death, because, through the entire life it contends with sin remaining in the flesh, as Paul, Rom. 7, 14-25, [shows] testifies that he wars with the law in his members, etc.; and that, not by his own powers, but by the gift of the Holy Ghost that follows the remission of sins. This gift daily cleanses and sweeps out the remaining sins, and works so as to render man truly pure and holy.

The Pope, the theologians, the jurists, and every other man know nothing of this [from their own reason], but it is a doctrine from heaven, revealed through the Gospel, and must suffer to be called heresy by the godless saints [or hypocrites].

On the other hand, if certain sectarists would arise, some of whom are perhaps already extant, and in the time of the insurrection [of the peasants] came to my own view, holding that all those who had once received the Spirit or the forgiveness of sins, or had become believers, even though they should afterwards sin, would still remain in the faith, and such sin would not harm them, and [hence] crying thus: "Do whatever you please; if you believe, it all amounts to nothing; faith blots out all sins," etc.—they say, besides, that if any one sins after he has received faith and the Spirit, he never truly had the Spirit and faith: I have had before me [seen and heard] many such insane men, and I fear that in some such a devil is still remaining [hiding and dwelling].

It is, accordingly, necessary to know and to teach that when holy men, still having and feeling original sin, also daily repenting of and striving with it, happen to fall into manifest sins, as David into adultery, murder, and blasphemy, that then faith and the Holy Ghost has departed from them [they cast out faith and the Holy Ghost]. For the Holy Ghost does not permit sin to have dominion, to gain the upper hand so as to be accomplished, but represses and restrains it so that it must not do what it wishes. But if it does what it wishes, the Holy Ghost and faith are [certainly] not present. For St. John says, 1 Ep. 3, 9: Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin,... and he cannot sin. And yet it is also the truth when the same St. John says, 1 Ep. 1, 8: If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves and the truth is not in us.

IV. Of the Gospel.

We will now return to the Gospel, which not merely in one way gives us counsel and aid against sin; for God is superabundantly rich [and liberal] in His grace [and goodness]. First, through the spoken Word by which the forgiveness of sins is preached [He commands to be preached] in the whole world; which is the peculiar office of the Gospel. Secondly, through Baptism. Thirdly, through the holy Sacrament of the Altar. Fourthly, through the power of the keys, and also through the mutual conversation and consolation of brethren, Matt. 18, 20: Where two or three are gathered together, etc.

V. Of Baptism.

Baptism is nothing else than the Word of God in the water, commanded by His institution, or, as Paul says, a washing in the Word; as also Augustine says: Let the Word come to the element, and it becomes a Sacrament. And for this reason we do not hold with Thomas and the monastic preachers [or Dominicans] who forget the Word (God's institution) and say that God has imparted to the water a spiritual power, which through the water washes away sin. Nor [do we agree] with Scotus and the Barefooted monks [Minorites or Franciscan monks], who teach that, by the assistance of the divine will, Baptism washes away sins, and that this ablution occurs only through the will of God, and by no means through the Word or water. Of the baptism of children we hold that children ought to be baptized. For they belong to the promised redemption made through Christ, and the Church should administer it [Baptism and the announcement of that promise] to them.

VI. Of the Sacrament of the Altar.

Of the Sacrament of the Altar we hold that bread and wine in the Supper are the true body and blood of Christ, and are given and received not only by the godly, but also by wicked Christians.

And that not only one form is to be given. [For] we do not need that high art [specious wisdom] which is to teach us that under the one form there is as much as under both, as the sophists and the Council of Constance teach. For even if it were true that there is as much under one as under both, yet the one form only is not the entire ordinance and institution [made] ordained and commanded by Christ. And we especially condemn and in God's name execrate those who not only omit both forms but also quite autocratically [tyrannically] prohibit, condemn, and blaspheme them as heresy, and so exalt themselves against and above Christ, our Lord and God [opposing and placing themselves ahead of Christ], etc.

As regards transubstantiation, we care nothing about the sophistical subtlety by which they teach that bread and wine leave or lose their own natural substance, and that there remain only the appearance and color of bread, and not true bread. For it is in perfect agreement with Holy Scriptures that there is, and remains, bread, as Paul himself calls it, 1 Cor. 10, 16: The bread which we break. And 1 Cor. 11, 28: Let him so eat of that bread.

VII. Of the Keys.

The keys are an office and power given by Christ to the Church for binding and loosing sin, not only the gross and well-known sins, but also the subtle, hidden, which are known only to God, as it is written in Ps. 19, 13: Who can understand his errors? And in Rom. 7, 25 St. Paul himself complains that with the flesh he serves the law of sin. For it is not in our power, but belongs to God alone, to judge which, how great, and how many the sins are, as it is written in Ps. 143, 2: Enter not into judgement with Thy servant; for in Thy sight shall no man living be justified. And Paul, 1 Cor. 4, 4, says: For I know nothing by myself; yet am I not hereby justified.

VIII. Of Confession.

Since Absolution or the Power of the Keys is also an aid and consolation against sin and a bad conscience, ordained by Christ [Himself] in the Gospel, Confession or Absolution ought by no means to be abolished in the Church, especially on account of [tender and] timid consciences and on account of the untrained [and capricious] young people, in order that they may be examined, and instructed in the Christian doctrine.

But the enumeration of sins ought to be free to every one, as to what he wishes to enumerate or not to enumerate. For as long as we are in the flesh, we shall not lie when we say: "I am a poor man [I acknowledge that I am a miserable sinner], full of sin." Rom. 7, 23: I see another law in my members, etc. For since private absolution originates in the Office of the Keys, it should not be despised [neglected], but greatly and highly esteemed [of the greatest worth], as [also] all other offices of the Christian Church.

And in those things which concern the spoken, outward Word, we must firmly hold that God grants His Spirit or grace to no one, except through or with the preceding outward Word, in order that we may [thus] be protected against the enthusiasts, i.e., spirits who boast that they have the Spirit without and before the Word, and accordingly judge Scripture or the spoken Word, and explain and stretch it at their pleasure, as Muenzer did, and many still do at the present day, who wish to be acute judges between the Spirit and the letter, and yet know not what they say or declare. For [indeed] the Papacy also is nothing but sheer enthusiasm, by which the Pope boasts that all rights exist in the shrine of his heart, and whatever he decides and commands with [in] his church is spirit and right, even though it is above and contrary to Scripture and the spoken Word.

All this is the old devil and old serpent, who also converted Adam and Eve into enthusiasts, and led them from the outward Word of God to spiritualizing and self-conceit, and nevertheless he accomplished this through other outward words. Just as also our enthusiasts [at the present day] condemn the outward Word, and nevertheless they themselves are not silent, but they fill the world with their pratings and writings, as though, indeed, the Spirit could not come through the writings and spoken word of the apostles, but [first] through their writings and words he must come. Why [then] do not they also omit their own sermons and writings, until the Spirit Himself come to men, without their writings and before them, as they boast that Me has come into them without the preaching of the Scriptures? But of these matters there is not time now to dispute at greater length; we have elsewhere sufficiently urged this subject.

For even those who believe before Baptism, or become believing in Baptism, believe through the preceding outward Word, as the adults, who have come to reason, must first have heard: He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, even though they are at first unbelieving, and receive the Spirit and Baptism ten years afterwards. Cornelius, Acts 10, 1 ff., had heard long before among the Jews of the coming Messiah, through whom he was righteous before God, and in such faith his prayers and alms were acceptable to God (as Luke calls him devout and God-fearing), and without such preceding Word and hearing could not have believed or been righteous. But St. Peter had to reveal to him that the Messiah (in whom, as one that was to come, he had hitherto believed) now had come, lest his faith concerning the coming Messiah hold him captive among the hardened and unbelieving Jews, but know that he was now to be saved by the present Messiah, and must not, with the [rabble of the] Jews deny nor persecute Him.

In a word, enthusiasm inheres in Adam and his children from the beginning [from the first fall] to the end of the world, [its poison] having been implanted and infused into them by the old dragon, and is the origin, power [life], and strength of all heresy, especially of that of the Papacy and Mahomet.

Therefore we ought and must constantly maintain this point, that God does not wish to deal with us otherwise than through the spoken Word and the Sacraments. It is the devil himself whatsoever is extolled as Spirit without the Word and Sacraments. For God wished to appear even to Moses through the burning bush and spoken Word; and no prophet neither Elijah nor Elisha, received the Spirit without the Ten Commandments [or spoken Word]. Neither was John the Baptist conceived without the preceding word of Gabriel, nor did he leap in his mother's womb without the voice of Mary. And Peter says, 2. Ep. 1, 21: The prophecy came not by the will of man; but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. Without the outward Word, however, they were not holy, much less would the Holy Ghost have moved them to speak when they still were unholy [or profane]; for they were holy, says he, since the Holy Ghost spake through them.

IX. Of Excommunication.

The greater excommunication, as the Pope calls it, we regard only as a civil penalty, and it does not concern us ministers of the Church. But the lesser, that is, the true Christian excommunication, consists in this, that manifest and obstinate sinners are not admitted to the Sacrament and other communion of the Church until they amend their lives and avoid sin. And ministers ought not to mingle secular punishments with this ecclesiastical punishment, or excommunication.

X. Of Ordination and the Call.

If the bishops would be true bishops [would rightly discharge their office], and would devote themselves to the Church and the Gospel, it might be granted to them for the sake of love and unity, but not from necessity, to ordain and confirm us and our preachers; omitting, however, all comedies and spectacular display [deceptions, absurdities, and appearances] of unchristian [heathenish] parade and pomp. But because they neither are, nor wish to be, true bishops, but worldly lords and princes, who will neither preach, nor teach, nor baptize, nor administer the Lord's Supper, nor perform any work or office of the Church, and, moreover, persecute and condemn those who discharge these functions, having been called to do so, the Church ought not on their account to remain without ministers [to be forsaken by or deprived of ministers].

Therefore, as the ancient examples of the Church and the Fathers teach us, we ourselves will and ought to ordain suitable persons to this office; and, even according to their own laws, they have not the right to forbid or prevent us. For their laws say that those ordained even by heretics should be declared [truly] ordained and stay ordained [and that such ordination must not be changed], as St. Jerome writes of the Church at Alexandria, that at first it was governed in common by priests and preachers, without bishops.

XI. Of the Marriage of Priests.

To prohibit marriage, and to burden the divine order of priests with perpetual celibacy, they have had neither authority nor right [they have done out of malice, without any honest reason], but have acted like antichristian, tyrannical, desperate scoundrels [have performed the work of antichrist, of tyrants and the worst knaves], and have thereby caused all kinds of horrible, abominable, innumerable sins of unchastity [depraved lusts], in which they still wallow. Now, as little as we or they have been given the power to make a woman out of a man or a man out of a woman, or to nullify either sex, so little have they had the power to [sunder and] separate such creatures of God, or to forbid them from living [and cohabiting] honestly in marriage with one another. Therefore we are unwilling to assent to their abominable celibacy, nor will we [even] tolerate it, but we wish to have marriage free as God has instituted [and ordained] it, and we wish neither to rescind nor hinder His work; for Paul says, 1 Tim. 4, 1 ff., that this [prohibition of marriage] is a doctrine of devils.

XII. Of the Church.

We do not concede to them that they are the Church, and [in truth] they are not [the Church]; nor will we listen to those things which, under the name of Church, they enjoin or forbid. For, thank God, [to-day] a child seven years old knows what the Church is, namely, the holy believers and lambs who hear the voice of their Shepherd. For the children pray thus: I believe in one holy [catholic or] Christian Church. This holiness does not consist in albs, tonsures, long gowns, and other of their ceremonies devised by them beyond Holy Scripture, but in the Word of God and true faith.

XIII. How One is Justified before God, and of Good Works.

What I have hitherto and constantly taught concerning this I know not how to change in the least, namely, that by faith, as St. Peter says, we acquire a new and clean heart, and God will and does account us entirely righteous and holy for the sake of Christ, our Mediator. And although sin in the flesh has not yet been altogether removed or become dead, yet He will not punish or remember it.

And such faith, renewal, and forgiveness of sins is followed by good works. And what there is still sinful or imperfect also in them shall not be accounted as sin or defect, even [and that, too] for Christ's sake; but the entire man, both as to his person and his works, is to be called and to be righteous and holy from pure grace and mercy, shed upon us [unfolded] and spread over us in Christ. Therefore we cannot boast of many merits and works, if they are viewed apart from grace and mercy, but as it is written, 1 Cor. 1, 31: He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord, namely, that he has a gracious God. For thus all is well. We say, besides, that if good works do not follow, faith is false and not true.

XIV. Of Monastic Vows.

As monastic vows directly conflict with the first chief article, they must be absolutely abolished. For it is of them that Christ says, Matt. 24, 5. 23 ff.: I am Christ, etc. For he who makes a vow to live as a monk believes that he will enter upon a mode of life holier than ordinary Christians lead, and wishes to earn heaven by his own works not only for himself, but also for others; this is to deny Christ. And they boast from their St. Thomas that a monastic vow is equal to Baptism. This is blasphemy [against God].

XV. Of Human Traditions.

The declaration of the Papists that human traditions serve for the remission of sins, or merit salvation, is [altogether] unchristian and condemned, as Christ says Matt. 15, 9: In vain they do worship Me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men. Again, Titus 1, 14: That turn from the truth. Again, when they declare that it is a mortal sin if one breaks these ordinances [does not keep these statutes], this, too, is not right.

These are the articles on which I must stand, and, God willing, shall stand even to my death; and I do not know how to change or to yield anything in them. If any one wishes to yield anything, let him do it at the peril of his conscience.

Lastly, there still remains the Pope's bag of impostures concerning foolish and childish articles, as, the dedication of churches, the baptism of bells, the baptism of the altarstone, and the inviting of sponsors to these rites, who would make donations towards them. Such baptizing is a reproach and mockery of Holy Baptism, hence should not be tolerated. Furthermore, concerning the consecration of wax-tapers, palm-branches, cakes, oats, [herbs,] spices, etc., which indeed, cannot be called consecrations, but are sheer mockery and fraud. And such deceptions there are without number, which we commend for adoration to their god and to themselves, until they weary of it. We will [ought to] have nothing to do with them.

APPENDIX C-23
(to The Scriptures of Islam)

TWO APOCRYPHAL SHI'ITE SURAS
1. Al-Nurayn (The Two Lights)
2. Al-Walaya (The Guardian)
Source: William St. Clair Tisdall,
"Shi'ah Additions To The Koran,"
The Moslem World, Vol. III,
No. 3, July, 1913, 228.
In: The Critical Qur'an, 2021
Translation: Robert Spencer, 2021
Estimated Range of Dating: 1500-1600 A.D.

(Introduction: Around 1655, the Persian-language book Dabestan-e Mazaheb (School of Religions) was published in India, containing the texts of two chapters of the Qur'an, Sura al-Walaya ("The Guardian") and Sura al-Nurayn ("The Two Lights").

These two chapters are clearly meant to bolster the Shi'ite case. The guardian is Ali, and the two lights are obviously Muhammad and Ali. However, these two suras are almost certainly forgeries, and not only Sunnis, but Shi'ites also consider them inauthentic. This is in part because there is no mention of these suras in extant literature before the publication of Dabestan-e Mazaheb, although Arabic versions of both were discovered in Bankipur, India, in 1912 in a Qur'an manuscript that was at least two hundred or three hundred years old. (William St. Clair Tisdall, "Shi'ah Additions To The Koran," The Moslem World, Vol. III, No. 3, July, 1913, 228.)

Shi'ites also generally reject these two suras and other Qur'anic variants, even those that bolster their own case against the Sunnis, because they accept the mainstream Sunni Uthmanic Qur'anic text, although some say the order of the suras should be changed. However, the idea that Sunnis had altered the text of the Qur'an to remove passages that proved the rightness of the Shi'ite case persisted among some Shi'ites until at least the early eleventh century. (Moojan Momen, An Introduction to Shi'i Islam: The History and Doctrines of Twelver Shi'ism (New Haven: Yale University Press, 1985), 172.)

Although the Bankipur manuscript's pro-Shi'ite variations in the Qur'anic text may reflect or be derived from traditions predating that time, the historian and philologist William St. Clair Tisdall considers all of them to be forgeries with the "possible exception" of the sura of the Two Lights. He explains that "the style is imitated from that of the Koran, but not always very successfully. There are some grammatical errors, unless these are due to the transcriber." He also notes that some words are used with meanings they only acquired after the Qur'an was traditionally thought to have been compiled and states that the repetition of Qur'anic passages demonstrates "the writer's determination to prove what he wished to prove at all costs." (Tisdall, "Shi'ah Additions to the Koran," 229.)

However, there are so many grammatical errors and repetitions in the Qur'an as it stands that these cannot make the case for the inauthenticity of these two suras. The strongest case against them is based upon their relatively late appearance and clear apologetic intent, along with the fact that even though these passages are meant to establish the Shi'ite case, the Shi'ites reject them. Nevertheless, their very existence is noteworthy, as Islam's theology of the perfection and unchangeable character of the Qur'an did not deter their author from making edits in the holy text; they could be the product of a time when the Qur'anic text was still undergoing revision, and one was not risking one's life by making changes. If they originated later, that their author would have dared produce them is all the more striking in light of what were then and still are the prevailing beliefs and assumptions about the immutability of the Qur'anic text.

In any case, even if they originated close to the time of the publication of Dabestan-e Mazaheb, and the Arabic version is no older than the Persian, they attest to the fact that in some quarters, changes were indeed made in the Qur'anic text, and that text has never been static.)

Al-Nurayn (The Two Lights)

IN THE NAME OF ALLAH, THE COMPASSIONATE, THE MERCIFUL.

1 O you who have believed, believe in the two lights* which we have sent down. They recite my signs to you, and they both warn you of the punishment of a great day. (* The two lights are Muhammad and Ali, whom Shi'ites believe to be Muhammad's designated and rightful successor.)

2 Two lights, one of them from the other, and indeed we are the hearer, the knower.

3 Indeed those who faithfully perform their covenant with Allah and his messenger in his family, to them belong the gardens of delight. (Here begins a collection of Qur'an quotations and paraphrases, assembled apparently at random with little regard for context. This also may be an attempt to imitate Qur'anic style and produce a "sura like it," answering the challenge of 2:23 and 10:38, but it is more likely that this pastiche of Qur'anic passages is meant to give the Shi'ite claims embedded within it an air of authenticity.)

4 And those who have disbelieved after that they have believed, through their breaking their covenant and what the messenger agreed upon with them, shall be cast into the blaze,

5 Indeed those who have wronged their own souls and have rebelled against the deputy of the messenger, those men shall be made drink of boiling water. Indeed it is Allah who has brightened the heavens and the earth with whatever he has willed, and has selected from the angels and from the messengers, and has made some of the believers guardians over mankind, Allah does whatever he wills. There is no God but he, the compassionate, the merciful.

6 And indeed those who were before them practiced deceit with their messengers, therefore I punished them for their deceit: indeed my seizing is severe, painful.

7 Indeed Allah destroyed Aad and Thamud because of what they had deserved, and he has made them a reminder to you. Will you not, therefore, fear Allah?

8 And Pharaoh, because he was very obstinate towards Moses and Aaron, he drowned him and all who followed him,

9 So that it might be a sign to you, and indeed most of you are sinful.

10 Indeed Allah will gather them together in the day of gathering, and they will not be able to answer when they are questioned.

11 Indeed, the blaze (al-jahim) will be their dwelling, and indeed Allah is all-knowing, all-wise.

12 O messenger, announce my warning, accordingly they will know.

13 They are, indeed, lost who have become renegades from my signs and my commandment.

14 The comparison of those who faithfully perform their covenant with you is that I have rewarded them with the gardens of delight.

15 Indeed Allah is certainly the Lord of pardon and of a great reward,

16 And indeed Ali is among the pious,

17 And indeed we will certainly pay him all of what he deserves on the day of judgement,

18 Nor are we unaware of his being wronged.

19 And we have honored him above all your family,

20 For he and his seed are certainly patient.

21 And indeed their opponent is the imam of sinners. (In Shi'ite Islam, the imam is a successor of Muhammad and a bearer of something of his prophetic spirit; the "imam of sinners" is the Sunni caliph.)

22 Say to those who have disbelieved after they believed, You have sought the adornment of the lower life, and were over-hasty about it, and you forgot what Allah and his messenger promised you, and you broke the covenants after confirming them. And we have indeed made the comparison for you beforehand, so that by chance you might be guided rightly.

23 O messenger, we have indeed sent down to you clear signs; in them whoever faithfully performs it is a believer, and whoever abandons it after you, they will be clear.

24 Therefore turn away from them, indeed they are renegades,

25 And indeed we summon them on a day when nothing will ease them, and they will not be granted mercy.

26 Indeed in the blaze they will have a place from which they will not depart.

27 Therefore praise the name of your Lord, and be among the worshippers.

28 And indeed, we certainly sent Moses, and Aaron when he wished to appoint a successor, consequently they rebelled against Aaron. Patience consequently was beautiful. We, therefore, made apes and pigs out of them, and we cursed them until a day when they will be raised up.

29 Be patient, therefore; then they will perceive clearly.

30 And indeed, we have surely brought you the command, as to those of the messengers who were before you,

31 And we have made for you from among them a deputy, so that by chance they may return.

32 And whoever turns away from my decree, then indeed I am his place of return, consequently they will surely enjoy their unbelief only a little. Therefore you will not inquire about the covenant-breakers.

33 O messenger, we have indeed set for you a covenant on the necks of those who have believed. Accept it, therefore, and be among the grateful.

34 Indeed Ali is an adorer by night, a worshipper, he fears the next world and he hopes for the reward of his Lord. Say, Are they equal, those who have acted wrongfully? And they will know it in my punishment.

35 He will place iron collars about their necks, and they will be remorseful for what they did.

36 Indeed we give you good news of his seed, the upright ones.

37 And indeed they will not oppose our decree.

38 Therefore there will be blessing and mercy from me upon them, living and dead, on a day when they will be raised up.

39 And my wrath will be upon those who transgress against them after you, indeed they have become a people of evil, perishing.

40 And upon those who have walked their walk there will be mercy from me, and they will be in the upper rooms, safe.

41 And praise be to Allah, the Lord of the worlds.

Al-Walaya (The Guardian)

IN THE NAME OF ALLAH, THE COMPASSIONATE, THE MERCIFUL.

1 O you who have believed, believe in the prophet and in the guardian, both of whom we have raised up, they will guide you to the right path.

2 A prophet and a guardian are two of them from one another, and I am the knower, the well-informed.

3 Indeed those who faithfully perform Allah's covenant, to them belong the gardens of delight.

4 And those who, when our signs are recited to them, have considered our signs to be lies,

5 Indeed to them belongs a great place in the blaze, when it is proclaimed to them on the day of the resurrection, Where are the wrongdoers, those who consider the messengers liars?

6 He did not create them, the messengers, except in the truth, and Allah was not going to reveal them until an appointed time near at hand.

7 And praise your Lord and give thanks to him, and Ali is among the witnesses.

APPENDIX C-24
(to Artefacts and Historical Documents)

ON THE JEWISH QUESTION
Works of Karl Marx 1844
Author: Karl Marx, Autumn 1843
in Deutsch-Französische Jahrbücher
First Published: February, 1844

("On the Jewish Question" is a response by Karl Marx to then-current debates over the Jewish question. Marx wrote the piece in 1843, and it was first published in Paris in 1844 under the German title "Zur Judenfrage" in the Deutsch–Französische Jahrbücher.

The essay criticizes two studies by Marx's fellow Young Hegelian, Bruno Bauer, on the attempt by Jews to achieve political emancipation in Prussia. Bauer argued that Jews could achieve political emancipation only by relinquishing their particular religious consciousness since political emancipation requires a secular state; Bauer assumes that there is not any "space" remaining for social identities such as religion. According to Bauer, such religious demands are incompatible with the idea of the "Rights of Man". True political emancipation, for Bauer, requires the abolition of religion.

Marx uses Bauer's essay as an opportunity for presenting his own analysis of liberal rights, arguing that Bauer is mistaken in his assumption that in a "secular state", religion will no longer play a prominent role in social life. Marx gives the pervasiveness of religion in the United States as an example, which, unlike Prussia, had no state religion. In Marx's analysis, the "secular state" is not opposed to religion, but rather actually presupposes it. The removal of religious or property qualifications for citizens does not mean the abolition of religion or property, but only introduces a way of regarding individuals in abstraction from them.

Marx then moves beyond the question of religious freedom to his real concern with Bauer's analysis of "political emancipation". Marx concludes that while individuals can be "spiritually" and "politically" free in a secular state, they can still be bound to material constraints on freedom by economic inequality, an assumption that would later form the basis of his critiques of capitalism.

A number of scholars and commentators regard "On the Jewish Question", and in particular its second section, which addresses Bauer's work "The Capacity of Present-day Jews and Christians to Become Free", as antisemitic, although others do not.

Synopsis of content

In Marx's view, Bauer fails to distinguish between political emancipation and human emancipation. As noted above, political emancipation in a modern state does not require Jews (or Christians) to renounce religion; only complete human emancipation would involve the disappearance of religion, but that is not yet possible "within the hitherto existing world order".

In the second part of the essay, Marx disputes Bauer's "theological" analysis of Judaism and its relation to Christianity. Bauer states that the renouncing of religion would be especially difficult for Jews. In Bauer's view, Judaism was a primitive stage in the development of Christianity. Hence, to achieve freedom by renouncing religion, Christians would have to surmount only one stage, whereas Jews would need to surmount two.

In response to this, Marx argues that the Jewish religion does not have the significance Bauer's analysis attributes, because it is merely a spiritual reflection of Jewish economic life. This is the starting point of a complex and somewhat metaphorical argument that draws on the stereotype of "the Jew" as a financially apt "huckster" and posits a special connection between Judaism as a religion and the economy of contemporary bourgeois society. Thus, the Jewish religion does not need to disappear in society, as Bauer argues, because it is actually a natural part of it. Having thus figuratively equated "practical Judaism" with "huckstering and money", Marx concludes, that "the Christians have become Jews"; and, ultimately, it is mankind (both Christians and Jews) that needs to emancipate itself from ("practical") Judaism.

History of publication

"Zur Judenfrage" was first published by Marx and Arnold Ruge in February 1844 in the Deutsch–Französische Jahrbücher, a journal which ran only one issue. From December 1843 to October 1844, Bruno Bauer published the monthly Allgemeine Literatur-Zeitung (General Literary Gazette) in Charlottenburg (now part of Berlin). In it, he responded to the critique of his own essays on the Jewish question by Marx and others. Then, in 1845, Friedrich Engels and Marx published a polemic critique of the Young Hegelians titled The Holy Family. In parts of the book, Marx again presented his views dissenting from Bauer's on the Jewish question and on political and human emancipation.

A French translation appeared 1850 in Paris in Hermann Ewerbeck's book Qu'est-ce que la bible d'après la nouvelle philosophie allemande? (What is the Bible according to the new German philosophy?).

In 1879, historian Heinrich von Treitschke published an article "Unsere Aussichten" ("Our Prospects"), in which he demanded that the Jews should assimilate into German culture, and described Jewish immigrants as a danger for Germany. This article stirred up controversy, to which the newspaper Sozialdemokrat, edited by Eduard Bernstein, reacted by republishing almost the entire second part of "Zur Judenfrage" in June and July 1881.

The entire essay was re-published yet again in October 1890 in the Berliner Volksblatt, then edited by Wilhelm Liebknecht.

In 1926, an English translation by H. J. Stenning, with the title "On the Jewish Question", appeared in a collection of essays by Marx.

Another English translation of "Zur Judenfrage" was published (along with other articles written by Marx) in 1959, and titled, A World Without Jews. The editor, Dagobert D. Runes, intended to demonstrate Marx's alleged antisemitism. Runes' text was extensively criticized by Louis Harap for grossly misrepresenting Marx's views.

Interpretations

Marx as antisemite

"On the Jewish Question" is primarily a critique of liberal rights, rather than a criticism of Judaism, and that apparently antisemitic passages such as "Money is the jealous god of Israel, in face of which no other god may exist" should be read in that context. However, Marx's strong language clearly reveals his disdain towards his own Jewish origin.

The essay is a profoundly ideological text, committed to the struggle for Communism, but without being Marxist; so it cannot, theoretically, be identified with the later texts which were to define historical materialism". Marx considered Jews to be enthusiastic capitalists. "On the Jewish Question" is an example of what he considers to be Marx's "early antisemitism". Marx argues in the essay that the modern commercialised world is the triumph of Judaism, a pseudo-religion whose god is money. Marx clearly was embarrassed by his Jewish background and used Jews as a "yardstick of evil".

In part II of the essay, Marx refers to Thomas Müntzer's 1524 pamphlet, Apology, attacking Martin Luther. Müntzer wrote, "Look ye! Our sovereign and rulers are at the bottom of all usury, thievery, and robbery; they take all created things into possession. The fish in the water, birds in the air, the products of the soil – all must be theirs (Isaiah v.)". Marx's appreciation of Müntzer's position has been interpreted as a sympathetic view of Marx towards animals. It is also possible that Müntzer was referring to the temerity of sovereign rulers who would take even that which God had created (for all of mankind and the world) as their own.

In his 1984 article "Marxism vs. the Jews" for Commentary, English journalist Paul Johnson references the second part of Marx's essay as evidence of Marx's antisemitism:

"Let us consider the actual, worldly Jew – not the Sabbath Jew, as Bauer does, but the everyday Jew. Let us not look for the secret of the Jew in his religion, but let us look for the secret of his religion in the real Jew. What is the secular basis of Judaism? Practical need, self-interest. What is the worldly religion of the Jew? Huckstering. What is his worldly God? Money [...] An organisation of society which would abolish the preconditions for huckstering, and therefore the possibility of huckstering, would make the Jew impossible [...] The Jew has emancipated himself in a Jewish manner, not only because he has acquired financial power, but also because, through him and also apart from him, money has become a world power and the practical Jewish spirit has become the practical spirit of the Christian nations. The Jews have emancipated themselves insofar as the Christians have become Jews [...] Money is the jealous god of Israel, in face of which no other god may exist. Money degrades all the gods of man – and turns them into commodities [...] The bill of exchange is the real god of the Jew. His god is only an illusory bill of exchange [...] The chimerical nationality of the Jew is the nationality of the merchant, of the man of money in general.

Antisemitism scholar Robert Wistrich stated "the net result of Marx's essay is to reinforce a traditional anti-Jewish stereotype – the identification of the Jews with money-making – in the sharpest possible manner". Bernard Lewis described "On the Jewish Question" as "one of the classics of antisemitic propaganda.")

THE JEWISH QUESTION

PART 1

[Bruno Bauer, The Jewish Question, Braunschweig, 1843.]

The German Jews desire emancipation. What kind of emancipation do they desire? Civic, political emancipation.

Bruno Bauer replies to them: No one in Germany is politically emancipated. We ourselves are not free. How are we to free you? You Jews are egoists if you demand a special emancipation for yourselves as Jews. As Germans, you ought to work for the political emancipation of Germany, and as human beings, for the emancipation of mankind, and you should feel the particular kind of your oppression and your shame not as an exception to the rule, but on the contrary as a confirmation of the rule.

Or do the Jews demand the same status as Christian subjects of the state? In that case, they recognize that the Christian state is justified and they recognize, too, the regime of general oppression. Why should they disapprove of their special yoke if they approve of the general yoke? Why should the German be interested in the liberation of the Jew, if the Jew is not interested in the liberation of the German?

The Christian state knows only privileges. In this state, the Jew has the privilege of being a Jew. As a Jew, he has rights which the Christians do not have. Why should he want rights which he does not have, but which the Christians enjoy?

In wanting to be emancipated from the Christian state, the Jew is demanding that the Christian state should give up its religious prejudice. Does he, the Jew, give up his religious prejudice? Has he, then, the right to demand that someone else should renounce his religion?

By its very nature, the Christian state is incapable of emancipating the Jew; but, adds Bauer, by his very nature the Jew cannot be emancipated. So long as the state is Christian and the Jew is Jewish, the one is as incapable of granting emancipation as the other is of receiving it.

The Christian state can behave towards the Jew only in the way characteristic of the Christian state – that is, by granting privileges, by permitting the separation of the Jew from the other subjects, but making him feel the pressure of all the other separate spheres of society, and feel it all the more intensely because he is in religious opposition to the dominant religion. But the Jew, too, can behave towards the state only in a Jewish way – that is, by treating it as something alien to him, by counterposing his imaginary nationality to the real nationality, by counterposing his illusory law to the real law, by deeming himself justified in separating himself from mankind, by abstaining on principle from taking part in the historical movement, by putting his trust in a future which has nothing in common with the future of mankind in general, and by seeing himself as a member of the Jewish people, and the Jewish people as the chosen people.

On what grounds, then, do you Jews want emancipation? On account of your religion? It is the mortal enemy of the state religion. As citizens? In Germany, there are no citizens. As human beings? But you are no more human beings than those to whom you appeal.

Bauer has posed the question of Jewish emancipation in a new form, after giving a critical analysis of the previous formulations and solutions of the question. What, he asks, is the nature of the Jew who is to be emancipated and of the Christian state that is to emancipate him? He replies by a critique of the Jewish religion, he analyzes the religious opposition between Judaism and Christianity, he elucidates the essence of the Christian state – and he does all this audaciously, trenchantly, wittily, and with profundity, in a style of writing that is as precise as it is pithy and vigorous.

How, then, does Bauer solve the Jewish question? What is the result? The formulation of a question is its solution. The critique of the Jewish question is the answer to the Jewish question. The summary, therefore, is as follows:

We must emancipate ourselves before we can emancipate others.

The most rigid form of the opposition between the Jew and the Christian is the religious opposition. How is an opposition resolved? By making it impossible. How is religious opposition made impossible? By abolishing religion. As soon as Jew and Christian recognize that their respective religions are no more than different stages in the development of the human mind, different snake skins cast off by history, and that man is the snake who sloughed them, the relation of Jew and Christian is no longer religious but is only a critical, scientific, and human relation. Science, then, constitutes their unity. But, contradictions in science are resolved by science itself.

The German Jew, in particular, is confronted by the general absence of political emancipation and the strongly marked Christian character of the state. In Bauer's conception, however, the Jewish question has a universal significance, independent of specifically German conditions. It is the question of the relation of religion to the state, of the contradiction between religious constraint and political emancipation. Emancipation from religion is laid down as a condition, both to the Jew who wants to be emancipated politically, and to the state which is to effect emancipation and is itself to be emancipated.

"Very well," it is said, and the Jew himself says it, "the Jew is to become emancipated not as a Jew, not because he is a Jew, not because he possesses such an excellent, universally human principle of morality; on the contrary, the Jew will retreat behind the citizen and be a citizen, although he is a Jew and is to remain a Jew. That is to say, he is and remains a Jew, although he is a citizen and lives in universally human conditions: his Jewish and restricted nature triumphs always in the end over his human and political obligations. The prejudice remains in spite of being outstripped by general principles. But if it remains, then, on the contrary, it outstrips everything else."

"Only sophistically, only apparently, would the Jew be able to remain a Jew in the life of the state. Hence, if he wanted to remain a Jew, the mere appearance would become the essential and would triumph; that is to say, his life in the state would be only a semblance or only a temporary exception to the essential and the rule." ("The Capacity of Present-Day Jews and Christians to Become Free," Einundzwanzig Bogen, pp. 57)

Let us hear, on the other hand, how Bauer presents the task of the state.

"France," he says, "has recently shown us" (Proceedings of the Chamber of Deputies, December 26, 1840) "in the connection with the Jewish question – just as it has continually done in all other political questions – the spectacle of a life which is free, but which revokes its freedom by law, hence declaring it to be an appearance, and on the other hand contradicting its free laws by its action." (The Jewish Question, p. 64)

"In France, universal freedom is not yet the law, the Jewish question too has not yet been solved, because legal freedom – the fact that all citizens are equal – is restricted in actual life, which is still dominated and divided by religious privileges, and this lack of freedom in actual life reacts on law and compels the latter to sanction the division of the citizens, who as such are free, into oppressed and oppressors." (p. 65)

When, therefore, would the Jewish question be solved for France?

"The Jew, for example, would have ceased to be a Jew if he did not allow himself to be prevented by his laws from fulfilling his duty to the state and his fellow citizens, that is, for example, if on the Sabbath he attended the Chamber of Deputies and took part in the official proceedings. Every religious privilege, and therefore also the monopoly of a privileged church, would have been abolished altogether, and if some or many persons, or even the overwhelming majority, still believed themselves bound to fulfil religious duties, this fulfilment ought to be left to them as a purely private matter." (p. 65)

"There is no longer any religion when there is no longer any privileged religion. Take from religion its exclusive power and it will no longer exist." (p. 66)

"Just as M. Martin du Nord saw the proposal to omit mention of Sunday in the law as a motion to declare that Christianity has ceased to exist, with equal reason (and this reason is very well founded) the declaration that the law of the Sabbath is no longer binding on the Jew would be a proclamation abolishing Judaism." (p. 71)

Bauer, therefore, demands, on the one hand, that the Jew should renounce Judaism, and that mankind in general should renounce religion, in order to achieve civic emancipation. On the other hand, he quite consistently regards the political abolition of religion as the abolition of religion as such. The state which presupposes religion is not yet a true, real state.

"Of course, the religious notion affords security to the state. But to what state? To what kind of state?" (p. 97)

At this point, the one-sided formulation of the Jewish question becomes evident.

It was by no means sufficient to investigate: Who is to emancipate? Who is to be emancipated? Criticism had to investigate a third point. It had to inquire: What kind of emancipation is in question? What conditions follow from the very nature of the emancipation that is demanded? Only the criticism of political emancipation itself would have been the conclusive criticism of the Jewish question and its real merging in the "general question of time."

Because Bauer does not raise the question to this level, he becomes entangled in contradictions. He puts forward conditions which are not based on the nature of political emancipation itself. He raises questions which are not part of his problem, and he solves problems which leave this question unanswered. When Bauer says of the opponents of Jewish emancipation: "Their error was only that they assumed the Christian state to be the only true one and did not subject it to the same criticism that they applied to Judaism" (op. cit., p. 3), we find that his error lies in the fact that he subjects to criticism only the "Christian state," not the "state as such," that he does not investigate the relation of political emancipation to human emancipation and, therefore, puts forward conditions which can be explained only by uncritical confusion of political emancipation with general human emancipation. If Bauer asks the Jews: Have you, from your standpoint, the right to want political emancipation? We ask the converse question: Does the standpoint of political emancipation give the right to demand from the Jew the abolition of Judaism and from man the abolition of religion?

The Jewish question acquires a different form depending on the state in which the Jew lives. In Germany, where there is no political state, no state as such, the Jewish question is a purely theological one. The Jew finds himself in religious opposition to the state, which recognizes Christianity as its basis. This state is a theologian ex professo. Criticism here is criticism of theology, a double-edged criticism – criticism of Christian theology and of Jewish theology. Hence, we continue to operate in the sphere of theology, however much we may operate critically within it.

In France, a constitutional state, the Jewish question is a question of constitutionalism, the question of the incompleteness of political emancipation. Since the semblance of a state religion is retained here, although in a meaningless and self-contradictory formula, that of a religion of the majority, the relation of the Jew to the state retains the semblance of a religious, theological opposition.

Only in the North American states – at least, in some of them – does the Jewish question lose its theological significance and become a really secular question. Only where the political state exists in its completely developed form can the relation of the Jew, and of the religious man in general, to the political state, and therefore the relation of religion to the state, show itself in its specific character, in its purity. The criticism of this relation ceases to be theological criticism as soon as the state ceases to adopt a theological attitude toward religion, as soon as it behaves towards religion as a state – i.e., politically. Criticism, then, becomes criticism of the political state. At this point, where the question ceases to be theological, Bauer's criticism ceases to be critical.

"In the United States there is neither a state religion nor a religion declared to be that of the majority, nor the predominance of one cult over another. The state stands aloof from all cults." (Marie ou l'esclavage aux Etats-Unis, etc., by G. de Beaumont, Paris, 1835, p. 214)

Indeed, there are some North American states where "the constitution does not impose any religious belief or religious practice as a condition of political rights." (op. cit., p. 225)

Nevertheless, "in the United States people do not believe that a man without religion could be an honest man." (op. cit., p. 224)

Nevertheless, North America is pre-eminently the country of religiosity, as Beaumont, Tocqueville, and the Englishman Hamilton unanimously assure us. The North American states, however, serve us only as an example. The question is: What is the relation of complete political emancipation to religion? If we find that even in the country of complete political emancipation, religion not only exists, but displays a fresh and vigorous vitality, that is proof that the existence of religion is not in contradiction to the perfection of the state. Since, however, the existence of religion is the existence of defect, the source of this defect can only be sought in the nature of the state itself. We no longer regard religion as the cause, but only as the manifestation of secular narrowness. Therefore, we explain the religious limitations of the free citizen by their secular limitations. We do not assert that they must overcome their religious narrowness in order to get rid of their secular restrictions, we assert that they will overcome their religious narrowness once they get rid of their secular restrictions. We do not turn secular questions into theological ones. History has long enough been merged in superstition, we now merge superstition in history. The question of the relation of political emancipation to religion becomes for us the question of the relation of political emancipation to human emancipation. We criticize the religious weakness of the political state by criticizing the political state in its secular form, apart from its weaknesses as regards religion. The contradiction between the state and a particular religion, for instance Judaism, is given by us a human form as the contradiction between the state and particular secular elements; the contradiction between the state and religion in general as the contradiction between the state and its presuppositions in general.

The political emancipation of the Jew, the Christian, and, in general, of religious man, is the emancipation of the state from Judaism, from Christianity, from religion in general. In its own form, in the manner characteristic of its nature, the state as a state emancipates itself from religion by emancipating itself from the state religion – that is to say, by the state as a state not professing any religion, but, on the contrary, asserting itself as a state. The political emancipation from religion is not a religious emancipation that has been carried through to completion and is free from contradiction, because political emancipation is not a form of human emancipation which has been carried through to completion and is free from contradiction.

The limits of political emancipation are evident at once from the fact that the state can free itself from a restriction without man being really free from this restriction, that the state can be a free state [pun on word Freistaat, which also means republic] without man being a free man. Bauer himself tacitly admits this when he lays down the following condition for political emancipation:

"Every religious privilege, and therefore also the monopoly of a privileged church, would have been abolished altogether, and if some or many persons, or even the overwhelming majority, still believed themselves bound to fulfil religious duties, this fulfilment ought to be left to them as a purely private matter." [The Jewish Question, p. 65]

It is possible, therefore, for the state to have emancipated itself from religion even if the overwhelming majority is still religious. And the overwhelming majority does not cease to be religious through being religious in private.

But, the attitude of the state, and of the republic [free state] in particular, to religion is, after all, only the attitude to religion of the men who compose the state. It follows from this that man frees himself through the medium of the state, that he frees himself politically from a limitation when, in contradiction with himself, he raises himself above this limitation in an abstract, limited, and partial way. It follows further that, by freeing himself politically, man frees himself in a roundabout way, through an intermediary, although an essential intermediary. It follows, finally, that man, even if he proclaims himself an atheist through the medium of the state – that is, if he proclaims the state to be atheist – still remains in the grip of religion, precisely because he acknowledges himself only by a roundabout route, only through an intermediary. Religion is precisely the recognition of man in a roundabout way, through an intermediary. The state is the intermediary between man and man's freedom. Just as Christ is the intermediary to whom man transfers the burden of all his divinity, all his religious constraint, so the state is the intermediary to whom man transfers all his non-divinity and all his human unconstraint.

The political elevation of man above religion shares all the defects and all the advantages of political elevation in general. The state as a state annuls, for instance, private property, man declares by political means that private property is abolished as soon as the property qualification for the right to elect or be elected is abolished, as has occurred in many states of North America. Hamilton quite correctly interprets this fact from a political point of view as meaning:

"the masses have won a victory over the property owners and financial wealth." [Thomas Hamilton, Men and Manners in America, 2 vols, Edinburgh, 1833, p. 146]

Is not private property abolished in idea if the non-property owner has become the legislator for the property owner? The property qualification for the suffrage is the last political form of giving recognition to private property.

Nevertheless, the political annulment of private property not only fails to abolish private property but even presupposes it. The state abolishes, in its own way, distinctions of birth, social rank, education, occupation, when it declares that birth, social rank, education, occupation, are non-political distinctions, when it proclaims, without regard to these distinction, that every member of the nation is an equal participant in national sovereignty, when it treats all elements of the real life of the nation from the standpoint of the state. Nevertheless, the state allows private property, education, occupation, to act in their way – i.e., as private property, as education, as occupation, and to exert the influence of their special nature. Far from abolishing these real distinctions, the state only exists on the presupposition of their existence; it feels itself to be a political state and asserts its universality only in opposition to these elements of its being. Hegel, therefore, defines the relation of the political state to religion quite correctly when he says:

"In order [...] that the state should come into existence as the self-knowing, moral reality of the mind, its distinction from the form of authority and faith is essential. But this distinction emerges only insofar as the ecclesiastical aspect arrives at a separation within itself. It is only in this way that the state, above the particular churches, has achieved and brought into existence universality of thought, which is the principle of its form" (Hegel's Philosophy of Right, 1st edition, p. 346).

Of course! Only in this way, above the particular elements, does the state constitute itself as universality.

The perfect political state is, by its nature, man's species-life, as opposed to his material life. All the preconditions of this egoistic life continue to exist in civil society outside the sphere of the state, but as qualities of civil society. Where the political state has attained its true development, man – not only in thought, in consciousness, but in reality, in life – leads a twofold life, a heavenly and an earthly life: life in the political community, in which he considers himself a communal being, and life in civil society, in which he acts as a private individual, regards other men as a means, degrades himself into a means, and becomes the plaything of alien powers. The relation of the political state to civil society is just as spiritual as the relations of heaven to earth. The political state stands in the same opposition to civil society, and it prevails over the latter in the same way as religion prevails over the narrowness of the secular world – i.e., by likewise having always to acknowledge it, to restore it, and allow itself to be dominated by it. In his most immediate reality, in civil society, man is a secular being. Here, where he regards himself as a real individual, and is so regarded by others, he is a fictitious phenomenon. In the state, on the other hand, where man is regarded as a species-being, he is the imaginary member of an illusory sovereignty, is deprived of his real individual life and endowed with an unreal universality.

Man, as the adherent of a particular religion, finds himself in conflict with his citizenship and with other men as members of the community. This conflict reduces itself to the secular division between the political state and civil society. For man as a bourgeois [i.e., as a member of civil society, "bourgeois society" in German], "life in the state" is "only a semblance or a temporary exception to the essential and the rule." Of course, the bourgeois, like the Jew, remains only sophistically in the sphere of political life, just as the citoyen ['citizen' in French, i.e., the participant in political life] only sophistically remains a Jew or a bourgeois. But, this sophistry is not personal. It is the sophistry of the political state itself. The difference between the merchant and the citizen [Staatsbürger], between the day-laborer and the citizen, between the landowner and the citizen, between the merchant and the citizen, between the living individual and the citizen. The contradiction in which the religious man finds himself with the political man is the same contradiction in which the bourgeois finds himself with the citoyen, and the member of civil society with his political lion's skin.

This secular conflict, to which the Jewish question ultimately reduces itself, the relation between the political state and its preconditions, whether these are material elements, such as private property, etc., or spiritual elements, such as culture or religion, the conflict between the general interest and private interest, the schism between the political state and civil society – these secular antitheses Bauer allows to persist, whereas he conducts a polemic against their religious expression.

"It is precisely the basis of civil society, the need that ensures the continuance of this society and guarantees its necessity, which exposes its existence to continual dangers, maintains in it an element of uncertainty, and produces that continually changing mixture of poverty and riches, of distress and prosperity, and brings about change in general." (p. 8)

Compare the whole section: "Civil Society" (pp. 8-9), which has been drawn up along the basic lines of Hegel's philosophy of law. Civil society, in its opposition to the political state, is recognized as necessary, because the political state is recognized as necessary.

Political emancipation is, of course, a big step forward. True, it is not the final form of human emancipation in general, but it is the final form of human emancipation within the hitherto existing world order. It goes without saying that we are speaking here of real, practical emancipation.

Man emancipates himself politically from religion by banishing it from the sphere of public law to that of private law. Religion is no longer the spirit of the state, in which man behaves – although in a limited way, in a particular form, and in a particular sphere – as a species-being, in community with other men. Religion has become the spirit of civil society, of the sphere of egoism, of bellum omnium contra omnes. It is no longer the essence of community, but the essence of difference. It has become the expression of man's separation from his community, from himself and from other men – as it was originally. It is only the abstract avowal of specific perversity, private whimsy, and arbitrariness. The endless fragmentation of religion in North America, for example, gives it even externally the form of a purely individual affair. It has been thrust among the multitude of private interests and ejected from the community as such. But one should be under no illusion about the limits of political emancipation. The division of the human being into a public man and a private man, the displacement of religion from the state into civil society, this is not a stage of political emancipation but its completion; this emancipation, therefore, neither abolished the real religiousness of man, nor strives to do so.

The decomposition of man into Jew and citizen, Protestant and citizen, religious man and citizen, is neither a deception directed against citizenhood, nor is it a circumvention of political emancipation, it is political emancipation itself, the political method of emancipating oneself from religion. Of course, in periods when the political state as such is born violently out of civil society, when political liberation is the form in which men strive to achieve their liberation, the state can and must go as far as the abolition of religion, the destruction of religion. But it can do so only in the same way that it proceeds to the abolition of private property, to the maximum, to confiscation, to progressive taxation, just as it goes as far as the abolition of life, the guillotine. At times of special self-confidence, political life seeks to suppress its prerequisite, civil society and the elements composing this society, and to constitute itself as the real species-life of man, devoid of contradictions. But, it can achieve this only by coming into violent contradiction with its own conditions of life, only by declaring the revolution to be permanent, and, therefore, the political drama necessarily ends with the re-establishment of religion, private property, and all elements of civil society, just as war ends with peace.

Indeed, the perfect Christian state is not the so-called Christian state – which acknowledges Christianity as its basis, as the state religion, and, therefore, adopts an exclusive attitude towards other religions. On the contrary, the perfect Christian state is the atheistic state, the democratic state, the state which relegates religion to a place among the other elements of civil society. The state which is still theological, which still officially professes Christianity as its creed, which still does not dare to proclaim itself as a state, has, in its reality as a state, not yet succeeded in expressing the human basis – of which Christianity is the high-flown expression – in a secular, human form. The so-called Christian state is simply nothing more than a non-state, since it is not Christianity as a religion, but only the human background of the Christian religion, which can find its expression in actual human creations.

The so-called Christian state is the Christian negation of the state, but by no means the political realization of Christianity. The state which still professes Christianity in the form of religion, does not yet profess it in the form appropriate to the state, for it still has a religious attitude towards religion – that is to say, it is not the true implementation of the human basis of religion, because it still relies on the unreal, imaginary form of this human core. The so-called Christian state is the imperfect state, and the Christian religion is regarded by it as the supplementation and sanctification of its imperfection. For the Christian state, therefore, religion necessarily becomes a means; hence, it is a hypocritical state. It makes a great difference whether the complete state, because of the defect inherent in the general nature of the state, counts religion among its presuppositions, or whether the incomplete state, because of the defect inherent in its particular existence as a defective state, declares that religion is its basis. In the latter case, religion becomes imperfect politics. In the former case, the imperfection even of consummate politics becomes evident in religion. The so-called Christian state needs the Christian religion in order to complete itself as a state. The democratic state, the real state, does not need religion for its political completion. On the contrary, it can disregard religion because in it the human basis of religion is realized in a secular manner. The so-called Christian state, on the other hand, has a political attitude to religion and a religious attitude to politics. By degrading the forms of the state to mere semblance, it equally degrades religion to mere semblance.

In order to make this contradiction clearer, let us consider Bauer's projection of the Christian state, a projection based on his observation of the Christian-German state.

"Recently," says Bauer, "in order to prove the impossibility or non-existence of a Christian state, reference has frequently been made to those sayings in the Gospel with which the [present-day] state not only does not comply, but cannot possibly comply, if it does not want to dissolve itself completely [as a state]." "But the matter cannot be disposed of so easily. What do these Gospel sayings demand? Supernatural renunciation of self, submission to the authority of revelation, a turning-away from the state, the abolition of secular conditions. Well, the Christian state demands and accomplishes all that. It has assimilated the spirit of the Gospel, and if it does not reproduce this spirit in the same terms as the Gospel, that occurs only because it expresses this spirit in political forms, i.e., in forms which, it is true, are taken from the political system in this world, but which in the religious rebirth that they have to undergo become degraded to a mere semblance. This is a turning-away from the state while making use of political forms for its realization." (p. 55)

Bauer then explains that the people of a Christian state is only a non-people, no longer having a will of its own, but whose true existence lies in the leader to whom it is subjected, although this leader by his origin and nature is alien to it – i.e., given by God and imposed on the people without any co-operation on its part. Bauer declares that the laws of such a people are not its own creation, but are actual revelations, that its supreme chief needs privileged intermediaries with the people in the strict sense, with the masses, and that the masses themselves are divided into a multitude of particular groupings which are formed and determined by chance, which are differentiated by their interests, their particular passions and prejudices, and obtain permission as a privilege, to isolate themselves from one another, etc. (p. 56)

However, Bauer himself says:

"Politics, if it is to be nothing but religion, ought not to be politics, just as the cleaning of saucepans, if it is to be accepted as a religious matter, ought not to be regarded as a matter of domestic economy." (p. 108)

In the Christian-German state, however, religion is an "economic matter" just as "economic matters" belong to the sphere of religion. The domination of religion in the Christian-German state is the religion of domination.

The separation of the "spirit of the Gospel" from the "letter of the Gospel" is an irreligious act. A state which makes the Gospel speak in the language of politics – that is, in another language than that of the Holy Ghost – commits sacrilege, if not in human eyes, then in the eyes of its own religion. The state which acknowledges Christianity as its supreme criterion, and the Bible as its Charter, must be confronted with the words of Holy Scripture, for every word of Scripture is holy. This state, as well as the human rubbish on which it is based, is caught in a painful contradiction that is insoluble from the standpoint of religious consciousness when it is referred to those sayings of the Gospel with which it "not only does not comply, but cannot possibly comply, if it does not want to dissolve itself completely as a state." And why does it not want to dissolve itself completely? The state itself cannot give an answer either to itself or to others. In its own consciousness, the official Christian state is an imperative, the realization of which is unattainable, the state can assert the reality of its existence only by lying to itself, and therefore always remains in its own eyes an object of doubt, an unreliable, problematic object. Criticism is, therefore, fully justified in forcing the state that relies on the Bible into a mental derangement in which it no longer knows whether it is an illusion or a reality, and in which the infamy of its secular aims, for which religion serves as a cloak, comes into insoluble conflict with the sincerity of its religious consciousness, for which religion appears as the aim of the world. This state can only save itself from its inner torment if it becomes the police agent of the Catholic Church. In relation to the church, which declares the secular power to be its servant, the state is powerless, the secular power which claims to be the rule of the religious spirit is powerless.

It is, indeed, estrangement which matters in the so-called Christian state, but not man. The only man who counts, the king, is a being specifically different from other men, and is, moreover, a religious being, directly linked with heaven, with God. The relationships which prevail here are still relationships dependent of faith. The religious spirit, therefore, is still not really secularized.

But, furthermore, the religious spirit cannot be really secularized, for what is it in itself but the non-secular form of a stage in the development of the human mind? The religious spirit can only be secularized insofar as the stage of development of the human mind of which it is the religious expression makes its appearance and becomes constituted in its secular form. This takes place in the democratic state. Not Christianity, but the human basis of Christianity is the basis of this state. Religion remains the ideal, non-secular consciousness of its members, because religion is the ideal form of the stage of human development achieved in this state.

The members of the political state are religious owing to the dualism between individual life and species-life, between the life of civil society and political life. They are religious because men treat the political life of the state, an area beyond their real individuality, as if it were their true life. They are religious insofar as religion here is the spirit of civil society, expressing the separation and remoteness of man from man. Political democracy is Christian since in it man, not merely one man but everyman, ranks as sovereign, as the highest being, but it is man in his uncivilized, unsocial form, man in his fortuitous existence, man just as he is, man as he has been corrupted by the whole organization of our society, who has lost himself, been alienated, and handed over to the rule of inhuman conditions and elements – in short, man who is not yet a real species-being. That which is a creation of fantasy, a dream, a postulate of Christianity, i.e., the sovereignty of man – but man as an alien being different from the real man – becomes, in democracy, tangible reality, present existence, and secular principle.

In the perfect democracy, the religious and theological consciousness itself is in its own eyes the more religious and the more theological because it is apparently without political significance, without worldly aims, the concern of a disposition that shuns the world, the expression of intellectual narrow-mindedness, the product of arbitrariness and fantasy, and because it is a life that is really of the other world. Christianity attains, here, the practical expression of its universal-religious significance in that the most diverse world outlooks are grouped alongside one another in the form of Christianity and still more because it does not require other people to profess Christianity, but only religion in general, any kind of religion (cf. Beaumont's work quoted above). The religious consciousness revels in the wealth of religious contradictions and religious diversity.

We have, thus, shown that political emancipation from religion leaves religion in existence, although not a privileged religion. The contradiction in which the adherent of a particular religion finds himself involved in relation to his citizenship is only one aspect of the universal secular contradiction between the political state and civil society. The consummation of the Christian state is the state which acknowledges itself as a state and disregards the religion of its members. The emancipation of the state from religion is not the emancipation of the real man from religion.

Therefore, we do not say to the Jews, as Bauer does: You cannot be emancipated politically without emancipating yourselves radically from Judaism. On the contrary, we tell them: Because you can be emancipated politically without renouncing Judaism completely and incontrovertibly, political emancipation itself is not human emancipation. If you Jews want to be emancipated politically, without emancipating yourselves humanly, the half-hearted approach and contradiction is not in you alone, it is inherent in the nature and category of political emancipation. If you find yourself within the confines of this category, you share in a general confinement. Just as the state evangelizes when, although it is a state, it adopts a Christian attitude towards the Jews, so the Jew acts politically when, although a Jew, he demands civic rights.

But, if a man, although a Jew, can be emancipated politically and receive civic rights, can he lay claim to the so-called rights of man and receive them? Bauer denies it.

"The question is whether the Jew as such, that is, the Jew who himself admits that he is compelled by his true nature to live permanently in separation from other men, is capable of receiving the universal rights of man and of conceding them to others."

"For the Christian world, the idea of the rights of man was only discovered in the last century. It is not innate in men; on the contrary, it is gained only in a struggle against the historical traditions in which hitherto man was brought up. Thus the rights of man are not a gift of nature, not a legacy from past history, but the reward of the struggle against the accident of birth and against the privileges which up to now have been handed down by history from generation to generation. These rights are the result of culture, and only one who has earned and deserved them can possess them."

"Can the Jew really take possession of them? As long as he is a Jew, the restricted nature which makes him a Jew is bound to triumph over the human nature which should link him as a man with other men, and will separate him from non-Jews. He declares by this separation that the particular nature which makes him a Jew is his true, highest nature, before which human nature has to give way."

"Similarly, the Christian as a Christian cannot grant the rights of man." (p. 19-20)

According to Bauer, man has to sacrifice the "privilege of faith" to be able to receive the universal rights of man. Let us examine, for a moment, the so-called rights of man – to be precise, the rights of man in their authentic form, in the form which they have among those who discovered them, the North Americans and the French. These rights of man are, in part, political rights, rights which can only be exercised in community with others. Their content is participation in the community, and specifically in the political community, in the life of the state. They come within the category of political freedom, the category of civic rights, which, as we have seen, in no way presuppose the incontrovertible and positive abolition of religion – nor, therefore, of Judaism. There remains to be examined the other part of the rights of man – the droits de l'homme, insofar as these differ from the droits du citoyen.

Included among them is freedom of conscience, the right to practice any religion one chooses. The privilege of faith is expressly recognized either as a right of man or as the consequence of a right of man, that of liberty.

Déclaration des droits de l'homme et du citoyen, 1791, Article 10: "No one is to be subjected to annoyance because of his opinions, even religious opinions." "The freedom of every man to practice the religion of which he is an adherent."

Declaration of the Rights of Man, etc., 1793, includes among the rights of man, Article 7: "The free exercise of religion." Indeed, in regard to man's right to express his thoughts and opinions, to hold meetings, and to exercise his religion, it is even stated: "The necessity of proclaiming these rights presupposes either the existence or the recent memory of despotism." Compare the Constitution of 1795, Section XIV, Article 354.

Constitution of Pennsylvania, Article 9, § 3: "All men have received from nature the imprescriptible right to worship the Almighty according to the dictates of their conscience, and no one can be legally compelled to follow, establish, or support against his will any religion or religious ministry. No human authority can, in any circumstances, intervene in a matter of conscience or control the forces of the soul."

Constitution of New Hampshire, Article 5 and 6: "Among these natural rights some are by nature inalienable since nothing can replace them. The rights of conscience are among them." (Beaumont, op. cit., pp. 213,214)

Incompatibility between religion and the rights of man is to such a degree absent from the concept of the rights of man that, on the contrary, a man's right to be religious, in any way he chooses, to practise his own particular religion, is expressly included among the rights of man. The privilege of faith is a universal right of man.

The droits de l'homme, the rights of man, are, as such, distinct from the droits du citoyen, the rights of the citizen. Who is homme as distinct from citoyen? None other than the member of civil society. Why is the member of civil society called "man," simply man; why are his rights called the rights of man? How is this fact to be explained? From the relationship between the political state and civil society, from the nature of political emancipation.

Above all, we note the fact that the so-called rights of man, the droits de l'homme as distinct from the droits du citoyen, are nothing but the rights of a member of civil society – i.e., the rights of egoistic man, of man separated from other men and from the community. Let us hear what the most radical Constitution, the Constitution of 1793, has to say:

Declaration of the Rights of Man and of the Citizen.

Article 2. "These rights, etc., (the natural and imprescriptible rights) are: equality, liberty, security, property."

What constitutes liberty?

Article 6. "Liberty is the power which man has to do everything that does not harm the rights of others," or, according to the Declaration of the Rights of Man of 1791: "Liberty consists in being able to do everything which does not harm others."

Liberty, therefore, is the right to do everything that harms no one else. The limits within which anyone can act without harming someone else are defined by law, just as the boundary between two fields is determined by a boundary post. It is a question of the liberty of man as an isolated monad, withdrawn into himself. Why is the Jew, according to Bauer, incapable of acquiring the rights of man?

"As long as he is a Jew, the restricted nature which makes him a Jew is bound to triumph over the human nature which should link him as a man with other men, and will separate him from non-Jews."

But, the right of man to liberty is based not on the association of man with man, but on the separation of man from man. It is the right of this separation, the right of the restricted individual, withdrawn into himself.

The practical application of man's right to liberty is man's right to private property.

What constitutes man's right to private property?

Article 16. (Constitution of 1793): "The right of property is that which every citizen has of enjoying and of disposing at his discretion of his goods and income, of the fruits of his labor and industry."

The right of man to private property is, therefore, the right to enjoy one's property and to dispose of it at one's discretion (à son gré), without regard to other men, independently of society, the right of self-interest. This individual liberty and its application form the basis of civil society. It makes every man see in other men not the realization of his own freedom, but the barrier to it. But, above all, it proclaims the right of man

"of enjoying and of disposing at his discretion of his goods and income, of the fruits of his labor and industry."

There remain the other rights of man: égalité and sûreté.

Equality, used here in its non-political sense, is nothing but the equality of the liberté described above – namely: each man is to the same extent regarded as such a self-sufficient monad. The Constitution of 1795 defines the concept of this equality, in accordance with this significance, as follows:

Article 3 (Constitution of 1795): "Equality consists in the law being the same for all, whether it protects or punishes."

And security?

Article 8 (Constitution of 1793): "Security consists in the protection afforded by society to each of its members for the preservation of his person, his rights, and his property."

Security is the highest social concept of civil society, the concept of police, expressing the fact that the whole of society exists only in order to guarantee to each of its members the preservation of his person, his rights, and his property. It is in this sense that Hegel calls civil society "the state of need and reason."

The concept of security does not raise civil society above its egoism. On the contrary, security is the insurance of egoism.

None of the so-called rights of man, therefore, go beyond egoistic man, beyond man as a member of civil society – that is, an individual withdrawn into himself, into the confines of his private interests and private caprice, and separated from the community. In the rights of man, he is far from being conceived as a species-being; on the contrary, species-life itself, society, appears as a framework external to the individuals, as a restriction of their original independence. The sole bond holding them together is natural necessity, need and private interest, the preservation of their property and their egoistic selves.

It is puzzling enough that a people which is just beginning to liberate itself, to tear down all the barriers between its various sections, and to establish a political community, that such a people solemnly proclaims (Declaration of 1791) the rights of egoistic man separated from his fellow men and from the community, and that indeed it repeats this proclamation at a moment when only the most heroic devotion can save the nation, and is therefore imperatively called for, at a moment when the sacrifice of all the interest of civil society must be the order of the day, and egoism must be punished as a crime. (Declaration of the Rights of Man, etc., of 1793) This fact becomes still more puzzling when we see that the political emancipators go so far as to reduce citizenship, and the political community, to a mere means for maintaining these so-called rights of man, that, therefore, the citoyen is declared to be the servant of egotistic homme, that the sphere in which man acts as a communal being is degraded to a level below the sphere in which he acts as a partial being, and that, finally, it is not man as citoyen, but man as private individual [bourgeois] who is considered to be the essential and true man.

"The aim of all political association is the preservation of the natural and imprescriptible rights of man." (Declaration of the Rights, etc., of 1791, Article 2)

"Government is instituted in order to guarantee man the enjoyment of his natural and imprescriptible rights." (Declaration, etc., of 1793, Article 1)

Hence, even in moments when its enthusiasm still has the freshness of youth and is intensified to an extreme degree by the force of circumstances, political life declares itself to be a mere means, whose purpose is the life of civil society. It is true that its revolutionary practice is in flagrant contradiction with its theory. Whereas, for example, security is declared one of the rights of man, violation of the privacy of correspondence is openly declared to be the order of the day. Whereas "unlimited freedom of the press" (Constitution of 1793, Article 122) is guaranteed as a consequence of the right of man to individual liberty, freedom of the press is totally destroyed, because "freedom of the press should not be permitted when it endangers public liberty." ("Robespierre jeune," Historie parlementaire de la Révolution française by Buchez and Roux, vol.28, p. 159) That is to say, therefore: The right of man to liberty ceases to be a right as soon as it comes into conflict with political life, whereas in theory political life is only the guarantee of human rights, the rights of the individual, and therefore must be abandoned as soon as it comes into contradiction with its aim, with these rights of man. But, practice is merely the exception, theory is the rule. But even if one were to regard revolutionary practice as the correct presentation of the relationship, there would still remain the puzzle of why the relationship is turned upside-down in the minds of the political emancipators and the aim appears as the means, while the means appears as the aim. This optical illusion of their consciousness would still remain a puzzle, although now a psychological, a theoretical puzzle.

The puzzle is easily solved.

Political emancipation is, at the same time, the dissolution of the old society on which the state alienated from the people, the sovereign power, is based. What was the character of the old society? It can be described in one word – feudalism. The character of the old civil society was directly political – that is to say, the elements of civil life, for example, property, or the family, or the mode of labor, were raised to the level of elements of political life in the form of seigniory, estates, and corporations. In this form, they determined the relation of the individual to the state as a whole – i.e., his political relation, that is, his relation of separation and exclusion from the other components of society. For that organization of national life did not raise property or labor to the level of social elements; on the contrary, it completed their separation from the state as a whole and constituted them as discrete societies within society. Thus, the vital functions and conditions of life of civil society remained, nevertheless, political, although political in the feudal sense – that is to say, they secluded the individual from the state as a whole and they converted the particular relation of his corporation to the state as a whole into his general relation to the life of the nation, just as they converted his particular civil activity and situation into his general activity and situation. As a result of this organization, the unity of the state, and also the consciousness, will, and activity of this unity, the general power of the state, are likewise bound to appear as the particular affair of a ruler and of his servants, isolated from the people.

The political revolution which overthrew this sovereign power and raised state affairs to become affairs of the people, which constituted the political state as a matter of general concern, that is, as a real state, necessarily smashed all estates, corporations, guilds, and privileges, since they were all manifestations of the separation of the people from the community. The political revolution thereby abolished the political character of civil society. It broke up civil society into its simple component parts; on the one hand, the individuals; on the other hand, the material and spiritual elements constituting the content of the life and social position of these individuals. It set free the political spirit, which had been, as it were, split up, partitioned, and dispersed in the various blind alleys of feudal society. It gathered the dispersed parts of the political spirit, freed it from its intermixture with civil life, and established it as the sphere of the community, the general concern of the nation, ideally independent of those particular elements of civil life. A person's distinct activity and distinct situation in life were reduced to a merely individual significance. They no longer constituted the general relation of the individual to the state as a whole. Public affairs as such, on the other hand, became the general affair of each individual, and the political function became the individual's general function.

But, the completion of the idealism of the state was at the same time the completion of the materialism of civil society.

Throwing off the political yoke meant at the same time throwing off the bonds which restrained the egoistic spirit of civil society. Political emancipation was, at the same time, the emancipation of civil society from politics, from having even the semblance of a universal content.

Feudal society was resolved into its basic element – man, but man as he really formed its basis – egoistic man.

This man, the member of civil society, is thus the basis, the precondition, of the political state. He is recognized as such by this state in the rights of man.

The liberty of egoistic man and the recognition of this liberty, however, is rather the recognition of the unrestrained movement of the spiritual and material elements which form the content of his life.

Hence, man was not freed from religion, he received religious freedom. He was not freed from property, he received freedom to own property. He was not freed from the egoism of business, he received freedom to engage in business.

The establishment of the political state and the dissolution of civil society into independent individuals – whose relation with one another epend on law, just as the relations of men in the system of estates and guilds depended on privilege – is accomplished by one and the same act. Man as a member of civil society, unpolitical man, inevitably appears, however, as the natural man. The "rights of man" appears as "natural rights," because conscious activity is concentrated on the political act. Egoistic man is the passive result of the dissolved society, a result that is simply found in existence, an object of immediate certainty, therefore a natural object. The political revolution resolves civil life into its component parts, without revolutionizing these components themselves or subjecting them to criticism. It regards civil society, the world of needs, labor, private interests, civil law, as the basis of its existence, as a precondition not requiring further substantiation and therefore as its natural basis. Finally, man as a member of civil society is held to be man in the proper sense, homme as distinct from citoyen, because he is man in his sensuous, individual, immediate existence, whereas political man is only abstract, artificial man, man as an allegorical, juridical person. The real man is recognized only in the shape of the egoistic individual, the true man is recognized only in the shape of the abstract citizen.

Therefore, Rousseau correctly described the abstract idea of political man as follows:

"Whoever dares undertake to establish a people's institutions must feel himself capable of changing, as it were, human nature, of transforming each individual, who by himself is a complete and solitary whole, into a part of a larger whole, from which, in a sense, the individual receives his life and his being, of substituting a limited and mental existence for the physical and independent existence. He has to take from man his own powers, and give him in exchange alien powers which he cannot employ without the help of other men."

All emancipation is a reduction of the human world and relationships to man himself.

Political emancipation is the reduction of man, on the one hand, to a member of civil society, to an egoistic, independent individual, and, on the other hand, to a citizen, a juridical person.

Only when the real, individual man re-absorbs in himself the abstract citizen, and as an individual human being has become a species-being in his everyday life, in his particular work, and in his particular situation, only when man has recognized and organized his "own powers" as social powers, and, consequently, no longer separates social power from himself in the shape of political power, only then will human emancipation have been accomplished.

PART 2

[Bruno Bauer, "The Capacity of Present-day Jews and Christians to Become Free," Einundzwanzig Bogen aus der Schweiz, pp. 56-71]

It is in this form that Bauer deals with the relation between the Jewish and the Christian religions, and also with their relation to criticism. Their relation to criticism is their relation "to the capacity to become free."

The result arrived at is:

"The Christian has to surmount only one stage, namely, that of his religion, in order to give up religion altogether," and therefore become free.

"The Jew, on the other hand, has to break not only with his Jewish nature, but also with the development towards perfecting his religion, a development which has remained alien to him."

Thus, Bauer here transforms the question of Jewish emancipation into a purely religious question. The theological problem as to whether the Jew or the Christian has the better prospect of salvation is repeated here in the enlightened form: which of them is more capable of emancipation. No longer is the question asked: Is it Judaism or Christianity that makes a man free? On the contrary, the question is now: Which makes man freer, the negation of Judaism or the negation of Christianity?

"If the Jews want to become free, they should profess belief not in Christianity, but in the dissolution of Christianity, in the dissolution of religion in general, that is to say, in enlightenment, criticism, and its consequences, free humanity."

For the Jew, it is still a matter of a profession of faith, but no longer a profession of belief in Christianity, but of belief in Christianity in dissolution.

Bauer demands of the Jews that they should break with the essence of the Christian religion, a demand which, as he says himself, does not arise out of the development of Judaism.

Since Bauer, at the end of his work on the Jewish question, had conceived Judaism only as crude religious criticism of Christianity, and therefore saw in it "merely" a religious significance, it could be foreseen that the emancipation of the Jews, too, would be transformed into a philosophical-theological act.

Bauer considers that the ideal, abstract nature of the Jew, his religion, is his entire nature. Hence, he rightly concludes:

"The Jew contributes nothing to mankind if he himself disregards his narrow law," if he invalidates his entire Judaism.

Accordingly, the relation between Jews and Christians becomes the following: the sole interest of the Christian in the emancipation of the Jew is a general human interest, a theoretical interest. Judaism is a fact that offends the religious eye of the Christian. As soon as his eye ceases to be religious, this fact ceases to be offensive. The emancipation of the Jew is, in itself, not a task for the Christian.

The Jew, on the other hand, in order to emancipate himself, has to carry out not only his own work, but also that of the Christian – i.e., the Critique of the Evangelical History of the Synoptics and the Life of Jesus, etc.

"It is up to them to deal with it: they themselves will decide their fate; but history is not to be trifled with."

We are trying to break with the theological formulation of the question. For us, the question of the Jew's capacity for emancipation becomes the question: What particular social element has to be overcome in order to abolish Judaism? For the present-day Jew's capacity for emancipation is the relation of Judaism to the emancipation of the modern world. This relation necessarily results from the special position of Judaism in the contemporary enslaved world.

Let us consider the actual, worldly Jew – not the Sabbath Jew, as Bauer does, but the everyday Jew.

Let us not look for the secret of the Jew in his religion, but let us look for the secret of his religion in the real Jew.

What is the secular basis of Judaism? Practical need, self-interest. What is the worldly religion of the Jew? Huckstering. What is his worldly God? Money.

Very well then! Emancipation from huckstering and money, consequently from practical, real Judaism, would be the self-emancipation of our time.

An organization of society which would abolish the preconditions for huckstering, and therefore the possibility of huckstering, would make the Jew impossible. His religious consciousness would be dissipated like a thin haze in the real, vital air of society. On the other hand, if the Jew recognizes that this practical nature of his is futile and works to abolish it, he extricates himself from his previous development and works for human emancipation as such and turns against the supreme practical expression of human self-estrangement.

We recognize in Judaism, therefore, a general anti-social element of the present time, an element which through historical development – to which in this harmful respect the Jews have zealously contributed – has been brought to its present high level, at which it must necessarily begin to disintegrate.

In the final analysis, the emancipation of the Jews is the emancipation of mankind from Judaism.

The Jew has already emancipated himself in a Jewish way.

"The Jew, who in Vienna, for example, is only tolerated, determines the fate of the whole Empire by his financial power. The Jew, who may have no rights in the smallest German state, decides the fate of Europe. While corporations and guilds refuse to admit Jews, or have not yet adopted a favorable attitude towards them, the audacity of industry mocks at the obstinacy of the material institutions." (Bruno Bauer, The Jewish Question, p. 114)

This is no isolated fact. The Jew has emancipated himself in a Jewish manner, not only because he has acquired financial power, but also because, through him and also apart from him, money has become a world power and the practical Jewish spirit has become the practical spirit of the Christian nations. The Jews have emancipated themselves insofar as the Christians have become Jews.

Captain Hamilton, for example, reports:

"The devout and politically free inhabitant of New England is a kind of Laocoön who makes not the least effort to escape from the serpents which are crushing him. Mammon is his idol which he adores not only with his lips but with the whole force of his body and mind. In his view the world is no more than a Stock Exchange, and he is convinced that he has no other destiny here below than to become richer than his neighbor. Trade has seized upon all his thoughts, and he has no other recreation than to exchange objects. When he travels he carries, so to speak, his goods and his counter on his back and talks only of interest and profit. If he loses sight of his own business for an instant it is only in order to pry into the business of his competitors."

Indeed, in North America, the practical domination of Judaism over the Christian world has achieved as its unambiguous and normal expression that the preaching of the Gospel itself and the Christian ministry have become articles of trade, and the bankrupt trader deals in the Gospel just as the Gospel preacher who has become rich goes in for business deals.

"The man who you see at the head of a respectable congregation began as a trader; his business having failed, he became a minister. The other began as a priest but as soon as he had some money at his disposal he left the pulpit to become a trader. In the eyes of very many people, the religious ministry is a veritable business career." (Beaumont, op. cit., pp. 185,186)

According to Bauer, it is

"a fictitious state of affairs when in theory the Jew is deprived of political rights, whereas in practice he has immense power and exerts his political influence en gros, although it is curtailed en détail." (Die Judenfrage, p. 114)

The contradiction that exists between the practical political power of the Jew and his political rights is the contradiction between politics and the power of money in general. Although theoretically the former is superior to the latter, in actual fact politics has become the serf of financial power.

Judaism has held its own alongside Christianity, not only as religious criticism of Christianity, not only as the embodiment of doubt in the religious derivation of Christianity, but equally because the practical Jewish spirit, Judaism, has maintained itself and even attained its highest development in Christian society. The Jew, who exists as a distinct member of civil society, is only a particular manifestation of the Judaism of civil society.

Judaism continues to exist not in spite of history, but owing to history.

The Jew is perpetually created by civil society from its own entrails.

What, in itself, was the basis of the Jewish religion? Practical need, egoism.

The monotheism of the Jew, therefore, is in reality the polytheism of the many needs, a polytheism which makes even the lavatory an object of divine law. Practical need, egoism, is the principle of civil society, and as such appears in pure form as soon as civil society has fully given birth to the political state. The god of practical need and self-interest is money.

Money is the jealous god of Israel, in face of which no other god may exist. Money degrades all the gods of man – and turns them into commodities. Money is the universal self-established value of all things. It has, therefore, robbed the whole world – both the world of men and nature – of its specific value. Money is the estranged essence of man's work and man's existence, and this alien essence dominates him, and he worships it.

The god of the Jews has become secularized and has become the god of the world. The bill of exchange is the real god of the Jew. His god is only an illusory bill of exchange.

The view of nature attained under the domination of private property and money is a real contempt for, and practical debasement of, nature; in the Jewish religion, nature exists, it is true, but it exists only in imagination.

It is in this sense that [in a 1524 pamphlet] Thomas Münzer declares it intolerable

"that all creatures have been turned into property, the fishes in the water, the birds in the air, the plants on the earth; the creatures, too, must become free."

Contempt for theory, art, history, and for man as an end in himself, which is contained in an abstract form in the Jewish religion, is the real, conscious standpoint, the virtue of the man of money. The species-relation itself, the relation between man and woman, etc., becomes an object of trade! The woman is bought and sold.

The chimerical nationality of the Jew is the nationality of the merchant, of the man of money in general.

The groundless law of the Jew is only a religious caricature of groundless morality and right in general, of the purely formal rites with which the world of self-interest surrounds itself.

Here, too, man's supreme relation is the legal one, his relation to laws that are valid for him not because they are laws of his own will and nature, but because they are the dominant laws and because departure from them is avenged.

Jewish Jesuitism, the same practical Jesuitism which Bauer discovers in the Talmud, is the relation of the world of self-interest to the laws governing that world, the chief art of which consists in the cunning circumvention of these laws.

Indeed, the movement of this world within its framework of laws is bound to be a continual suspension of law.

Judaism could not develop further as a religion, could not develop further theoretically, because the world outlook of practical need is essentially limited and is completed in a few strokes.

By its very nature, the religion of practical need could find its consummation not in theory, but only in practice, precisely because its truth is practice.

Judaism could not create a new world; it could only draw the new creations and conditions of the world into the sphere of its activity, because practical need, the rationale of which is self-interest, is passive and does not expand at will, but finds itself enlarged as a result of the continuous development of social conditions.

Judaism reaches its highest point with the perfection of civil society, but it is only in the Christian world that civil society attains perfection. Only under the dominance of Christianity, which makes all national, natural, moral, and theoretical conditions extrinsic to man, could civil society separate itself completely from the life of the state, sever all the species-ties of man, put egoism and selfish need in the place of these species-ties, and dissolve the human world into a world of atomistic individuals who are inimically opposed to one another.

Christianity sprang from Judaism. It has merged again in Judaism.

From the outset, the Christian was the theorizing Jew, the Jew is, therefore, the practical Christian, and the practical Christian has become a Jew again.

Christianity had only in semblance overcome real Judaism. It was too noble-minded, too spiritualistic to eliminate the crudity of practical need in any other way than by elevation to the skies.

Christianity is the sublime thought of Judaism, Judaism is the common practical application of Christianity, but this application could only become general after Christianity as a developed religion had completed theoretically the estrangement of man from himself and from nature.

Only then could Judaism achieve universal dominance and make alienated man and alienated nature into alienable, vendible objects subjected to the slavery of egoistic need and to trading.

Selling [Veräusserung] is the practical aspect of alienation [Entäusserung]. Just as man, as long as he is in the grip of religion, is able to objectify his essential nature only by turning it into something alien, something fantastic, so under the domination of egoistic need he can be active practically, and produce objects in practice, only by putting his products, and his activity, under the domination of an alien being, and bestowing the significance of an alien entity – money – on them.

In its perfected practice, Christian egoism of heavenly bliss is necessarily transformed into the corporal egoism of the Jew, heavenly need is turned into world need, subjectivism into self-interest. We explain the tenacity of the Jew not by his religion, but, on the contrary, by the human basis of his religion – practical need, egoism.

Since in civil society the real nature of the Jew has been universally realized and secularized, civil society could not convince the Jew of the unreality of his religious nature, which is indeed only the ideal aspect of practical need. Consequently, not only in the Pentateuch and the Talmud, but in present-day society we find the nature of the modern Jew, and not as an abstract nature but as one that is in the highest degree empirical, not merely as a narrowness of the Jew, but as the Jewish narrowness of society.

Once society has succeeded in abolishing the empirical essence of Judaism – huckstering and its preconditions – the Jew will have become impossible, because his consciousness no longer has an object, because the subjective basis of Judaism, practical need, has been humanised, and because the conflict between man's individual-sensuous existence and his species-existence has been abolished.

The social emancipation of the Jew is the emancipation of society from Judaism.

THE COMMUNIST MANIFESTO
The Manifesto of Communist Party
Original title: A Communist Confession of Faith
Version: Manifesto of the Communist Party (1888)
Authors: Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels, 1848
Translation: Samuel Moore, 1888
Estimated Range of Dating: 1848

(The Communist Manifesto (originally Manifesto of the Communist Party) is an 1848 political pamphlet by the German philosophers Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels. Commissioned by the Communist League and originally published in London (in German as Manifest der Kommunistischen Partei) just as the Revolutions of 1848 began to erupt, the Manifesto was later recognised as one of the world's most influential political documents. It presents an analytical approach to the class struggle (historical and then-present) and the conflicts of capitalism and the capitalist mode of production, rather than a prediction of communism's potential future forms.

The Communist Manifesto summarises Marx and Engels' theories concerning the nature of society and politics, namely that in their own words "the history of all hitherto existing society is the history of class struggles". It also briefly features their ideas for how the capitalist society of the time would eventually be replaced by socialism. Near the end of the Manifesto, the authors call for a "forcible overthrow of all existing social conditions", which served as the justification for all communist revolutions around the world.

KARL MARX (1818–1883) was a German-born philosopher, political theorist, journalist, and revolutionary socialist. His best-known works are the 1848 pamphlet The Communist Manifesto (with Friedrich Engels) and his three-volume Das Kapital (1867–1894); the latter employs his critical approach of historical materialism in an analysis of capitalism, in the culmination of his intellectual endeavours. Marx's ideas and their subsequent development, collectively known as Marxism, have had enormous influence on modern intellectual, economic and political history.

Karl Marx was born on May 5, 1818, in the Rhineland town of Trier. His parents were Jewish, with a long line of respected rabbis on both sides of the family. But to follow a legal career in the Kingdom of Prussia at the time, Karl Marx's father converted to Protestantism. Karl's own religious training was limited; at an early age he rejected all belief in a Supreme Being.

Marx studied at the universities of Bonn, Berlin, and Jena, and received a doctorate in philosophy from the latter in 1841. A "Young Hegelian," he was influenced by the philosophy of Georg Wilhelm Friedrich Hegel, and both critiqued and developed Hegel's ideas in works such as The German Ideology (written 1846) and the Grundrisse (written 1857–1858). While in Paris in 1844, Marx wrote his Economic and Philosophic Manuscripts and met Engels, who became his closest friend and collaborator. After moving to Brussels in 1845, they were active in the Communist League, and in 1848 wrote The Communist Manifesto, which expresses Marx's ideas and lays out a programme for revolution. Marx was expelled from Belgium and Germany, and in 1849 moved to London, where he wrote The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte (1852) and Das Kapital. From 1864, Marx was involved in the International Workingmen's Association (First International), in which he fought the influence of anarchists led by Mikhail Bakunin. In his Critique of the Gotha Programme (1875), Marx wrote on revolution, the state and the transition to communism. He died stateless in 1883 and was buried in Highgate Cemetery.

Marx's critiques of history, society and political economy hold that human societies develop through class conflict. In the capitalist mode of production, this manifests itself in the conflict between the ruling classes (known as the bourgeoisie) that control the means of production and the working classes (known as the proletariat) that enable these means by selling their labour power in return for wages. Employing his historical materialist approach, Marx predicted that capitalism produced internal tensions like previous socioeconomic systems and that these tensions would lead to its self-destruction and replacement by a new system known as the socialist mode of production. For Marx, class antagonisms under capitalism—owing in part to its instability and crisis-prone nature—would eventuate the working class's development of class consciousness, leading to their conquest of political power and eventually the establishment of a classless, communist society constituted by a free association of producers. Marx actively pressed for its implementation, arguing that the working class should carry out organised proletarian revolutionary action to topple capitalism and bring about socio-economic emancipation.

Marx has been described as one of the most influential figures in human history, and his work has been both lauded and criticised. Marxism has exerted major influence on socialist thought and political movements, and during the 20th century revolutionary governments identifying as Marxist took power in many countries and established socialist states including the Soviet Union and the People's Republic of China. Theoretical variants such as Leninism, Marxism–Leninism, Trotskyism, and Maoism have been developed. Marx's work in economics has had a strong influence on modern heterodox theories of labour and capital, and he is often cited as one of the principal architects of modern social science.

FRIEDRICH ENGELS (1820–1895) was a German philosopher, political theorist, historian, journalist, and revolutionary socialist. He was also a businessman and Karl Marx's closest friend and collaborator, serving as a leading authority on Marxism.

Engels, the son of a wealthy textile manufacturer, met Marx in 1844. They jointly authored works including The Holy Family (1844), The German Ideology (written 1846), and The Communist Manifesto (1848), and worked as political organisers and activists in the Communist League and First International. Engels also supported Marx financially for much of his life, enabling him to continue writing after he moved to London in 1849. After Marx's death in 1883, Engels compiled Volumes II and III of his Das Kapital (1885 and 1894).

Engels wrote eclectic works of his own, including The Condition of the Working Class in England (1845), Anti-Dühring (1878), Dialectics of Nature (1878–1882), The Origin of the Family, Private Property and the State (1884), and Ludwig Feuerbach and the End of Classical German Philosophy (1886). His writings on materialism, idealism, and dialectics supplied Marxism with an ontological and metaphysical foundation.

Character

When Karl Marx died in March 1883, only about a dozen people attended his funeral at a cemetery in London, England, including family members. Yet, for more than a century after his death – and even until today – there have been few thinkers whose ideas have been as influential on various aspects of modern world history. Indeed, as some have said, no other faith or belief-system has had such a worldwide impact as Marxism, since the rise of Islam, a kind of ancient proto-Communism and proto-Nazism. In the name of the Marxian vision of a "new society" and a "new man," socialist and communist revolutions led to the mass murders, enslavement, torture, and starvation of tens of millions of people around the world. Historians have estimated that in the attempt to make that "new" and "better" socialist world, communist regimes have killed between 150 million and 200 million people in the 20th century. Islam, by the way, has been killing about double as many for 1400 years and is still doing it (See complete list at: religionofpeace.com).

To say that the Communist Manifesto has nothing to do with Karl Marx would be the same idiocy as saying that the Prophet Mohammed has nothing to do with Islam. So we need to examine this individual.

After studying for a time in Bonn, he transferred to the University of Berlin to work on a doctoral degree in philosophy. But he was generally a lazy and good-for-nothing student. The money that his father sent to him for tuition at the University was spent on food and drink, with many of his nights spent at coffee houses and taverns getting drunk and arguing about Hegelian philosophy with other students. He finally acquired his doctoral degree by submitting his dissertation to the University of Jena in eastern Germany.

Marx's only real jobs during his lifetime were as occasional reporters for or editors of newspapers and journals most of which usually closed in a short period of time, either because of small readership and limited financial support or political censorship by the governments under which he was living.

His political activities as a writer and activist resulted in his having to move several times, including to Paris and Brussels, finally ending up in London in 1849, where he lived for the rest of his life, with occasional trips back to the European continent.

Though Marx was "middle class" and even "Victorian" in many of his everyday cultural attitudes, this did not stop him from breaking his marriage vows and committing adultery. He had sex enough times with the family maid that she bore him an illegitimate son – and this under the same roof with his wife and his legitimate children (of which he had seven, with only three living to full adulthood). But he would not allow his illegitimate child to visit their mother in his London house whenever he was at home, and the boy could only enter the house through the kitchen door in the back of the house. In addition, he had his friend, longtime financial benefactor, and intellectual collaborator, Fredrick Engels, claim parentage of the child so to avoid any social embarrassment falling upon himself due to his infidelity.

The historian Paul Johnson explained in his book, Intellectuals (1988):

In all his researches into the iniquities of British capitalism, he came across many instances of low-paid workers but he never succeeded in unearthing one who was paid literally no wages at all. Yet such a worker did exist, in his own household. This was Helen Demuth [the life-long family maid]. She got her keep but was paid nothing. She was a ferociously hard worker, not only cleaning and scrubbing, but managing the family budget, Marx never paid her a penny.

In 1849-50 [Helen] became Marx's mistress and conceived a child. Marx refused to acknowledge his responsibility, then or ever, and flatly denied the rumours that he was the father. [The son] was put out to be fostered by a working-class family called Lewis but allowed to visit the Marx household [to see his mother]. He was, however, forbidden to use the front door and obliged to see his mother only in the kitchen.

Marx was terrified that [the boy's] paternity would be discovered and that this would do him fatal damage as a revolutionary leader and seer. [Marx] persuaded Engels to acknowledge [the boy] privately, as a cover story for family consumption. But Engels was not willing to take the secret to the grave. Engels died, of cancer of the throat, on 5 August 1895; unable to speak but unwilling that Eleanor [one of Marx's daughters] should continue to think her father unsullied, he wrote on a slate: "Freddy [the boy's name] is Marx's son."

Marx's Mean and Mendacious Manner

Marx led the existence of a Bohemian intellectual. Many found Marx's personal appearance and manner off-putting or even revolting. Washing, grooming and changing his linen are things he did rarely, he was frequently idle for days on end, and he was often drunk. In temperament, Marx could be cruel and authoritarian. He treated people with whom he disagreed in a crude and mean way, often ridiculing them in public gatherings. Marx had no hesitation about being a hypocrite; when he wanted something from someone he would flatter them in letters or conversation, but then attack them in nasty language behind their backs to others. He often used racial slurs and insulting words to describe the mannerisms or appearance of his opponents in the socialist movement.

For instance, in an 1862 letter to Frederick Engels, Marx described his disciple and leading 19th-century German socialist, Ferdinand Lassalle, in the following way: "The Jewish Nigger Lassalle fortunately departs at the end of this week. It is now absolutely clear to me that, as both the shape of his head and his hair texture shows he descends from the Negros who joined Moses' flight from Egypt (unless his mother or grandmother on the paternal side hybridized with a nigger). Now this combination of Germanness and Jewishness with a primarily Negro substance creates a strange product. The pushiness of the fellow is also nigger-like."

In Marx's mind, the Jew in bourgeois society encapsulated the essence of everything he considered despicable in the capitalist system, and only with the end of the capitalist system would there be an end to most of those unattractive qualities. Here is Marx's conception of the Jewish mind in nineteenth century Europe, from his essay "On the Jewish Question" (1844):

What is the secular basis of Judaism? Practical need, self-interest. What is the worldly cult of the Jew? Haggling. What is his worldly god? Money! Money is the jealous god of Israel before whom no other god may exist.

Money degrades all the gods of mankind and converts them into commodities. What is contained abstractly in the Jewish religion, contempt for theory, for art, for history, for man as an end in himself. The social emancipation of the Jew is the emancipation of society from Jewishness.

(Marx's caricaturing description of the asserted "Jewish mindset" rings amazingly similar to those that were later written by the Nazi "race-scientists" of the 1930s, who also condemned Jews for the same self-interested pursuit of money and the resulting degenerative influence that they believed Jews had upon the German people.)

Marx was also what some might label as a plagiarist. From 1852 to 1862, Marx worked as a European correspondent for the New York Daily Tribune. Marx found it too burdensome to grind out the expected two articles per week, for which he was relatively well paid. Instead, he spent his time participating in revolutionary intrigues and researching, reading, and writing for what became his famous work, Das Kapital.

During Marx's decade of employment with the newspaper, Friedrich Engels wrote about one-third of his articles. Marx's name still appeared on the by-lines.

The Communist Manifesto

Political philosophy depends much more on the personality and biography of its framers than is usually thought. Plato's aristocratic origins and his resentment at the execution of his beloved master Socrates can be read in palimpsest in The Republic or The Laws. The gentle character and rational disposition of Thomas Aquinas made for the inclusiveness of the Summas. Machiavelli was a discarded and over-intelligent civil servant of his beloved Florence, yearning for an Italy free of the French and Spanish "barbarians". Hobbes attributed his timidity and insecurity to his early upbringing and clearly wrote for times of civil discord. And Hegel was very much the professor at a Prussian State University, marked by the unfolding of history in Napoleonic times. Marx had the good luck to be befriended by Friedrich Engels (1820-1895). After they met in Paris in 1844 they welded an association which would last for the rest of their lives and beyond. The development of Marxism, indeed of socialism, would have been very different if these two friends had not worked together for so many years.

The most read of Marx and Engel's writings is The Communist Manifesto. They were asked to compose it by members of a London secret communist society, "The League of the Just". Engels had convinced them to merge with the "Communist Corresponding Society" set up by Marx and himself in Germany. The Manifesto was presented to the members in 1847 and published in 1848, just before France erupted in a revolution that toppled the monarchy and turned it into a republic. The flames then spread over whole of Europe and for three years it seemed that a new democratic era was born. Another attempt at socialist revolution, The Paris Commune, followed in 1871. The next revolutions did not come until after the havoc of World War I.

Though the Manifesto was written by Marx, he relied greatly on Engels' book The Condition of the Working Class in England published in 1845, a scathing denunciation of life in Manchester factories, presented as an anticipation of what the whole capitalist system was to become. Nearer to what was the final text of the Manifesto there are two drafts of Engels' in 1847 that served as a starting point for Marx's composition. One was "A Communist Confession of Faith" and the second has been called "Principles of Communism" [* Engels wrote to Marx: "Think over the Confession of Faith a bit. I believe we had better drop the catechism form and call the thing Communist Manifesto. As more or less history has to be related in it, the form it has been in hitherto quite unsuitable. I am bringing what I have done here with me. It is in simple narrative form but miserably worded, in fearful haste."]. The "Principles" text clearly shows how aligned in thought the two friends were. It is right after all to call the Manifesto a joint work.*

A comparison with Engels' sketchy drafts shows Marx's great rhetorical gifts when he shed his crypto-Hegelian garb. The first phrase of the pamphlet is justly famous:

A spectre haunts Europe—the spectre of Communism. All the powers of old Europe have entered into a holy alliance to exorcise this spectre: Pope and Czar, Metternich and Guizot, French Radicals and German police spies.

The claim was exaggerated but it instilled confidence into the dispersed groups who called themselves communist or socialist in that their aim was the abolition of private property.

The Manifesto was divided into five parts. The first is a short introduction. Then came chapter I, titled "Bourgeois and Proletarians", a panegyric of the productive powers of the capitalist economy, you will be surprised to hear, but really the eulogy in the funeral service of capitalism. Chapter II was a call for the communist elite to open the eyes of untaught proletarians to the exploitation they suffered under capitalism, and eventually to lead them to join the ranks of the revolutionists. Chapter III damned reactionary and utopian socialism with faint praise, as they would luckily be superseded by their own scientific brand. The last chapter proclaimed the readiness of the communists to back workers' parties across Europe, as long as they accepted the aim of getting rid of private property "by the forcible overthrow of the whole social order".

The starting point is proclaimed in chapter I: "The history of all hitherto existing societies is the history of class struggle". Throughout history, human societies were divided in a variety of social classes but modern bourgeois society "has simplified class antagonisms […]. Society as a whole [is] dividing itself increasingly into two great hostile camps, into two great classes, directly facing each other: the Bourgeoisie and the Proletariat." The essential engine of transformation is "a series of revolutions in technology and the modes of production and exchange". Here we are being introduced to a fundamental element of Marxian sociology, 'historical materialism', that social change is driven by the modes of economic production embodying new technologies. This idea, especially as developed in Das Kapital4 (1867) has caught the attention of historians ever since. It was a call not to be content with mere political history. This is not to say that there was no economic history before that book—for example, Adam Smith's An Inquiry into the Nature and Causes of the Wealth of Nations—but nobody up to then had presented the modes of production and exchange as the moving forces of history. In the case of modern capitalism, Marx was saying, the transformation of technical and commercial conditions had led to an unprecedented upheaval in society. The idea of "revolution" has become commonplace to describe profound changes in all spheres of society, when up to the writings of Marx the term had been limited to politics, to the English or French Revolutions of the 17th and 18th centuries. Now Marx applied it to the changes wrought in society by the bourgeois mode of production and attributed the evolution of history to the working out of necessary economic laws—a highly controversial idea.

Then came one of those paradoxical turns of phrase that must have shocked many of his fellow revolutionists.

The bourgeoisie has played in history an eminently revolutionary role. […] The bourgeoisie cannot exist without constantly revolutionising the instruments of production, and thereby the relations of production, and with them the whole relations of society.

Thus, the capitalist class, he said, has torn through the fabric of traditional societies and is now in the process of creating a globalised economy of huge productive force.

The bourgeoisie, during its class rule of scarce one hundred years, has created more massive and more colossal productive forces than have all preceding together. Subjection of Nature's forces to man, the extensive use of machinery, the application of chemistry to industry and manufacture, steam-navigation, railways, electric telegraphs, clearing of whole continents for cultivation, canalisation of rivers, whole populations conjured out of the ground—what earlier century had even a presentiment that such productive forces slumbered in the womb of social labour?

It's all there: even the powerful sexual metaphor.

Then came what made the Communist Manifesto such a stirring piece of political propaganda: its description of the moving mechanism of capitalist society and the historical prediction based on this analysis.

For Marx, capitalism unleashed powers that took on an independent life and turned against the very system of private property on which it was based. Over the previous thirty years, the history of industry and commerce had been a succession of crises that "progressively threaten the existence of bourgeois society". Epidemics of over-production repeatedly struck, when it seemed that "society has too much civilization, too much food, too much industry, too much trade", so that existing products and resources for future production were destroyed.

The reaction of the bourgeoisie was two-fold: the said temporary destruction of productive forces; and the extension and deepening of the exploitation of their markets. On the one hand the capitalist mode of production was extended to more primitive peoples and societies by the creation of colonies and the extension of trade. On the other hand, capitalism turned workers into proletarians.

Competition and the division of labour destroyed the societies of old. Slowly all workers amalgamated into a single downtrodden class. The condition of small shopkeepers, artisans, farmers, and wage earners slowly deteriorated into proletarian conditions. The very gathering of hands in huge factories was a step in the agglomeration of the subject classes into one body.

Far from prospering with the progress of industry, the modern worker falls ever further down, underneath even of the standard of his own class. The worker becomes a pauper.

When these proletarians unite they will become a force for revolution. They are helped by "the bourgeois ideologues who have raised themselves to the theoretical comprehension of the general movement of history"—a highfalutin' way of explaining how it happened that a doctor of philosophy and a factory owner presumed to tell the poor downtrodden masses how they should organise their lives and action. Marx ended the chapter as the supremely effective deviser of slogans that he was: "what the bourgeoisie mainly produces is its own gravediggers."

"Do I exaggerate when I extol Marx's gift for the telling phrase? "

As I say, the Manifesto went on to disparage other writings on socialism and to offer full collaboration to already existing workers' parties in England, the United States, France, Switzerland, and above all Germany, so that they all started to think of the coming downfall of capitalism. Do I exaggerate when I extol Marx's gift for the telling phrase? He ended with a final call to aim at a communist revolution: "proletarians risk to lose nothing but their chains; they have a world to gain. Proletarians of all lands, unite".

Playbook for Revolution and Mass Murder

Marx's desire to destroy the institutions of society and his blood-thirst towards enemies in the coming communist revolution was captured in his plan of action, written with Engels, for the Central Committee of the Communist League in March 1850. It reads like the literal playbook for what Vladimir Lenin did in undertaking the Bolshevik Revolution in Russia.

He stated that the goal of the organization was "the overthrow of the privileged classes," initially in cooperation with the petty and liberal "bourgeois" political parties. Marx warned that these democratic parties only want to establish a liberal agenda of reduced government spending, more secure private property rights and some welfare programmes for the poor. Instead, Marx said,

Its our interest and our task to make the revolution permanent until all the more or less propertied classes have been driven from their ruling positions, until the proletariat has conquered state power and until the association of the proletarians has progressed sufficiently far, not only in one country but in all the leading countries of the world. Our concern cannot simply be to modify private property, but to abolish it, not to hush up class antagonisms but to abolish classes, not to improve the existing society but to found a new one.

In the process of overthrowing the liberal democratic order that assumes power following the end of the monarchical rulers, Marx said that the revolutionary proletariat needed to form armed "councils" outside of the democratic government's authority and control. This is the very method Lenin insisted upon in Russia in the form of "Soviets" after the abdication of the Russian czar in March 1917 and in opposition to the newly established provisional democratic government that replaced the Russian monarchy.

Marx insisted that the feudal lands were not to be turned into peasant-owned private farms. No, instead, they were to be taken over by the state and transformed into collective farms upon which all among rural population will be made to live and work. And all industries had to be nationalized under an increasingly centralised and all-powerful proletarian government, to assure the end of capitalism and "bourgeois" democracy.

In addition, Marx said, the communist leaders must work to ensure that the immediate revolutionary excitement is not suddenly suppressed after the victory. On the contrary, it must be sustained as long as possible. Far from opposing the so-called excesses, instances of popular vengeance against hated individuals or against public buildings with which hateful memories are associated, the workers' party must not only tolerate these actions but must even give them direction. In other words, Marx was insisting upon fostering a frenzy of "vengeance against hated individuals" that clearly meant terror and mass murder. And this, too, was the signpost that Lenin followed in assuring the triumph of his revolution in Russia.

"-ISM'S" CLARIFIED

SOCIALISM is a social and economic doctrine that calls for public rather than private ownership or control of property and natural resources. According to the socialist view, individuals do not live or work in isolation but live in cooperation with one another. Furthermore, everything that people produce is in some sense a social product, and everyone who contributes to the production of a good is entitled to a share in it. Society as a whole, therefore, should own or at least control property for the benefit of all its members.

COMMUNISM is a the political and economic doctrine that aims to replace private property and a profit-based economy with public ownership and communal control of at least the major means of production (e.g., mines, mills, and factories) and the natural resources of a society. Communism is thus a form of socialism—a higher and more advanced form, according to its advocates. Exactly how communism differs from socialism has long been a matter of debate, but the distinction rests largely on the communists' adherence to the revolutionary socialism of Karl Marx.

MARXISM is a body of doctrine developed by Karl Marx and, to a lesser extent, by Friedrich Engels in the mid-19th century. It originally consisted of three related ideas: a philosophical view of man, a theory of history, and an economic and political program. There is also Marxism as it has been understood and practiced by the various socialist movements, particularly before 1914. Then there is Soviet Marxism as worked out by Lenin and modified by Stalin, which under the name of Marxism-Leninism became the doctrine of the communist parties set up after the Russian Revolution. Offshoots of this include Marxism as interpreted by the anti-Stalinist Leon Trotsky and his followers, Mao Zedong's (Mao Tse-tung's) Chinese variant of Marxism-Leninism, and various Third World Marxisms. There are also the post-World War II nondogmatic Marxisms that have modified Marx's thought with borrowings from modern philosophies, principally from those of Edmund Husserl and Martin Heidegger but also from Sigmund Freud and others.

NATIONAL SOCIALISM, or Nazism, is a totalitarian movement led by Adolf Hitler as head of the Nazi Party in Germany. In its intense nationalism, mass appeal, and dictatorial rule, National Socialism shared many elements with Italian fascism. However, Nazism was far more extreme both in its ideas and in its practice. In almost every respect it was an anti-intellectual and atheoretical movement, emphasizing the will of the charismatic dictator as the sole source of inspiration of a people and a nation, as well as a vision of annihilation of all enemies of the Aryan Volk as the one and only goal of Nazi policy.

National Socialism had peculiarly German roots. It can be partly traced to the Prussian tradition which regarded the militant spirit and the discipline of the Prussian army as the model for all individual and civic life. To it was added the tradition of political romanticism, with its sharp hostility to rationalism and to the principles underlying the French Revolution, its emphasis on instinct and the past, and its proclamation of the rights of Friedrich Nietzsche's exceptional individual (the Übermensch ["Superman"]) over all universal law and rules. These two traditions were later reinforced by the 19th-century adoration of science and of the laws of nature, which seemed to operate independently of all concepts of good and evil. Claims of the racial and cultural superiority of the "Nordic" (Germanic) peoples over all other Europeans and all other races were ruthlessly enforced in all of Nazi-occupied Europe and led to the killings of millions of Jews and anybody else who did not fit into the Nazi-society.

FASCISM is a political ideology and mass movement that dominated many parts of central, southern, and eastern Europe between 1919 and 1945 and that also had adherents in western Europe, the United States, South Africa, Japan, Latin America, and the Middle East. Europe's first fascist leader, Benito Mussolini, took the name of his party from the Latin word fasces, which referred to a bundle of elm or birch rods (usually containing an ax) used as a symbol of penal authority in ancient Rome. Although fascist parties and movements differed significantly from each other, they had many characteristics in common, including extreme militaristic nationalism, contempt for electoral democracy and political and cultural liberalism, a belief in natural social hierarchy and the rule of elites, and the desire to create a Volksgemeinschaft (German: "people's community"), in which individual interests would be subordinated to the good of the nation.

ISLAMISM is a wrong word for Islam. The term was invented by and for gullible western minds in order to suggest that there is a different group while Islam itself is portrayed as benevolent and peaceful; which it is definitely not! (See; Koan, Sira, Hadith, Manual to Sharia Law) Islam is a decentralised, totalitarian and national-socialist (Nazi) ideology disguised as religion; furthermore it is, as Muslims claim, an entire way of life that regulates every single aspect of a Muslim's life, from birth, over cleanliness, food, drink, sex, duties and death. Islam also has an effect on lives of non-Muslims, the infidels of "Kafirs," as Muslims call them; over 50% of the Islamic Trilogy (Koran, Sira, Hadith) deals actually with non-Muslims and what Muslims are required to do to them. And indeed, it is a death-cult in every regard and should be treated as such. The Arabic term islam, literally "submit, surrender," illuminates the fundamental religious idea of Islam—that the believer (called a Muslim or Mohammedan) accepts "surrender to the will of Allah and his messenger Mohammed." The will of Allah and Mohammed, to which man must submit, is made known through the holy Islamic texts (Koran, Sira, Hadith). (See Constitution of Saudi Arabia; Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Iran.)

Islamism correctly interpreted means "putting Islam (i.e. the doctrines of Mohammed in the Koran, the Sira and the Hadith) into practice!" (See Manual to Sharia Law / Reliance of the Traveller [meaning: Migrant], p.5032) Clarification: Islamism is not extremist Islam but mainstream Islam as it follows Mohammed's laws, sayings and deeds to the letter. It is the Islam practised by Wahabis (Saudi-Arabian Muslims), by the Muslim Brotherhood (that organises all Muslim student and culture associations throughout the entire world), by Hamas (which is a worldwide organisation of the Muslim Brotherhood preparing to take over non-Islamic states by undermining the entire range of society through spying, deception, and so bringing Sharia law into force), and by ISIS, Al Qaeda, Hisbollah [Hisb Allah, "Allah's Party"], the Mujaheddin, and others. The ultimate goal of Political Islam is, according to Islamic scripture, the subjugation of all women, and all non-Muslims, and indeed the total annihilation of all other belief systems, political systems and therefore all non-Muslim civilisations. The West is under attack because the Islamic packs of Wolves can sense Your weaknesses! Perhaps, it has been noticed, they hardly ever attack China, neither by word nor by terror acts; these cowards know, they would be merciless crushed, including their families. In China, Sharia Law is forbidden, acting against the state carries the death penalty (See: Constitution of the People's Republic of China 1982/2018; Civil Code of the People's Republic of China.)

AUTHORITARIANISM is a principle of blind submission to authority, as opposed to individual freedom of thought and action. In government, authoritarianism denotes any political system that concentrates power in the hands of a leader or a small elite that is not constitutionally responsible to the body of the people. Authoritarian leaders often exercise power arbitrarily and without regard to existing bodies of law, and they usually cannot be replaced by citizens choosing freely among various competitors in elections. The freedom to create opposition political parties or other alternative political groupings with which to compete for power with the ruling group is either limited or nonexistent in authoritarian regimes. It differs from totalitarianism, since authoritarian governments usually have no highly developed guiding ideology, tolerate some pluralism in social organisation, lack the power to mobilise the entire population in pursuit of national goals, and exercise that power within relatively predictable limits. Typical examples of authoritarian regimes existed in Portugal, Spain, Latin America and elsewhere in the second half of the 20th century as well as in Putin's Russia in the first two decades of his rule.

TOTALITARIANISM is a doctrine, a practice, and a form of government that in effect permits no individual freedom and that seeks to subordinate all aspects of the individual's life to the authority of the government. It is characterised by strong central rule that attempts to control and direct all aspects of individual life through coercion and repression. Italian dictator Benito Mussolini coined the Italian term totalitario in the early 1920s to describe the new fascist state of Italy, which he further described as: "All within the state, none outside the state, none against the state." By the beginning of World War II, "totalitarian" had become synonymous with absolute and oppressive single-party government.

Examples of such centralised totalitarian rule include the Maurya dynasty of India (c. 321–c. 185 BC), the Qin dynasty of China (221–206 BC), and the reign of Zulu chief Shaka (c. 1816–28). The totalitarian states of Nazi Germany under Adolf Hitler (1933–45) and the Soviet Union under Joseph Stalin (1924–53) were the first examples of decentralised or popular totalitarianism, in which the state achieved overwhelming popular support for its leadership. This support was not spontaneous; its genesis depended on a charismatic leader; and it was made possible only by modern developments in communication and transportation.

THEOCRACY is a form of government in which one or more deities are recognised as supreme ruling authorities, guided by laws written on temple walls or in books. The word theocracy originates from the Greek theocratia (from theos for "god", and krateo for "to rule") meaning "the rule of God". The term was initially coined by Titus Flavius Josephus in the first century AD to describe the characteristic government of the Jews in the Holy Land. He argued that while mankind had developed many forms of rule, most could be subsumed under the following three types: monarchy, oligarchy, and democracy. However, according to Josephus, the government of the Jews was unique. Josephus offered the term theocracy to describe this polity in which a god was sovereign and the god's word was since Ezra's time law through the sacred scripture, the Torah ("the Teaching of the Law;" the Pentateuch, "the 5 scrolls" known as the 5 books of Moses). [Against Apion by Flavius Josephus, Book II, Chapter 17.] Josephus' definition was widely accepted until the Enlightenment era, when the term took on negative connotations and was barely salvaged by Hegel's commentary.

The originally proposed title "A Communist Confession of Faith" says what this pamphlet is really all about. It is not about peaceful reform or improvement of the society. It is about its diversification, its forcible overthrow, and its final destruction. It is a Covenant of Evil, a Creed of death like the Koran, it is the Gospel of a Godless Religion. And too many gullible "progressives" have no clue what this totalitarian and murderous cult of the Left really represents.)

Text:
MANIFESTO OF THE COMMUNIST PARTY

PREFACE.

The "Manifesto" was published as the platform of the "Communist League" a workingmen's association, first exclusively German, later an international, and under the political conditions of the Continent before 1848, unavoidably a secret society. At a Congress of the League, held in London in November, 1847, Marx and Engels were commissioned to prepare for publication a complete theoretical and practical party-program. Drawn up in German, in January, 1848, the manuscript was sent to the printer in London a few weeks before the French revolution of February 24th. A French translation was brought out in Paris, shortly before the insurrection of June, 1848. The first English translation, by Miss Helen Macfarlane, appeared in George Julian Harney's "Red Republican," London, 1850. A Danish and a Polish edition had also been published.

The defeat of the Parisian insurrection of June, 1848—the first great battle between Proletariat and Bourgeoisie—drove again into the background, for a time, the social and political aspirations of the European working class.

Thenceforth, the struggle for supremacy was again, as it had been before the revolution of February, solely between different sections of the propertied class; the working class was reduced to a fight for political elbow-room, and to the position of extreme wing of the Middle-class Radicals. Wherever independent proletarian movements continued to show signs of life, they were ruthlessly hunted down. Thus the Prussian police hunted out the Central Board of the Communist League, then located in Cologne. The members were arrested, and after eighteen months' imprisonment, they were tried in October, 1852. This celebrated "Cologne Communist trial" lasted from October 4th till November 12th; seven of the prisoners were sentenced to terms of imprisonment in a fortress, varying from three to six years. Immediately after the sentence the League was formally dissolved by the remaining members. As to the "Manifesto," it seemed thenceforth to be doomed to oblivion.

When the European working class had recovered sufficient strength for another attack on the ruling classes, the International Working Men's Association sprang up. But this association, formed with the express aim of welding into one body the whole militant proletariat of Europe and America, could not at once proclaim the principles laid down in the "Manifesto." The International was bound to have a program broad enough to be acceptable to the English Trades' Unions, to the followers of Proudhon in France, Belgium, Italy and Spain and to the Lassalleans[1] in Germany. Marx, who drew up this program to the satisfaction of all parties, entirely trusted to the intellectual development of the working-class, which was sure to result from combined action and mutual discussion. The very events and vicissitudes of the struggle against Capital, the defeats even more than the victories, could not help bringing home to men's minds the insufficiency of their various favorite nostrums, and preparing the way for a more complete insight into the true conditions of working-class emancipation. And Marx was right. The International, on its breaking up in 1874, left the workers quite different men from what it had found them in 1864. Proudhonism in France, Lasalleanism in Germany were dying out, and even the Conservative English Trades' Unions, though most of them had long since severed their connection with the International, were gradually advancing towards that point at which, last year at Swansea, their president could say in their name, "Continental Socialism has lost its terrors for us." In fact, the principles of the "Manifesto" had made considerable headway among the working men of all countries.

The Manifesto itself thus came to the front again. The German text had been, since 1850, reprinted several times in Switzerland, England and America. In 1872, it was translated into English in New York, where the translation was published in "Woodhull and Claflin's Weekly." From this English version, a French one was made in "Le Socialiste" of New York. Since then at least two more English translations, more or less mutilated, have been brought out in America, and one of them has been reprinted in England. The first Russian translation, made by Bakounine, was published at Herzen's "Kolokol" office in Geneva, about 1863; a second one, by the heroic Vera Zasulitch, also in Geneva, 1882. A new Danish edition is to be found in "Socialdemokratisk Bibliothek," Copenhagen, 1885; a fresh French translation in "Le Socialiste," Paris, 1886. From this latter a Spanish version was prepared and published in Madrid, 1886. The German reprints are not to be counted, there have been twelve altogether at the least. An Armenian translation, which was to be published in Constantinople some months ago, did not see the light, I am told, because the publisher was afraid of bringing out a book with the name of Marx on it, while the translator declined to call it his own production. Of further translations into other languages I have heard, but have not seen them. Thus the history of the Manifesto reflects, to a great extent, the history of the modern working-class movement; at present it is undoubtedly the most widespread, the most international production of all Socialist literature, the common platform acknowledged by millions of working men from Siberia to California.

Yet, when it was written, we could not have called it a Socialist Manifesto. By Socialists, in 1847, were understood, on the one hand, the adherents of the various Utopian systems: Owenites in England, Fourierists in France, both of them already reduced to the position of mere sects, and gradually dying out; on the other hand, the most multifarious social quacks, who, by all manners of tinkering, professed to redress, without any danger to capital and profit, all sorts of social grievances, in both cases men outside the working class movement, and looking rather to the "educated" classes for support. Whatever portion of the working class had become convinced of the insufficiency of mere political revolutions, and had proclaimed the necessity of a total social change, that portion, then, called itself Communist. It was a crude, rough-hewn, purely instinctive sort of Communism; still, it touched the cardinal point and was powerful enough amongst the working class to produce the Utopian Communism, in France, of Cabet, and in Germany, of Weitling. Thus, Socialism was, in 1847, a middle-class movement, Communism a working class movement. Socialism was, on the Continent at least, "respectable"; Communism was the very opposite. And as our notion, from the very beginning, was that "the emancipation of the working class must be the act of the working class itself," there could be no doubt as to which of the two names we must take. Moreover, we have, ever since, been far from repudiating it.

The "Manifesto" being our joint production, I consider myself bound to state that the fundamental proposition which forms its nucleus, belongs to Marx. That proposition is: that in every historical epoch, the prevailing mode of economic production and exchange, and the social organization necessarily following from it, form the basis upon which is built up, and from which alone can be explained, the political and intellectual history of that epoch; that consequently the whole history of mankind (since the dissolution of primitive tribal society, holding land in common ownership) has been a history of class struggles, contests between exploiting and exploited, ruling and oppressed classes; that the history of these class struggles forms a series of evolution in which, now-a-days, a stage has been reached where the exploited and oppressed class—the proletariat—cannot attain its emancipation from the sway of the exploiting and ruling class—the bourgeoisie—without, at the same time, and once and for all, emancipating society at large from all exploitation, oppression, class-distinctions and class struggles.

This proposition which, in my opinion, is destined to do for history what Darwin's theory has done for biology, we, both of us, had been gradually approaching for some years before 1845. How far I had independently progressed towards it, is best shown by my "Condition of the Working Class in England."[2] But when I again met Marx at Brussels, in spring, 1845, he had it ready worked out, and put it before me, in terms almost as clear as those in which I have stated it here.

From our joint preface to the German edition of 1872, I quote the following:

"However much the state of things may have altered during the last 25 years, the general principles laid down in this Manifesto, are, on the whole, as correct today as ever. Here and there some detail might be improved. The practical application of the principles will depend, as the manifesto itself states, everywhere and at all times, on the historical conditions for the time being existing, and, for that reason, no special stress is laid on the revolutionary measures proposed at the end of Section II. That passage would, in many respects, be very differently worded today. In view of the gigantic strides of Modern Industry since 1848, and of the accompanying improved and extended organization of the working-class, in view of the practical experience gained, first in the February revolution, and then, still more, in the Paris Commune, where the proletariat for the first time held political power for two whole months, this program has in some details become antiquated. One thing especially was proved by the Commune, viz., that "the working-class cannot simply lay hold of the ready-made State machinery, and wield it for its own purposes." (See "The Civil War in France; Address of the General Council of the International Working-men's Association," Chicago, Charles H. Kerr & Co., where this point is further developed). Further, it is self-evident, that the criticism of socialist literature is deficient in relation to the present time, because it comes down only to 1847; also, that the remarks on the relation of the Communists to the various opposition-parties (Section IV.), although in principle still correct, yet in practice are antiquated, because the political situation has been entirely changed, and the progress of history has swept from off the earth the greater portion of the political parties there enumerated.

"But then, the Manifesto has become a historical document which we have no longer any right to alter."

The present translation is by Mr. Samuel Moore, the translator of the greater portion of Marx's "Capital." We have revised it in common, and I have added a few notes explanatory of historical allusions.

Frederick Engels.
London, 30th January, 1888.

Lassalle personally, to us, always acknowledged himself to be a disciple of Marx, and, as such, stood on the ground of the "Manifesto." But in his public agitation, 1860-64, he did not go beyond demanding co-operative workshops supported by State credit.

The Condition of the Working Class in England in 1844. By Frederick Engels. Translated by Florence K. Wischnewetzky—London, Swan, Sonnenschein & Co.

MANIFESTO OF THE COMMUNIST PARTY
BY KARL MARX and FREDERICK ENGELS

A SPECTRE is haunting Europe—the spectre of Communism. All the powers of old Europe have entered into a holy alliance to exorcise this spectre; Pope and Czar, Metternich and Guizot, French Radicals and German police-spies.

Where is the party in opposition that has not been decried as communistic by its opponents in power? Where the Opposition that has not hurled back the branding reproach of Communism, against the more advanced opposition parties, as well as against its reactionary adversaries?

Two things result from this fact.

I. Communism is already acknowledged by all European Powers to be itself a Power.

II. It is high time that Communists should openly, in the face of the whole world, publish their views, their aims, their tendencies, and meet this nursery tale of the Spectre of Communism with a Manifesto of the party itself.

To this end, Communists of various nationalities have assembled in London, and sketched the following manifesto, to be published in the English, French, German, Italian, Flemish and Danish languages.

I.
BOURGEOIS AND PROLETARIANS.

The history of all hitherto existing society is the history of class struggles.

Freeman and slave, patrician and plebeian, lord and serf, guild-master and journeyman, in a word, oppressor and oppressed, stood in constant opposition to one another, carried on an uninterrupted, now hidden, now open fight, a fight that each time ended, either in a revolutionary re-constitution of society at large, or in the common ruin of the contending classes.

In the earlier epochs of history, we find almost everywhere a complicated arrangement of society into various orders, a manifold graduation of social rank. In ancient Rome we have patricians, knights, plebeians, slaves; in the middle ages, feudal lords, vassals, guild-masters, journeymen, apprentices, serfs; in almost all of these classes, again, subordinate gradations.

The modern bourgeois society that has sprouted from the ruins of feudal society, has not done away with class antagonisms. It has but established new classes, new conditions of oppression, new forms of struggle in place of the old ones.

Our epoch, the epoch of the bourgeoisie, possesses, however, this distinctive feature; it has simplified the class antagonisms. Society as a whole is more and more splitting up into two great hostile camps, into two great classes directly facing each other: Bourgeoisie (towns folk) and Proletariat (worker).

From the serfs of the middle ages sprang the chartered burghers of the earliest towns. From these burgesses the first elements of the bourgeoisie were developed.

The discovery of America, the rounding of the Cape, opened up fresh ground for the rising bourgeoisie. The East-Indian and Chinese markets, the colonization of America, trade with the colonies, the increase in the means of exchange and in commodities generally, gave to commerce, to navigation, to industry, an impulse never before known, and thereby, to the revolutionary element in the tottering feudal society, a rapid development.

The feudal system of industry, under which industrial production was monopolized by close guilds, now no longer sufficed for the growing wants of the new markets. The manufacturing system took its place. The guild-masters were pushed on one side by the manufacturing middle-class; division of labor between the different corporate guilds vanished in the face of division of labor in each single workshop.

Meantime the markets kept ever growing, the demand, ever rising. Even manufacture no longer sufficed. Thereupon, steam and machinery revolutionized industrial production. The place of manufacture was taken by the giant, Modern Industry, the place of the industrial middle-class, by industrial millionaires, the leaders of whole industrial armies, the modern bourgeois.

Modern industry has established the world-market, for which the discovery of America paved the way. This market has given an immense development to commerce, to navigation, to communication by land. This development has, in its turn, reacted on the extension of industry; and in proportion as industry, commerce, navigation, railways extended, in the same proportion the bourgeoisie developed, increased its capital, and pushed into the background every class handed down from the Middle Ages.

We see, therefore, how the modern bourgeoisie is itself the product of a long course of development, of a series of revolutions in the modes of production and of exchange.

Each step in the development of the bourgeoisie was accompanied by a corresponding political advance of that class. An oppressed class under the sway of the feudal nobility, an armed and self-governing association in the mediaeval commune,[4] here independent urban republic (as in Italy and Germany), there taxable "third estate" of the monarchy (as in France), afterwards, in the period of manufacture proper, serving either the semi-feudal or the absolute monarchy as a counterpoise against the nobility, and, in fact, corner stone of the great monarchies in general, the bourgeoisie has at last, since the establishment of Modern Industry and of the world-market, conquered for itself, in the modern representative State, exclusive political sway. The executive of the modern State is but a committee for managing the common affairs of the whole bourgeoisie.

The bourgeoisie, historically, has played a most revolutionary part.

The bourgeoisie, wherever it has got the upper hand, has put an end to all feudal, patriarchal, idyllic relations. It has pitilessly torn asunder the motley feudal ties that bound man to his "natural superiors," and has left remaining no other nexus between man and man than naked self-interest, than callous "cash payment." It has drowned the most heavenly ecstacies of religious fervor, of chivalrous enthusiasm, of philistine sentimentalism, in the icy water of egotistical calculation. It has resolved personal worth into exchange value, and in place of the numberless indefeasible chartered freedoms, has set up that single, unconscionable freedom—Free Trade. In one word, for exploitation, veiled by religious and political illusions, it has substituted naked, shameless, direct, brutal exploitation.

The bourgeoisie has stripped of its halo every occupation hitherto honored and looked up to with reverent awe. It has converted the physician, the lawyer, the priest, the poet, the man of science, into its paid wage-laborers.

The bourgeoisie has torn away from the family its sentimental veil, and has reduced the family relation to a mere money relation.

The bourgeoisie has disclosed how it came to pass that the brutal display of vigor in the Middle Ages, which Reactionists so much admire, found its fitting complement in the most slothful indolence. It has been the first to show what man's activity can bring about. It has accomplished wonders far surpassing Egyptian pyramids, Roman aqueducts, and Gothic cathedrals; it has conducted expeditions that put in the shade all former Exoduses of nations and crusades.

The bourgeoisie cannot exist without constantly revolutionizing the instruments of production, and thereby the relations of production, and with them the whole relations of society. Conservation of the old modes of production in unaltered form, was, on the contrary, the first condition of existence for all earlier industrial classes. Constant revolutionizing of production, uninterrupted disturbance of all social conditions, everlasting uncertainty and agitation distinguish the bourgeois epoch from all earlier ones. All fixed, fast-frozen relations, with their train of ancient and venerable prejudices and opinions, are swept away, all new-formed ones become antiquated before they can ossify. All that is solid melts into air, all that is holy is profaned, and man is at last compelled to face with sober senses, his real conditions of life, and his relations with his kind.

The need of a constantly expanding market for its products chases the bourgeoisie over the whole surface of the globe. It must nestle everywhere, settle everywhere, establish connections everywhere.

The bourgeoisie has through its exploitation of the world-market given a cosmopolitan character to production and consumption in every country. To the great chagrin of Reactionists, it has drawn from under the feet of industry the national ground on which it stood. All old-established national industries have been destroyed or are daily being destroyed. They are dislodged by new industries, whose introduction becomes a life and death question for all civilized nations, by industries that no longer work up indigenous raw material, but raw material drawn from the remotest zones; industries whose products are consumed, not only at home, but in every quarter of the globe. In place of the old wants, satisfied by the productions of the country, we find new wants, requiring for their satisfaction the products of distant lands and climes. In place of the old local and national seclusion and self-sufficiency, we have intercourse in every direction, universal inter-dependence of nations. And as in material, so also in intellectual production. The intellectual creations of individual nations become common property. National one-sidedness and narrow-mindedness become more and more impossible, and from the numerous national and local literatures there arises a world-literature.

The bourgeoisie, by the rapid improvement of all instruments of production, by the immensely facilitated means of communication, draws all, even the most barbarian, nations into civilization. The cheap prices of its commodities are the heavy artillery with which it batters down all Chinese walls, with which it forces the barbarians' intensely obstinate hatred of foreigners to capitulate. It compels all nations, on pain of extinction, to adopt the bourgeois mode of production; it compels them to introduce what it calls civilization into their midst, i. e., to become bourgeois themselves. In a word, it creates a world after its own image.

The bourgeoisie has subjected the country to the rule of the towns. It has created enormous cities, has greatly increased the urban population as compared with the rural, and has thus rescued a considerable part of the population from the idiocy of rural life. Just as it has made the country dependent on the towns, so it has made barbarian and semi-barbarian countries dependent on the civilized ones, nations of peasants on nations of bourgeois, the East on the West.

The bourgeoisie keeps more and more doing away with the scattered state of the population, of the means of production, and of property. It has agglomerated population, centralized means of production, and has concentrated property in a few hands. The necessary consequence of this was political centralization. Independent, or but loosely connected provinces, with separate interests, laws, governments and systems of taxation, became lumped together in one nation, with one government, one code of laws, one national class-interest, one frontier and one customs-tariff.

The bourgeoisie, during its rule of scarce one hundred years, has created more massive and more colossal productive forces than have all preceding generations together. Subjection of Nature's forces to man, machinery, application of chemistry to industry and agriculture, steam-navigation, railways, electric telegraphs, clearing of whole continents for cultivation, canalization of rivers, whole populations conjured out of the ground—what earlier century had even a presentiment that such productive forces slumbered in the lap of social labor?

We see then: the means of production and of exchange on whose foundation the bourgeoisie built itself up, were generated in feudal society. At a certain stage in the development of these means of production and of exchange, the conditions under which feudal society produced and exchanged, the feudal organization of agriculture and manufacturing industry, in one word, the feudal relations of property became no longer compatible with the already developed productive forces; they became so many fetters. They had to burst asunder; they were burst asunder.

Into their places stepped free competition, accompanied by a social and political constitution adapted to it, and by the economical and political sway of the bourgeois class.

A similar movement is going on before our own eyes. Modern bourgeois society with its relations of production, of exchange and of property, a society that has conjured up such gigantic means of production and of exchange, is like the sorcerer, who is no longer able to control the powers of the nether world whom he has called up by his spells. For many a decade past the history of industry and commerce is but the history of the revolt of modern productive forces against modern conditions of production, against the property relations that are the conditions for the existence of the bourgeoisie and of its rule. It is enough to mention the commercial crises that by their periodical return put on its trial, each time more threateningly, the existence of the entire bourgeois society. In these crises a great part not only of the existing products, but also of the previously created productive forces, are periodically destroyed. In these crises there breaks out an epidemic that, in all earlier epochs, would have seemed an absurdity—the epidemic of over-production. Society suddenly finds itself put back into a state of momentary barbarism; it appears as if a famine, a universal war of devastation had cut off the supply of every means of subsistence; industry and commerce seem to be destroyed; and why? Because there is too much civilization, too much means of subsistence, too much industry, too much commerce. The productive forces at the disposal of society no longer tend to further the development of the conditions of bourgeois property; on the contrary, they have become too powerful for these conditions, by which they are fettered, and so soon as they overcome these fetters, they bring disorder into the whole of bourgeois society, endanger the existence of bourgeois property. The conditions of bourgeois society are too narrow to comprise the wealth created by them. And how does the bourgeoisie get over these crises? On the one hand by enforced destruction of a mass of productive forces; on the other, by the conquest of new markets, and by the more thorough exploitation of the old ones. That is to say, by paving the way for more extensive and more destructive crises, and by diminishing the means whereby crises are prevented.

The weapons with which the bourgeoisie felled feudalism to the ground are now turned against the bourgeoisie itself.

But not only has the bourgeoisie forged the weapons that bring death to itself; it has also called into existence the men who are to wield those weapons—the modern working-class—the proletarians.

In proportion as the bourgeoisie, i. e., capital, is developed, in the same proportion is the proletariat, the modern working-class, developed, a class of laborers, who live only so long as they find work, and who find work only so long as their labor increases capital. These laborers, who must sell themselves piecemeal, are a commodity, like every other article of commerce, and are consequently exposed to all the vicissitudes of competition, to all the fluctuations of the market.

Owing to the extensive use of machinery and to division of labor, the work of the proletarians has lost all individual character, and, consequently, all charm for the workman. He becomes an appendage of the machine, and it is only the most simple, most monotonous, and most easily acquired knack that is required of him. Hence, the cost of production of a workman is restricted, almost entirely, to the means of subsistence that he requires for his maintenance, and for the propagation of his race. But the price of a commodity, and also of labor, is equal to its cost of production. In proportion, therefore, as the repulsiveness of the work increases, the wage decreases. Nay more, in proportion as the use of machinery and division of labor increases, in the same proportion the burden of toil also increases, whether by prolongation of the working hours, by increase of the work enacted in a given time, or by increased speed of the machinery, etc.

Modern industry has converted the little workshop of the patriarchal master into the great factory of the industrial capitalist. Masses of laborers, crowded into the factory, are organized like soldiers. As privates of the industrial army they are placed under the command of a perfect hierarchy of officers and sergeants. Not only are they the slaves of the bourgeois class, and of the bourgeois State, they are daily and hourly enslaved by the machine, by the over-looker, and, above all, by the individual bourgeois manufacturer himself. The more openly this despotism proclaims gain to be its end and aim, the more petty, the more hateful and the more embittering it is.

The less the skill and exertion or strength implied in manual labor, in other words, the more modern industry becomes developed, the more is the labor of men superseded by that of women. Differences of age and sex have no longer any distinctive social validity for the working class. All are instruments of labor, more or less expensive to use, according to their age and sex.

No sooner is the exploitation of the laborer by the manufacturer, so far at an end, that he receives his wages in cash, than he is set upon by the other portions of the bourgeoisie, the landlord, the shopkeeper, the pawnbroker, etc.

The lower strata of the Middle class—the small tradespeople, shopkeepers, and retired tradesmen generally, the handicraftsmen and peasants—all these sink gradually into the proletariat, partly because their diminutive capital does not suffice for the scale on which Modern Industry is carried on, and is swamped in the competition with the large capitalists, partly because their specialized skill is rendered worthless by new methods of production. Thus the proletariat is recruited from all classes of the population.

The proletariat goes through various stages of development. With its birth begins its struggle with the bourgeoisie. At first the contest is carried on by individual laborers, then by the workpeople of a factory, then by the operatives of one trade, in one locality, against the individual bourgeois who directly exploits them. They direct their attacks not against the bourgeois conditions of production, but against the instruments of production themselves; they destroy imported wares that compete with their labor, they smash to pieces machinery, they set factories ablaze, they seek to restore by force the vanished status of the workman of the Middle Ages.

At this stage the laborers still form an incoherent mass scattered over the whole country, and broken up by their mutual competition. If anywhere they unite to form more compact bodies, this is not yet the consequence of their own active union, but of the union of the bourgeoisie, which class, in order to attain its own political ends, is compelled to set the whole proletariat in motion, and is moreover yet, for a time, able to do so. At this stage, therefore, the proletarians do not fight their enemies, but the enemies of their enemies, the remnants of absolute monarchy, the landowners, the non-industrial bourgeois, the petty bourgeoisie. Thus the whole historical movement is concentrated in the hands of the bourgeoisie; every victory so obtained is a victory for the bourgeoisie.

But with the development of industry the proletariat not only increases in number, it becomes concentrated in greater masses, its strength grows, and it feels that strength more. The various interests and conditions of life within the ranks of the proletariat are more and more equalized, in proportion as machinery obliterates all distinctions of labor, and nearly everywhere reduces wages to the same low level. The growing competition among the bourgeois, and the resulting commercial crises, make the wages of the workers ever more fluctuating. The unceasing improvement of machinery, ever more rapidly developing, makes their livelihood more and more precarious; the collisions between individual workmen and individual bourgeois take more and more the character of collisions between two classes. Thereupon the workers begin to form combinations (Trades' Unions) against the bourgeois; they club together in order to keep up the rate of wages; they found permanent associations in order to make provision beforehand for these occasional revolts. Here and there the contest breaks out into riots.

Now and then the workers are victorious, but only for a time. The real fruit of their battles lies, not in the immediate result, but in the ever expanding union of the workers. This union is helped on by the improved means of communication that are created by modern industry, and that place the workers of different localities in contact with one another. It was just this contact that was needed to centralize the numerous local struggles, all of the same character, into one national struggle between classes. But every class struggle is a political struggle. And that union, to attain which the burghers of the Middle Ages, with their miserable highways, required centuries, the modern proletarians, thanks to railways, achieve in a few years.

This organization of the proletarians into a class, and consequently into a political party, is continually being upset again by the competition between the workers themselves. But it ever rises up again, stronger, firmer, mightier. It compels legislative recognition of particular interests of the workers, by taking advantage of the divisions among the bourgeoisie itself. Thus the ten-hour bill in England was carried.

Altogether collisions between the classes of the old society further, in many ways, the course of development of the proletariat. The bourgeoisie finds itself involved in a constant battle. At first with the aristocracy; later on, with those portions of the bourgeoisie itself, whose interests have become antagonistic to the progress of industry; at all times, with the bourgeoisie of foreign countries. In all these battles it sees itself compelled to appeal to the proletariat, to ask for its help, and thus, to drag it into the political arena. The bourgeoisie itself, therefore, supplies the proletariat with its own elements of political and general education, in other words, it furnishes the proletariat with weapons for fighting the bourgeoisie.

Further, as we have already seen, entire sections of the ruling classes are, by the advance of industry, precipitated into the proletariat, or are at least threatened in their conditions of existence. These also supply the proletariat with fresh elements of enlightenment and progress.

Finally, in times when the class-struggle nears the decisive hour, the process of dissolution going on within the ruling class, in fact, within the whole range of old society, assumes such a violent, glaring character, that a small section of the ruling class cuts itself adrift, and joins the revolutionary class, the class that holds the future in its hands. Just as, therefore, at an earlier period, a section of the nobility went over to the bourgeoisie, so now a portion of the bourgeoisie goes over to the proletariat, and in particular, a portion of the bourgeois ideologists, who have raised themselves to the level of comprehending theoretically the historical movements as a whole.

Of all the classes that stand face to face with the bourgeoisie today, the proletariat alone is a really revolutionary class. The other classes decay and finally disappear in the face of modern industry; the proletariat is its special and essential product.

The lower middle-class, the small manufacturer, the shopkeeper, the artisan, the peasant, all these fight against the bourgeoisie, to save from extinction their existence as fractions of the middle class. They are, therefore, not revolutionary, but conservative. Nay more, they are reactionary, for they try to roll back the wheel of history. If by chance they are revolutionary, they are so, only in view of their impending transfer into the proletariat, they thus defend not their present, but their future interests, they desert their own standpoint to place themselves at that of the proletariat.

The "dangerous class," the social scum, that passively rotting mass thrown off by the lowest layers of old society, may, here and there, be swept into the movement by a proletarian revolution; its conditions of life, however, prepare it far more for the part of a bribed tool of reactionary intrigue.

In the conditions of the proletariat, those of old society at large are already virtually swamped. The proletarian is without property; his relation to his wife and children has no longer anything in common with the bourgeois family-relations; modern industrial labor, modern subjection to capital, the same in England as in France, in America as in Germany, has stripped him of every trace of national character. Law, morality, religion, are to him so many bourgeois prejudices, behind which lurk in ambush just as many bourgeois interests.

All the preceding classes that got the upper hand, sought to fortify their already acquired status by subjecting society at large to their conditions of appropriation. The proletarians cannot become masters of the productive forces of society, except by abolishing their own previous mode of appropriation, and thereby also every other previous mode of appropriation. They have nothing of their own to secure and to fortify; their mission is to destroy all previous securities for, and insurances of, individual property.

All previous historical movements were movements of minorities, or in the interest of minorities. The proletarian movement is the self-conscious, independent movement of the immense majority, in the interest of the immense majority. The proletariat, the lowest stratum of our present society, cannot stir, cannot raise itself up, without the whole superincumbent strata of official society being sprung into the air.

Though not in substance, yet in form, the struggle of the proletariat with the bourgeoisie is at first a national struggle. The proletariat of each country must, of course, first of all settle matters with its own bourgeoisie.

In depicting the most general phases of the development of the proletariat, we traced the more or less veiled civil war, raging within existing society, up to the point where that war breaks out into open revolution, and where the violent overthrow of the bourgeoisie, lays the foundation for the sway of the proletariat.

Hitherto, every form of society has been based, as we have already seen, on the antagonism of oppressing and oppressed classes. But in order to oppress a class, certain conditions must be assured to it under which it can, at least, continue its slavish existence. The serf, in the period of serfdom, raised himself to membership in the commune, just as the petty bourgeois, under the yoke of feudal absolutism, managed to develop into a bourgeois. The modern laborer, on the contrary, instead of rising with the progress of industry, sinks deeper and deeper below the conditions of existence of his own class. He becomes a pauper, and pauperism develops more rapidly than population and wealth. And here it becomes evident, that the bourgeoisie is unfit any longer to be the ruling class in society, and to impose its conditions of existence upon society as an over-riding law. It is unfit to rule, because it is incompetent to assure an existence to its slave within his slavery, because it cannot help letting him sink into such a state that it has to feed him, instead of being fed by him. Society can no longer live under this bourgeoisie, in other words, its existence is no longer compatible with society.

The essential condition for the existence, and for the sway of the bourgeois class, is the formation and augmentation of capital; the condition for capital is wage-labor. Wage-labor rests exclusively on competition between the laborers. The advance of industry, whose involuntary promoter is the bourgeoisie, replaces the isolation of the laborers, due to competition, by their revolutionary combination, due to association. The development of Modern Industry, therefore, cuts from under its feet the very foundation on which the bourgeoisie produces and appropriates products. What the bourgeoisie therefore produces, above all, are its own grave-diggers. Its fall and the victory of the proletariat are equally inevitable.

1. By bourgeoisie is meant the class of modern Capitalists, owners of the means of social production and employers of wage-labor. By proletariat, the class of modern wage-laborers who, having no means of production of their own, are reduced to selling their labor-power in order to live.

2. That is, all written history. In 1847, the pre-history of society, the social organization existing previous to recorded history, was all but unknown. Since then, Haxthausen discovered common ownership of land in Russia, Maurer proved it to be the social foundation from which all Teutonic races started in history, and by and by village communities were found to be, or to have been, the primitive form of society everywhere from India to Ireland. The inner organization of this primitive Communistic society was laid bare, in its typical form, by Morgan's crowning discovery of the true nature of the gens and its relation to the tribe. With the dissolution of these primeval communities society begins to be differentiated into separate and finally antagonistic classes. I have attempted to retrace this process of dissolution in "The Origin of the Family, Private Property and the State." (Chicago, Charles H. Kerr & Co.)

3. Guild-master, that is a full member of a guild, a master within, not a head of, a guild.

4. "Commune" was the name taken, in France, by the nascent towns even before they had conquered from their feudal lords and masters, local self-government and political rights as "the Third Estate." Generally speaking, for the economical development of the bourgeoisie, England it here taken as the typical country, for its political development, France.

II.
PROLETARIANS AND COMMUNISTS.

In what relation do the Communists stand to the proletarians as a whole?

The Communists do not form a separate party opposed to other working-class parties.

They have no interests separate and apart from those of the proletariat as a whole.

They do not set up any sectarian principles of their own, by which to shape and mould the proletarian movement.

The Communists are distinguished from the other working class parties by this only: 1. In the national struggles of the proletarians of the different countries, they point out and bring to the front the common interests of the entire proletariat independently of all nationality. 2. In the various stages of development which the struggle of the working class against the bourgeoisie has to pass through, they always and everywhere represent the interests of the movement as a whole.

The Communists, therefore, are on the one hand, practically, the most advanced and resolute section of the working class parties of every country, that section which pushes forward all others; on the other hand, theoretically, they have over the great mass of the proletariat the advantage of clearly understanding the line of march, the conditions, and the ultimate general results of the proletarian movement.

The immediate aim of the Communists is the same as that of all the other proletarian parties; formation of the proletariat into a class, overthrow of the bourgeois supremacy, conquest of political power by the proletariat.

The theoretical conclusions of the Communists are in no way based on ideas or principles that have been invented, or discovered, by this or that would-be universal reformer.

They merely express, in general terms, actual relations springing from an existing class struggle, from a historical movement going on under our very eyes. The abolition of existing property relations is not at all a distinctive feature of Communism.

All property relations in the past have continually been subject to historical change consequent upon the change in historical conditions.

The French Revolution, for example, abolished feudal property in favor of bourgeois property.

The distinguishing feature of Communism is not the abolition of property generally, but the abolition of bourgeois property. But modern bourgeois private property is the final and most complete expression of the system of producing and appropriating products, that is based on class antagonism, on the exploitation of the many by the few.

In this sense, the theory of the Communists may be summed up in the single sentence: Abolition of private property.

We Communists have been reproached with the desire of abolishing the right of personally acquiring property as the fruit of a man's own labor, which property is alleged to be the ground work of all personal freedom, activity and independence.

Hard-won, self-acquired, self-earned property! Do you mean the property of the petty artisan and of the small peasant, a form of property that preceded the bourgeois form? There is no need to abolish that; the development of industry has to a great extent already destroyed it, and is still destroying it daily.

Or do you mean modern bourgeois private property?

But does wage-labor create any property for the laborer? Not a bit. It creates capital, i. e., that kind of property which exploits wage-labor, and which cannot increase except upon condition of getting a new supply of wage-labor for fresh exploitation. Property, in its present form, is based on the antagonism of capital and wage-labor. Let us examine both sides of this antagonism.

To be a capitalist, is to have not only a purely personal, but a social status in production. Capital is a collective product, and only by the united action of many members, nay, in the last resort, only by the united action of all members of society, can it be set in motion.

Capital is therefore not a personal, it is a social power.

When, therefore, capital is converted into common property, into the property of all members of society, personal property is not thereby transformed into social property. It is only the social character of the property that is changed. It loses its class-character.

Let us now take wage-labor.

The average price of wage-labor is the minimum wage, i. e., that quantum of the means of subsistence, which is absolutely requisite to keep the laborer in bare existence as a laborer. What, therefore, the wage-laborer appropriates by means of his labor, merely suffices to prolong and reproduce a bare existence. We by no means intend to abolish this personal appropriation of the products of labor, an appropriation that is made for the maintenance and reproduction of human life, and that leaves no surplus wherewith to command the labor of others. All that we want to do away with is the miserable character of this appropriation, under which the laborer lives merely to increase capital, and is allowed to live only in so far as the interest of the ruling class requires it.

In bourgeois society, living labor is but a mean to increase accumulated labor. In Communist society, accumulated labor is but a means to widen, to enrich, to promote the existence of the laborer. In bourgeois society, therefore, the past dominates the present; in communist society, the present dominates the past. In bourgeois society capital is independent and has individuality, while the living person is dependent and has no individuality.

And the abolition of this state of things is called by the bourgeois, abolition of individuality and freedom! And rightly so. The abolition of bourgeois individuality, bourgeois independence, and bourgeois freedom is undoubtedly aimed at.

By freedom is meant, under the present bourgeois conditions of production, free trade, free selling and buying.

But if selling and buying disappears, free selling and buying disappears also. This talk about free selling and buying, and all the other "brave words" of our bourgeoisie about freedom in general, have a meaning, if any, only in contrast with restricted selling and buying, with the fettered traders of the Middle Ages, but have no meaning when opposed to the Communistic abolition of buying and selling, of the bourgeois conditions of production, and of the bourgeoisie itself.

You are horrified at our intending to do away with private property. But in your existing society, private property is already done away with for nine-tenths of the population; its existence for the few is solely due to its non-existence in the hands of those nine-tenths. You reproach us, therefore, with intending to do away with a form of property, the necessary condition for whose existence is, the non-existence of any property for the immense majority of society.

In one word, you reproach us with intending to do away with your property. Precisely so; that is just what we intend.

From the moment when labor can no longer be converted into capital, money, or rent, into a social power capable of being monopolized, i.e., from the moment when individual property can no longer be transformed into bourgeois property, into capital, from that moment, you say, individuality vanishes.

You must, therefore, confess that by "individual" you mean no other person than the bourgeois, than the middle-class owner of property. This person must, indeed, be swept out of the way, and made impossible.

Communism deprives no man of the power to appropriate the products of society: all that it does is to deprive him of the power to subjugate the labor of others by means of such appropriation.

It has been objected, that upon the abolition of private property all work will cease, and universal laziness will overtake us.

According to this, bourgeois society ought long ago to have gone to the dogs through sheer idleness; for those of its members who work, acquire nothing, and those who acquire anything, do not work. The whole of this objection is but another expression of the tautology: that there can no longer be any wage-labor when there is no longer any capital.

All objections urged against the Communistic mode of producing and appropriating material products, have, in the same way, been urged against the Communistic modes of producing and appropriating intellectual products. Just as, to the bourgeois, the disappearance of class property is the disappearance of production itself, so the disappearance of class culture is to him identical with the disappearance of all culture.

That culture, the loss of which he laments, is, for the enormous majority, a mere training to act as a machine.

But don't wrangle with us so long as you apply, to our intended abolition of bourgeois property, the standard of your bourgeois notions of freedom, culture, law, etc. Your very ideas are but the outgrowth of the conditions of your bourgeois production and bourgeois property, just as your jurisprudence is but the will of your class made into a law for all, a will, whose essential character and direction are determined by the economic conditions of existence of your class.

The selfish misconception that induces you to transform into eternal laws of nature and of reason, the social forms springing from your present mode of production and form of property—historical relations that rise and disappear in the progress of production—this misconception you share with every ruling class that has preceded you. What you see clearly in the case of ancient property, what you admit in the case of feudal property, you are of course forbidden to admit in the case of your own bourgeois form of property.

Abolition of the family! Even the most radical flare up at this infamous proposal of the Communists.

On what foundation is the present family, the bourgeois family, based? On capital, on private gain. In its completely developed form this family exists only among the bourgeoisie. But this state of things finds its complement in the practical absence of the family among the proletarians, and in public prostitution.

The bourgeois family will vanish as a matter of course when its complement vanishes, and both will vanish with the vanishing of capital.

Do you charge us with wanting to stop the exploitation of children by their parents? To this crime we plead guilty.

But, you will say, we destroy the most hallowed of relations, when we replace home education by social.

And your education! Is not that also social, and determined by the social conditions under which you educate, by the intervention, direct or indirect, of society by means of schools, etc.? The Communists have not invented the intervention of society in education; they do but seek to alter the character of that intervention, and to rescue education from the influence of the ruling class.

The bourgeois clap-trap about the family and education, about the hallowed co-relation of parent and child, becomes all the more disgusting, the more, by the action of Modern Industry, all family ties among the proletarians are torn asunder, and their children transformed into simple articles of commerce and instruments of labor.

But you Communists would introduce community of women, screams the whole bourgeoisie in chorus.

The bourgeois sees in his wife a mere instrument of production. He hears that the instruments of production are to be exploited in common, and, naturally, can come to no other conclusion, than that the lot of being common to all will likewise fall to the women.

He has not even a suspicion that the real point aimed at is to do away with the status of women as mere instruments of production.

For the rest, nothing is more ridiculous than the virtuous indignation of our bourgeois at the community of women which, they pretend, is to be openly and officially established by the Communists. The Communists have no need to introduce community of women; it has existed almost from time immemorial.

Our bourgeois, not content with having the wives and daughters of their proletarians at their disposal, not to speak of common prostitutes, take the greatest pleasure in seducing each others' wives.

Bourgeois marriage is in reality a system of wives in common and thus, at the most, what the Communists might possibly be reproached with, is that they desire to introduce, in substitution for a hypocritically concealed, an openly legalized community of women. For the rest, it is self-evident, that the abolition of the present system of production must bring with it the abolition of the community of women springing from that system, i. e., of prostitution both public and private.

The Communists are further reproached with desiring to abolish countries and nationalities.

The working men have no country. We cannot take from them what they have not got. Since the proletariat must first of all acquire political supremacy, must rise to be the leading class of the nation, must constitute itself the nation, it is, so far, itself national, though not in the bourgeois sense of the word.

National differences, and antagonisms between peoples, are daily more and more vanishing, owing to the development of the bourgeoisie, to freedom of commerce, to the world-market, to uniformity in the mode of production and in the conditions of life corresponding thereto.

The supremacy of the proletariat will cause them to vanish still faster. United action, of the leading civilized countries at least, is one of the first conditions for the emancipation of the proletariat.

In proportion as the exploitation of one individual by another is put an end to, the exploitation of one nation by another will also be put a end to. In proportion as the antagonism between classes within the nation vanishes, the hostility of one nation to another will come to an end.

The charges against Communism made from a religious, a philosophical, and generally, from an ideological standpoint, are not deserving of serious examination.

Does it require deep intuition to comprehend that man's ideas, views, and conceptions, in one word, man's consciousness, changes with every change in the conditions of his material existence, in his social relations and in his social life?

What else does the history of ideas prove, than that intellectual production changes in character in proportion as material production is changed? The ruling ideas of each age have ever been the ideas of its ruling class.

When people speak of ideas that revolutionize society, they do but express the fact, that within the old society, the elements of a new one have been created, and that the dissolution of the old ideas keeps even pace with the dissolution of the old conditions of existence.

When the ancient world was in its last throes, the ancient religions were overcome by Christianity. When Christian ideas succumbed in the 18th century to rationalist ideas, feudal society fought its death-battle with the then revolutionary bourgeoisie. The ideas of religious liberty and freedom of conscience, merely gave expression to the sway of free competition within the domain of knowledge.

"Undoubtedly," it will be said, "religious, moral, philosophical and juridical ideas have been modified in the course of historical development. But religion, morality, philosophy, political science, and law, constantly survived this change."

"There are, besides, eternal truths, such as Freedom, Justice, etc., that are common to all states of society. But Communism abolishes eternal truths, it abolishes all religion, and all morality, instead of constituting them on a new basis; it therefore acts in contradiction to all past historical experience."

What does this accusation reduce itself to? The history of all past society has consisted in the development of class antagonisms, antagonisms that assumed different forms at different epochs.

But whatever form they may have taken, one fact is common to all past ages, viz., the exploitation of one part of society by the other. No wonder, then, that the social consciousness of past ages, despite all the multiplicity and variety it displays, moves within certain common forms, or general ideas, which cannot completely vanish except with the total disappearance of class antagonisms.

The Communist revolution is the most radical rupture with traditional property-relations; no wonder that its development involves the most radical rupture with traditional ideas.

But let us have done with the bourgeois objections to Communism.

We have seen above, that the first step in the revolution by the working class, is to raise the proletariat to the position of ruling class, to win the battle of democracy.

The proletariat will use its political supremacy, to wrest, by degrees, all capital from the bourgeoisie, to centralize all instruments of production in the hands of the State, i. e., of the proletariat organized as the ruling class; and to increase the total of productive forces as rapidly as possible.

Of course, in the beginning, this cannot be effected except by means of despotic inroads on the rights of property, and on the conditions of bourgeois production; by means of measures, therefore, which appear economically insufficient and untenable, but which, in the course of the movement, outstrip themselves, necessitate further inroads upon the old social order, and are unavoidable as a means of entirely revolutionizing the mode of production.

These measures will of course be different in different countries.

Nevertheless in the most advanced countries the following will be pretty generally applicable:

1. Abolition of property in land and application of all rents of land to public purposes.
2. A heavy progressive or graduated income tax.
3. Abolition of all right of inheritance.
4. Confiscation of the property of all emigrants and rebels.
5. Centralization of credit in the hands of the state, by means of a national bank with State capital and an exclusive monopoly.
6. Centralization of the means of communication and transport in the hands of the State.
7. Extension of factories and instruments of production owned by the State; the bringing into cultivation of waste lands, and the improvement of the soil generally in accordance with a common plan.
8. Equal liability of all to labor. Establishment of industrial armies, especially for agriculture.
9. Combination of agriculture with manufacturing industries; gradual abolition of the distinction between town and country, by a more equable distribution of population over the country.
10. Free education for all children in public schools. Abolition of children's factory labor in its present form. Combination of education with industrial production, etc., etc.

When, in the course of development, class distinctions have disappeared, and all production has been concentrated in the hands of a vast association of the whole nation, the public power will lose its political character. Political power, properly so called, is merely the organized power of one class for oppressing another. If the proletariat during its contest with the bourgeoisie is compelled, by the force of circumstances, to organize itself as a class, if, by means of a revolution, it makes itself the ruling class, and, as such, sweeps away by force the old conditions of production, then it will, along with these conditions, have swept away the conditions for the existence of class antagonisms, and of classes generally, and will thereby have abolished its own supremacy as a class.

In place of the old bourgeois society, with its classes and class antagonisms, we shall have an association, in which the free development of each is the condition for the free development of all.

III.

SOCIALIST AND COMMUNIST LITERATURE.

1. Reactionary Socialism. a. Feudal Socialism.

Owing to their historical position, it became the vocation of the aristocracies of France and England to write pamphlets against modern bourgeois society. In the French revolution of July, 1830, and in the English reform agitation, these aristocracies again succumbed to the hateful upstart. Thenceforth, a serious political contest was altogether out of the question. A literary battle alone remained possible. But even in the domain of literature the old cries of the restoration period had become impossible.

Copyright © 2018 by Lord Henfield, Guildford Scientific Press

In order to arouse sympathy, the aristocracy were obliged to lose sight, apparently, of their own interests, and to formulate their indictment against the bourgeoisie in the interest of the exploited working class alone. Thus the aristocracy took their revenge by singing lampoons on their new master, and whispering in his ears sinister prophecies of coming catastrophe.

In this way arose feudal socialism; half lamentation, half lampoon; half echo of the past, half menace of the future; at times, by its bitter, witty and incisive criticism, striking the bourgeoisie to the very hearts' core, but always ludicrous in its effect, through total incapacity to comprehend the march of modern history.

The aristocracy, in order to rally the people to them, waved the proletarian alms-bag in front for a banner. But the people, so often as it joined them, saw on their hindquarters the old feudal coats of arms, and deserted with loud and irreverent laughter.

One section of the French Legitimists, and "Young England," exhibited this spectacle.

In pointing out that their mode of exploitation was different to that of the bourgeoisie, the feudalists forget that they exploited under circumstances and conditions that were quite different, and that are now antiquated. In showing that, under their rule, the modern proletariat never existed, they forget that the modern bourgeoisie is the necessary offspring of their own form of society.

For the rest, so little do they conceal the reactionary character of their criticism, that their chief accusation against the bourgeoisie amounts to this, that under the bourgeois regime a class is being developed, which is destined to cut up root and branch the old order of society.

What they upbraid the bourgeoisie with is not so much that it creates a proletariat, as that it creates a revolutionary proletariat.

In political practice, therefore, they join in all coercive measures against the working-class; and in ordinary life, despite their high falutin phrases, they stoop to pick up the golden apples dropped from the tree of industry, and to barter truth, love, and honor for traffic in wool, beetroot-sugar and potato spirit.

As the parson has ever gone hand in hand with the landlord, so has Clerical Socialism with Feudal Socialism.

Nothing is easier than to give Christian asceticism a Socialist tinge. Has not Christianity declaimed against private property, against marriage, against the State? Has it not preached in the place of these, charity and poverty, celibacy, and mortification of the flesh, monastic life and Mother Church? Christian Socialism is but the Holy Water with which the priest consecrates the heart-burnings of the aristocrat.

b. Petty Bourgeois Socialism.

The feudal aristocracy was not the only class that was ruined by the bourgeoisie, not the only class whose conditions of existence pined and perished in the atmosphere of modern bourgeois society. The medieval burgesses and the small peasant bourgeoisie, were the precursors of the modern bourgeoisie. In those countries which are but little developed, industrially and commercially, these two classes still vegetate side by side with the rising bourgeoisie.

In countries where modern civilization has become fully developed, a new class of petty bourgeois has been formed, fluctuating between proletariat and bourgeoisie, and ever renewing itself as a supplementary part of bourgeois society. The individual members of this class, however, are being constantly hurled down into the proletariat by the action of competition, and, as modern industry develops, they even see the moment approaching when they will completely disappear as an independent section of modern society, to be replaced, in manufactures, agriculture and commerce, by overlookers, bailiffs and shopmen.

In countries like France, where the peasants constitute far more than half of the population, it was natural that writers who sided with the proletariat against the bourgeoisie, should use, in their criticism of the bourgeoisie regime, the standard of the peasant and petty bourgeois, and from the standpoint of these intermediate classes should take up the cudgels for the working-class. Thus arose petty bourgeois Socialism. Sismondi was the head of this school, not only in France, but also in England.

This school of Socialism dissected with great acuteness the contradictions in the conditions of modern production. It laid bare the hypocritical apologies of economists. It proved, incontrovertibly, the disastrous effects of machinery and division of labor; the concentration of capital and land in a few hands; overproduction and crises; it pointed out the inevitable ruin of the petty bourgeois and peasant, the misery of the proletariat, the anarchy in production, the crying inequalities in the distribution of wealth, the industrial war of extermination between nations, the dissolution of old moral bonds, of the old family relations, of the old nationalities.

In its positive aims, however, this form of Socialism aspires either to restoring the old means of production and of exchange, and with them the old property relations, and the old society, or to cramping the modern means of production and of exchange, within the frame work of the old property relations that have been, and were bound to be, exploded by those means. In either case, it is both reactionary and Utopian.

Its last words are: corporate guilds for manufacture; patriarchal relations in agriculture.

Ultimately, when stubborn historical facts had dispersed all intoxicating effects of self-deception, this form of Socialism ended in a miserable fit of the blues.

German or "True" Socialism.

The Socialist and Communist literature of France, a literature that originated under the pressure of a bourgeoisie in power, and that was the expression of the struggle against this power, was introduced into Germany at a time when the bourgeoisie, in that country, had just begun its contest with feudal absolutism.

German philosophers, would-be philosophers, and beaux esprits, eagerly seized on this literature, only forgetting, that when these writings immigrated from France into Germany, French social conditions had not immigrated along with them. In contact with German social conditions, this French literature lost all its immediate practical significance, and assumed a purely literary aspect. Thus, to the German philosophers of the Eighteenth Century, the demands of the first French Revolution were nothing more than the demands of "Practical Reason" in general, and the utterance of the will of the revolutionary French bourgeoisie signified in their eyes the laws of pure Will, of Will as it was bound to be, of true human Will generally.

The work of the German literati consisted solely in bringing the new French ideas into harmony with their ancient philosophical conscience, or rather, in annexing the French ideas without deserting their own philosophic point of view.

This annexation took place in the same way in which a foreign language is appropriated, namely by translation.

It is well known how the monks wrote silly lives of Catholic Saints over the manuscripts on which the classical works of ancient heathendom had been written. The German literati reversed this process with the profane French literature. They wrote their philosophical nonsense beneath the French original. For instance, beneath the French criticism of the economic functions of money, they wrote "Alienation of Humanity," and beneath the French criticism of the bourgeois State they wrote, "Dethronement of the Category of the General," and so forth.

The introduction of these philosophical phrases at the back of the French historical criticisms they dubbed "Philosophy of Action," "True Socialism," "German Science of Socialism," "Philosophical Foundation of Socialism," and so on.

The French Socialist and Communist literature was thus completely emasculated. And, since it ceased in the hands of the German to express the struggle of one class with the other, he felt conscious of having overcome "French one-sidedness" and of representing, not true requirements, but the requirements of Truth, not the interests of the proletariat, but the interests of Human Nature, of Man in general, who belongs to no class, has no reality, who exists only in the misty realm or philosophical phantasy.

This German Socialism, which took its schoolboy task so seriously and solemnly, and extolled its poor stock-in-trade in such mountebank fashion, meanwhile gradually lost its pedantic innocence.

The fight of the German, and, especially, of the Prussian bourgeoisie, against feudal aristocracy and absolute monarchy, in other words, the liberal movement, became more earnest.

By this, the long-wished-for opportunity was offered to "True Socialism" of confronting the political movement with the socialist demands, of hurling the traditional anathemas against liberalism, against representative government, against bourgeois competition, bourgeois freedom of the press, bourgeois legislation, bourgeois liberty and equality, and of preaching to the masses that they had nothing to gain, and everything to lose, by this bourgeois movement. German Socialism forgot, in the nick of time, that the French criticism, whose silly echo it was, presupposed the existence of modern bourgeois society, with its corresponding economic conditions of existence, and the political constitution adapted thereto, the very things whose attainment was the object of the pending struggle in Germany.

To the absolute governments, with their following of parsons, professors, country squires and officials, it served as a welcome scarecrow against the threatening bourgeoisie.

It was a sweet finish after the bitter pills of floggings and bullets, with which these same governments, just at that time, dosed the German working-class risings.

While this "True" Socialism thus served the governments as a weapon for fighting the German bourgeoisie, it, at the same time, directly represented a reactionary interest, the interest of the German Philistines. In Germany the petty bourgeois class, a relic of the 16th century, and since then constantly cropping up again under various forms, is the real social basis of the existing state of things.

To preserve this class, is to preserve the existing state of things in Germany. The industrial and political supremacy of the bourgeoisie threatens it with certain destruction; on the one hand, from the concentration of capital; on the other, from the rise of a revolutionary proletariat. "True" Socialism appeared to kill these two birds with one stone. It spread like an epidemic.

The robe of speculative cobwebs, embroidered with flowers of rhetoric, steeped in the dew of sickly sentiment, this transcendental robe in which the German Socialists wrapped their sorry "eternal truths" all skin and bone, served to wonderfully increase the sale of their goods amongst such a public.

And on its part, German Socialism recognized, more and more, its own calling as the bombastic representative of the petty bourgeois Philistine.

It proclaimed the German nation to be the model nation, and the German petty Philistine to be the typical man. To every villainous meanness of this model man it gave a hidden, higher, socialistic interpretation, the exact contrary of its true character. It went to the extreme length of directly opposing the "brutally destructive" tendency of Communism, and of proclaiming its supreme and impartial contempt of all class struggles. With very few exceptions, all the so-called Socialist and Communist publications that now (1847) circulate in Germany belong to the domain of this foul and enervating literature.

2. Conservative or Bourgeois Socialism.

A part of the bourgeoisie is desirous of redressing social grievances, in order to secure the continued existence of bourgeois society.

To this section belong economists, philanthropists, humanitarians, improvers of the condition of the work class, organizers of charity, members of societies for the prevention of cruelty to animals, temperance fanatics, hole and corner reformers of every imaginable kind. This form of Socialism has, moreover, been worked out into complete systems.

We may cite Proudhon's "Philosophic de la Misere" as an example of this form.

The socialistic bourgeois want all the advantages of modern social conditions without the struggles and dangers necessarily resulting therefrom. They desire the existing state of society minus its revolutionary and disintegrating elements. They wish for a bourgeoisie without a proletariat. The bourgeoisie naturally conceives the world in which it is supreme to be the best; and bourgeois socialism develops this comfortable conception into various more or less complete systems. In requiring the proletariat to carry out such a system, and thereby to march straightway into the social New Jerusalem, it but requires in reality, that the proletariat should remain within the bounds of existing society, but should cast away all its hateful ideas concerning the bourgeoisie.

A second and more practical, but less systematic, form of this socialism sought to depreciate every revolutionary movement in the eyes of the working class, by showing that no mere political reform, but only a change in the material conditions of existence, in economical relations, could be of any advantage to them. By changes in the material conditions of existence, this form of Socialism, however, by no means understands abolition of the bourgeois relations of production, an abolition that can be effected only by a revolution, but administrative reforms, based on the continued existence of these relations; reforms, therefore, that in no respect affect the relations between capital and labor, but, at the best, lessen the cost, and simplify the administrative work, of bourgeois government.

Bourgeois Socialism attains adequate expression, when, and only when, it becomes a mere figure of speech.

Free trade: for the benefit of the working class. Protective duties: for the benefit of the working class. Prison Reform: for the benefit of the working class. This is the last word and the only seriously meant word of bourgeois Socialism.

It is summed up in the phrase: the bourgeois is a bourgeois—for the benefit of the working class.

3. Critical-Utopian Socialism and Communism.

We do not here refer to that literature which, in every great modern revolution, has always given voice to the demands of the proletariat: such as the writings of Babeuf and others.

The first direct attempts of the proletariat to attain its own ends were made in times of universal excitement, when feudal society was being overthrown. These attempts necessarily failed, owing to the then undeveloped state of the proletariat, as well as to the absence of the economic conditions for its emancipation, conditions that had yet to be produced, and could be produced by the impending bourgeois epoch alone. The revolutionary literature that accompanied these first movements of the proletariat had necessarily a reactionary character. It inculcated universal asceticism and social leveling in its crudest form.

The Socialist and Communist systems properly so-called, those of St. Simon, Fourier, Owen and others, spring into existence in the early undeveloped period, described above, of the struggle between proletariat and bourgeoisie (see section I. Bourgeoisie and Proletariat).

The founders of these systems see, indeed, the class antagonisms, as well as the action of the decomposing elements in the prevailing form of society. But the proletariat, as yet in its infancy, offers to them the spectacle of a class without any historical initiative or any independent political movement.

Since the development of class antagonism keeps even pace with the development of industry, the economic situation, as they find it, does not as yet offer to them the material conditions for the emancipation of the proletariat. They therefore search after a new social science, after new social laws, that are to create these conditions.

Historical action is to yield to their personal inventive action, historically created conditions of emancipation to fantastic ones, and the gradual, spontaneous class-organization of the proletariat to an organization of society specially contrived by these inventors. Future history resolves itself, in their eyes, into the propaganda and the practical carrying out of their social plans.

In the formation of their plans they are conscious of caring chiefly for the interests of the working-class, as being the most suffering class. Only from the point of view of being the most suffering class does the proletariat exist for them.

The undeveloped state of the class struggle, as well as their own surroundings, cause Socialists of this kind to consider themselves far superior to all class antagonisms. They want to improve the condition of every member of society, even that of the most favored. Hence, they habitually appeal to society at large, without distinction of class; nay, by preference, to the ruling class. For how can people, when once they understand their system, fail to see in it the best possible plan of the best possible state of society?

Hence, they reject all political, and especially all revolutionary action; they wish to attain their ends by peaceful means, and endeavor, by small experiments, necessarily doomed to failure, and by the force of example, to pave the way for the new social Gospel.

Such fantastic pictures of future society, painted at a time when the proletariat is still in a very undeveloped state, and has but a fantastic conception of its own position, correspond with the first instinctive yearnings of that class for a general reconstruction of society.

But these Socialist and Communist publications contain also a critical element. They attack every principle of existing society. Hence they are full of the most valuable materials for the enlightenment of the working class. The practical measures proposed in them, such as the abolition of the distinction between town and country, of the family, of the carrying on of industries for the account of private individuals, and of the wage system, the proclamation of social harmony, the conversion of the functions of the State into a mere superintendence of production, all these proposals point solely to the disappearance of class-antagonisms which were, at that time, only just cropping up, and which, in these publications, are recognized under their earliest, indistinct and undefined forms only. These proposals, therefore, are of a purely Utopian character.

The significance of Critical-Utopian Socialism and Communism bears an inverse relation to historical development. In proportion as the modern class struggle develops and takes definite shape, this fantastic standing apart from the contest, these fantastic attacks on it lose all practical value and all theoretical justification. Therefore, although the originators of these systems were, in many respects, revolutionary, their disciples have, in every case, formed mere reactionary sects. They hold fast by the original views of their masters, in opposition to the progressive historical development of the proletariat. They, therefore, endeavor and that consistently, to deaden the class struggle and to reconcile the class antagonisms. They still dream of experimental realization of their social Utopias, of founding isolated "phalanstères," of establishing "Home Colonies," of setting up a "Little Icaria"[3]—duodecimo editions of the New Jerusalem, and to realize all these castles in the air, they are compelled to appeal to the feelings and purses of the bourgeois. By degrees they sink into the category of the reactionary conservative Socialists depicted above, differing from these only by more systematic pedantry, and by their fanatical and superstitious belief in the miraculous effects of their social science.

They, therefore, violently oppose all political action on the part of the working class; such action, according to them, can only result from blind unbelief in the new Gospel.

The Owenites in England, and the Fourierists in France, respectively, oppose the Chartists and the "Reformistes."

1. Not the English Restoration 1660 to 1689, but the French Restoration 1814 to 1830.

2. This applies chiefly to Germany where the landed aristocracy and squirearchy have large portions of their estates cultivated for their own account by stewards, and are, moreover, extensive beetroot-sugar manufacturers and distillers of potato spirits. The wealthier British aristocracy are, as yet, rather above that; but they, too, know how to make up for declining rents by lending their names to floaters of more or leas shady joint-stock companies.

3. Phalanstères were socialist colonies on the plan of Charles Fourier. Icaria was the name given by Cabot to his Utopia and later on, to his American Communist colony.

IV.

POSITION OF THE COMMUNISTS IN RELATION TO THE VARIOUS EXISTING OPPOSITION PARTIES.

Section II. has made clear the relations of the Communists to the existing working class parties, such as the Chartists in England and the Agrarian Reformers in America.

The Communists fight for the attainment of the immediate aims, for the enforcement of the momentary interests of the working class; but in the movement of the present, they also represent and take care of the future of that movement. In France the Communists ally themselves with the Social-Democrats*, against the conservative and radical bourgeoisie, reserving, however, the right to take up a critical position in regard to phrases and illusions traditionally handed down from the great Revolution. (*The party then represented in parliament by Ledru-Rollin, in literature by Louis Blanc, in the daily press by the Reforme. The name of Social Democracy signified, with these its inventors, a section of the Democratic or Republican party more or less tinged with Socialism.)

In Switzerland they support the Radicals, without losing sight of the fact that this party consists of antagonistic elements, partly of Democratic Socialists, in the French sense, partly of radical bourgeois.

In Poland they support the party that insists on an agrarian revolution, as the prime condition for national emancipation, that party which fomented the insurrection of Cracow in 1846.

In Germany they fight with the bourgeoisie whenever it acts in a revolutionary way, against the absolute monarchy, the feudal squirearchy, and the petty bourgeoisie.

But they never cease, for a single instant, to instill into the working class the clearest possible recognition of the hostile antagonism between bourgeoisie and proletariat, in order that the German workers may straightway use, as so many weapons against the bourgeoisie, the social and political conditions that the bourgeoisie must necessarily introduce along with its supremacy, and in order that, after the fall of the reactionary classes in Germany, the fight against the bourgeoisie itself may immediately begin.

The Communists turn their attention chiefly to Germany, because that country is on the eve of a bourgeois revolution, that is bound to be carried out under more advanced conditions of European civilization, and with a more developed proletariat, than that of England was in the seventeenth, and of France in the eighteenth century, and because the bourgeois revolution in Germany will be but the prelude to an immediately following proletarian revolution.

In short, the Communists everywhere support every revolutionary movement against the existing social and political order of things.

In all these movements they bring to the front, as the leading question in each, the property question, no matter what its degree of development at the time.

Finally, they labor everywhere for the union and agreement of the democratic parties of all countries.

The Communists disdain to conceal their views and aims. They openly declare that their ends can be attained only by the forcible overthrow of all existing social conditions (German: durch den gewaltsamen Umsturz aller bisherigen Gesellschaftsordnung). Let the ruling classes tremble at a Communistic revolution. The proletarians have nothing to lose but their chains. They have a world to win.

Working men of all countries, unite!

The Ashtiname of Muhammad, also known as the Covenant or Testament (Testamentum) of Muhammad, is a charter or writ granting protection and other privileges to the followers of Jesus, given to the Christian monks of Saint Catherine's Monastery in the Sinai Peninsula. It is sealed with an imprint representing Muhammad's hand. Ashtinameh is a Persian phrase meaning "Letter of Reconciliation", a term for a treaty or covenant.

Ascribed to: Ali (Mohammed's nephew, secretary and successor as 4th Caliph), Mohammed (commissioner) 623 AD

Manuscript(s): Copies at Saint Catherine's Monastery, and Simonopetra

First printed edition: Shuqayr, Na'um.(1916) Tarikh Sina al-qadim wa al-hadith wa jughrafiyatuha, ma'a khulasat tarikh Misr wa al-Sham wa al-'Iraq wa Jazirat al-'Arab wa ma kana baynaha min al-'ala'iq al-tijariyyah wa al-harbiyyah wa ghayriha 'an tariq Sina' min awwal 'ahd al-tarikh il al-yawm. [al-Qahirah]: n.p., 1916.

History

According to the monks' tradition, Muhammad frequently visited the monastery and had great relationships and discussions with the Sinai fathers. Several certified historical copies are displayed in the library of St Catherine, some of which are witnessed by the judges of Islam to affirm historical authenticity. The monks claim that during the Ottoman conquest of Egypt in the Ottoman–Mamluk War (1516–17), the original document was seized from the monastery by Ottoman soldiers and taken to Sultan Selim I's palace in Istanbul for safekeeping. A copy was then made to compensate for its loss at the monastery. It also seems that the charter was renewed under the new rulers, as other documents in the archive suggest. Traditions about the tolerance shown towards the monastery were reported in governmental documents issued in Cairo and during the period of Ottoman rule (1517–1798), the Pasha of Egypt annually reaffirmed its protections.

In 1916, Na'um Shuqayr published the Arabic text of the Ashtiname in his Tarikh Sina al-qadim or History of Ancient Sinai. The Arabic text, along with its German translation, was published for a second time in 1918 in Bernhard Moritz's Beiträge zur Geschichte des Sinai-Klosters.

The Testamentum et pactiones inter Mohammedem et Christianae fidei cultores, which was published in Arabic and Latin by Gabriel Sionita in 1630 represents a covenant concluded between Muhammad and the Christians of the World. It is not a copy of the Ashtiname.

The origins of the Ashtiname has been the subject of a number of different traditions, best known through the accounts of European travellers who visited the monastery. These authors include the French knight Greffin Affagart (d. c. 1557), the French traveller Jean de Thévenot (d. 1667) and the English prelate Richard Peacocke, who included an English translation of the text.

Authenticity

Many early modern scholars accepted the authenticity of the work, including Franciscus Quaresmius, Balthasar de Monconys, and Kara Mustafa Pasha. The modern Muslim scholar John Andrew Morrow also believes in the authenticity of the document, pointing out that the document is replicated verbatim across numerous Islamic sources, including more than a thousand years of Caliphs and Sultans. However, since the 19th century several aspects of the Ashtiname, notably the list of witnesses, have been questioned by some scholars. There are similarities to other documents granted to other religious communities in the Near East. One example is Muhammad's alleged letter to the Christians of Najran, which first came to light in 878 in a monastery in Iraq and whose text is preserved in the Chronicle of Seert.

Addition from The Seal of Mohammed

In addition to using a signet ring to seal documents, Muhammad may have also used other techniques to show the provenance of his correspondence. In an alleged letter to the Saint Catherine's Monastery in Egypt, he signed the letter, also called the Ashtiname of Muhammad, by inking his hand and pressing the impression on the paper. The letter granted protection and privileges to the monastery. In part it says:

"I shall exempt them from that which may disturb them; of the burdens which are paid by others as an oath of allegiance. They must not give anything of their income but that which pleases them—they must not be offended, or disturbed, or coerced or compelled. Their judges should not be changed or prevented from accomplishing their offices, nor the monks disturbed in exercising their religious order, or the people of seclusion be stopped from dwelling in their cells. No one is allowed to plunder these Christians, or destroy or spoil any of their churches, or houses of worship, or take any of the things contained within these houses and bring it to the houses of Islam. And he who takes away anything therefrom, will be one who has corrupted the oath of God, and, in truth, disobeyed His Messenger." It is sealed with an imprint representing Muhammad's hand. [Ratliff, "The monastery of Saint Catherine at Mount Sinai and the Christian communities of the Caliphate."

Modern influence

Some have argued that the Ashtiname is a resource for building bridges between Muslims and Christians. For example, in 2009, in the pages of The Washington Post, Muqtedar Khan translated the document in full, arguing:

Those who seek to foster discord among Muslims and Christians focus on issues that divide and emphasize areas of conflict. But when resources such as Muhammad's promise to Christians is invoked and highlighted it builds bridges. It inspires Muslims to rise above communal intolerance and engenders goodwill in Christians who might be nursing fear of Islam or Muslims.

The Ashtiname is the inspiration for The Covenants Initiative which urges all Muslims to abide by the treaties and covenants that Muhammad concluded with the Christian communities of his time. Muhammad's Ashtiname refers to the relation and marriage of Christian and Muslim beliefs and the assured protection of Christian churches in Islamic regions.

Modern interpretations pretend to extend this tolerance to other faiths, such as Judaism and Hinduism: "There is no compulsion and coercion in regard to religion ..." Koran 2:256.

This Koran verse, however, is used by Muslims as al-Taqiyyah (deception) to make gullible Western people blind towards the Koranic Commandment of Abrogation (We [Allah / Mohammed] do not abrogate or cause to be forgotten anything of our revelation unless we bring something better or like it; Koran 2:106] in which the older verse is rendered invaluable by the younger, more violent, verses of the Koran, such as this one: "Fight those who believe not in Allah, nor in the Last Day, nor forbid that which Allah and His Messenger have forbidden (in the Sharia law), nor follow the Religion of Truth (Islam), out of those who have been given the Book (Zoroastrians, Jews, Christians, Gnostics), until they pay the jizya (poll tax) and feel themselves subdued (by Islam's superiority)." Koran 9:29

"The only punishment of those who wage war against Allah and His Messenger and strive to make mischief in the land is that they should be murdered, or crucified, or their hands and their feet should be cut off on opposite sides, or they should be imprisoned. This shall he a disgrace for them in this world, and in the Hereafter they shall have a grievous chastisement,." Koran 5:33

Proper companionship is very important. The Koran repeatedly calls on Muslims [and this includes particularly the youngest children!] to isolate themselves and avoid contact with unbelievers [the dirty non-Muslims]. An exception is only allowed for tactical reasons, when Muslims are in a weaker position.

• "O you who believe (Muslims), take not the Jews and the Christians for friends. They are friends of each other. And whoever amongst you (Muslims) takes them for friends he is indeed one of them (meaning: he is a traitor towards Islam)." Koran 5:51

These three verses abrogate all peaceful verses of the Koran because the Koran-chapters 9 and 5 are chronologically the youngest and therefore "the best" in Muslim point of view. Not all Muslims are terrorists, you may say; however almost all terrorists are Muslim-Zealots.)

TEXT:

This is a letter which was issued by Muhammad, Ibn Abdullah, the Messenger, the Prophet, the Faithful, who is sent to all the people as a trust on the part of God to all His creatures, that they may have no plea against God hereafter. Verily God is Omnipotent, the Wise. This letter is directed to the embracers of Islam, as a covenant given to the followers of Jesus the Nazarene in the East and West, the far and near, the Arabs and foreigners, the known and the unknown.

This letter contains the oath given unto them, and he who disobeys that which is therein will be considered a disbeliever and a transgressor to that whereunto he is commanded. He will be regarded as one who has corrupted the oath of God, disbelieved His Testament, rejected His Authority, despised His Religion, and made himself deserving of His Curse, whether he is a Sultan or any other believer of Islam. Whenever Christian monks, devotees and pilgrims gather together, whether in a mountain or valley, or den, or frequented place, or plain, or church, or in houses of worship, verily we are [at the] back of them and shall protect them, and their properties and their morals, by Myself, by My Friends and by My Assistants, for they are of My Subjects and under My Protection.

I shall exempt them from that which may disturb them; of the burdens which are paid by others as an oath of allegiance. They must not give anything of their income but that which pleases them—they must not be offended, or disturbed, or coerced or compelled. Their judges should not be changed or prevented from accomplishing their offices, nor the monks disturbed in exercising their religious order, or the people of seclusion be stopped from dwelling in their cells.

No one is allowed to plunder these Christians, or destroy or spoil any of their churches, or houses of worship, or take any of the things contained within these houses and bring it to the houses of Islam. And he who takes away anything therefrom, will be one who has corrupted the oath of God, and, in truth, disobeyed His Messenger.

Jizya should not be put upon their judges, monks, and those whose occupation is the worship of God; nor is any other thing to be taken from them, whether it be a fine, a tax or any unjust right. Verily I shall keep their compact, wherever they may be, in the sea or on the land, in the East or West, in the North or South, for they are under My Protection and the testament of My Safety, against all things which they abhor.

No taxes or tithes should be received from those who devote themselves to the worship of God in the mountains, or from those who cultivate the Holy Lands. No one has the right to interfere with their affairs, or bring any action against them. Verily this is for aught else and not for them; rather, in the seasons of crops, they should be given a Kadah for each Ardab of wheat (about five bushels and a half) as provision for them, and no one has the right to say to them 'this is too much', or ask them to pay any tax.

As to those who possess properties, the wealthy and merchants, the poll-tax to be taken from them must not exceed twelve drachmas a head per year (i.e. about 200 modern day US dollars).

They shall not be imposed upon by anyone to undertake a journey, or to be forced to go to wars or to carry arms; for the Muslims have to fight for them. Do no dispute or argue with them, but deal according to the verse recorded in the Quran, to wit: 'Do not dispute or argue with the People of the Book but in that which is best' [29:46]. Thus they will live favored and protected from everything which may offend them by the Callers to religion (Islam), wherever they may be and in any place they may dwell.

Should any Christian woman be married to a Muslim, such marriage must not take place except after her consent, and she must not be prevented from going to her church for prayer. Their churches must be honored and they must not be withheld from building churches or repairing convents.

They must not be forced to carry arms or stones; but the Muslims must protect them and defend them against others. It is positively incumbent upon every one of the follower of Islam not to contradict or disobey this oath until the Day of Resurrection and the end of the world.

THE HIZBALLAH PROGRAM
An Open Letter (Manifesto) by the Party of Allah
Translation: Anonymous; Hezbollah, Lebanon
Estimated Range of Dating: 1985

(The following two Islamic documents, The Hizballah Program 1985 and The New Hizballah Manifesto 2009, are written by the Islamic Hezbollah. They basically have the same antisemitic, hateful, and uncompromising contents as The Hamas Covenant 1988, p. 5132; The Hamas Charter 2017, p. 5136; The Muslim Brotherhood Memorandum 1991, p. 5141. They all represent mainstream Islam and not just a queer whim. Negotiations with this kind of Zealots are useless. Almost 2,000 years ago, General Titus Flavius Vespasianus had experienced this kind of uncompromising mindset and he had found the right solution for it.

Hezbollah (also: Hizbu'llah, Hezballah, etc.; lit. 'Party of Allah') is a Lebanese Shia Islamist political party and paramilitary group, led since 1992 by its Secretary-General Hassan Nasrallah. Hezbollah's paramilitary wing is the Jihad Council, and its political wing is the Loyalty to the Resistance Bloc party in the Lebanese Parliament. Hisbollah has several ten-thousand jihadists employed.

Hezbollah was established by Islamic clerics in Lebanon primarily to fight against Israel by Jihad (by means of terrorism). It adopted the model set out by Ayatollah Khomeini after the Iranian Revolution in 1979, and the party's founders adopted the name "Hezbollah" as chosen by Khomeini. Hezbollah is financed by the Islamic Republic of Iran. Hezbollah's 1985 Manifesto listed its objectives as the expulsion of "the Americans, the French and their allies definitely from Lebanon, putting an end to any colonialist entity on our land (meaning: getting rid of all non-Muslims"). Hezbollah also participated in the 1985–2000 South Lebanon conflict against the South Lebanon Army (SLA) and Israel Defense Forces (IDF), and fought again against the IDF in the 2006 Lebanon War. During the 1990s, Hezbollah also organised volunteers to fight for the Army of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina during the Bosnian War.

Since 1990, Hezbollah has participated in Lebanese politics, in a process which is described as the Lebanonisation of Hezbollah, and it later participated in the government of Lebanon and joined political alliances. After the 2006–08 Lebanese protests and clashes, a national unity government was formed in 2008, with Hezbollah and its opposition allies obtaining 11 of 30 cabinet seats, enough to give them veto power. In August 2008, Lebanon's new cabinet unanimously approved a draft policy statement that recognizes Hezbollah's existence as an armed organization and guarantees its right to "liberate or recover occupied lands" (such as the Shebaa Farms). Hezbollah is part of Lebanon's March 8 Alliance, in opposition to the March 14 Alliance. It maintains strong support among Lebanese Shia Muslims, while Sunnis have disagreed with its agenda. Hezbollah also has support in some Christian areas of Lebanon. Since 2012, Hezbollah involvement in the Syrian civil war has seen it join the Syrian government in its fight against the Syrian opposition, which Hezbollah has described as a Zionist plot and a "Wahhabi-Zionist conspiracy" to destroy its alliance with Bashar al-Assad against Israel. Between 2013 and 2015, the organisation deployed its militia in both Syria and Iraq to fight or train local militias to fight against the Islamic State. In the 2018 Lebanese general election, Hezbollah held 12 seats and its alliance won the election by gaining 70 out of 128 seats in the Parliament of Lebanon.

Hezbollah did not disarm after the Israeli withdrawal from South Lebanon, in contravention of the UN Security Council resolution 1701. From 2006, the group's military strength grew significantly, to the extent that its paramilitary wing became more powerful than the Lebanese Army. Hezbollah has been described as a "state within a state", and has grown into an organization with seats in the Lebanese government, a radio and a satellite TV station, social services and large-scale military deployment of fighters beyond Lebanon's borders. The group currently receives military training, weapons, and financial support from Iran and political support from Syria,[80] although the sectarian nature of the Syrian war has damaged the group's legitimacy. In 2021, Nasrallah said the group had 100,000 fighters. Either the entire organization or only its military wing has been designated a terrorist organization by several countries, as well as by the European Union.

Islamic Jihad Organization (IJO)

Whether the Islamic Jihad Organization (IJO) was a nom de guerre used by Hezbollah or a separate organization, is disputed. According to certain sources, IJO was identified as merely a "telephone organization", and whose name was "used by those involved to disguise their true identity." Hezbollah reportedly also used another name, "Islamic Resistance" (al-Muqawama al-Islamiyya), for attacks against

Copyright © 2018 by Lord Henfield, Guildford Scientific Press

Israel. A 2003 American court decision found IJO was the name used by Hezbollah for its attacks in Lebanon, parts of the Middle East and Europe. The United States, Israel and Canada consider the names "Islamic Jihad Organization", "Organization of the Oppressed on Earth" and the "Revolutionary Justice Organization" to be synonymous with Hezbollah.

Ideology

The ideology of Hezbollah has been summarized as Shi'i radicalism; Hezbollah follows the Islamic Shi'a theology developed by Iranian leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini. Hezbollah was largely formed with the aid of the Ayatollah Khomeini's followers in the early 1980s in order to spread Islamic revolution and follows a distinct version of Islamic Shi'a ideology (Wilayat al-faqih or Guardianship of the Islamic Jurists) developed by Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, leader of the "Islamic Revolution" in Iran. Although Hezbollah originally aimed to transform Lebanon into a formal Faqihi Islamic republic, this goal has been abandoned in favour of a more inclusive approach.

1985 Manifesto

On 16 February 1985, Sheik Ibrahim al-Amin issued Hezbollah's manifesto. The ideology presented in it was described as radical. Its first objective was to fight against what Hezbollah described as American and Israeli imperialism, including the Israeli occupation of Southern Lebanon and other territories. The second objective was to gather all Muslims into an "ummah", under which Lebanon would further the aims of the 1979 Revolution of Iran. It also declared it would protect all Lebanese communities, excluding those that collaborated with Israel, and support all national movements—both Muslim and non-Muslim—throughout the world. The ideology has since evolved, and today Hezbollah is a left-wing political entity focused on social injustice.)

THE HIZBALLAH PROGRAM

The Jerusalem Quarterly, number Forty-Eight, Fall 1988 This is a slightly abridged translation of "Nass al-Risala al-Maftuha allati wajahaha Hizballah ila-l-Mustad'afin fi Lubnan wa-l-Alam", published February 16, 1985 in al-Safir (Beirut), and also in a separate brochure. It carries the unmistakable imprint of Sheikh Muhammad Hussein Fadlallah, the Hizballah mentor, and is inspired by his book Ma'maal-Quwma fi-l-Islam (Beirut 1979). See also his article in al-Muntalak (Beirut), October 1986.

Our Identity We are often asked: Who are we, the Hizballah, and what is our identity? We are the sons of the umma (Muslim community) - the party of God (Hizb Allah) the vanguard of which was made victorious by God in Iran. There the vanguard succeeded to lay down the bases of a Muslim state which plays a central role in the world. We obey the orders of one leader, wise and just, that of our tutor and faqih (jurist) who fulfills all the necessary conditions: Ruhollah Musawi Khomeini. God save him!

By virtue of the above, we do not constitute an organized and closed party in Lebanon. nor are we a tight political cadre. We are an umma linked to the Muslims of the whole world by the solid doctrinal and religious connection of Islam, whose message God wanted to be fulfilled by the Seal of the Prophets, i.e., Muhammad. This is why whatever touches or strikes the Muslims in Afghanistan, Iraq, the Philippines and elsewhere reverberates throughout the whole Muslim umma of which we are an integral part. Our behavior is dictated to us by legal principles laid down by the light of an overall political conception defined by the leading jurist (wilayat al-faqih).

As for our culture, it is based on the Holy Koran, the Sunna and the legal rulings of the faqih who is our source of imitation (marja' al-taqlid). Our culture is crystal clear. It is not complicated and is accessible to all.

No one can imagine the importance of our military potential as our military apparatus is not separate from our overall social fabric. Each of us is a fighting soldier. And when it becomes necessary to carry out the Holy War, each of us takes up his assignment in the fight in accordance with the injunctions of the Law, and that in the framework of the mission carried out under the tutelage of the Commanding Jurist.

Our Fight The US has tried, through its local agents, to persuade the people that those who crushed their arrogance in Lebanon and frustrated their conspiracy against the oppressed (mustad'afin) were nothing but a bunch of fanatic terrorists whose sole aim is to dynamite bars and destroy slot machines. Such suggestions cannot and will not mislead our umma, for the whole world knows that whoever wishes to oppose the US, that arrogant superpower, cannot indulge in marginal acts which may make it deviate from its major objective. We combat abomination and we shall tear out its very roots, its primary roots, which are the US. All attempts made to drive us into marginal actions will fail, especially as our determination to fight the US is solid.

We declare openly and loudly that we are an umma which fears God only and is by no means ready to tolerate injustice, aggression and humiliation. America, its Atlantic Pact allies, and the Zionist entity in the holy land of Palestine, attacked us and continue to do so without respite. Their aim is to make us eat dust continually. This is why we are, more and more, in a state of permanent alert in order to repel aggression and defend our religion, our existence, our dignity. They invaded our country, destroyed our villages, slit the throats of our children, violated our sanctuaries and appointed masters over our people who committed the worst massacres against our umma. They do not cease to give support to these allies of Israel, and do not enable us to decide our future according to our own wishes.

In a single night the Israelis and the Phalangists executed thousands of our sons, women and children in Sabra and Shatilla. No international organization protested or denounced this ferocious massacre in an effective manner, a massacre perpetrated with the tacit accord of America's European allies, which had retreated a few days, maybe even a few hours earlier, from the Palestinian camps. The Lebanese defeatists accepted putting the camps under the protection of that crafty fox, the US envoy Philip Habib.

We have no alternative but to confront aggression by sacrifice. The coordination between the Phalangists and Israel continues and develops. A hundred thousand victims - this is the approximate balance sheet of crimes committed by them and by the US against us. Almost half a million Muslims were forced to leave their homes. Their quarters were virtually totally destroyed in Nab'a, my own Beirut suburb, as well as in Burj Hammud, Dekonaneh, Tel Zaatar, Sinbay, Ghawarina and Jubeil - all in areas controlled today by the 'Lebanese Forces',. The Zionist occupation then launched its usurpatory invasion of Lebanon in full and open collusion with the Phalanges. The latter condemned all attempts to resist the invading forces. They participated in the implementation of certain Israeli plans in order to accomplish its Lebanese dream and acceded to all Israeli requests in order to gain power.

And this is, in fact, what happened. Bashir Jumayyil, that butcher, seized power with the help also of OPEC countries and the Jumayyil family. Bashir tried to improve his ugly image by joining the six-member Committee of Public Safety presided over by former President Elias Sarkis, which was nothing but an American-Israeli bridge borrowed by the Phalangists in order to control the oppressed. Our people could not tolerate humiliation any more. It destroyed the oppressors, the invaders and their lackeys. But the US persisted in its folly and installed Amin Jumayyil to replace his brother. Some of his first so called achievements were to destroy the homes of refugees and other displaced persons, attack mosques, and order the army to bombard the southern suburbs of Beirut, where the oppressed people resided. He invited European troops to help him against us and signed the May 17th, [1984] accord with Israel making Lebanon an American protectorate.

Our people could not bear any more treachery. It decided to oppose infidelity - be it French, American or Israeli - by striking at their headquarters and launching a veritable war of resistance against the Occupation forces. Finally, the enemy had to decide to retreat by stages.

Our Objectives Let us put it truthfully: the sons of Hizhallah know who are their major enemies in the Middle East - the Phalanges, Israel, France and the US. The sons of our umma are now in a state of growing confrontation with them, and will remain so until the realization of the following three objectives:

(a) to expel the Americans. the French and their allies definitely from Lebanon, putting an end to any colonialist entity on our land; (b) to submit the Phalanges to a just power and bring them all to justice for the crimes they have perpetrated against Muslims and Christians; (c) to permit all the sons of our people to determine their future and to choose in all the liberty the form of government they desire. We call upon all of them to pick the option of Islamic government which, alone, is capable of guaranteeing justice and liberty for all. Only an Islamic regime can stop any further tentative attempts of imperialistic infiltration into our country.

These are Lebanon's objectives; those are its enemies. As for our friends, they are all the world's oppressed peoples. Our friends are also those who combat our enemies and who defend us from their evil. Towards these friends, individuals as well as organizations, we turn and say:

Friends, wherever you are in Lebanon... we are in agreement with you on the great and necessary objectives: destroying American hegemony in our land; putting an end to the burdensome Israeli Occupation; beating back all the Phalangists' attempts to monopolize power and administration.

Even though we have, friends, quite different viewpoints as to the means of the struggle, on the levels upon which it must be carried out, we should surmount these tiny divergencies and consolidate cooperation between us in view of the grand design.

We are an umma which adheres to the message of Islam. We want all the oppressed to be able to study the divine message in order to bring justice, peace and tranquillity to the world. This is why we don't want to impose Islam upon anybody, as much as we that others impose upon us their convictions and their political systems. We don't want Islam to reign in Lebanon by force as is the case with the Maronites today. This is the minimum that we can accept in order to be able to accede by legal means to realize our ambitions, to save Lebanon from its dependence upon East and West, to put an end to foreign occupation and to adopt a regime freely wanted by the people of Lebanon.

This is our perception of the present state of affairs. This is the Lebanon we envision. In the light of our conceptions, our opposition to the present system is the function of two factors; (1st) the present regime is the product of an arrogance so unjust that no reform or modification can remedy it. It should be changed radically, and (2nd) World Imperialism which is hostile to Islam.

We consider that all opposition in Lebanon voiced in the name of reform can only profit, ultimately, the present system. All such opposition which operates within the framework of the conservation and safeguarding of the present constitution without demanding changes at the level of the very foundation of the regime is, hence, an opposition of pure formality which cannot satisfy the interests of the oppressed masses. Likewise, any opposition which confronts the present regime but within the limits fixed by it, is an illusory opposition which renders a great service to the Jumayyil system. Moreover, we cannot be concerned by any proposition of political reform which accepts the rotten system actually in effect. We could not care less about the creation of this or that governmental coalition or about the participation of this or that political personality in some ministerial post, which is but a part of this unjust regime.

The politics followed by the chiefs of political Maronism through the 'Lebanese Front' and the 'Lebanese Forces' cannot guarantee peace and tranquillity for the Christians of Lebanon, whereas it is predicated upon 'asabiyya (narrow-minded particularism), on confessional privileges and on the alliance with colonialism. The Lebanese crisis has proven that confessional privileges are one of the principal causes of the great explosion which ravaged the country. It also proved that outside help was of no use to the Christians of Lebanon, just when they need it most. The bell tolled for the fanatic Christians to rid themselves of denominational allegiance and of illusion deriving from the monopolization of privileges to the detriment of other communities. The Christians should answer the appeal from heaven and have recourse to reason instead of arms, to persuasion instead of confessionalism.

To the Christians If you, Christians, cannot tolerate that Muslims share with you certain domains of government, Allah has also made it intolerable for Muslims to participate in an unjust regime, unjust for you and for us, in a regime which is not predicated upon the prescriptions (ahkam) of religion and upon the basis of the Law (the Shari'a) as laid down by Muhammad, the Seal of the Prophets. If you search for justice, who is more just than Allah? It is He who sent down from the sky the message of Islam through his successive prophets in order that they judge the people and give everyone his rights. If you were deceived and misled into believing that we anticipate vengeance against you - your fears are unjustified. For those of you who are peaceful, continue to live in our midst without anybody even thinking to trouble you.

We don't wish you evil. We call upon you to embrace Islam so that you can be happy in this world and the next. If you refuse to adhere to Islam, maintain your ties with the Muslims and don't take part in any activity against them. Free yourselves from the consequences of hateful confessionalism. Banish from your hearts all fanaticism and parochialism. Open your hearts to our Call (da'wa) which we address to you. Open yourselves up to Islam where you'll find salvation and happiness upon earth and in the hereafter. We extend this invitation also to all the oppressed among the non-Muslims. As for those who belong to Islam only formally, we exhort them to adhere to Islam in religious practice and to renounce all fanaticisms which are rejected by our religion.

World Scene We reject both the USSR and the US, both Capitalism and Communism, for both are incapable of laying the foundations for a just society.

With special vehemence we reject UNIFIL as they were sent by world arrogance to occupy areas evacuated by Israel and serve for the latter as a buffer zone. They should be treated much like the Zionists. All should know that the goals of the Phalangists regime do not carry any weight with the Combatants of the Holy War, i.e., the Islamic resistance. This is the quagmire which awaits all foreign intervention.

There, then, are our conceptions and our objectives which serve as our basis and inspire our march. Those who accept them should know that all rights belong to Allah and He bestows them. Those who reject them, we'll be patient with them, till Allah decides between us and the people of injustice.

The Necessity for the Destruction of Israel (See ICT Note) We see in Israel the vanguard of the United States in our Islamic world. It is the hated enemy that must be fought until the hated ones get what they deserve. This enemy is the greatest danger to our future generations and to the destiny of our lands, particularly as it glorifies the ideas of settlement and expansion, initiated in Palestine, and yearning outward to the extension of the Great Israel, from the Euphrates to the Nile.

Our primary assumption in our fight against Israel states that the Zionist entity is aggressive from its inception, and built on lands wrested from their owners, at the expense of the rights of the Muslim people. Therefore our struggle will end only when this entity is obliterated. We recognize no treaty with it, no cease fire, and no peace agreements, whether separate or consolidated.

We vigorously condemn all plans for negotiation with Israel, and regard all negotiators as enemies, for the reason that such negotiation is nothing but the recognition of the legitimacy of the Zionist occupation of Palestine. Therefore we oppose and reject the Camp David Agreements, the proposals of King Fahd, the Fez and Reagan plan, Brezhnev's and the French-Egyptian proposals, and all other programs that include the recognition (even the implied recognition) of the Zionist entity.

ICT note: This paragraph did not appear in the original translation published by the Jerusalem Quarterly. It is possible that this ommision is due to the fact that the source (al-Safir) for the translation did not include this text, which appears in the original Hizballah Program. The original Program was published on 16 February 1985. The organization's spokesman, Sheikh Ibrahim al-Amin read the Program at the al-Ouzai Mosque in west Beirut and afterwards it was published as an open letter "to all the Opressed in Lebanon and the World". It should be emphasised that none of Hizballah's web sites have published the full text of the organization's program, and they prefer to publish the 1996 electoraral program which was intended for the specific propoganda campaign before the Lebanese Parliamentary elections in 1996.

APPENDIX C-28
(to The Scriptures of Islam)

THE NEW HEZBOLLAH MANIFESTO
Manifesto by the Party of Allah
Translation: Anonymous; Hezbollah, Lebanon
Estimated Range of Dating: November 2009

Hezbollah's new political document aims to define the political vision of the party (Hizbollah, "The Party of Allah"). It includes our visions and stances and the aspirations, expectations and fears that preoccupy us. This political document also comes as a result of the priority of deeds and responsibility of sacrifice that we have experienced.At an exceptional time loaded with transformations, it is no longer possible to address these changes without noting the special position our resistance has reached or the achievements realized by our course.We will address these transformations through making an approach between two contradictory paths and the ascending indirect proportionality between them:

1. The pass of resistance and opposition which is in its ascending stage and which relies on the military victories, political triumphs as well as the consolidation of the sample of resistance on the popular and political levels and the steadfastness in political positions and stances despite being the subject of massive attacks and gigantic challenges....until reaching the inclination of elements of forces in the regional balance to the side of resistance and its supporters.

2. The path of the US-Israeli mastery and hegemony with all its various dimensions and alliances and direct and indirect expansions which is witnessing military defeats, flops and frustrations what shows successive failure in US strategies and plots. This has led to a state of bumps, retreat and incapability in taking the lead of administering developments and events in our Arab and Islamic world.

This given integrates in a wider international scene framework which helps in its turn to disclose the US crisis and the retreat of the unipolar hegemony to the interest of a multipolarity which characteristics are not clear yet.

What deepens even more the international hegemony system crisis are the collapses in the international and US financial markets and the fall of the US economy in a situation of failure. This gives a clear expression of the peak of the structural crisis of the arrogant capitalist sample. Therefore, it's possible to say that we are amid historical transformations that signal the retreat of the US role as a predominant power and the fall of the arrogant uniloparism and the beginning of hastening historic demise of the Zionist entity.

The resistance movements stand at the heart of these international transformations and emerge as a strategic factor in the international scene after performing a central role in producing or promoting these transformations in our region.

The resistance in Lebanon, including the Islamic Resistance- was the first to fight hegemony and occupation for more than two decades and a half. It has adhered to this choice at a time which seemed to be the inauguration of the US era which there were trials to depict as the end of history. In the light of the force balances and the circumstances that was then prevailing, some viewed the choice of resistance as a kind of illusion or political rashness or an inclination that opposes rationalism and logic. Despite that, the resistance moved on its jihad process with absolute certainty of the righteousness of its cause and its capability to make victory while believing in Allah and trusting in Him, belonging to the whole nation and adhering to the national Lebanese interests, having confidence in its people and raising high human values: righteousness, justice and freedom. Through its long path of jihad and its depicted victories- starting with the pullout of the Israeli occupation from Beirut, Mount Lebanon and fleeing from Sidon, Tyr, Nabatiyeh, July Aggression in 1993, April Aggression in 1996, the liberation in May 2000 and July War 2006 – this resistance secured its credibility and model before making its victories. The Resistance project has grown from a liberation power to a balance and confrontation power and then to a defense and deterrence one besides its political internal role as an influencing pillar in building the just and capable state. Simultaneously it was doomed for the political and human status of the Resistance to evolve: it developed from being a Lebanese national value to a radiant Arab and Islamic value and it has become today an international human value; its model is being followed and its achievements are being taken into consideration by the experiences and courtesies of all those seeking freedom and liberty all around the world.

Despite being aware of these promising transformations and seeing the enemy oscillating between the incapable war strategy and the incapability to reach a settlement with the conditions hit sets, Hezbollah does not underestimate the size of patent current challenges and threats, the severity of the confrontation path and the great sacrifices deemed necessary by the resistance path to restore rights and take part in reviving the nation. Still facing that, Hezbollah has become now clearer in its choices, more determined in its will and more confident in its Lord, people and itself. In this context, Hezbollah defines the main headlines that constitute a political and intellectual framework for its vision and stances towards the posing challenges.

CHAPTER ONE
Domination and Hegemony

SECTION 1
American-Western Hegemony and the worldFollowing World War II, the United States became the centre of polarization and hegemony in the world; as such a project witnessed tremendous development on the levels of domination and subjugation that is unprecedented in history, making use and taking advantage of the multifaceted achievements on the several levels of knowledge, culture, technology, economy as well as the military level- that are supported by an economic-political system that only views the world as markets that are to abide by the American view. The most dangerous aspect in the western hegemony-the American one precisely- is that they consider themselves owners of the world and therefore, this expanding strategy along with the economic-capitalist project has become a "western expanding strategy" that turned to be an international scheme of limitless greed.Savage capitalism forces- embodied mainly in international monopoly networks of companies that cross the nations and continents, networks of various international establishments especially the financial ones backed by superior military force have led to more contradictions and conflicts - of which not less important- are the conflicts of identities, cultures, civilizations, in addition to the conflicts of poverty and wealth.These savage capitalism forces have turned into mechanisms of sowing dissension and destruction of identities as well as imposing the most dangerous type of cultural, national, economic as well as social theft. Globalization has reached its most dangerous facet when it turned into a military one led by those following the Western scheme of domination- of which it was most reflected in the Middle East, in Afghanistan, Iraq, Palestine and Lebanon, where the latter's share was the July 2006 aggression by the "Israelis". This plot found its peak with the neoconservative grip under the administration of George Bush since their project found its way to execution after he was sworn in. It was neither weird nor surprising that what the neoconservative platform focused on the most was rebuilding US capabilities; which reflected a strategic vision of US national security through building military strategies not only as a force of deterrence but also as a force of action and intervention.

Following the September 11 attacks, the Bush administration found that the opportunity was appropriate to exercise the largest possible influence under the slogan of "universal war against terrorism". It has performed many attempts that were considered as successful in the beginning based on the following:

1. Militarizing relationships and foreign policies with other countries to the utmost.

2. Monopolizing decision-making, by taking strategic decisions, relying on coordination only at times of necessity and exclusively with allies that can be trusted.

3. Rapidly ending war in Afghanistan to have the maximum amount of time for the next step, consequently; taking over Iraq which is considered as the foundation of launching the New Middle East project in conformity with the world's demands post the 11 September incident. The Bush administration was not hesitant about resorting to all means of deceive, mislead, and diversion as to justify its wars, particularly its war on Iraq, and against all those who fight and resist its colonialist scheme, whether entities, nations, or movements.Furthermore, the Bush administration sought to establish conformity between "terrorism" and "Resistance", in order to strip off the latter's humanitarian and legal legitimacies and by that justify its wars against these movements, seeking to remove the fundamental right of the nations of defending their right to live with dignity and national sovereignty, and by removing their role in the human historical movement, culture not to mention civilization. Terrorism has turned into an American pretext of hegemony through many tools such as pursuit, arbitrary detention, unjust trials witnessed in Guantanamo as well as through direct meddling in the sovereignty of other countries and states, in addition to imposing sanctions against complete nations, giving itself the right to launching destructive wars that know no difference between the guilty and the innocent and does not differentiate between the man, woman, elderly or child. So far, not only these US wars have caused tremendous mass destruction, but also have cost millions of lives, and not only affected concrete but also societies and nations of where it was shattered. This hegemony has aimed at producing civil conflicts of various sect and religious dimensions, not to forget targeting the culture and civilization of these nations. There is no doubt that the American Terrorism is the origin of all terrorism in this world. The Bush administration has turned the United States into a threat menacing the whole world on all levels and dimensions, and if an international survey was to be made, the US would turn out to be the most hated in the world.The failure of the US war on Iraq and the development of the resistance there, in addition to the regional and international abhorrence to the results of the war, and the failure of the so called "War on Terrorism" especially in Afghanistan,as well as the complete US failure in Lebanon and Palestine through "Israeli" tools, led to the wear away of American fear as well as a decline in the strategies and capabilities of the US to seek new adventures. Yet this failure does not mean the US will easily stop interfering, but will make an effort to protect what it calls "strategic interests", that is because the US hegemonic policies are based on ideological considerations, and mind plans that are nourished by diversities allied with an industrial- military complex that has limitless greed and avariciousness.

SECTION 2

Our region and the American SchemeIndeed, if the whole world was suffering from the American hegemony, the Arab and Islamic nations seem to suffer even more for many considerations related to history, civilization, culture, as well as geographical site. Since decades, the Arab and Islamic world has always been subject to endless wild and savage wars.

However, this hegemony's most dangerous phase took place with the creation of the Zionist entity and its embedment in the region, which is part of the scheme to divide and detach nations of the region into entities in constant conflict under different titles. This colonial stage has reached the plot of the US colonial inheritance in the region.The central goal of the American hegemony resides in dominating the nations politically, economically, culturally and through all aspects. It also resides in looting the treasures and resources of the region, topping these resources is fuel, as it is the base of controlling the world economy not to mention resorting to all merciless, inhumane and unethical means including the use of extreme military power whether directly or through a mediator. To achieve this goal, Washington resorted to different general policies and work strategies, of which the most outstanding are:

1. Providing the Zionist entity with stability guarantees, in such a way that allows this entity to play the role of a cancerous gland that absorbs and sucks out all the energies and capabilities of the nation as to destruct its ambitions and aims.
2. Manacling the spiritual, civil and cultural capabilities of our people and aiming at weakening its morals through media and psychological wars in order to affect the image and symbols of the resistance and its struggle.
3. Supporting the systems of dictatorship and tyranny as well as subjection in the region.
4. Taking control of the geographical strategic points in the region whether land, air, or water and spreading military bases in its vital locations as to back up its wars in the region.
5. Disallowing any movement in the region from rising and possessing means of power and development as to play a major role in the world history.
6. Creating and embedding sedition and divisions of all types, especially sectarian ones among Muslims, to create limitless internal civil clashes.

It is very obvious that the only way to view any conflict in any region worldwide is through a strategic international dimension, as the American threat is not only local in this region, and does not affect one place without the other. Therefore; the front of confrontation with this American threat should be international as well. There is no doubt this confrontation is delicate and difficult, it is a battle of a historical aspect, a battle of generations that requires benefiting every single assumed power and ability. Our experience in Lebanon had taught us that difficulty does not imply impossibility, rather means we are ready to utmost levels, people and authority for all possibilities, ready to achieve victories. The American arrogance has left no choice to our nation and people but the choice of resistance, at least for a better life, and for a humanitarian future, a future governed by relations of brotherhood, solidarity and diversity at the same time in a world of peace and harmony, exactly as was drawn by our prophets and great leaders throughout history and it is in the expectations and admirations of the human soul.

CHAPTER TWO

Lebanon

SECTION 1

The Homeland Lebanon is our homeland and the homeland of our fathers and ancestors. It is also the homeland of our children, grandchildren, and the future generations. It is the country to which we have given our most precious sacrifices for its independence and pride, dignity and freedom.

We want a unified Lebanon for all Lebanese alike. We oppose any kind of partition or federalism, whether apparent or disguised. We want Lebanon to be sovereign, free, independent, strong and competent. We also want it to be powerful, active, and present in the geopolitics of the region. We want it also to be an influential provider in making the present and the future as it was always present in making the history. One of the most important conditions for the establishment of a home of this type and its persistence is having a strong, capable and just state, in addition to a political system which truly represents the will of the people and their aspirations for justice and freedom, security and stability, well-being and dignity. This is what all the Lebanese people seek and work to achieve and we are a part of them.

SECTION 2

The Resistance

"Israel" embodies an eternal threat to Lebanon - the State and the entity - and a real hazard to the country in terms of its historical cravings in land and water especially that Lebanon is considered to be a model of coexistence in a unique formula that opposes with the idea of the racist state which expresses itself in the Zionist entity. Moreover, Lebanon's location at the borders of occupied Palestine urged it to abide national and pan-Arab responsibilities. The "Israeli" threat to this country started since the establishment of the Zionist entity in the land of Palestine, an entity that did not falter to divulge its aspirations to occupy some parts of Lebanon and to grasp its wealth, mainly its water. Thus, it sought to achieve these ambitions progressively. This entity began its aggression on Lebanon since 1948 from the border to the depth of the country, from the Houla massacre in 1949 to the aggression on the Beirut International Airport in 1968, including long years of assaults on border areas, their land, population and wealth, as a preface to confiscate direct land through repeated invasions, leading to the March 1978 invasion and the occupation of the border area, making its people subject to its influence at all levels, as a prelude to suppress the whole country in the invasion of 1982. All of this was taking place with a full back of the United States and ignorance until the level of collusion of the so-called international community and its institutions in the midst of a suspicious Arab official silence and an absence of the Lebanese authority at the time leaving the land and people subject to the "Israeli" occupation without assuming its responsibilities and national duties. Under this immense national tragedy, the Lebanese, who are loyal to their homeland didn't have the choice but to use their right and persist from their national duty and moral and religious in the defense of their land. Thus, their choice was: the launch of an armed popular resistance to face the Zionist danger and permanent hostility. In such difficult circumstances, the process of renovating the nation through armed resistance started, paving the way for liberating the land and the political choice from the hands of the "Israeli" occupation as a prelude to the restitution of the State and the building of its constitutional institutions. The Resistance has coroneted all these dimensions together through achieving the Liberation in 2000 and the historic victory in July 2006, presenting to the whole world a true experience in defending the homeland, an experience that became a school from which nations and states benefit to protect their territory, defend their independent and preserve their sovereignty. This national achievement was made real thanks to the support of a loyal nation and a national army, thus exasperating the enemy's aims and causing him a historic defeat, allowing the Resistance to celebrate along with its fighters and martyrs as well as all of Lebanon through its nation and army the great victory that opened a new chapter in the region entitled crucial role and function of the resistance to daunt the enemy and guarantee the protection of the country's independence, sovereignty and defend its people and carry out the liberation of the rest of the occupied territory.

The Resistance role is a national necessity as long as the "Israeli" threats and aspirations persist. Therefore, and in the deficiency of strategic balance between the state and the enemy, the "Israeli" threat urges Lebanon to approve a defensive strategy that depends on a popular resistance participating in defending the country and an army that maintains the security of the country, in a complementarily process that proved to be triumphant through the preceding stage. This formula, evolved from within the defensive strategy, composes an umbrella of protection for Lebanon, especially after the malfunction of other speculations on the umbrellas, whether international or Arab, or negotiating with the enemy. The adoption of the Resistance choice in Lebanon achieved its role in liberating the land, restoring the State institutions and defending the sovereignty. Afterwards, the Lebanese are concerned with safeguarding and maintaining this format because the "Israeli" danger terrorizes Lebanon in all its components, which requires the widest Lebanese participation in assuming responsibilities of defense. Finally, the accomplishment of the Resistance experience in fighting the enemy and the failure of all plots and schemes to erase resistance movements or besieging them or even disarming them annexed to the extension of the "Israeli" threat in Lebanon obligates the Resistance to do its best to reinforce its abilities and join its strengths to assume its national responsibilities and liberate what remains under the "Israeli" occupation in the Shibaa farms and Kfarshouba hills and the Lebanese town of Ghajar as well as liberating the detainees and missing people and martyrs' bodies, and participating in the role of defending and protecting the land and people.

SECTION 3

State and Political System

The major problem in the Lebanese political system, which thwarts its reform, development and regular updating, is political sectarianism. The fact that the Lebanese political system was founded on a sectarian basis represents in itself a strong restriction to the achievement of true democracy where an elected majority can rule and an elected minority can oppose, opening the door for a proper exchange of power between the loyalty and the opposition or the various political coalitions. Thus, abrogating sectarianism is a basic condition for the execution of the majority-minority rule. Yet, and until the Lebanese could achieve through their national dialogue this historic and sensitive accomplishment, which is the abrogation of political sectarianism, and since the political system in Lebanon is established on sectarian foundations, the homogenous democracy will linger the fundamental basis for governance in Lebanon, because it is the actual quintessence of the spirit of the constitution and the core of the Charter of the co-existence. From here, any approach to the national issues according to the equation of the majority and minority anticipates the achievement of the historic and social conditions for the exercise of effectual democracy in which the citizen becomes a value in itself. Meanwhile, the Lebanese will to live together in dignity and equal rights and duties needs a beneficial collaboration in order to merge the principle of true partnership, which constitutes the most suitable formula to protect the full diversity and stability after a period of instability caused by the different policies based on the affinity towards monopoly, deletion and exclusion. The consensual democracy represents a proper political formula to assure true partnership and contributes in opening the doors for everyone to join the phase of building the reassuring state. Our vision for the State that we should build together in Lebanon is embodied in the State that protects public freedoms, the State that is devoted to national unity, the State that protects its land, people, and sovereignty, the State that has a national, strong and prepared army, the State that is structured under the base of modern, effective and cooperative institutions.

It is the State that is dedicated to the application of laws on all its citizens without discrimination, the State that pledges a correct and right parliamentary representation based on a modern election law that permits the voters of choosing their representative away from pressures, the State that depends on capable people despite their religious beliefs and that identifies mechanisms to battle corruption in administration, the State that enjoys an independent and non-politicized Justice authority, the State that sets up its economy chiefly according to the producing sectors and works on uniting them especially the agriculture and industry ones, the State that pertains the principle of balanced development between all regions, the State that cares for its people and works to offer them with appropriate services, that State that takes care of the youth generation and help young people to build up their energies and talents, the State that works to fuse the role of women at all levels, the State that care for education and work to reinforce the official schools and universities alongside applying the principle of obligatory teaching, the State that adopts a decentralized system, the State that works hard to prevent emigration and the State that guards its people all over the world and protects them and benefits from their positions to dish up the national causes. The establishment of a state based on these specifications and conditions is an objective to us just like it's the objective of every honest and sincere Lebanese. In Hizbullah, we will wield all possible efforts, in assistance with the popular and political forces, to attain this noble national objective.

SECTION 4

Lebanese-Palestinian ties:

One of the tragic consequences of the emergence of the Zionist entity on the land of Palestine and the displacement of its inhabitants is the problem of Palestinian refugees who moved to Lebanon to live temporarily in its land as guests to their fellow Lebanese until returning to their homes from where they were expelled. The original and direct reason of the sufferance of Lebanese and Palestinians was actually the "Israeli" occupation of Palestine and all the resulting tragedies and calamities in the entire region. Moreover, the suffering of the Palestinian refugees in Lebanon was not limited to the pain of forced migration but also to the "Israeli" massacres and atrocities which destructed concrete and man, just like what happened in the Nabatiyeh camp that was fully destroyed. This suffering also includes the harsh living circumstances in the refugee camps that lack the basic necessities of a descent life, deprivation of civil and social rights as well as the negligence of the Lebanese government towards them as it did not fulfill its duties. The Lebanese authorities are now-a-days called to assume their responsibilities and therefore build the Lebanese-Palestinian relations under right, solid and legal basis that respect the justice, rights and mutual interests' balances to both nations. It is very essential that the Lebanese-Palestinian relationship becomes free from being governed by the whims and moods, as well as political calculations, internal interactions, and international interventions. We believe that succeeding in this mission requires: - A Lebanese-Palestinian direct dialogue - A permission for Palestinians in Lebanon to agree on a unified reference that represents them in dialogue. - Providing Palestinian refugees with their social and civilian rights, in such a way that suits their humanity, preserves their identity and cause. - Commitment to the Right of Return and rejecting settlement.

SECTION 5

Lebanon and the Arab Ties

Lebanon of the Arab identity and belonging and that has a vital geographical dimension, enjoys strategic depth and policies of regional integrity and national interests, and is committed to the just and fair Arab causes, at the top of which comes the Palestinian cause as well as the conflict with the "Israeli" enemy.

Even more, there is a definite need for concerted efforts to overcome the conflicts that run through the Arab ranks.The contradiction of strategies and the difference of alliances, despite their seriousness and intensity, do not justify the policies of targeting or engaging in external projects, based on the deepening discord and inciting sectarianism, leading to the exhaustion of the nation and therefore serving the Zionist enemy in the implementation of the purposes of America. Indeed, developing the political practice aiming at restricting conflicts, organizing or even preventing them from happening in first place is a good option to be adopted in order to ripen a selective approach in dealing with national issues, not to mention searching for common factors that can also enhance these practices, provide chances of communication on the levels of the people and the governments in order to provide the broadest platform of solidarity to serve our causes and goals. The Resistance choice constitutes once again a central need and an objective factor in strengthening the Arab stance and weakening the enemy, away from the determined nature of strategies or political stakes. Therefore, the resistance finds no problem in providing the different Arab regions with the benefits of the resistance choice, as long as this pours into weakening the enemy and strengthening as well as firming the Arab stand.In this context, Syria has recorded a distinctive attitude and supported the resistance movements in the region, and stood beside us in the most difficult circumstances, and sought to unify Arab efforts to secure the interests of the region and challenges. Hence, we emphasize the need to adhere to the distinguished relations between Lebanon and Syria as a common political, security, and economic need, dictated by the interests of the two countries and two peoples, by the imperatives of geopolitics and the requirements for Lebanese stability and facing common challenges. We also call for an end to all the negative sentiment that have marred bilateral ties in the past few years and urge these relations to return to their normal status as soon as possible.

SECTION 6

Lebanon and Islamic Relations

The Arab and Islamic world is facing challenges that shouldn't be undermined. Indeed, the sectarian fabricated conflicts, especially between Sunnis and Shiites, the fabricated contradictory national facts between Arabs, Turks and Kurds as well as between Arabs and Iranians, the threatening of minorities, the constant draining of Christians in the Middle East particularly Palestine and Iraq not to mention Lebanon, all these threaten the cohesiveness of our societies, decreases levels of cohesion and increases barriers and impediments in the face of its development. Therefore, and instead of being a source of wealth and social vitality, the sectarian diversities seem to be exploited as factors of division and incitement as well as a means of social destruction. The situation resulting from this bad use seems to be the result of the intersection of Western deliberate policies, the US in particular, internal irresponsible practices and visions in addition to an unstable political environment. It is very essential and necessary to take these facts into consideration, and should be one of the core interests of power agendas, political guidelines, including the Islamic movements that are responsible of facing these challenges and solving these problems.

Hizbullah emphasizes the necessity of cooperation between the Islamic states at the different levels, to gain strength in confronting hegemony schemes. Such cooperation also serves in facing the cultural invasion of the community and media, and encourages the Islamic states to take advantage of its resources in the exchange of the different benefits between these countries.In this context, Hizbullah considers Iran as a central state in the Muslim world, since it is the State that dropped through its revolution the Shah's regime and its American-"Israeli" projects, and it is also the state that supported the resistance movements in our region, and stood with courage and determination at the side of the Arab and Islamic causes and especially the Palestinian one.

The policy of the Islamic Republic of Iran is clear and stable in supporting the central and main cause of the Arabs and Muslims- the Palestinian cause. Since the declaration of the victory of the Islamic Revolution under the leadership of Wali Al Faqih Imam Khomeini (May Allah honour his soul), and since the replacement of the "Israeli" embassy with a Palestinian one, this support has been ongoing in the different shapes and forms until our day under the leadership of Imam Khamenei (may he live long). This has lead to the achievement of outstanding victories for the very first time in the history of the struggle with the Zionist invaders.

The fabrication of some Arab parties of conflict with Iran represents self defamation, as well as a denouncement to the Arab causes and only serves "Israel" and the United States of America.Iran has presented nothing but support for the main cause- the Palestinian cause and resentment towards "Israel". It has also confronted the American policies, and headed towards integrating with the Arab and Islamic environments. The response to such actions should be cooperation, brotherhood, and a centre of awakening and strategic weight as well as a model for independence and liberty that supports the Arab-Islamic project. It should be viewed as a power that boosts the strength and might of the people of our region. The Islamic world gains strength with his allies and the cooperation of his countries. We assure the importance of benefiting from the elements of the political, humanitarian, and economic power available in each and every country of the Islamic world, on the basis of integration and non-subjection to the invaders. We remind of the importance of unity among Muslims, as Allah the Almighty said in his holy book: "And hold fast, all together, by the rope which God (stretches out for you), and be not divided among yourselves" (Sourat Al Imran-verse 103). We also remind of the importance of cautiousness from sectarian sensitivities- especially between Sunnis and Shiites, as we wager on the conscience of the Muslims in facing the conspiracies and schemes on this level.

SECTION 7

Lebanon and International Relations

According to Hizbullah's vision and approach, the criteria of divergence and conflict are based upon political-moral grounds, primarily between the arrogant and wretched, the oppressor and oppressed, the haughty occupier and a pursuer of freedom.Hizbullah considers that the unilateral hegemony in the world overthrows the international balance and stability as well as the international peace and security.The unlimited US support for "Israel" and its cover for the "Israeli" occupation of Arab lands annexed, in addition to the American domination of international institutions, the dualism in criteria of issuing and applying international policies, the American meddling in various states' affairs, the adoption of the principle of circulating wars worldwide, causing disturbance and instability all around the world puts the American administration in the position of the aggressor and holds it responsible in producing chaos in the international political system.As for the European policies, they hang between being barely effective on one side and being a follower to the American policies on the other, and this actually leads to the hollowing out the moderate drift in Europe and pours in the service of the "Atlantic drift" of colonial backgrounds.Following American policies- especially in its phase of historic failure- represents a strategic mistake that will only lead to more problems and complications in the European-Arab relations.Europe holds responsibility for the damage it has caused due to the colonial "inheritance" it has left behind - of which our people still suffer from the consequences and results. Since some European people have a history in resisting the occupier, Europe's ethical and humanitarian duty-before being a political duty- is to acknowledge the right of the people to resisting the occupier, on the bases of distinguishing between resistance and terrorism. We think that the stability and cooperation in European-Arab relations require a European approach that is more independent, just, and objective. Building a common vital dimension would be unfeasible-politically speaking and security wise as well- without this transformation that should guarantee solving the sources of trouble that cause crisis and instability.

On the other hand, we look at the experience of independence and liberation that rejects hegemony in the countries of Latin America with a lot of respect, attention, and appreciation. We see vast intersection platforms between their project and the project of resistance movements in our region, which leads to constructing a more just and balanced international system.

Such an experience-that of Latin America- brings hope on the international level, in the light of a common humane identity, and a common political and moral background. In this context, the slogan "unity of the wretched" remains a major and basic pillar of our political intellect in building our relations, assents and comprehension towards international issues.

CHAPTER THREE

Palestine and Compromise negotiations

SECTION 1

Palestine and the Zionist entity

The history of the Arab-"Israeli" conflict proves that armed struggle and military resistance is the best way of ending the occupation. The method of negotiations has proven that the Zionist entity becomes more boastful and more belligerent, and that it has no intention of reaching an accord. The resistance has managed to achieve a huge victory over the Zionist entity, provide the homeland with protection, and liberation of the remainder of its land.

This function is a lasting necessity before Israel's expansionist threats and ambitions as well as the lack of a strong government in Lebanon. The ongoing "Israeli" threat forces the resistance to continue to boost its capacity ... in order to fulfill its role in liberating occupied territory. [end of Muslim Brotherhood document, the "scribd" document continues as follows:]

We categorically reject any compromise with Israel or recognizing its legitimacy, this position is definitive, even if everyone recognizes "Israel".

Section 2 - Palestinian Resistance

The Palestinian while going through the battle of self defense and struggling to maintain his civil rights that are set in Palestine throughout its historical meaning and geographical reality is doing nothing but adopting a legitimate right that has been put by all religions, international laws, values and humanity.

This right includes the Resistance in all shapes, and ahead of it are the armed forces, and the use of all means that the Palestinian resistance can use, especially with the presence of impunity towards the Zionist enemy that is armed with the latest atrocious and destructive weapon.

Experience has proved - and has made clear, with no doubt throughout the struggle between our nation and the Zionist entity, since its occupation of Palestine and till now - the importance and significance of the choice of the Resistance and the armed forces facing the enemy, liberating the land, regaining the legitimate rights, maintaining neutral language, and the closure of the expanded strategy, through the equations that were forced by the resistance through its capabilities, will, and determination at the battle field.

The best witness and evidence on this is the achievements of victories of the Resistance in Lebanon, and what it has built from its moral and martial accomplishments throughout its battle experience, especially when forcing the Zionists to the Huge "Israeli" withdrawal from the occupied Lebanese lands on May 2000, and the complete failure of the "Israeli" army during July War year 2006, of where the Resistance achieved a divine, historical and strategic victory that changed the battle equation entirely, and defeated the "Israeli" enemy with high credibility, and crushed the legend of the army that can never be defeated.

Another evidence on that is what the Palestinian resistance has achieved from continuous accomplishments through the Palestinian Revolution experience, and the method of the armed struggle that has been taken, and through the first Intifada, and the second Al-Aqsa Intifada, reaching the brutal collapse of the "Israeli" army during the complete withdrawal from the Gaza Strip year 2005, with no pre-conditions, negotiations, or agreements, and without any political, security, or geographical desires, making it the first victory of that kind, within the historical Palestinian borders, and the value of this victory holds tremendous strategic importance within the conflict between us and the Zionist entity.

In addition to that, the glorious perseverance of the Palestinians and its Resistance in Gaza while facing the Zionist occupier year 2008 is a lesson to the generations, and the occupiers.

If that was the motive of the Resistance in Lebanon and Palestine, what was the motive of the choice of negotiations and settlements? What are the conclusions, profits and benefits that the negotiations achieved throughout all its stages and the deals that it made? Isn't it more of the "Israeli" bigotry, intolerance and belligerency, and more of the "Israeli" benefits and conditions?

We hereby assure our prop up to the Palestinians and the Palestinian Case, along with its historical, geographical and political stands, and we reassure our support to these people and the Palestinian Resistance, and their struggle against the "Israel"

SECTION 3 - Compromise Negotiations

Our stance on the negotiations and compromises made by the Madrid Conference, the "Araba Valley retrospect" the "Oslo Accords", the "Camp David Accord" is a total refusal to any kind of compromise with the Zionist entity, which is based on admitting its legitimate presence, and giving in what it occupied from the Palestinian Arab and Islamic land.

This stance is predetermined and permanent and isn't set for any compromise, even if the whole world admits to "Israel".

Starting from here, and from our brotherhood and responsibility we call upon all Arabs to commit to the choice of their people by reconsidering the negotiations, and revising the accords signed with the Zionist enemy, and by completely canceling the illusion and unjust compromise that is so called "Peace Process", especially those who gave the U.S administration the role of being a decent, just mediator in this process, they have witnessed with no doubt that it has failed, pressured and blackmailed them, and fought their people, and stood by its strategic ally the Zionist entity.

As for the "Israeli" entity has showed through all the stages of negotiations, that peace isn't what it aims for, and that the negotiations are used to gain their conditions and accomplish their own needs, and breaking the belligerence of the Arabs towards them, by receiving a free and opened official normalization, and forcing others to see them as a reality in the region, and admitting their legitimacy, after we give in the Palestinian land that they've occupied.

We expect and hope that all Arabs and Muslims reclaim to Palestine and Jerusalem as a central case, of where they all unite and commit to liberating it from the cantankerous occupying Zionist, and to do what their religious and humane responsibility calls them to do towards their holy land of Palestine and towards its deprived people, and we call them to provide all needs of support so that the Palestinians maintain their perseverance and continue their struggle. We also call them to reject all normalization processes with the Zionist enemy, and refuse any kind of settlements, and immediately work on breaking the siege on the Palestinians, especially the complete siege on Gaza Strip, and adopting the case of more than 10,000 detainees in the "Israeli" prisons, and setting plans and programs to set them free.

PTOLEMY THE GNOSTIC
Fragments of Ptolemy
1. Ptolemy's Commentary on the Prologue of John
2. Ptolemy's Letter to Flora
Source: Nag Hammadi Library, Egypt
Translation: Anonymous
Estimated Rang of Dating: 3rd - 2nd centuries B.C.

(Ptolemy's Letter to Flora

The "Letter to Flora" is a Gnostic text written by Ptolemy, a Valentinian teacher, to a woman named Flora.

Prior to the discovery of the Nag Hammadi Library, the Letter was one of the few authentic Gnostic works available to scholars. The letter was included in full in Epiphanius's Panarion, an unsympathetic text which condemns its theology as heretical. Ptolemy's beliefs are also known from the writings of Irenaeus.

Content

The Letter to Flora relates the Gnostic view of the Law of Moses, a rational explication of the proposition that "the whole Law is divided into three parts; we find in it the legislation of Moses, of the elders, and of God himself".

"the entire Law contained in the Pentateuch of Moses was not ordained by one legislator - I mean, not by God alone: some commandments are Moses', and some were given by other men.... The first part must be attributed to God alone, and his legislation; the second to Moses - not in the sense that God legislates through him, but in the sense that Moses gave some legislation under the influence of his own ideas; and the third to the elders of the people, who seem to have ordained some commandments of their own at the beginning."

The author of the Letter assumes that the Christian Saviour was sent, not to destroy the Law, but to complete it. He divides the Law among three types: the pure legislation of God embodied in the Decalogue, the mixed legislation "laid down for vengeance" affected by the world-situation of its first hearers (the world being inherently evil to a Gnostic), and

"finally, there is the allegorical (exemplary) part, ordained in the image of the spiritual and transcendent matters, I mean the part dealing with offerings and circumcision and the sabbath and fasting and Passover and unleavened bread and other similar matters."

Though making points of a decidedly dualistic nature, Ptolemy supports his readings from "sayings" texts or logia: "We shall draw the proofs of what we say from the words of the Saviour, which alone can lead us without error to the comprehension of reality." He quotes sayings of Jesus that can also be found in the gospels of Matthew and of John, and he quotes Paul.

Ptolemy states in the letter that, "this division of the law (that is, god's own law) was established neither by the perfect god, as we have taught, nor surely by the devil - which it would be wrong to say - then the establisher of this division is distinct from them. And he is the craftsman and maker of this universe or world and the things within it." This excerpt reflects Ptolemy's gnostic view that the god that created the world is not the Perfect God, but rather an inferior god who incorrectly believed that he was the one true God, which is what he is trying to convey to Flora.

About Gnosticism

Gnosticism was any of various related philosophical and religious movements prominent in the Greco-Roman world in the early Christian era, particularly the 2nd century AD. The designation gnosticism is a term of modern scholarship. It was first used by the English poet and philosopher of religion Henry More (1614–87), who applied it to the religious groups referred to in ancient sources as gnostikoi (Greek: those who have gnosis, or "knowledge"). The Greek adjective gnostikos ("leading to knowledge" or "pertaining to knowledge") was first used by Plato to describe the cognitive or intellectual dimension of learning, as opposed to the practical. By the 2nd century AD, however, gnostikoi had been adopted by various Christian groups, some of which used it positively as a self-designation, though others criticised this practice as a presumptuous claim of exclusive access to truth.

Definition: Consensus on a definition of gnosticism has proved difficult. The groups conventionally classified as gnostic did not constitute a single movement with relatively homogeneous organisation, teachings, and rituals. Even the self-designation gnostic is problematic, since it is attested for only some of the traditions conventionally treated as gnostic and its connotations are ambiguous. Gnosticism is sometimes treated as a world religion that existed from antiquity to early modern times—surviving, for example, in the mythology and ritual of the Mandaeans of Iraq and Iran.

Many of the so-called gnostic groups are characterised by a mythology that distinguishes between an inferior creator of the world (a demiurge) and a more transcendent god or order of being. Another frequently encountered theme is that there is a special class or race of humans that is descended from the transcendent realm and is destined to achieve salvation and to return to its spiritual origins.

Salvation is understood as a revelation that reawakens knowledge (gnosis) of the race's divine identity; in contrast, the more "orthodox" Christian emphasis is on redemption through the death and resurrection of Jesus Christ. Although the myth of a demiurge and the theme of reawakened awareness of divine origins have parallels in Platonic and Neo-Pythagorean philosophy—and in fact were partly derived from those traditions—it is often asserted that in the gnostic myths there is a far sharper dualism, involving a much more negative attitude toward the inferior creator god, the material cosmos, and the human body.[Encyclopaedia Britannica]

Literary form

Such a publicly circulated Epistle may have been a literary form, rather than an actual missive sent by a "Ptolemy" to a "Flora." The Letter was the classical equivalent of the Renaissance and modern Essay format. The attack on Ptolemy by Irenaeus does not eliminate the possibility that the present letter ascribed to him was composed by Epiphanius, in the manner of composed speeches that ancient historians put into the mouths of their protagonists, as a succinct way to sum up the Gnostic views he was intent on demolishing.)

FIRST FRAGMENT

Ptolemy's Commentary on the Prologue of John

John, the disciple of the Lord, intentionally spoke of the origination of the entirety, by which the Father emitted all things. And he assumes that the First Being engendered by God is a kind of beginning; he has called it "Son" and "Only-Begotten God." In this (the Only-Begotten) the Father emitted all things in a process involving posterity. By this (Son), he says, was emitted the Word, in which was the entire essence of the aions that the Word later personally formed.

Now since he is speaking of the first origination, he does well to begin the teaching at the beginning, i.e with the Son and the Word. He speaks as follows: "The Word was in the beginning, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. It was in the beginning, with God." [Jn 1:1] First, he distinguishes three things: God; beginning; Word. Then he unites them: this is to show forth both the emanation of the latter two, i.e. the Son and the Word, and their union with one another, and simultaneously with the Father. For the beginning was in the Father and from the Father; and the Word was in the beginning and from the beginning. Well did he say, "The Word was in the beginning", for it was in the Son. "And the Word was with God." So was the beginning. "And the word was God"; reasonably so, for what is engendered from God is God. This shows the order of emanation. "The entirety was made through it, and without it was not anything made." [Jn 1:3] For the Word became the cause of the forming and origination of all the aions that came after it.

But furthermore (he says), "That which came into being in it was Life."[Jn 1:4] Here he discloses a pair. For he says that the entirety came into being through it, but Life is in it. Now, that which came into being in it more intimately belongs to it than what came into being through it: it is joined with it and through it it bears fruit. Indeed, inasmuch as he adds, "and Life was the light of human beings", [Jn 1:4] in speaking of human beings he has now disclosed also the Church by means of a synonym, so that with a single word he might disclose the partnership of the pair. For from the Word and Life, the Human Being and the Church came into being. And he called Life the light of human beings because they are enlightened by her, i.e. formed and made visible. Paul, too, says this: "For anything that becomes visible is light." [Eph 5:13] So since Life made the Human Being and the Church visible and engendered them, she is said to be their light.

Now among other things, John plainly made clear the second quartet, i.e. the Word; Life; the Human Being; the Church.

But what is more, he also disclosed the first quartet. describing the Savior, now, and saying that all things outside the Fullness were formed by him, he says that he is the fruit of the entire fullness. For he calls him a light that "shines in the darkness" [Jn 1:5] and was not overcome by it, inasmuch as after he had fitted together all things that had derived from the passion they did not become acquainted with him. And he calls him Son, Truth, Life, and Word become flesh. We have beheld the latter's glory, he says. And its glory was like that of the Only- Begotten, which was bestowed on him by the Father, "full of grace and truth". [Jn 1:14] And he speaks as follows: "And the Word became flesh and dwelt among us; we have beheld its glory, glory as of the Only-Begotten from the Father." [Jn 1:14] So he precisely discloses also the first quartet when he speaks of the Father; Grace; the Only-Begotten; Truth. Thus did John speak of the first octet, the mother of the entirety of aions. For he referred to the Father;

Grace; the Only-Begotten; Truth; the Word; Life; the Human Being; the Church.

SECOND FRAGMENT

Ptolemy's Letter to Flora

The Law was ordained through Moses, my dear sister Flora, has not been understood by many persons, who have accurate knowledge neither of him who ordained it nor of its commandments. I think that this will be perfectly clear to you when you have learned the contradictory opinions about it.

Some say that it is legislation given by God the Father; others, taking the contrary course, maintain stubbornly that it was ordained by the opposite, the Devil who causes destruction, just as they attribute the fashioning of the world to him, saying that he is the Father and maker of this universe. Both are completely in error; they refute each other and neither has reached the truth of the matter.

For it is evident that the Law was not ordained by the perfect God the Father, for it is secondary, being imperfect and in need of completion by another, containing commandments alien to the nature and thought of such a God.

On the other hand, one cannot impute the Law to the injustice of the opposite, God, for it is opposed to injustice. Such persons do not comprehend what was said by the Savior. For a house or city divided against itself cannot stand [Matt 12:25], declared our Savior. Furthermore, the apostle says that creation of the world is due to him, for Everything was made through him and apart from him nothing was made. [John 1:3] Thus he takes away in advance the baseless wisdom of the false accusers, and shows that the creation is not due to a God who corrupts but to the one who is just and hates evil. Only unintelligent men have this idea, men who do not recognize the providence of the creator and have blinded not only the eye of the soul but also of the body.

From what has been said, it is evident that these persons entirely miss the truth; each of the two groups has experienced this, the first because they do not know the God of justice, the second because they do not know the Father of all, who alone was revealed by him who alone came. It remainds for us who have been counted worthy of the knowledge of both these to provide you with an accurate explanation of the nature of the Law and the legislator by whom it was ordained. We shall draw the proofs of what we say from the words of the Savior, which alone can lead us without error to the comprehension of reality.

First, you must learn that the entire Law contained in the Pentateuch of Moses was not ordained by one legislator - I mean, not by God alone, some commandments are Moses', and some were given by other men. The words of the Savior teach us this triple division. The first part must be attributed to God alone, and his legislation; the second to Moses - not in the sense that God legislates through him, but in the sense that Moses gave some legislation under the influence of his own ideas; and the third to the elders of the people, who seem to have ordained some commandments of their own at the beginning. You will now learn how the truth of this theory is proved by the words of the Savior.

In some discussion with those who dispute with the Savior about divorce, which was permitted in the Law, he said Because of your hard-heartedness Moses permitted a man to divorce his wife; from the beginning it was not so; for God made this marriage, and what the Lord joined together, man must not seperate. [Matt 19:8] In this way he shows there is a Law of God, which prohibits the divorce of a wife from a husband, and another law, that of Moses, which permits the breaking of this yoke because of hard-heartedness. In fact, Moses lays down legislation contrary to that of God; for joining is contrary to not joining.

But if we examine the intention of Moses in giving this legislation, it will be seen that he did not give it arbitrarily or of his own accord, but by the necessity because of the weakness of those for whom the legislation was given. Since they were unable to keep the intention of God, according to which it was not lawful for them to reject their wives, with whom some of them disliked to live, and therefore were in the danger of turning to greater injustice and thence to destruction, Moses wanted to remove the cause of dislike, which was placing them in jeopardy of destruction. Therefore because of the critical circumstances, choosing a lesser evil in place of a greater, he ordained, on his own accord, a second law, that of divorce, so that if they could not observe the first, they might keep this and not turn to unjust and evil actions, through which complete destruction would be the result for them. This was his intention when he gave legislation contrary to that of God. Therefore it is indisputeable that here the law of Moses is different from the Law of God, even if we have demonstrated the fact from only one example.

The Savior also makes plain the fact that there are some traditions of the elders interwoven in the Law. For God,he says, Said, Honour your father and your mother, that it may be well with you, But you , he says addressing the elders, ...have declared as a gift to God, that by which you have nullified the Law of God through the tradition of your elders. Isaiah also proclaimed this, saying, This people honours me with their lips, but their hearts are far from me, teaching precepts which are the commandments of men. [Matt 15:4-9].

Therefore it is obvious that the whole Law is divided into three parts; we find in it the legislation of Moses, of the elders, and of God himself. This division of the entire Law, as made by us, has brought to light what is true in it.

This part, the Law of God himself, is in turn divided into three parts: the pure legislation not mixed with evil, which properly called Law, which the Savior came not to destroy but to complete [Matt 5:17] -- for what he completed was not alien to him but needed completion, for it did not possess perfection; next the legislation interwoven with the inferiority and injustice, which the Savior destroyed because it was alien to his nature; and finally, the legislation which is allegorical and symbolic, an image of what is spiritual and transcendent, which the Saviour transferred from the perceptible and phenomenal to the spiritual and invisible.

The Law of God, pure and not mixed with inferiority, is the Decalogue, those ten sayings engraved on two tables, forbidding things not to be done and enjoining things to be done. These contains pure but imperfect legislation and required the completion made by the Savior.

There is also the law interwoven with injustice, laid down for vengeance and the requital of previous injuries, ordaining that an eye should be cut out for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth, and that a murder should be avenged by a murderer. The person who is the second one to be unjust is no less unjust than the first; he simply changes the order of events while performing the same action. Admittedly, this commandment was a just one and still is just, because of the weakness of those for whom the legislation was made so thay would not transgress the pure law. But it is alien to the nature and goodness of the Father of all. No doubt it was appropiate to the circumstances, or even necessary; for he who does not want one murder comitted, saying, You shall not kill and then commanded a murder to be repaid by another murder, has given a second law which enjoins two murders although he had forbidden one. This fact proves that he was unsuspectingly the victim of necessity.

This is why, when his son came, he destroyed this part of the law while admitting that it came from God. He counts this part of the law as in the old religion, not only in other passages but also where he said, God said, He who curses father or mother shall surely die.

Finally, there is the allegorical (exemplary) part, ordained in the image of the spiritual and trascendent matters, I mean the part dealing with offerings and circumcision and the sabbath and fasting and Passover and unleavened bread and other similar matters.

Since all these things are images and symbols, when the truth was made manifest they were translated to another meaning. In their phenomenal appearance and their literal application they were destroyed, but in their spiritual meaning they were restored; the names remained the same but the content was changed. Thus the Savior commaned us to make offerings not of irrational animals or of the incense of this worldly sort, but of spiritual praise and glorification and thanksgiving and of sharing and well-doing with our neighbors. He wanted us to be circumcised, not in regard to our physical foreskin but in regard to our spiritual heart; to keep the Sabbath, for he wishes us to be idle in regard to evil works; to fast, not in physical fasting but in spiritual, in which there is abstinence from everything evil.

Among us external fasting is also observed, since it can be advantageous to the soul if it is done reasonably, not for imitating others or from habit or because of a special day appointed for this purpose. It is also observed so that those who are not yet able to keep the true fast may have a reminder of it from the external fast. Similarely, Paul the apostle shows that the Passover and the unleavened bread are images when he says, Christ our passover has been sacrificed, in order that you may be unleavened bread, not containing leaven (by leaven he here means evil), but may be a new lump. [1 Cor 5:7]

Thus the Law of God itself is obviously divided into three parts. The first was completed by the Savior, for the commandment, You shall not kill , You shall not commit adultery, you shall not swear falsely are included in the forbiding of anger, desire and swearing. The second part was entirely destroyed, for An eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth interwoven in with injustice, was destroyed by the Savior through its opposite. Opposites cancel out, For I say to you, do not resist the evil man, but if anyone strikes you, turn the other cheek to him.

Finally, there is the part translated and changed from the literal to the spiritual, this symbolic legislation which is an image of transcendent things. For the images and symbols which represent other things were good as long as the Truth has not come; but since the Truth has come, we must perform the actions of the Truth, not those of the image.

The disciples of the Savior and the Apostle Paul showed that this theory is true, speaking of the part dealing with images, as we have already said, in mentioning The passover for us and the Unleavened bread; for the law interwoven with injustice when he says that the law of commandments in ordinances were destroyed [Eph 2:15]; and of that not mixed with anything inferior when he says that The law is holy, and the commandment is holy and just and good [Rom 7:12]. I think I have shown you sufficiently, as well as one can in brief compass, the addition of human legislation in the Law and the triple division of the Law of God itself.

It remains for us to say who this God is who ordained the Law; but I think this too has been shown you in what we have already said, if you have listened to it attentively.

For if the Law was not ordained by the perfect God himself, as we have already thaught you, nor by the devil, a statement one cannot possibly make, the legislator must be some one other than these two. In fact, he is the demiurge and maker of this universe and everything in it; and because he is essentially different from these two and is between them, he is rightly given the name, intermediate.

And if the perfect God is good by nature, in fact he is, for our Savior declared that there is only a single good God, his Father whom he manifested; and if the one who is the opposite nature is evil and wicked, characterized by injustice; then the one situated between the two is neither good nor evil or unjust, but can properly be called just, since he is the arbitrator of the justice which is his.

On the one hand, this god will be inferior to the perfect God and the lower than his justice, since he is generated and not ungenerated -- there is only one ungenerated Father, from whom are all things [1 Cor 8:6], since all things depend on him in their own ways. On the other hand, he will be greater and more powerful than the adversary, by nature, since he has a substance of either of them. The substance of the adversary is corruption and darkness, for he is material and complex, while the substance of the ungenerated Father of all is incorruption and self-existent light, simple and homogeneous. The substance of the latter produced a double power, while the Savior is an image of the greater one.

And now, do not let this trouble you for the present in your desire to learn how from one first principle of all, simple, and acknowledgedby us and believed by us, ungenerated and incorruptible and good, were constituted these natures of corruption and the Middle, which are different substances, although it is characteristic of the good to generate and produce things which are like itself and have the same substance.

For, if God permit, you will later learn about their origin and generation, when you are judged worthy of the apostolic tradition which we too have received by succession. We too are able to prove all our points by the teaching of the Savior.

In making these brief statements to you, my sister Flora, I have not grown weary; and while I have treated the subject with brevity, I have also discussed it sufficiency. These points will be of great benefit to you in the future, if like fair and good ground you have received fertile seeds and go on to show forth their fruit.

APPENDIX C-30
(to Christian Literature)

HERACLEON
Fragments from a Commentary on the Gospel of John by Heracleon (preserved in Origen's Commentary on John, and in the writings of Clement of Alexandria)
Translation: Anonymous
Estimated Range of Dating: 170–180 A.D.

)Heracleon was a Gnostic who flourished about 175 AD, perhaps in the south of Italy. Neander and Cave have suggested Alexandria as the place where Heracleon taught. The decade 170–180 may probably be fixed for the centre of his activity. This would not be inconsistent with his having been personally instructed by Valentinus, who continued to teach as late as 160, and would allow time for Heracleon to have gained celebrity before Clement wrote, one of whose references to Heracleon is in what was probably one of his earliest works. He had evidently long passed from the scene when Origen wrote.

He is the author of the earliest known commentary on a book that would eventually be included in the Christian New Testament with his commentary on the Gospel of John, although only fragmentary quotes survive. He is described by Clement of Alexandria (Strom. 4.9) as the most esteemed of the school of Valentinus; and, according to Origen (Comm. in S. Joann. t. ii. § 8, Opp. t. iv. p. 66), said to have been in personal contact with Valentinus himself. He seems to have received the ordinary Christian scriptures; and Origen, who treats him as a notable exegete, has preserved fragments of Heracleon's commentary on the Gospel of John, while Clement of Alexandria quotes from him what appears to be a passage from a commentary on the Gospel of Luke. These writings have intensely mystical and allegorical interpretations of the text.

Clement of Alexandria (Latin name: Titus Flavius Clemens; c. 150-215 AD) was a Christian Apologist, missionary theologian to the Hellenistic (Greek cultural) world, and second known leader and teacher of the catechetical school of Alexandria. The most important of his surviving works is a trilogy comprising the Protreptikos ("Exhortation"), the Paidagōgos ("The Instructor"), and the Strōmateis ("Miscellanies").

Origen, (full Latin name Oregenes Adamantius; c. 185-254 AD), was the most important theologian and biblical scholar of the early Greek church. His greatest work is the Hexapla (Greek: "Sixfold"), which is a synopsis of six versions of the Old Testament written in 6 parallel colums. He probably was from Alexandria, Egypt and lived later in Tyre, Phoenicia [now Sur, Lebanon]. Origen's main lifework was on the text of the Greek Old Testament and on the exposition of the whole Bible. The Hexapla was a synopsis of Old Testament versions: the Hebrew and a transliteration, the Septuagint (an authoritative Greek version of the Old Testament), the versions of Aquila, Symmachus, and Theodotion and, for the Psalms, two further translations (one being discovered by him in a jar in the Jordan Valley). The purpose of the Hexapla was to provide a secure basis for debate with rabbis to whom the Hebrew alone was authoritative.

Heracleon Text

Fragments from a Commentary on the Gospel of John by Heracleon (as preserved in Origen's Commentary on John, and [two of them] preserved in the writings of Clement of Alexandria):

Fragment 1, on John 1:3

(In John 1:3, "All things were made through him, and without him nothing was made.") The sentence: "All things were made through him" means the world and what is in it. It excludes what is better than the world. The Aeon (i.e. the Fullness), and the things in it, were not made by the Word; they came into existence before the Word. . . "Without him, nothing was made" of what is in the world and the creation. . . "All things were made through Him," means that it was the Word who caused the Craftsman (Demiurge) to make the world, that is it was not the Word "from whom" or "by whom," but the one "through whom (all things were made).". . . It was not the Word who made all things, as if he were energized by another, for "through whom" means that another made them and the Word provided the energy.

Fragment 2, on John 1:4

In the saying, "What was made in him was Life" (John 1:4), 'in him' means 'for spiritual people.' For he (the Word) provided them with their first form at their birth, in that what had been sown by another he brought to form, illumination and into an outline of its own, and set it forth.

Fragment 3, on John 1:18

The words, "No one has ever seen God; the only Son, who is in the bosom of the Father, he has made him known." (John 1:18), were spoken, not by the Baptist, but by the disciple.

Fragment 4, on John 1:21 (In John 1:21, "And they asked him, 'What then? Are you Elijah?' He said, 'I am not.' 'Are you the prophet?' And he answered, 'No.') John acknowledged that he was not the Christ, and neither a prophet, nor Elijah.

Fragment 5, on John 1:23

(In John 1:23, "He said, 'I am the voice of one crying in the wilderness, 'Make straight the way of the Lord,' as the prophet Isaiah said.'") The Word is the Savior, the voice in the wilderness is that symbolized by John, and the echo is the whole prophetic order. . . A voice which is well fitted to the Word, becomes Word, just as a woman is transformed into a man. . . The echo can be changed in a similar way into a voice, giving the place of a disciple to the voice which is changed into Word., but the place of a slave to the echo which is changed into voice. . . When the Savior speaks of a prophet and Elijah [Matthew 11:9,14], he is speaking not of John himself, but of his attributes. But when he calls him greater than the prophets and than those who are born of women [Matthew 11:9,11], then he is describing the character of John himself. When John is asked about himself, his answers relate to himself, not to attributes. . . His attributes, like clothes, were other than himself. If he were asked about his clothes "Are you your clothes?" he would not have answered "Yes." . . . The Jews sent priests and Levites to question John because it was fitting for these people to concern themselves with, and investigate these matters, for they were firmly devoted to God, and because he (John) was of the Levitical tribe. . . They asked him if he were a prophet, wishing to know this more general fact [John 1:21]. . . It was prophetically arranged that Isaiah would call him (John) "greater," since no other of all those who prophesied was deemed worthy of this honor by God.

Fragment 6, on John 1:25

(In John 1:25, "They asked him, 'Then why are you baptizing, if you are neither the Christ, nor Elijah, nor the prophet?'") The words of the Pharisees imply that the office of baptizing belonged to the Christ and Elijah and to every prophet. On them alone there is an obligation to baptize. . . The Pharisees asked the question from malice, and not from a desire to learn.

Fragment 7, on John 1:26

John's answers to those sent by the Pharisees refer not to what they asked, but to what he wished.

Fragment 8, on John 1:26

(In John 1:26-27, "John answered them, 'I baptize with water; but there stands among you one whom you do not know, even he who comes after me, the thong of whose sandal I am not worthy to untie.'") The words, "there stands among you" are equivalent to "He is already here, and he is in the world and among human beings, and he is already manifest to you all." . . . The statement, "He who comes after me," shows John to be the forerunner of Christ, for he is in fact a kind of servant running before his master. In the words, "The thong of his sandal I am not worthy to untie," the Baptist acknowledges that he is not worthy even of the lowliest service for Christ. . . (He means,) "I am not worthy that for my sake he should come down from the Greatness and should assume flesh as his sandal, concerning which I am not able to give any explanation or description, nor to unloose the arrangement of it." . . . The sandal means the world. . . Everything must be understood in relation to that person who was indicated through John, that is the Craftsman of the world, who acknowledges through these words that he is inferior to Christ.

Fragment 9, on John 1:28

In Heracleon we read "Bethany" (rather than the variant "Bethabara" in the text Origen was familiar with).

Fragment 10, on John 1:29

(In John 1:29, "The next day he saw Jesus coming toward him, and said, 'Behold, the Lamb of God, who takes away the sin of the world!'") John spoke the words, "Lamb of God" as a prophet, but the words, "who takes away the sin of the world" as more than a prophet. The first expression was spoken with reference to his body, the second with reference to Him who was in that body. The lamb is an imperfect member of the genus of sheep; the same being true of the body as compared with the one that dwells in it. Had he meant to attribute perfection to the body he would have spoken of a ram about to be sacrificed.

Fragment 11, on John 2:12

(In John 2:12, "After this he went down to Capernaum, with his mother and his brothers and his disciples; and there they stayed for a few days.") The words, "After this he went down to Capernaum," indicate the beginning of a new dispensation, for "he went down" is not said idly. Capernaum, means these farthest-out parts of the world, the material realm into which he descended. And since the place was alien to him, he is not reported either to have done anything or said anything in it.

Fragment 12, on John 2:13

(In John 2:13, "The Passover of the Jews was at hand, and Jesus went up to Jerusalem.") This is the great feast. It was a type of the passion of the Savior, for the lamb was not only slain, but, on being consumed, provided rest as well. When sacrificed, it signified the passion of the Savior in this world; when consumed, the rest that is in the marriage.

Fragment 13, on John 2:13-16

The ascent to Jerusalem signifies the ascent of the Lord from material realm things to the animate (psychic) place, which is an image of Jerusalem. (In John 2:14, "In the sanctuary he found those who were selling oxen and sheep and pigeons, and the money-changers at their business.") The words, "In the sanctuary, he found" and not "in the temple" are used so that it may not be thought to be the mere "calling" (animate), apart from the Spirit, which elicits help from the Lord. The sanctuary is the Holy of Holies, into which only the High-Priest enters, into which the spiritual go. The temple courtyard, where the Levites also enter, is a symbol of the animate ones who attain a salvation outside the Fullness (Pleroma). Those who are found in the temple selling oxen and sheep and doves, and the money-changers sitting there represent those who give nothing away out of charity, but regard the entrance of strangers to the temple as an occasion of trade and profit-making, and who provide the sacrifices for the worship of God for their own gain and love of money. (In John 2:15-16, "And making a whip of cords, he drove them all, with the sheep and oxen, out of the temple; and he poured out the coins of the money-changers and overturned their tables. And he told those who sold the pigeons, 'Take these things away; you shall not make my Father's house a house of trade.'") And the whip which Jesus made of small cords and did not receive from another is an image of the power and energy of the Holy Spirit which blows away the wicked. The whip and the linen and the napkin and all such things form an image of the power and energy of the Holy Spirit. . . The whip was tied to a piece of wood, and this wood is a type of the Cross. On this wood the merchants who were intent on gain, and all wickedness was nailed up and done away. . . Out of these two substances was the whip made, for he did not make it of dead leather, but in order that he might make the Church no longer a den of robbers, but the house of his Father.

Fragment 14, on John 2:17

"Zeal for thy house will consume me." (John 2:17) was spoken from the person of those powers which were cast out and destroyed by the Savior.

Fragment 15, on John 2:19

(In John 2:19, "Jesus answered them, 'Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up.'") The words "in three days" are used instead of "on the third day." The third day is the spiritual day, on which the resurrection of the Church is revealed.

Fragment 16, on John 2:20

(In John 2:20, "The Jews then said, 'It has taken forty-six years to build this temple, and will you raise it up in three days?'") The fact that Soloman completed the temple in forty-six years is an image of the Savior. The number six refers to matter, that is, the structure (of his body), and the number forty, which is the uncombined Four (Tetrad) refers to the inbreathing and the seed in the inbreathing.

Fragment 17, on John 4:12-15

(In John 4:13, Jesus answered and said to her, "Whoever shall drink of this water shall thirst again. But whoever shall drink of the water that I shall give shall never thirst again.") Insipid, temporary, and unsatisfying was that life and its glory, for it was worldly. The proof of it being worldly is the fact that the cattle of Jacob drank from it (i.e. the well). . . But the water which the Savior gives is from his spirit and his power. . .The words "shall never thirst again" mean that his life is eternal and never perishes as does the first (life) which the well provides, but rather is lasting. For the Grace and gift of our Savior cannot be taken away, and is not consumed or destroyed in the one who partakes of it. The first life is perishable. . . (In John 4:14, "The water I shall give that one shall be a well of water within springing up into everlasting life.") The words "springing up" (John 4:14) refer to those who receive what is richly supplied from above and who themselves pour forth for the eternal life of others that which has been supplied to them. . . (In John 4:15, The woman says to him, "Sir give me this water, that I shall not thirst, nor come hither to draw.") The Samaritan woman showed the kind of faith that was inseparable from her nature and corresponded to it, in that she did not hesitate over what he told her. . . Having been only just pricked by the Word, from then on she hated even the place of the so-called living water. . . Through her words, the woman reveals that the water was toilsome, difficult to obtain, and not wholesome.

Fragment 18, on John 4:16-18

(In John 4:16, "He said to her, 'Go and call your husband and come hither.'") It is clear that he was saying something like this, "If you wish to receive this water, go call your husband." The husband of the Samaritan woman mentioned by Jesus is her Fullness, so that, on coming with him to the Savior, she may obtain from him power and union and the mingling with her Fullness. For he was not speaking to her about her earthly husband and telling her to call him, for he knew quite well that she had no lawful husband. . . The Savior said to her, "Call your husband and come hither," and meant by this her partner from the Fullness. . . In the spiritual sense she did not know her husband, in the simple sense she was ashamed to say that she had an adulterer, not a husband. . . (The words) "You have rightly said that you do not have a husband" (John 4:17) mean that in the world the Samaritan woman had no husband, for her husband was in the Aeon (i.e. Fullness). (In John 4:18: "You have had five husbands and the one you have now is not your husband.") The six men indicate the whole of the material evil in which she was involved and with which consorted, when she lived irrationally in debauchery, and was insulted, rejected and abandoned by them (the men).

Fragment 19, on John 4:19

(In John it says "The woman said to him, 'Sir, I perceive that you are a prophet.'") The Samaritan woman acknowledged what was said to her by him. For it is characteristic of a prophet to know all things. . . She behaved in a way suited to her nature, for she neither denied, nor explicitly acknowledged her shame. She was convinced that he was a prophet and, by her question, she revealed at the same time the reason for which she had committed immorality. Because of ignorance of God and of the worship agreeable to God, she had also neglected all the things that were essential for her life, whereas what is necessary in life was always otherwise available to her. For she would not have come to the well which was outside the city. . . Wanting to learn in that way, and pleasing whom, and worshipping God, she might be released from her immorality, she said "Our fathers worshipped on this mountain; and you say that in Jerusalem is the place where men ought to worship." (John 4:20)

Fragment 20, on John 4:21

(In John it says, "Jesus said to her, 'Woman, believe me, the hour is coming when neither on this mountain nor in Jerusalem will you worship the Father.'") The mountain represents the Devil, or his world, since the Devil was one part of the whole of matter, but the world is the total mountain of evil, a deserted dwelling place of beasts, to which all who lived before the law and all Gentiles render worship. But Jerusalem represents the creation or the Creator whom the Jews worship. . . The mountain is the creation which the Gentiles worship, but Jerusalem is the creator whom the Jews serve. You then who are spiritual should worship neither the creation nor the Craftsman, but the Father of Truth. And he (Jesus) accepts her (the Samaritan woman) as one of the already faithful, and to be counted with those who worship in truth.

Fragment 21, on John 4:22

(In John, "You worship what you do not know; we worship what we know, for salvation is of the Jews.") The "you" stands for the Jews and the Gentiles. . . We must not worship as the Greeks do, who believe in the things of matter, and serve wood and stone, nor worship the divine as the Jews. They who think they alone know God do not know him, and worship angels, the month, and the moon.

Fragment 22, on John 4:22-23

"We worship" means the one who is in the Aeon (i.e. the Savior), and those who have come with him. For they knew whom they worship because they worship in truth. The words "salvation is of the Jews" are said because he was born in Judea, but not among them and because from that race salvation and the Word came forth into the world. As far as the spiritual sense is concerned, salvation came from the Jews because they are images of those who are in the Fullness. . . (In John 4:23, it continues, "But the hour is coming, and now is, when the true worshipers will worship the Father in spirit and truth, for such the Father seeks to worship him") For the previous worshippers worshipped in flesh and in error him who is not the Father. . . They worshipped the creation and not the true creator (cf. Romans 1:25), who is Christ, since "all things came into being through him, and apart from him nothing came into being." (John 1:3)

Fragment 23, on John 4:23 continued

Lost in the deep matter of error is that which is akin to the Father, which is sought after in order that the Father may be worshipped by those who are akin to him.

Fragment 24, on John 4:24

(In John 4:24a, it says,) "God is spirit." Undefiled, pure, and invisible is his divine nature. (In John 4:24b, it says,) "Those who worship him must worship in spirit and truth." Worthily of the one who is worshipped, in a spiritual, not a fleshly fashion. For those who have the same nature as the Father are themselves spirit, and they worship in truth, not in error, as the Apostle teaches when he calls this kind of piety " a rational service." (Romans 12:2)

Fragment 25, on John 4:25

(In John it says, "The woman said to him, 'I know that Messiah is coming, he who is called Christ; when he comes, he will show us all things.'") The Church received Christ and was persuaded concerning him that he alone knows all things.

Fragment 26, on John 4:26-27

(According to John 4:26, Jesus said to her,) "I who speak to you am he." Since the Samaritan woman was convinced that Christ, when he came, would announce everything to her, he said 'Know that I who speak with you am he whom you expect.' And when he acknowledged that he, the expected one, had come, "his disciples came" (John 4:27), for on their account he had come to Samaria.

Fragment 27, on John 4:28-30

(In John 4:28-29, "So the woman left her water jar, and went away into the city, and said to the people, 'Come, see a man who told me all that I ever did. Can this be the Christ?'") The water jar which is capable of receiving life is the disposition and the thought of the power which is from the Savior. She left it with him, that is, she had with the Savior such a vessel in which she had come to fetch living water. She returned to the world to announce the good tidings of Christ's coming to the "calling" (i.e. the animate ones). For through the Spirit and by the Spirit the soul is drawn to the Savior. (In John 4:30, "They went out of the city and were coming to him.") "They went out of the city" means out of their former way of life, which was worldly. And they came through faith to the Savior.

Fragment 28, on John 4:31

(In John 4:31, "Meanwhile the disciples besought him, saying, 'Rabbi, eat.') They wished to share with him some of what they had obtained by purchase in Samaria. Fragment 29, on John 4:32 (In John 4:32, he said to them,) "I have food to eat of which you do not know." Heracleon says nothing on this text.

Fragment 30, on John 4:33

(In John 4:33, "So the disciples said to one another, 'Has any one brought him food?'") They understood in a rather low way, and imitated the Samaritan woman when she said, "You have no bucket to draw with and the well is deep"

Fragment 31, on John 4:34

(In John 4:34, "Jesus said to them, 'My food is to do the will of him who sent me, and to accomplish his work.'") With the words "My food is to do the will of him who sent me," the Savior explains to the disciples that this was what he had discussed with the woman, calling the will of the Father his "food." For this was his sustenance, rest, and power. The will of the Father is that human beings should know the Father and be saved. This is the work of the Savior, on account of which he was sent to Samaria, that is, into the world.

Fragment 32, on John 4:35

(In John 4:35, "Do you not say, 'There are yet four months, then comes the harvest'? I tell you, lift up your eyes, and see how the fields are already white for harvest.") He speaks of the harvest of crops as having a fixed period of four months, whereas the harvest of which he is speaking was already fulfilled. The harvest is of the souls of believers. They are already ripe, ready for harvest, and suitable for being gathered into the barn, that is, through faith into rest, all those who are ready. For they are not all ready. Some were already ready, some were on the point of being ready, some are near to being ready, and some are still being sown.

Fragment 33, on John 4:35 continued

What is indicated by the text, "The harvest is great but the laborers are few" (Matthew 9:37) is the same as is said by means of the other statement. It refers to being ready for harvest and suitable for gathering into the barn, through faith into rest, and suited for salvation and for reception of the Word.

Fragment 34, on John 4:36

(In John 4:36a, "The one who reaps receives a wage, and gathers fruit for eternal life.") The words, "The one who reaps receives a wage" are said because the Savior call himself "the one who reaps." And the wage of our Lord is the salvation and restoration (apokatastasis) of those who are harvested, brought about by his resting upon them. "And gathers fruit for eternal life," is stated either because what is gathered is the fruit of eternal life or because it is itself eternal life.

Fragment 35, on John 4:36-37

The words "so that the sower and the reaper may rejoice together" (John 4:36b) For the sower rejoices because he sows, and because some of his seeds are gathered already, and he has hope for the rest of them. The reaper also rejoices because he harvests. But the former began by sowing, the latter by reaping. They could not begin at the same time, for sowing must come first and reaping afterwards. When the sower stops sowing, the reaper is still reaping. But, at present, both fulfill their individual tasks and both rejoice because they consider the perfection of the seeds as a common joy. And on the words "For here the saying holds true, 'One sows and another reaps.'" (John 4:37): The Son of Man above the Place (of the Middle) sows; the Savior, himself also the Son of Man, harvests and sends as reapers the angels represented by the disciples, each for his own soul.

Fragment 36, on John 4:38

(In John 4:38, "I sent you to reap that for which you did not labor; others have labored, and you have entered into their labor.") Neither through them nor by them were these seeds sown, meaning the apostles. Those who labored are the angels of the dispensation, through whom - as mediators - it (the seed) was sown and brought up. "You have entered into their labor" means those who sow and those who reap do not have the same work. The former, in cold and rain and with much toil, dig up the earth and sow. Through the entire winter, they care for it by hoeing and clearing away the weeds. But the latter enter upon a prepared fruit in summer and joyfully reap.

Fragment 37, on John 4:39 (In John 4:39, "Many Samaritans from that city believed in him because of the woman's testimony, 'That one told me all that I ever did.') The words "from the city" mean "from the world." And the phrase "because of the woman's testimony" means "because of the spiritual Church." The word "many" was used because there are many animate people but "the one" is the imperishable nature of the election, uniform and unique.

Fragment 38, on John 4:40

(In John 4:40, "So when the Samaritans came to him, they asked him to stay with them; and he stayed with them for two days.") "He stayed with them," not 'among them' and "for two days," signifying either the present age and the one to come in marriage, or the time before the passion and the period afterwards during which he stayed with them, converted many more to faith through his own words, and the departed from them.

Fragment 39, on John 4:42

In the words "It is no longer because of your words that we believe" (John 4:42a), the word 'only' is missing. "For we have heard for ourselves, and we know that this is indeed the Savior of the world." (John 4:42b) At first people believe in the Savior because they are lead to that point by others, but when they encounter his words they no longer believe because of human testimony alone, but because of the Truth itself.

Fragment 40, on John 4:46-53

(In John 4:46, "So he came again to Cana in Galilee, where he had made the water wine. And at Capernaum there was an official whose child was ill.) The official was the Craftsman, for he himself ruled like a king over those under him. Because his domain is small and transitory, he was called an "official," like a petty princeling who is set over a small kingdom by the universal king. The "child" "in Capernaun" is one who is in the lower part of the Middle (i.e. of animate substance), which lies near the sea, that is, which is linked with matter. The child's proper person was sick, that is, in a condition not in accordance with the child's proper nature, in ignorance and sins. (In John 4:47, "When he heard that Jesus had come from Judea to Galilee, he went and begged him to come down and heal his child , for it was at the point of death.") The words "from Judea to Galilee" mean 'from the Judea above.'. . . By the words "it was at the point of death," the teaching of those who claim that the soul is immortal is refuted. In agreement with this is the statement that "the body and soul are destoyed in Hell." (Matthew 10:28) The soul is not immortal, but is possessed only of a disposition towards salvation, for it is the perishable which puts on imperishability and the mortal which puts on immortality when "its death is swallowed up in victory." (1 Corinthians 15:54) On "Unless you see signs and wonders you will not believe." (John 4:48): It is fittingly said to the kind of person whose nature is determined through works, and who is convinced by means of sense-perception and does not believe the word. The words, "Come before my child dies" (John 4:49) were spoken because death is the goal and end of the law which kills through sins. Before the child was utterly put to death through sin, the father asks the only Savior to help his child, that is, the nature thus constituted. (In John 4:50, "Jesus said to him, 'Go; your son will live.' The man believed the word that Jesus spoke to him and went his way.") The words, "Your child will live", were said by the Savior modestly, for he did not say, 'Let him live,' nor did he make it known that he himself provided the life. He went down to the sick person and healed the illness, and having raised that one to life through forgiveness, said, "Your child will live." The words "the man believed" mean that even the Craftsman is very ready to believe that the Savior, even if not present, is able to heal. (In John 4:51, "As he was going down, his servants met him and told him, 'Your child lives!'") The words "his servants" refer to the angels of the Craftsman who bring tidings in the words "Your child lives" that the child is behaving fittingly and rightly, and no longer doing what is unseemly. The servants bring news to the official about the salvation of his child, since the angels are the first to see the actions of human beings in the world, whether they have conducted themselves well and sincerely since the sojourn of the Savior. (In John 4:52, "So he asked them the hour when he began to mend, and they said to him, 'Yesterday at the seventh hour the fever left him.'") By the hour, the nature of the person healed is defined (as animate). (In John 4:53, "The father knew that was the hour when Jesus had said to him, 'Your child will live'; and he himself believed, and all his household.") In addition, "he himself believed, and all his household" is said with reference to the order of angels and the human beings who are akin to him (i.e. the Craftsman). There is a question about whether or not some of the angels will be saved, namely those who descended to the daughters of men (Genesis 6:2). The destruction of the human beings of the Craftsman is made clear in the words "The children of the kingdom will be cast out into outer darkness." (Matthew 8:12) Concerning them, Isaiah prophesied, "Children did I rear and bring up, but they have rejected me" (Isaiah 1:2), and he calls them alien children, and a wicked and lawless seed, a vineyard which produces thorns (Isaiah 5:6).

Fragment 41, on John 8:21

(In John 8:2, "Again he said to them, 'I go away, and you will seek me and die in your sin; where I am going, you cannot come.'") How can they come to be in a state of imperishability when they are in ignorance, unbelief and sin?

Fragment 42, on John 8:22

(In John 8:22, "Then said the Jews, 'Will he kill himself, since he says, "Where I am going, you cannot come"?'") The Jews said this because they entertained evil thoughts and considered themselves greater than the Savior. They supposed that they themselves would go away to God for eternal rest, but the Savior, making away with himself, to corruption and death unto which they thought they would not go. The Jews believed that the Savior said, 'I am about to do away with myself and go to corruption, where you cannot come.'

Fragment 43, on John 8:37

(In John 8:37, "I know that you are descendants of Abraham; yet you seek to kill me, because my word finds no place in you.") "Because my word finds no place in you" means it has no place because they are unsuitable for it either by their substance or by their disposition.

Fragment 44, on John 8:43-44a

(In John 8:43-44a, "Why do you not understand what I say? It is because you cannot bear to hear my word. You are of your father the devil, and your wish is to do your father's desires.") The reason why they were unable to hear Jesus' words and understand what he said is provided in the words, "You are of your father the Devil." He says, 'Why are you unable to hear my word? Because you are of your father the Devil' meaning you are of the substance of the Devil. Thus he makes clear their nature, after convincing them in advance that they are neither the children of Abraham otherwise they would not have hated him, nor children of God because they did not love him.

Fragment 45, on John 8:44a

Those to whom the word came were of the substance of the Devil.

Fragment 46, on John 8:44a

The verse "You are of your father the Devil" is to be understood as meaning 'of the same substance as the Devil.' On "and your wish is to do your father's desires": The Devil has no will, but only desires. . . This was said not to those who are by nature children of the Devil, but to the animate people who have become children of the Devil by intent. Some who are of this nature may also be called children of God by intent. Because they have loved the desires of the Devil and performed them, they become children of the Devil, though they were not such by nature. The word "children" may be understood in three ways: first, by nature; secondly, by inclination; thirdly, by merit. (A child) by nature means (the child) is begotten by someone who is himself begotten, and is properly called "child." (A child) by inclination is when one who does the will of another person by his own inclination is called the child of the one whose will he does. (A child) by merit is when some are known as children of hell, or of darkness and lawlessness, and the offspring of snakes and vipers. For these do no produce anything by their own nature; they are destructive and consume those that are cast into them; but, since they did their works, they are called their children. . . He now calls them children of the Devil, not because the Devil produces any of them, but because by doing the works of the Devil they became like him.

Fragment 47, on John 8:44b

(In John 8:44b, "He was a murderer from the beginning, and has nothing to do with the truth, because there is no truth in him. When he lies, he speaks according to his own nature, for he is a liar and the father of lies.") His nature is not of the Truth, but the opposite to the Truth: error and ignorance. Therefore he can neither stand in Truth, nor have the Truth in himself. From his nature he has falsehood as his own, and by nature he can never speak the Truth. Not only is he himself a liar, but he is also falsehood's father. His "father" means his nature, since it is composed of error and falsehood.

Fragment 48, on John 8:50

(In John 8:50, "Yet I do not seek my own glory; there is one who seeks it and he will be the judge.") The words "there is one who seeks it, and he will be the judge" do not refer to the Father. The one who seeks and judges is the one who avenges me, the servant commissioned for that purpose, who does not bear the sword in vain, the avenger of the king. This is Moses, as he said to them previously in the words, "on who you set your hope." (John 5:45) The one who judges and punishes is Moses, that is, the law-giver himself. How then does he not say that all judgement has been delivered to him? (cf. John 5:22) He affirms it rightly: for the judge does this will as a servant when he judges, as happens clearly among human beings.

Fragments preserved in the writings of Clement of Alexandria (Titus Flavius Clemens):

Fragment 49, on Matthew 3:11

John says, "I baptise you with water, but there comes after me one who baptizes with spirit and fire." (Matthew 3:11) He baptized no one with fire. But some have marked with fire the ears of those who are sealed, and have thus understood the apostolic word. (Heracleon is referring here to the gnostic group lead by Marcellina.)

Fragment 50, on Luke 12:8

(In Luke 12:8, "I assure you that whoever confesses in me publicly, the Son of Man will do the same in him before the angels of God") The confession is made on the one hand that made in faith and conduct, on the other hand that made with the mouth. Confession with the mouth takes place also before the authorities, and this the multitudes incorrectly consider to be the only confession, for even the hypocrites can make this confession. But it will be found that this word was not spoken universally. For not all who are saved made the confession by mouth, among whom are Matthew, Philip, Thomas, Levi, and many others. The confession by mouth is not universal, but relates to a part. What is universal is the confession in works and action, which corresponds to faith in him. And this confession is followed by the partial one before the authorities, if it is necessary and the situation requires it. That person will make the confession by mouth who has previously confessed rightly in disposition. And of those who confess, he rightly said "in me." But in the case of those who deny he added a "me," even if they confess him with the mouth, they deny him since they do not confess him in action. Only those who live in confession and action which conform to him confess "in him." In their case he confesses himself, since he has grasped them, and is held by them so that they can never deny him. For those who are not in him deny him. For he did not say 'whoever denies in me,' but "in me". For no one who was ever in him will deny him. "Publicly" the confession takes place in similar fashion before those who are saved and before the Gentiles, before the former by conduct also, and before the latter by the mouth.

BIBLICAL GEOGRAPHY AND ITS SIGNIFICANCE

The Hebrews were freed from Babylonian captivity by the Persian emperor Kurush II (known for this reason in the West as Cyrus the Great, and among the Jews as Kurush the Messiah) in the middle of the 6th century BC. Large parts of the Old Testament (the Hebrew Bible or Tanakh) were finalised from the 6th to the 4th centuries BC. Under the patronage of the Persian Empire, leaders such as Zerubabbel, Ezra, Nehemia and others, the freed Jews were encouraged to establish the Laws of Moses as the common law of Yehud Medinat, the Persian Province of Judaea. The Persians did this for a good reason. Their national religion was Zoroastrianism, founded in about 1000 BC by a prophet also known as Zarathustra or Zoroaster. The religion was monotheistic like Judaism and shared therefore many common features such as the purity laws. Jews and Persians continued to work together for many centuries.

Archaeologists found Jewish settlements and their traces from Egypt to India and from Greece to Ethiopia and Yemen. It is fair to state that the Persians were parents to the Bible and Western Civilisation as well as Jews, Phoenicians, Greeks and Romans.

The authors of the Bible proved to be reasonable people. In the first book of the Torah (the Books of Mose) they set up the cast of characters (and nations) and also the geographical range by mentioning the rivers as important source of life and as geographical boundaries known to the Jews in the 6th century BC: from the Indus, over the Tigris and Euphrates to the Nile (Gen. 2:10-14). And the Jews were present at all these places.

The locations, lands, and nations mentioned in the Bible are not all listed here. Some locations might appear twice, each time under a different name. The letters N, S, W, E and NW, NE, SW, SE denote the 8 main compass directions as adjective as well as noun.

A

• Absalom's Monument: Kidron Valley, Jerusalem SE

• Achaia, Greek: Akhaia, northernmost region of the Peloponnese Peninsula, Greece

• Gomorrah: Sodom and Gomorrah were two cities destroyed by God for their wickedness (Genesis 18:23). Their locations are unknown, probably near the Dead Sea

• Goshen, Gosen, Gesem, Kesem: denotes the E half of the Nile Delta and might mean "cultivated land." The land of Goshen is named in the Hebrew Bible as the place in Egypt given to the Hebrews by the pharaoh of Joseph (Genesis 45:9–10), and the land from which they later left Egypt at the time of the Exodus. The newcomers have been somewhat set apart from the rest of Egypt, because Joseph tells his family to present themselves to the pharaoh as keepers of livestock (see Egyptian wall painting p.7459, The Grand Bible), "in order that you may settle in the land of Goshen, because all shepherds are abhorrent to the Egyptians." (Genesis 46:34) Reason: Herders let their animals destroy cultivated land by overgrazing it. They lived in and around the city of Avaris, later called Pi-Ramesses (Ra-Mose, city of the Son of Ra) the seat of power of the Hyksos kings. This identifies Israelites and Hebrews (Habiru, in the Amarna Letters) as Canaanites and Hyksos (Heka Khasut, Egyptian for "conquerors from the East")

After their freeing from Babtlonian captivity, many Hebrews remained voluntarily in Persian service for centuries.

• Petra: The area around Petra has been inhabited from as early as 7000 BC, and was settled by the Nabataeans, a nomadic Arab people, in the 4th century BC. Petra would later become the capital city of the Nabataean Kingdom in the second century BC. Petra and other Arab places, like Madain Saleh, became destiation for the surviving Zealots who triggerd the Jewish war 66-73 AD against Rome. Armenian historian Tovma Artsruni (fl. 9th - 10th century AD) identified Petra as "Maka in Paran," the original Mecca and birthplace of the prophet Mohammed (p.3301 [3314], The Grand Bible); research by Canadian historian Dan Gibson confirmed it.

• Philistia: Original of the name "Palestine." Philistia (Hebrew: Peleshet; Greek (LXX): Ge ton Phulistieím) was a confederation of five main cities or pentapolis in the Southwest Levant, made up of principally Gaza, Ashkelon, Ashdod, Ekron, and Gath. The population had nothing to do which those modern Arabs who call themselves 'Palestinians.' Philistines were made up of people of an Aegean (Greek) background that from roughly 1200 BC onwards settled in the area and mixed with the local Canaanite population

• Shalem (Greek: Salem): ancient Middle Eastern town mentioned in the Bible. Genesis 14:18; Psalm 76:2. Location unknown

• Sheba, Saba: Pre-Arab state and kingdom in Yemen and Ethiopia mentioned in the Hebrew Bible; home state of the Queen of Sheba, who is left unnamed in Jewish texts, but is known as Makeda in Ethiopian texts and as Bilqīs in Arabic texts. According to Roman historian Titus Flavius Josephus, Sheba was the home of Princess Tharbis, who is said to have been the wife of Moses before he married Zipporah. The orientalist A.F.L. Beeston identified the Sabaean language as "Central Semitic" like Canaanite, Hebrew, Aramaic

• Shechem, Shakmu: Mentioned as a Canaanite city in the Amarna Letters (Amarna letter EA 252; p.2151, The Grand Bible), it later appears in the Hebrew Bible as the first capital of the Kingdom of Israel following the split of the United Monarchy. Joshua 21:20–21,

• Sheol: in the Hebrew Bible is the underworld place of stillness and darkness which lies after death.

• Shiloh, Khirbet Seilun: 31 km north of Jerusalem; in the Hebrew Bible, Shiloh was one of the main centres of Israelite worship during the pre-monarchic period, before the First Temple in Jerusalem was built. Judges, 21:19

• Shinar, Shin'ar (Sanhar, Sankhar of the Amarna letters; 14th century BC): Mesopotamian city often used as as a general synonym for Babylonia. Genesis 14:1,9, Joshua 7:21; Isaiah 11:11; Daniel 1:2; and Zechariah 5:11

• Shomron: Hebrew name for Samaria

• Shur (Bible), also Sur (wilderness of Shur, way of Shur)

• Sidon: Important Phoenician harbour city in Lebanon. In the New Testament era, Herod the Great visited Sidon. Both Jesus and Paul the Apostle are said to have visited it, too

• Sin Desert: The wilderness of Sin or desert of Sin (Hebrew: Midbar Sin) is a geographic area mentioned in the Hebrew Bible as lying between Elim and Mount Sinai.

• Sinai: a peninsula in Egypt, and the only part of the country located in Asia. In the Exodus, Moses and his Israelites had to cross the Sinai back to Canaan

• Smyrna (modern Izmir): important centre of Greek civilisation in the W of Asia Minor. Important Greek city: Ephesus

• Sodom and Gomorrah: were two cities destroyed by God for their wickedness (Genesis 13:12; 19:29) Their story parallels the Genesis flood narrative in its theme of God's anger provoked by man's sin (see Genesis 19:1–28) Roman historian Titus Flavius Josephus identifies the Dead Sea in geographic proximity to the ancient biblical city of Sodom. He refers to the lake by its Greek name, Asphaltites (Antiquities of the Jews, Book 1. Chapter 9); Location onknown, perhaps in or near the Dead Sea

• Spain: Paul the Apostle is known to have made 4 journeys, but he metiones also a 5th journey: "Whensoever I take my journey into Spain, I will come to you: for I trust to see you in my journey," Romans 15.24

• Sukkot, Succoth, Egypt: Succos, (Hebrew for "confinements," pl.; sg. Sukka; believed to be "Huts," or "Booths"), also called Feast of Booths, Leviticus 23:34; As sukkot means "confinements," it could refer to water confinements, canal locks of the Canal of the Pharaos, which were passed by the Israelites on their Exodus, W of the Bitter Lakes. The Israelites had no other word for such a technical installation; and the sukkot festival also might have something to do with it; the sukkot huts (with their straw roofs) may well have been a cargo-cult imitation of just those locks whose water surfaces have been covered by straw from the reed plants that still grow there today.

• Sukkot, Succoth, Transjordan: also spelled Sukkoth, Succoth, Sukkos, Sukkot is a city east of the Jordan River, identified as Tell Deir Alla, a high debris mound in the plain north of the Zarqa River and about one mile from it (Joshua 13:27). The identification is based on a passage in the Jerusalem Talmud, which was compiled in the 4th century, in which the biblical Sukkot was identified with a settlement called Dar'ellah. Succot, became a Jewish autumn festival of double thanksgiving that begins in September or October, recalling the days when Moses and the Israelites were on their Exodus from Egypt.

• Sumer, Sumeria: S Mesopotamian state and region, home state of Abraham and his clan; earliest known civilisation (c. 5500–1800 BC), located in the historical region of southern Mesopotamia (now S Iraq). Sumer is Abraham's land of nativity, he is from Ur of the Chaldees (Ur Kasdim; Genesis 11:28). With Abraham's story, the Bible states Sumer as the Mesopotamian patron of the Hebrews, and with Mose's (the name is Egyptian: msy or mose, "son of" like Hebrew "ben" and Aramaic "bar") story, the Bible states Egypt as the second patron of the Hebrews

• Susa, Susan, (Elamite: Shushan): ancient city in the lower Zagros Mountains about 250 km (160 mi) east of the Tigris, between the Karkheh and Dez Rivers in Iran. One of the most important cities of the Ancient Near East, Susa was the capital of Elam and the winter capital of the Achaemenid Persian Empire. The city of Shush is located on the site of ancient Susa.

• Syria: See Aram, Aramea

T

• Tabal: Georgian state in Asia Minor

• Tarshish: Titus Flavius Josephus identifies Tarshish with the city of Tarsus in Cilicia (S Turkey)

• Tarsus, (Greek: Tarsos): ancient city in S Turkey, hometown of the Pharisee and Roman citizen Sha'ul ha-Tarsi, Saul of Tarsos, better known as Paul the Apostle. Saul, perhaps after the biblical King Saul, the first king of Israel and, like Paul, a member of the Tribe of Benjamin. According to the Acts of the Apostles, he was a Roman citizen (Acts 22:25–29). As such, he bore the Latin name Paulus, which translates in biblical Greek as Paulos. It was typical for the Jews of that time to have two names: one Hebrew, the other Latin or Greek. At first, Paul was a Roman official who worked as persecutor of all who could harm the Roman state, that included Zealots and the followers of Jesus

• Tel Dan: Dan is an ancient city mentioned in the Hebrew Bible, described as the northernmost city of the Kingdom of Israel, and belonging to the tribe of Dan, its namesake. According to the Book of Judges, prior to the Tribe of Dan occupying the land, the town was known as Laish (Judges 18:7, 14, 27–29), meaning lion, or rather lioness. Joshua 19:47, although telling the same story as Judges 18, names the city as Leshem, which makes the researchers consider it as being the same place.

• Tel Dan Stele: Within the remains of the city wall, close to the entrance of the outer gate, parts of the Tel Dan Stele were found. The basalt stone bears an Aramaic inscription referring to one of the kings of Damascus; either Hazael (c 840 BC), or Ben-Hadad (c 802 BC). A small part of the inscription remains, with text containing the letters 'ביתדוד' (bytdwd), which most archaeologists agree refers to "House of David" (Bet David in Hebrew.) In the line directly above, the text reads 'MLK YSR'L', i.e. "King of Israel". The inscription is the oldest one that mentions David.

• Timnath-serah: was the town given by the Israelites to Joshua. He requested it and the people gave it to him "at the order of the Lord". He built up the town and lived in it (Joshua 19:49–50).

• Timnath or Timnah was a Philistine city in S Canaan that is mentioned in the Hebrew Bible in Judges 14 and in connexion with Samson.

• Tyre: Parent state of the City of Carthage (modern Tunisia) The most important Phoenician city state and ally of David and Solomon. The fleet of Tyre cooperated with Solomon to trade with Sheba and Ophir (NW India); 2 Chronicles Chapter 8:16-18; 9:1-12;

U

• Ugarit: Amorite city and state (origin of Hammurabi's dynasty of Babylon); lying in a large artificial mound called Ras Shamra (Ra's Shamrah), 10 km (6 mi) north of Latakia (Al-Ladhiqiyah) on the Mediterranean coast of Canaan, N Syria. Its ruins, about half a mile from the shore, were first uncovered by the plough of a peasant at Al-Bayda Bay. Excavations begun in 1929 by a French archaeological mission under the direction of Claude F.A. Schaeffer. The best-documented age in Ugarit's history, dated from about 1450 to about 1200 BC.

• Ugarit Tablets: The archaeologists found a bunch of ancient records in cuneiform script on clay tablets. Ugarit was a cosmopolitan city: Scribes used 4 languages: Ugaritic, Sumerian, Akkadian, and Hurrian, and 7 different scripts: Egyptian and Hittite hieroglyphic and Cypro-Minoan, Sumerian, Akkadian, Hurrian, and Ugaritic cuneiform. Scientists made a breath-taking discovery: They found the oldest alphabet (abjad) ever known. The texts are written in a special alphabetic cuneiform script invented in Ugarit. Several copies of this alphabet, with its 30 signs, were found in 1949 and later. A shorter alphabet, with 25, and one even with only 22, letters, seems to have been used by 13th-century traders. This writing system was the direct ancestor to Phoenician-Hebrew letter script. See Script Identification Charts, Appendix B or The Grand Bible, pp.81

• Umma: Mesopotamian city, state and empire. Umma was identified with Tell Jokha. More recently it has been suggested that it was located at Umm al-Aqarib, less than 7 km (4.3 mi) to its NW, Iraq. Lugalzagesi or Lugalzaggisi (reigned c. 2358–2334 BC), of the southern Mesopotamian city of Umma, who first conquered the major cities of Lagash and Kish, then overcame the Sumerian cities of Ur and Uruk (he alone represents the 3rd dynasty of Uruk). After uniting all of Sumer, he extended his dominion to the Mediterranean coast; but, after a reign of 25 years, he lost his empire to the ascendant dynasty of Sargon the Great (c. 2334–2279 BC), the powerful Semitic ruler of Akkad.

• Ur: Mesopotamian state and city in Sumer (S Iraq), hometown of Abraham. It was also the city of the lawgivers Ur-Nammu and his son, the Augustus Shulgi (see The Grand Bible, p.5212; pp.5277; pp.5280)

• Urartu: Hurrian state in the Caucasus; see Ararat

• Urkish: Mesopotamian state and city

• Uruk (Sumerian: Uruk, Hebrew: Erech, Greek: Orchoë): modern Tall al-Warka, Mesopotamian state and city, The site has been excavated from 1928 onward by the German Oriental Society and the German Archeological Institute. Erech was one of the greatest cities of Sumer enclosed by city walls about 10 km (6 mi) in circumference, built by the legendary hero Gilgamesh. Excavations traced successive building phases that date from before 5000 BC, down to Parthian times (126 BC–224 AD). Urban life of Erech in c. 3500–2900 BC has been more thourough investigated at Erech than at any other Mesopotamian city. See The Gilgamesh Cycle, The Grand Bible, pp.5258

• The Land of Uz: perhaps Aram; The land of Uz (Hebrew: Eretz-Uz) is an unknown location mentioned in the Old Testament, most prominently in the Book of Job, which begins, "There was a man in the land of Uz, whose name was Job".

V

• Via Dolorosa: The Via Dolorosa (Latin for 'Sorrowful Way', often translated 'Way of Suffering') is a processional route in the Old City of Jerusalem in Israel. It represents the path that Jesus took, forced by the Roman soldiers, on the way to his crucifixion. Contrary to common belief, its route is unknown due to the many distructions and rebuildings of Jerusalem

Y

• Yarmut: see Jarmuth

• Yeha: The Great Temple in Yeha, Ethiopia is a copy of Solomon's temple, Kingdom of Sheba (Saba); see Marib

• Yemen: a region S of the Arabian Peninsula, in Antiquity known as Kingdom of Sheba or Saba.

Z

• Zela, Zelah, Zelzah (It may be the Zilu of the Amarna letters) Judah: Zela was an unidentified place in the territory of the Tribe of Benjamin, ancient Judea, known as the burial place of King Saul, his father Kish and his son Jonathan, with the 7 grandsons of Saul hung by the Gibeonites. Saul and Jonathan died during the Battle of Gilboa, and 2 Samuel 21:13 refers to King David authorising their bones to be moved to Kish's grave to join the bodies of the 7 grandsons killed in retribution for Saul's slaughter of Gibeonites.

• Zemaraim: Mount Zemaraim at the mountains of Ephraim, north of Jerusalem, Kingdom of Judah. The great Battle of Mount Zemaraim in c. 913 BC was reported in the Bible to have been fought in Mount Zemaraim, when the army of the Kingdom of Israel led by the king Jeroboam I encountered the army of the Kingdom of Judah led by the king Abijah I. About 500,000 Israelites were said to have lain dead after this single engagement. The friction all began when the late king Rehoboam increased the royal taxes throughout the Kingdom of Israel after Solomon died in about 931 BC. Ever since the unified kingdom was divided, there had been constant border issues between the two parties, and both attempted to settle them, and failed. 2 Chronicles 13:2-18

• Zeredathah, Zaretan or Zarethan: a city mentioned in the Hebrew Bible as near the location where the Hebrews crossed the Jordan (Joshua 3:16). In the books of Joshua (3:16, KJV "Zaretan") and 1 Kings (4:12 KJV "Zartanah", 7:46 "Zarthan"), it is called Zarethan, but in 2 Chronicles it is called Zeredathah (4:17, KJV). According to Hebrew Bible, the bronze castings for the Solomon's Temple were made in the clay grounds between Sukkot and Zaretan.

• Zoara, Zoar, Tzoar or Bela: in the Hebrew Bible, Segor in the Septuagint, and Zughar by medieval Arabs, was an ancient city SE of the Dead Sea; Genesis 13:10, 14:2–8

• Zorah: hometown of Samson; 23 km W of Jerusalem near Nahal Sorek. Zorah was mentioned together with Ajalon in the Amarna letters as a city attacked by the Apiru (Habiru, Hebrew). Joshua 15:33; Judges 13:2; Judges 16:31; Joshua 19:41; 2 Chronicles 11:10

• Zion: See Mount Zion (Jerusalem)

• Zobah: Zobah or Aram-Zobah (Hebrew: Aram Soba) was an early Aramean state mentioned in the Hebrew Bible, which extended north-east of biblical King David's realm. 1 Samuel 14:47). (2 Samuel 10).

THE GRAND BIBLE SELECTION OF BIBLIOGRAPHIES

(This selection has been presented here to encourage further investigation. However, as the Grand Bible focusses not only on one or the other religious scripture but on almost all available scriptures of the major belief systems, it has become necessary to present several different sets of bibliographies accordingly. Due to the comparative nature of those publications, it is unavoidable that quite a number of them can be found in an unexpected set of the here presented bibliographies.)

VARIOUS KORAN TRANSLATIONS:

(The older the translations, the more the translators perceived the Koran correctly as a Book of Law. It seems that later generations got out of touch with the matter and then only understaood the Koran as "holy religious book" which it is clearly not. It is the doctrine of Mohammed about law, politics, hatred, war, propaganda, and subjugation of non-Muslims; less than one sixth is about religion.)

Historical Translations:

• Greek: The purpose is unknown but it is confirmed to be the first ever complete translation of the Quran. We know of it (and substantial fragments are preserved) because it was used by Nicetas Byzantius, a scholar from Constantinople, in his 'Refutatio' written between 855 and 870.

• Tafsir-e Tabari: The first complete translation of the Quran in Persian, along with its tafsir, which has survived till today. The book is a translation of Tafsir al-Tabari in Arabic.

• 1143, Latin, Lex Mahumet pseudoprophete, by a group led by Robert of Ketton, under direction of Peter the Venerable

• 1543 reprint Latin text of Lex Mahumet pseudoprophete (1143), edited by Theodor Bibliander.

• 17th century Malay, Tafsir Tarjuman al-Mustafid by Shaikh Abdur Ra'uf al-Fansuri from Aceh Sultanate. This is the first translation in Malay language. The translation is in the classical Malay language (not to be confused with Malaysian language) before it evolved into the Indonesian language and the Malaysian language in recent times. This translation was written with Jawi script.

• 1616, German, Alcoranus Mahometicus from Italian by Salomon Schweigger, Nuremberg.

• 1632, Latin, Turcarum Alcoranus from Arabic by Johann Zechendorff (1580-1662), unpublished manuscript

• Tablets from the site surfaced on the market as early as 1880, when three tablets made their way to European museums. By the early 1920s, the number of tablets sold from the site exceeded 4,000. While the site of Kültepe was suspected as the source of the tablets, and the site was visited several times, it was not until 1925 when Bedrich Hrozny corroborated this identification by excavating tablets from the fields next to the tell that were related to tablets already purchased.

EPILOGUE

THE STORY OF THE GRAND BIBLE

The Quest For The Origin Of Holy Books

by Lord Henfield

Two years have past since the publication of my largest pet-project, the Grand Bible. The Grand Bible was originally meant as a kind of study recording, just for myself. I wanted to find out what was behind all the scriptures because I could not find answers that satisfied me. I have been surprised to see so many readers downloading my humble work. 12,000 downloads, 370 thumbs up, and 10 reviews within two years. I am very grateful for that and say thank you to you all. To be honest, I have underestimated the readers' interest in holy texts. The Grand Bible has occupied much of my time for more than 8 years. I have never explained why I embarked on this laboursome task in the first place. I think, it is time to tell you now how my quest for the origin of holy books began. Do not worry, it will not hurt. I shall keep my story as short and as simple as possible.

It was a lovely and sunny afternoon in 2014. My wife and I were on the way to the largest bookshop in town. For months, I had tried to find a complete bible in English, not an easy task because I lived in a city in the Far East. The air of the bookshop was filled with the distinctive odour of books. I run up the stairs, heading towards the 5th floor, smelling already my prey. This was the location of the foreign language books—English books and some in French, German, Spanish. I saw books that I could read. Finally! Marching through the aisles, I saw suddenly a black book with golden letters among all the colourful printworks on the upper shelve. A Holy Bible, KJV, King James Version. At last, I found what I was searching for.

Back home, at my desk, I discovered however that a large chunk of the Bible, originally positioned after the Tanakh (the Old Testament), was missing. That part of the bible, containing 14 books, to others known as Hebrew Apocrypha ("hidden writings," so named by the Roman Church), was known to me as the Hebrew Deuterocanon (2nd Hebrew Canon). It contains two Books called Maccabees and they explain the origin of the Hanukah-festival that commemorates the Jewish wars of independence against the mighty Persian Empire that led to victory by Judas Maccabaeus in 165 BC. I was disappointed not to find them in my new bible. I was furious when I found out that the Protestants had removed it furtively from the entire bible canon in about 1885 that once was approved by Emperor Flavius Constantinus.

In the library of my old home in Europe, I used a KJV-Bible from the Victorian era, mid-19th century, and that one was complete. I admit that I never have been much interested in religion or holy texts—I certainly have had this attitude in common with many people. Yet, I worked as teacher for linguistics, taught languages as well as history, archaeology, geography and other related subjects. I wanted to show text examples of the Early Modern English language to my students, Chaucer, the Bible, Shakespeare, in order to make them aware that all languages change over time and above all that the Bible reflects real events in the past. It was my fury that drove me to start the Grand Bible project. I embarked on a task that would not want to end. Anyhow, I was rewarded with wonderful discoveries that I really could not have expected.

According to Eusebius' "Life of Constantine", 50 complete Bibles in the original Greek language were commissioned by Emperor Flavius Constantinus (Constantine the Great) and prepared by his right-hand man Eusebius of Caesarea. The 50 complete volumes were distributed thoughout the Roman Empire to unify and consolidate Roman Christianity as state religion: "Such were the emperor's commands, which were followed by the immediate execution of the work itself, which we sent him in magnificent and elaborately bound volumes of a threefold and fourfold form (written in 3 or 4 columns)." We have examples of both versions. The three-column version is known as Codex Vaticanus (The Grand Bible, Image Plate 22, page 37) because it is kept in the Vatican Library. The four-column version was discovered in 1844 by Constantin von Tischendorf in the St. Catherine's Monastery at Mount Sinai, Egypt, and is now known as Codex Sinaiticus (The Grand Bible, Image Plate 21, page 36).

At first, I just wanted to find a Bible in its completeness that had its origin in that edict of emperor Flavius Constantinus in the early 300s. Therefore, I took the matter much more seriously than ever before. In the beginning, I was searching the internet, looking for the Deuterocanon. There I found this:

- 1 Esdras (3 Ezra) Greek
- 2 Esdras 3–14 (4 Ezra) from Hebrew
- 2 Esdras 1–2 (5 Ezra); 15–16 (6 Ezra) from Latin
- Book of Tobit, Tobias, Tobi
- Book of Judith
- Additions to Esther (The rest of Esther)
- Wisdom of Solomon or Book of Wisdom or Wisdom
- Sirach (Ecclesiasticus 1–51) or Wisdom of Jesus ben Sira
- Prayer of Solomon (Sirach 52)
- 1 Baruch (Extant original: Greek)
- Epistle (Letter) of Jeremiah (Addition to 1 Baruch)
- The Prayer of Azariah and Song of the Three Holy Children
- Susanna and the Elders (Addition to Daniel)
- Bel and the Dragon (Second addition to Daniel)
- Prayer of Manasseh
- 1 Maccabees (Origin: Hebrew)
- 2 Maccabees (Origin: Greek)

(By the way, two years ago, I have found the right Bible in another bookshop by chance, unfortunately, just paperback. Its title: "The Bible - Authorized King James Version with Apocrypha," published as "Oxford World's Classics," by Oxford University Press in 1997, reissued in 2008, 1750 pages.)

Right from the start, my research was hampered by the fact that quite a lot of books in the Bible bear more than just one title. A title like "The Rest of Esther" can be in another publication "Additions to Esther." On the other hand, "Prayer of Solomon" (Sirach, chapter 52) is not in the original Deuterocanon simply because it was attached to other chapters, and / or it was kept separately. That is just a typical instant. Parts of other holy texts may have been unknown before they were rediscovered, or they were rejected and therefore eliminated from the document.

To my surprise, the books were originally not all written in Hebrew but some of them were in Greek. Now, not only my interest in History was awakened but also my interest in Linguistics got lit up again. I asked myself, "Why did Jews write some of their books in Greek?" — Soon, I found out that the Jews had translated the entire Old Testament into Greek already at around 300 BC! This work is also known under the title Septuagint (Roman for 'Seventy') because, it is said, the translation was done by 70 or 72 translators. I wondered, "Why, on Earth, did the Hebrews such a monumental task?"

I began to check historical as well as archaeological sources and after some months the clouds in my mind vanished. During the 5th and 4th centuries BC, Greek became the lingua franca of the entire upper class of the nations residing on the northern, the European shore, of the Mediterranean Sea. When the Roman Republic turned into an empire, education in Greek became paramount to everyone who wanted to strive for a better position in society. Cornelius Sulla, Gaius Julius Caesar, Titus Livius, Cleopatra, the Herods, Titus Flavius Josephus, Paul the Apostle, all Roman emperors, governors, generals, traders, navigators, artists and writers used Greek on a daily basis, pretty much like modern people of all countries use English.

My studies in linguistics proved to be vital. Almost overnight, I began to understand the contents of Indian and Chinese texts and what they were talking about. The answer was clear: Already in the 9th and 8th centuries BC, the Hebrews travelled together with their brothers and cousins, the Phoenicians! Both, Hebrews and Phoenicians, spread their culture and ideas, their language Phoenician (also called Old Hebrew) and writing system, their Hebrew calendar and their weights and currencies (the Shekel) throughout the entire Mediterranean and soon also to India, Central Asia, and China. The scope of their relations and connexions was breathtaking.

Hebrew and Phoenician traders brought their alphabet to Greeks and Romans. The latter two used it later in their propaganda against the Semitic Cartaginians, such as the Atlantis Saga which just described the Phoenician city of Carthage and its circular War Harbour. The northern (Indoeuropean) Mediterraneans (Greeks and Romans) became enemies of the southern (Semitic) Mediterraneans (Phoenicians and Hebrews) although they lived together in Greek and Roman cities since the 8th century BC.

Who is really meant when we talk about Semitics? — I shall give you here an idea: Abram, Abraham, Aram, Aramaean, Aramaic, Assyria, Syria, Syriac, Canaanite, Abhira, Abhiri, Ahyr, Ahir, Ophir, Habiru, Hebrew, Heka Khasut, Hyksos, Akkad, Akkadian, Sea-People, Phoenicia, Carthaginian, Amurru, Amorite, Judea, Judaea, Yehuda, Yaudheya, Yadava, Yoddheya, Yudah, Judas, Jude, Jew, Israel, Israelite, Bene Ysrael, Beta Ysrael, Mose, Ramose, Rameses, Ahmose, Dedimose, Thutmose, Musa, Avaris, Pi-Rameses; Reuben, Simeon (Simon, Shimon), Levi, Judah, Dan, Naphtali, Gad, Asher, Issachar, Zebulon, Joseph (Yusip), Benjamin . . . . and all derivatives of these words or names represent the same kind of people and their relatives: Jews, Hebrews, Israelites, Semites, depending who speaks about them. Involved here is the same language, same lifestyle, same calendar, same units of weights and currency, similar beliefs and laws, and to some degree even similar habits.

It is pretty much the same as if we today talk about: Latin, Italian, Sardinian, Corsican, Sicilian, Romanian, Moldovan, Catalan, Occitan, Galician, Portuguese, Spanish, Castillian, Aragonese, Mexican, Columbian, Venezolan, Peruvian, Chilenian, Argentine, Paraguay, Uruguay, Brazil, Timor, Guatemala, Nicaragua, Panama, etc. — they are all Romans, they all speak a Roman[ce] language, they are Roman Catholic (except Romanians and Moldovans who are Orthodox), they follow Roman Law, enjoy sunny weather and a Roman-like cuisine.

I became aware that this is all about the centre piece, the foundation, the core of history teaching. Anybody who does not understand that history (including a modern biography) is based on language, will not understand human basics. This is a fact because with his or her national language, each and every single person learns about everything in a very distinctive way: religion, philosophy, behaviour, traditition, habits, biasses, opinions, prejudices, lifestyle, yes, and it goes even so far that we can include sexual behaviour, allegiances, and geography. Human behaviours and habits are millions of years old and cannot be changed overnight by ideological nonsense and socialist dreams that will turn into nightmares, sooner or later.

The works of Jane Goodall, Jared Diamond, Desmond Morris and others clearly show that human feelings are very much the same as those of Chimpanzees, or other Primates for instance. When a homogenous group is invaded by another group of the same species, there will be sharp conflicts that can lead to war. Chimpanzees engage in wars on each other, like humans.

That a rich country like Canada has a nice collection of problems at home, does not come as a surprise to me. There are two main populations that are diametrical opposed to one another. The majority of Canadians spreaks English (Germanic), their society is based on German Protestantism and (Germanic) "Common Law." The minority speaks French (Roman) and their society and laws are based on Roman-Catholicism and the (Roman) "Napoleonic Law Code." These in Quebec living "Roman" Canadians would love to return into the arms of their "Roman" mother France, whilst the English-speakers would have no problems in applying membership to the mainly Protestant United States of America. This is one reason why most of them speak English with a strong "American" accent. Bear the following rules in mind: Each language group tries to get suppremacy over the other groups. The very same applies for religions. Luther's Reformation caused horrible wars for 130 years. Resentments are still alive today. Language and religion are tools to gain and keep political power. This has nothing to do with ill-will but much more with the DNA that is in us like it is in chimpanzees, cats or dogs.

Other nations who are paralysed by linguistic and religious conflicts are: Belgium, Ireland, France, Spain, Russia, Ukraine, the Balkans, Iraq, Syria, Iran, China, India, Pakistan, Afghanistan. That the United States have lost its recent wars in Iraq and Afghanistan has its reasons in the American ignorance of language division and religious hatred of Islam towards non-Muslims, regardless whatever benevolent projects the non-Muslims want to catch the Islamic populace with. Political Correctness and naive dreams of bringing socialism and democracy to other nations killed countless people. Almost all African countries have this problem too: Rwanda, Nigeria, Ethiopia, Chad, Mali, etc., the list is long.

The conflict and subsequent war between Russia and Ukraine has not surprised me either. The Russian demography is (just like the Chinese, German, and others) in terminal decline. This war is probably the last war Russia could launch on anyone. All the conflicts Putin has launched have had the aim to secure the borders of his empire. On top of that, there is the ideology of a certain Nazi known as Aleksandr Dugin who has been Putins ideological teacher for years. His books (like "Foundations Of Geopolitics" or "The Fourth Political Theory) struck cord with the majority of the ethnic Russian population. We should remember that ideology is also a significant part of religion. How could it be otherwise explained that the Patriarch Kirill of Moscow, the pope of the Russian Orthodox Church, was—like the entire Russian leadership and Putin himself —member of the KGB. If Putin is gone, he will just be replaced by another ex-KGB member.

In time, I discovered more and more texts that had to do with the Old Testament. Here, I could figure out a pattern. These texts were also written in Greek, Hebrew, but quite some texts were also written in Aramaic (a kind of new Hebrew and new Phoenician). I learned more interesting facts that are never really mentioned by historians. According to linguistic scientists, Aramaic became some sort of "world language" between the 7th century BC and the 7th century AD, stretching from the Phoenician-Carthaginian possessions in the northwest of Africa, along the Silk Road, reaching out to the gates of Chang'an (modern Xi'an) and Luoyang, the two main capital cities of China in Antiquity.

After the liberation from captivity in Assyria and then in Babylon, many Jews did not just return to their Holy Land but stayed in service as Aramaic writers and bureaucrats with their new allies, the Persians. Aramaic was the main trade language of the Assyrian Empire as well of its follower the Iranian empires of the Medes and the Persians. Aramaic was also the main language of the Hebrews and other people in the Middle East. When Alexander the Great arrived in Afghanistan and India, the Hebrews were already there for 300 years. Aramaic rock inscriptions and vellum documents from the Persian Empire bear witness to it. Indian texts, the Mahabharata especially, talk about the Persian allies and that they built two little republics in the northwest of ancient India: one was called Yadava or Yoddheya (Judaea) and the other, the to Yadava related republic was called Abhira or Ahir ("Hebrew-land," in the West also known as "Ophir"). It was geographically located north of the modern Indian state of Gujarat and had therefore access to the sea. Traditionally, the northwest of India was an important trade partner of Mesopotamia and Egypt; one of the reasons why several harbour cities were found in Gujarat.

In Egypt, Pharao Khakaure Senusret III let his engineers build "the Canal of the Pharaos," the first "Suez Canal," in circa 1850 BC. It began in the Nile-delta nearby Bubastis and was creeping east towards the "Bitter Lakes" and from there to the Red Sea. At the spot where the canal was approaching the Bitter Lakes is a place called Succoth. With trade, not only people travelled, but also their ideas and the language used to convey these ideas. This is the reason why I also had a look for all kinds of itinerary documents and inscriptions. I knew some of them already from the time when I studied history and archaeology. The findings have made me truely speechless.

47 Artefacts and Historical Documents (Documents of people who had first-hand knowledge on religions and intercultural relationships in Antiquity), 20 Exploration Accounts (Documents that reveal how much people of ancient civilisations really knew of one another and how ideas spread to other parts of the World) and 15 New Creations and Fabrications (Writings that try to popularise a certain religious viewpoint or make a new religion legitimate.). The Gospel of Jesus's Wife is, as far as we know today, a blunt fake. The scriptures of Sikhs and Bahai'is on the other hand are legitimate and new creations that have found a great many followers. Both of these religions came into being due to the brutality of Islam towards women and non-Muslims. Islam is by no means just a "religion of peace"—Martin Luther already knew that and he wrote about it.

The Islamic prophet committed 95 wars and battles on "Kafirs" (Kufre = evil Islam-rejectors) and they are revered by Muslims as "acts of jihad" that each true Muslim has to emulate. This copying behaviour produced, since the assault on the twin towers in New York City on 9/11, 2001, and after that, circa 45,000 terror attacks with about 300,000 deaths and countless injured (over 90% of the victims are Muslims!)—an equivalent of 3 - 4 Hiroshima size atomic bombs. Very peaceful indeed! (Search for "www.thereligionofpeace.com".)

Islam is based on three books: the Koran (Mohammed's notebook), the Sira (Sirat Rasul Allah, the biograpy of Mohammed), and the Hadith (the deeds and sayings of Mohammed). The Constitutions of Saudi Arabia, the Islamic Republic of Iran, Hamas, the Muslim Brotherhood and others make it very clear: Their law is based on Koran, Sira, Hadith. All three books are books of law! This is the very reason why they are called "holy" in the first place. The Sira and the Hadith explain in detail what the verses in the Koran really mean. Without these two books the act of reading the Koran is useless!

The Koran is actually two Korans in one binding: the first one written in Mecca, the second one written in Medina. One significant fact that explains Islam: Due to Mohammed's rules of abrogation (2:106), the violent verses of the Medina-Koran always supersede the peaceful verses of the older Mecca-Koran. The chapters of both periods are intermingled on purpose from the longest chapters to the shortest. Al-Taqiyya is a tool of deceit in order to protect subversive Islamic actions towards non-Muslims. The shortest and most revealing hadith is "War is deceit." and the earliest verse that Muslim children learn is "Do not make disbelievers (non-Muslims) your friends as Allah will not protect you (if you are a Muslim). A hadith says it better: "Do not seek friendship from non-Muslims because then you are one of them" (meaning: then you, the Muslim, are a traitor (to Islam). To put it simple: the allegiance of each and every Muslim is always towards the "Umma," the "Islamic (over)nation," not towards the country he or she just lives in! Islam is a political and legal doctrine (found in the Koran, Sira, Hadith) that no-one can escape —not even the non-Muslims. Islam's main tool is migration, and the womb. The Reliance of the Traveller tells us about it all. God help us. The Western World (and parts of the East) are lost in a pacifist dream! (If people are dreaming, it means they are asleep. It is time they bloody wake up.)

My research let me to all sorts of subjects. I checked graphs that recorded the activity of volcanoes as intensive as climate graphs that showed climate change and its disruptive consequences: extreme weather, drought, floodings, famine, civil war, plague and other epidemics. Civilisations, nation states and empires develop rapidly when climate and weather are stable and reliable. The Roman Republic rose in ideal conditions: The weather was warm, the climate stable, no epidemics in sight, record harvests led the population grow uninterrupted, one expedition after another brought more land and people into the growing state. Colder climate in the first half of the 1st millenium caused some distress. A huge volcano eruption at around 535 AD brought the state almost to a halt. Emperor Flavius Justinianus survived the following plague but his dream of restoring the old empire did not.

My research turned out to be an enlightening journey that I never had expected in this form. Everybody knows the story of Abraham and also the story of Moses. Not many know how they are connected. Most scriptures are not a bunch of old papers talking about God, belief, or spirituality all the time. They actually are interesting sources of information. Anyone who is able to read "between the lines" can gain some understanding. Somewhere at around 1995 BC, the Mount Vesusius in Italy erupted and caused a massive climate change for decades. The extreme weather conditions that followed led to drought, plague, famine, and civil war. It brought civilisations like the Minoan or the Indus Civilisations to their end. Egypt, Canaan, and Mesopotamia were at the brink of collapse.

The Hyksos have arrived in Egypt during Egypt's 12th Dynasty (1991–1802 BC). Today, they are identified with Canaanites. They have settled peacefully in "Goshen" (or Gosen), the Avaris area, Lower Egypt. At first, they seem to have been welcomed by Egypt because the site was originally founded by Amenemhat I (or at least with his consent) on an eastern branch of the Nile in the Delta. Soon, however, the newcomers have established their own kingdoms, so, the 14th Dynasty (c. 1725–1650 BC) and 15th Dynasty (1650–1550 BC) have been Canaanite dynasties in Lower Egypt, existing alongside the surviving 13th, 16th, and 17th Egyptian Dynasties (between 1803 BC and 1550 BC) in Upper Egypt.

When the Hyksos / Canaanites tried to conquer Upper Egypt at the end of the 18th Dynasty (1550–1290 BC), they provoked the Egyptians to fight for their country which ended with the total defeat of the Hyksos / Canaanites / Habiru (Hebrew) and their expulsion from Egypt. These events match almost perfectly with events described in the Hebrew Bible when the tribes of Abraham have migrated to Egypt at around 1950 BC and, after the defeat of their successors by the kings Kamose and Ahmose, have been driven out, in an event known to us as "the Exodus" of Mose (Egyptian: "son").

According to the Hebrew Bible, an unnamed Pharaoh (most likely Ahmose I) ordered the Israelites to leave Egypt. In Exodus (12:37, 38, 40, 41) we read: "And the children of Israel journeyed from Rameses (Pi-Rameses), to Succoth (Sukkot), about six hundred thousand on foot that were men, beside children. And a mixed multitude went up also with them; and flocks, and herds, even very much cattle. .... Now the sojourning of the children of Israel, who dwelt in Egypt, was four hundred and thirty years. And it came to pass at the end of the four hundred and thirty years, even the selfsame day it came to pass, that all the hosts of the Lord went out from the land of Egypt." The text was obviously written long after the exodus, heroic actions of the Israelites were mixed into the text.

The starting point of the Hebrews was not Pi-Rameses because that city was build later by Rameses I (Ramose = the son of Ra). The author meant Avaris (the capital city of the Hyksos, meaning the Canaanites / Israelites in Egypt) which was at the very same location. When the author used the name Pi-Rameses several hundred years later, the name Avaris was long forgotten or shamefully replaced. Here the story of the Exodus took place. The Bene Israel (the sons / children of Israel) had to leave Avaris and trecked along or nearby the Canal of the Pharaos in east direction. They came to a place called Succoth. When they left that place, they found something they had never seen before. The Bible reports that Mose "stretched his hand over the water (KJV: 'sea')" just as "the Lord" commanded him to do, and "the water went away" and "made the water dry land, and the waters were divided. (Exodus, Chapter 14:21, 22) And the children of Israel went into the midst of the water upon dry ground: and the waters were a wall unto them on their right hand, and on their left." Mose repeated this mechanical wonder: "... the children of Israel walked upon dry land in the midst of the water; and the waters were a wall unto them on their right hand, and on their left." (Exodus, Chapter 14:29). What we read here is the description of working water locks. The locks were located after Succoth and before the Bitter Lakes in order to keep the salty water away from the River Nile; the saltwater would have destroyed the fertile ground of the Nile-delta. The name Succoth was chosen not accidential but on purpose. The Hebrew word sukkot is the plural of sukka, meaning hut, booth, tabernacle, or any confinement, such as a canal lock.

Today, Sukkot is known as a festival's name—"the Festival of Ingathering at the year's end" (Exodus 34:22)—and marks the end of the harvest time and thus of the agricultural year in the Land of Israel. People build a kind of hut or shed which is a walled structure covered with s'chach (plant material, such as overgrowth or palm leaves). The real religious reason is that of commemorating the Exodus: "Ye shall dwell in booths seven days; all that are Israelites born shall dwell in booths: That your generations may know that I made the children of Israel to dwell in booths, when I brought them out of the land of Egypt: I am the Lord your God." God (Leviticus 23:42-43). What has this festival to do with confinement? The above mentioned name Succoth is not without significance. Succoth or Sukkot is the place where the Canal of the Pharaos (built by Pharaoh Senusret III between 1878–1839 BC) had locks (sukkot = water confinements, canal locks) that could "confine and divide the water" in order to keep the salty or "bitter" water (from the Bitter Lakes) separated from the valuable sweet water of the River Nile, which the canal was heading to: "And Moses stretched out his hand over the sea; and the Lord caused the sea to go back by a strong east wind all that night, and made the sea dry land, and the waters were divided. And the children of Israel went into the midst of the sea upon the dry ground: and the waters were a wall unto them on their right hand, and on their left." (Exodus 14:21-22). These events took place at about 1530, perhaps 700 or 800 years before they were finally written down. To an attentive reader, this description brings canal locks into his mind, with walls of water and even with plant material swimming on the water surface. And "dividing the water" is is precisely what a water lock does. There is a high likelihood that the Hebrew Bible tries to tell us about a real and historical event in the past, without telling us much more.

The expulsion of the Canaanite Hyksos (or the sons / children of Israel, as they called themselves) was ordered by the Pharao most likely right after the Hyksos were defeated in the 18th or 19th year of Ahmose's reign; that was in c. 1530 BC. For 430 years did they lived in Egypt, which means since 1960 BC. On his Expedition to Egypt (1842-1845), Carl Richard Lepsius found the amazing wall painting (above) in the tomb of Khnumhotep II (a government official who died in c. 1950 BC) in Beni Hasan, an ancient Egyptian cemetery near Menefer (Memphis). It shows a man described in the text on the wall as "Abisha the Hyksos" (Heqa-kasut for "Hyksos"), leading a group of Aamu (Aramu, "Aramaeans, Canaanites"). This is not only one of the earliest known uses of the term "Hyksos" and the oldest picture that showed the Hyksos, but it matches exactly the date of arrival, 430 years before the defeat: 1960 BC!

By searching the internet for non-canonical scriptures, the number of search result began to rise exponentially. Very often, I could not find what I was looking for. Equally often, I found things that were totally unknown to me. Particularly, American Christians seem to believe in a "gap" between period of the Old Testament (the Hebrew Bible) and the times of the New Testament (the Christian scripture). I found this claim unbelievable. From history lessons I attended, I knew that the period between say 400 BC and the 1st century AD was full of important events; the most important one being the Greek-Persian Wars and the final victory of Alexander the Great.

The Dead Sea Scrolls, discovered nearby Qumran, Israel, in 1947, were my most important find. Not only filled they the gap, they actually represent the only bulk of scripture that did not go through any kind of editorial commitee. They are a valuably time capsule. And their contents rang my alarm bells. They show a kind of messianic Judaism that is dead today. The laboursome checking of the Babylonian Talmud confirmed what I was only guessing: Modern Judaism and modern Christianity are not "Hebrew" religions at all. Modern Jews are the descendents of the Pharisees, the branch of Romanised Jews who came between the 8th and 6th centuries BC together with their Phoenician brothers to the northern shores of the Mediterranean to trade with Greeks and Romans. They stayed. Those Jews saw the necessity to translate the Tanakh (the Old Testament) into Greek because their descendants began to forget their original Hebrew language. The translation was completed already at around 300 BC. There is the possibility that the conquests of Alexander somehow triggered this event. Actually, the occupation of the Holy Land brought the Dead Sea Scrolls and their hostile attitude towards feireigners about. This was the time when Jews craved for any messiah who could deliver a military victory onto the invaders.

The Dead Sea Scrolls cover also the period of Jesus and they talk about the Zaddik, the "Teacher of Righteousness," most likely representing a character almost forgotten among Christians: James the Just or Righteous, Jacob the Zaddik, James the Brother of Jesus. He seem to have been a holy man in his own right. The War Scroll reveals a very xenophobic ideology in which the "Messianists" followed harsh doctrines that later we would meet again in Islam. By learning about it, I realised why the New Testament was not written in Hebrew but in Greek. It was not written by Hebrew people at all, it was composed by Greek-speaking Romans such as Shaul ha-Tarsi, Saul of Tarsos who claimed in his letters that he was a Roman citizen. Christians know him better as "Paul the Apostle," although he was not one of Jesus' original apostles. He confirms in his letters that he actually was a persecuter of Jesus' people. That means, he was a Roman official as no-one was allowed to persecute people in the Roman Empire without having an official permit for doing this. Christianity as we know it today is a Roman religion. All non-Roman Christians, and all non-Roman Jews were merciless executed like Jesus, many of them in the Colosseum. Most came to death in the 1st Roman-Jewish War (66-70 AD); those who survived fled into the Arabian desert and reappeared hundreds of years later as "Muslims." Unbelievable? —Check the facts, Jews and Muslims have lots of things in common. The males of both are circumcised; both wear a kippa if they are men and a veil if they are women; the central building of the Muslim temple in Mecca has the same size and shape as the central building of the Temple of Jerusalem: it is a cube measuring circa 12m in length, 12m in width and 12m in height. Both buildings were decorated with curtains; Jews and Muslims have a similar food law: pork and blood products are forbidden to eat; the Islamic Sharia Law is almost identical to the Jewish Halaka Law with one exception: the Jewish Court of Law has 23 judges for capital offence cases, the Islamic Court of Law has only one (this makes the Islamic law much harsher and the Jewish law much fairer); The Koran has 25 Jewish prophets in it, including John the Baptiser, Jesus, and Mary the mother of Jesus. John was probably, together with James and others, the instigator of dangerous and subversive ideas such as Jewish kingship. John was also a Roman citizen, that is why he was executed with the sword and not hanged on a cross; according to Roman law, it was unlawful to crucify Roman citizens.

The Grand Bible grew bigger and more texts came to it. Next, I stumbled right into another bulk of texts I had no idea about: The Nag Hammadi Library, discovered nearby Nag Hammadi, Egypt, in 1945. The Nag Hammadi texts were found in a big pottery jar and bound into a dozen of leather folders. They talk about New Testament events. Just like the Dead Sea Scrolls, their texts represent a very valuable time capsule, left behind by people who never retrieved the books. The authors belonged to different Christian communities, mostly non-Roman Christians, such as Gnostics, those Christians who were persecuted and executed by Roman Christians.

When I read the Gospel of Thomas, I had the strange feeling that I had read the phrases in that text before. It was talking about "cycles of life," about the "kingdom of heaven" (which stands for the "kingdom of wisdom"). Wisdom has been very important to the writers of some of the books because Gnostics (also known as Gnostic Christians) use that word in the same sense of meaning as Buddhists do. The Greek word gnosis means knowledge. The Gospel of Thomas is extant in three Greek fragments discovered in the Egyptian town of Oxyrhynchus in 1897. The fragments are dated to the first half of the third century. A complete Coptic copy was unearthed in Nag Hammadi. The Gospel of Thomas is an account of Jesus' sayings and teachings, not a narrative. That is why some scientist have claimed it to be the "Q-document" (Q stands for the German word Quelle meaning the "source" which the Four Synoptic Gospels have been copied from.). The Coptic text copy was written shortly before the year 350 AD. The non-canonical Gospel of Thomas, has some of the same contents as the canonical gospels but, according to its old-fashioned writing style, it is the oldest gospel and probably has been written c. 50 or 60 AD. As I reached the last chapter, I read something that made me almost fall off the chair.

In Chapter 114 we read: Simon Peter [who was known as a woman-hater.] said to them: "Let Mary [Magdalene, companion of Jesus] go forth from among us, for women are not worthy of the life [enlightenment]". Jesus said, "Behold, I shall lead [teach] her, that I may make her male, in order that she also may become a living spirit [of righteousness and wisdom] like you males. For every woman who makes herself male [a disciple] shall enter into the kingdom of heaven [of wisdom]". This is one of the most remarkable Christian texts in history because it is a quotation from the Buddhist Lotus Sutra. [See: The Gospel of Didymus Judas Thomas, Grand Bible, page 760.]

This story is a little more detailed and better understandable in the Lotus Sutra. Briefly narrated, it goes like this: Shariputra (the Buddha's chief disciple) says to the daughter of the king: "You state that you attained the supreme Way [the highest level of Buddhist scholarship and experience]. This thing is hard to believe because the body of a women is filthy and not a vessel of the Law." Now, the king's daughter presented a precious pearl to the Buddha [as alms] which the Buddha immediately accepted. And so the king's daughter transformed into a male [a disciple], perfect in bodhisattva-deeds [high level of righteousness and wisdom], and attained Perfect Enlightenment of the Wonderful Law of all living creatures in the universe [the kingdom of wisdom]. [See: Lotus Sutra, Grand Bible, page 7065, towards the end of chapter 11; see also page 7384, towards the end of chapter 12.]

This text is not about gender but about wisdom, which in ancient times was identified with masculinity. The question here is, "How did the author of the Gospel of Thomas come up with this remarkable quote?" The answer is not far away. If we assume that Jesus' family lived in Nazareth, only 5 km away or one hour walk from Galilee's Sepphoris, then they had the Silk Road station right in front of their door. Buddhist scholars often passed through this area on their way to Alexandria, Athens or Rome. The Apostle Thomas, whose real name was probably "Didymos Judas Thomas", was one of Jesus' brothers and he is known for his journey to India, where he founded the church of the Malabar Christians. [See: The Acts of Thomas, Grand Bible, p. 850].)

Who was Thomas? Judas Thomas was very successful as apostle in Persia and India. As for the very unusual name, "Didymus" and "Thomas" are titles rather than just common names. The Greek word "didymos" means "twin". Curiously, the Aramaic word tuoma, in Greek "thomas," means exactly the same thing: "twin." We can thus read the whole name as "Judas the twin of the twin" or as "Judas the twin brother". Greek was the language of commerce and government. Aramaic was the language of the people and Jesus' family. The fact that the word "twin" was mentioned twice underscores its importance. We know that the entire family of Jesus was "written out of history" by being intentionally camouflaged under various epithets such as "the brother of" instead of the formal, customary, and correct form "the son of." Jesus had four brothers, James, Simon, Judas, Joses and two sisters whose names were probably Mary and Salome. Judas Thomas was most likely one of Jesus' original disciples and also one of his brothers. For the Roman Christians who were followers of the apostle Paul, it was important to erase the family of Jesus from history because they wanted Jesus to appear uniquely like a god, which is a forbidden and despicable act in Judaism (and therefore also in Islam), as it is clearly expressed in the first three of the 10 Commandments. The attempt to make Jesus a god brought the Roman citizen Saul of Tarsus (the Apostle Paul) into conflict with all who knew the true Jesus, especially his brother James, a devout Jew and the undisputed leader of the Judeo-Christian Church of Jerusalem.

I began to realise that the entire text of the Gospel of Thomas breathes a certain Buddhist spirit. Buddhist teachings become obvious each time we read in Christian texts about anything that can be interpreted as the "cycle of life" in one form or another; the same applies when "Dharma," willful deprivation (Asceticism) is mentioned, or purity law, purification, righteousness, or the Five Precepts, which are almost identical to the 2nd half of the Ten Commandments (Thou shalt not kill, etc.). Therefore it is useful to remember that, after the Third Buddhist Council, held under the patronage of Emperor Ashoka in his capital Pataliputra (Patna) in c. 250 BC, the Indian emperor sent emissaries (including his own children) abroad in order to spread the Buddha's teaching of Dharma (righteousness) among foreign scholars. Ashoka made this almost forgotten fact internationally public in his Rock Inscriptions that were composed in Indian, in Greek, and in Aramaic (the language of the Hebrews and Jesus).

Ashoka's Major Rock Edict No.13 reads: "Now, it is the conquest by the Dharma (righteousness) that the Beloved of the Gods (Ashoka) considers as the best conquest. And this one (the conquest by the Dharma) was won here, on the borders, and even 600 yojanas (c.2,400km) from here, where the king Amtiyaka (or Amtiyoga, Antiochos II Theos, 286–246 BC, Seleucid Empire) reigns, and beyond where reign the four kings Tulamaya (Ptolemy II Philadel-phos of Egypt 309–246 BC), Amtekina (Antigonos II Gonatas of Macedon; 320–239 BC), Maka (Magas of Cyrene, Libya; 276–250 BC) and Alikyasadala (Alexander II of Epirus, Albania; 272-255 BC), likewise in the south, where live the Cholas, the Pandyas, and as far as Tamraparni." (see: the Grand Bible, p.2823 / 2825)

To the five mentioned Greek countries, Ashoka sent his scholar Maharakkhita with entourage and gifts (Indian medicine), probably due to his ability to speak Greek and Aramaic. Ashoka made his inscriptions in Prakrit (Vulgar Sanskrit in Brahmi and Karoshti script, the script of the Perian emperor Kurush, Cyrus), but also in Greek, and Hebrew Aramaic. His grandfather Chandragupta Maurya already had the famous Greek historian Megasthenes at his court as ambassador for the Seleucid Empire. (see: The Indika, in the Grand Bible, pp.3405, 3664, 7478).

Undoubtedly, Ashoka's mission was successful because it fell onto fertile ground prepared by Zenoism, today better known as Stoicism. It is a set of teachings first formulated by Zeno of Citium (c.334–262 BC). Philo of Alexandria (c.20 BC – 50 AD) and Titus Flavius Clemens, (Clement of Alexandria, c.150–215 AD) have pointed to the presence of Buddhist, monastic communities they called "Therapeutae" (Theravada*) in the Greek-speaking world and around that period, in particular in Alexandria, Egypt. Well, the Gospel of Didymus Judas Thomas was found in Nag Hammadi, also in Egypt and so most likely no coincidence.

[* The Pali word Theravada originally means School of the Elder; from this word derives the English word Therapist or the word Therapeut in other languages which means "healing practitioner." And this is precisely what the teaching of the Buddha was all about. The Buddha developed a thing that we today would call "psycho analysis;" he called it The Four Noble Truths. The Buddha also offered a "psycho therapy" which he called The Noble Eightfold Path. See a short description after the Gospel of Thomas.]

The following Stoic text could have been written by a Buddhist as well as by a Christian: "Constantly regard the universe as one living being, having one substance and one soul; and observe how all things have reference to one perception, the perception of this one living being; and how all things act with one movement; and how all things are the cooperating causes of all things that exist; observe too the continuous spinning of the thread and the structure of the web."— Emperor Marcus Aurelius, Meditations, 4,40 (Grand Bible, p.3073)

Modern society is based on Critical Thought and on the Golden Rule (Do not harm others as you do not want them to harm you.) Islam does not allow critical thought when it contradicts the basis of Islam: The Koran, the Sira, the Hadith. Muslims, by Islamic doctrine and law, apply the Golden Rule only to members of the Umma, the "House of Islam." In Islam there are 2 humanities: the "House of Islam" and the "House of War," all non-Muslims. The name of the latter implies that this is the adversary on whom Islam can make war through the hand of the believers (Muslims).

In Christian and Jewish societies, the Golden Rule is expressed by the second part of the Ten Commandments. That Islam does not really foster the belief in any of these two concepts has drastic consequences. The Organisation of Islamic Cooperation (OIC) with its 57 states (48 Muslim majority countries) build the largest voting block in the UN. They all recognise the Koran, Sira, Hadith as their books of law or at least as guideline. And they act according to the Sharia Law in which slavery, Dawah (Islamic propaganda), Jihad (persecution and war against non-Muslims), death penalty, forced amputation of limbs, supressing of women is not only allowed but mandatory. Everything you see Muslims do or not do is written and dictated by Koran, Sira, Hadith. Everything is prescribed: it literally goes from how you as a Muslim have a meal to how you have sex.

I realised some facts. Scripture, holy texts, lithurgical literature, were not primarily written to serve the spiritual mind of believers, and if they did, it always was for the advantage of the religious group or community in question. From the earliest times, giving money to the temple was an important tool of political power. So, I assumed that at the core of religious texts must be some rules, regulations or laws—just as in the Islamic Trilogy, the Koran, Sira, Hadith. I took a closer look at the most famous book in the world: The Bible. The Christian Bible is divided into two main parts: the Hebrew Bible (the Old Testament) and the Christian Bible (the New Testament).

The most important part of the Hebrew Bible is the Torah (the Pentateuch, the Five Books of Moses). I wondered why the Christians took the holy book of the Jews as their own. So, I checked the contents of the New Testament. I found 4 gospels but none of them contained a law code, they all contained stories about Jesus narrated in a wildly different way. There were a bunch of open letters, most of them attributed to Paul the Apostle, the Acts (history) of the Apostles, and a weird book called "Revelation." But there was no law book. In about 135 AD, Marcion of Sinope rejected the Old Testament and accepted only the Gospel of Luke, ten letters of Paul, 1 Timothy), 2 Timothy, Titus. He lost his battle against Roman Church because he had no law book. At 325, the Roman emperor Flavius Constantinus accepted the Old Testament as legal guideline for the Roman Church.

THE 613 MITZVOT

According to Jewish tradition, the Torah is the main Jewish Book of Law. It contains almost 650 different laws, formulated most as do's and don'ts of any Jewish person. 613 commandments (Hebrew: taryag mitzvot). The Babylonian Talmud tells us that a Roman editorial commitee had the task to edit the Jewish books and get rid of anything that could be dangerous to the Roman Empire. Emperor Titus Flavius Vespasianus just concluded a four-years war, the 1st Roman-Jewish War of 66-70 AD, against a radical messianic movement who caused by conducting this war of liberation over one million deaths. The pacifying editor in charge was the Jewish general and Commander of the Jewish Messianic Army of the north in Galilee, Joseph bar Matityahu. He was captured by the Roman Army at the begining of that war.

Then, due to his ability to converse in Greek, he began an astonishing transformation, he was adopted by Vespasian, and when he came to Rome, he lived next door to Vespasian in the imperial palace and in reach of the library of the destroyed Temple of Jerusalem which was brought to the emperors palace. His task: becoming propaganda minister to the imperial family and transform messianic Jews and Christians into members of peaceful religions that are allied to the Roman Empire . . . by editing all their scripture into peaceful and pro-Roman texts. All anti-Roman texts were burned just as all messianic opponents were executed on the cross. The Ten Commandments survived and the Death Sea Scrolls that tell us what the men around the historical Jesus really thought.

THE TEN COMMANDMENTS

The Ten Commandments (Hebrew: Aseret haDəbarim, lit. 'The Ten Words'), or the Decalogue (Latin: decalogus, Greek: dekálogos, lit. "ten words"), are a set of biblical principles relating to ethics and worship that play a fundamental role in Judaism, Christianity, and Islam. The text of the Ten Commandments appears twice in the Hebrew Bible: at Exodus 20:2–17 and Deuteronomy 5:6–21. The Ten Commandments survived because they also reflected Roman law. As I grew up among Europeans as well as among Eastern Asians, I knew that the Ten Commandments are composed out of two distinct parts:

1st part (about God)

I am the Lord thy God: Thou shalt have no other gods before me
Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image
Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain
Observe the sabbath day, to keep it holy

2nd part (Basic ethical Laws)

Honour thy father and thy mother
Thou shalt not kill
Thou shalt not steal
Thou shalt not commit adultery
Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbour
Thou shalt not covet or desire thy neighbour's things

The first part is about God, the sabbath for worship and family. The second part represents an ethical set of laws that also well-known is in eastern and southern Asia as Pancha Sila (the Five Precepts).

THE SEVEN LAWS OF NOAH

In Judaism, the Seven Laws of Noah (Hebrew: Sheva Mitzvot B'nei Noach), otherwise referred to as the Noahide Laws or the Noachian Laws (from the Hebrew pronunciation of "Noah"), are a set of universal moral laws which, according to the Talmud, were given by God as a covenant with Noah and with the "sons of Noah"—that is, all of humanity. They usually apply to non-Jews when living with Jews together. The seven Noahide laws as traditionally enumerated in the Babylonian Talmud Sanhedrin 56a-b and Tosefta Avodah Zarah 9:4.

They are the following:
1. Do not worship idols.
2. Do not curse God.
3. Do not commit murder.
4. Do not commit adultery or sexual immorality.
5. Do not steal.
6. Do not eat flesh torn from a living animal.
7. Do establish courts of justice.

The Mishna Sanhedrin (The Guide to Jurisdiction)

The Ten Commandments and the Seven Laws of Noah build the core of Jewish law. Why is this important to know? —To answer it in a simple way: Western civilisation is based on it, and, as you will see in a moment, Eastern civilisation as well! It is also significant to know how these laws have been applied. So let us talk about the legal authority.

According to the Mishnah Sanhedrin (lit. Guide to Jurisdiction or Legal Authority, Grand Bible p. 1048), minor cases like money matters are judged by three (3) judges. Capital cases like murder or slander is judged by twenty-three (23) judges. If found guilty, the delinquent is "put to death by twenty-three," meaning sentenced unanimously by all 23 judges. As it is unlikely that all judges agree, hardly ever anybody was sentenced to death. The Supreme Court of Law, the great Sanhedrin Highest Court, charged with deciding cases and appeals that had national significance. It was comprised of seventy-one (71) scholars who had received the full traditional rabbinical ordination, and its decisions fixed Jewish practice for subsequent generations.

The written (codified) Jewish Halakha law and the Islamic Sharia law have only minor differences because both derive from the same antique Jewish law, which contains many brutal passages from the law Code of Hammurabi. Why then is the Sharia law considered more violent, brutal and inhuman than the Halakha law?

All 4 schools of Sunni (Islamic) jurisprudence (Hanbali, Hanafi, Maliki and Shafi`i) as well as Shia (Islamic) schools follow the laws recorded in the Koran, the Sira, and the Hadith. In both, the rules of civil disputes and application of penal law, Sharia distinguishes between men and women (1 woman = 50% of 1 man!), between Muslims and non-Muslims, and between free persons and slaves. Jewish law does not make such differences, is one answer. The second and most crucial answer, however, influences the outcome of a trial much more:

Whilst in Jewish law, the court structure makes it almost impossible to apply the death penalty as all these judges almost never agree to such a harsh penalty. In a Sharia court, on the other hand (and this is a grave distortion of the original Jewish law), presides only one judge (in some important cases 3 judges) who is expected to stick to the law in the Koran, the Sira, and the Hadith to the letter. He rules supreme like a dictator with the Islamic scripture in his hand as "hammer of law". In early Islamic times, the outcome of a trial has been (and is again) therefore almost always the same: certain death, amputation, slavery, or other harsh penalties.

This explains also in part why the (messianic) Jewish communities in Arabia have fought against Mohammed and his Islam so passionately. In consequence, Mohammed's distortion of the Jewish Law has brought about the mutual hatred between Jews and Muslims. Nothing is to Jews more holy than God and his Law because they are the only legal authority! They fought at least 10 wars against the Romans over this issue between the years 66 to 620 AD. At the end of the 10th Roman-Jewish War, the exhausted Jews had to fight against Mohammed's Islamic troups as well, and lost. What is the legal authority of Islam? -- Answer: The Koran and Mohammed, meaning: Koran, Sira, Hadith.

THE TEN COMMANDMENTS IN ISLAM

The Quran states that tablets were given to Moses, without quoting their contents explicitly. (Koran 7:145) The closest single passage in similarity to the Ten Commandments occurs in the chapter of the cattle (surat al-an'am). In this passage, many of these biblical commandments are restated, with a heavy emphasis on fulfilling the rights of Allah and the rights of people. Verse 151 begins with a summary of what is prohibited in Islam. One should "not kill the life that Allah has made sacred," with the notable caveat: "except in the course of justice." A hadith depicts Muhammad explaining that the "blood of a Muslim ... cannot be shed except in three cases: in Qisas [retaliation, revenge] for murder, a married person who commits illegal sexual intercourse and the one who reverts from Islam (apostate) and leaves the Muslims." (Bukhari, vol. 9, book 87, no. 6878.) So adultery, apostasy, and revenge are the only justifications for taking a life.

The Ten Commandments In The Koran

151. Say, Come, I will recite to you what your Lord has made a sacred duty for you, that you ascribe nothing as a partner to him and that you do good to parents, and that you do not kill your children because of poverty, we provide for you and for them, and that you do not come close to lewd things, whether open or concealed. And that you do not kill the life that Allah has made sacred, except in the course of justice. This he has commanded you, so that you may discern. 152. And do not approach the wealth of the orphan except with what is better, until he reaches maturity. Give full measure and full weight, in justice. We do not burden any soul beyond its ability. And if you give your word, do justice, even though it be a relative, and fulfill the covenant of Allah. This he commands you, so that perhaps you may remember. 153. And this is my straight path, so follow it. Do not follow other ways, so that you will not be parted from his way. He has ordained this for you, so that you may fear Allah. Koran (Mecca, late) 6:151-153

It becomes clear that Mohammed knew the Torah well, however, for the political reasons of achieving total suppremacy over all non-Muslims, he split up the law-set of the Ten Comandments and hides them among other verses in the Koran. His followers will so not be aware that they used to be a set of laws that belong together.

1. First commandment: You shall have no other gods before Me (Bible). — Know that there is no God except Allah. Koran (Medina) 47:19

2. Second commandment: You shall not make idols (Bible). — And do not call upon any other god along with Allah. There is no God except him. Koran (Mecca) 28:88

3. Third commandment: You shall not take the name of the Lord your God in vain (Bible). — Make not Allah's name an excuse to your oaths. Koran (Medina) 2:224

4. Fourth commandment: Remember the Sabbath day and keep it holy (Bible). — When the call for the Friday Prayer is made, hasten to the remembrance of God and leave off your business. Koran (Medina) 62:9

5. Fifth commandment: Honour your father and your mother (Bible). — Do good to your parents, relatives and neighbours. Koran (Medina) 4:36 (Another version: Be kind to your parents if one or both of them attain old age in thy life, say not a word of contempt nor repel them but address them in terms of honour. Koran (Mecca) 17:23)

6. Sixth commandment: You shall not murder (Bible). — Do not take the life which Allah has forbidden except in justice, and do not commit adultery, and whoever does this will pay the penalty. Koran (Mecca) 25:68

7. Seventh commandment: You shall not commit adultery (Bible). — Do not come near to adultery. Indeed, it is an abomination and an evil way. Koran (Mecca) 17:32

8. Eighth commandment: You shall not steal (Bible). — Do not waste your property among yourselves on vanity, nor seek by it to gain the hearing of judges so that you may knowingly devour a portion of others' property wrongfully. Koran (Medina) 2:188 (An amendment from the Code Hannurabi: As for the thief, both male and female, cut off their hands. It is the reward of their own deeds, an exemplary punishment from Allah. Koran (Medina) 5:38-39)

9. Ninth commandment: You shall not bear false witness against your neighbour (Bible). — Do not hide testimony. He who hides it, indeed his heart is sinful. Koran (Medina) 2:283

10. Tenth commandment: You shall not covet (Bible). — Those people are the ones Allah has cursed, . . . are the ones who are jealous of mankind because of what Allah has bestowed upon them out of his bounty. Koran (Medina) 4:52-54

THE COMMANDMENT OF ABROGATION IN THE KORAN

Whatever message We (Allah / Mohammed) abrogate or cause to be forgotten, We bring one better than it or one like it. Knowest thou not that God is Possessor of power over all things? (Koran 2:106; Maulana Muhammad Ali, 1917)

[Modern version: We (Allah / Mohammed) do not abrogate or cause to be forgotten anything of our revelation unless we bring something better or like it. Do you not know that Allah is able to do all things? (Koran 2:106, Robert Spencer, 2021).]

Traditionally, the suras of the Koran are classified as Meccan, that is, dating from the first twelve years of Muhammad's career, when he and his followers lived in Mecca, and Medinan, or dating from the last eleven years of Mohammed's career, after the hijrah, or migration (expulsion), from Mecca. Because of the doctrine of abrogation, Medinan suras are generally considered to take precedence over Meccan suras in the formation of Islamic theology and law.

The structure of the Koran text is dualistic. The doctrine of abrogation is the foundation of the widespread Islamic understanding that the violent verses of the Koran take precedence over the more peaceful verses revealed earlier, since they come later in the lifetime of Mohammed. For good reasons, the concept of naskh, abrogation, has for centuries been part of the skeptics' claim that Muhammad was a false prophet whose revelations were conveniently tailored for the advantage of the moment.

I am going to show now two versions of the chronological order of the chapters in the Koran.

The German Orientalist Theodor Nöldeke arranged his chronological Koran order according to historical context, wording, writing style, and what kind of rhyme was used. The Nöldeke Chronology of the 114 chapters of the Koran are ordered in two main groups or periods: 1st, The Mecca Group (which contains 3 distinctive groups); 2nd, The Medina Group.

THE (peaceful) MECCA KORAN, Group 1 (48 Suras): 96, 74, 111, 106, 108, 104, 107, 102, 105, 92, 90, 94, 93, 97, 86, 91, 80, 68, 87, 95, 103, 85, 73, 101, 99, 82, 81, 53, 84, 100, 79, 77, 78, 88, 89, 75, 83, 69, 51, 52, 56, 70, 55, 112, 109, 113, 114, 1; Group 2 (21 Suras): 54, 37, 71, 76, 44, 50, 20, 26, 15, 19, 38, 36, 43, 72, 67, 23, 21, 25, 17, 27, 18; Group 3 (21 Suras): 32, 41, 45, 16, 30, 11, 14, 12, 40, 28, 39, 29, 31, 42, 10, 34, 35, 7, 46, 6, 13.

THE (violent) MEDINA KORAN, (24 Suras): 2, 98, 64, 62, 8, 47, 3, 61, 57, 4, 65, 59, 33, 63, 24, 58, 22, 48, 66, 60, 110, 49, 9, 5.

I also show you the traditional chapter arrangement by Mohammed's cousin Ibn Abbas:

THE (peaceful) MECCA KORAN: 96, 68, 73, 74, 1, 111, 81, 87, 92, 89, 93, 94, 103, 100, 108, 102, 107, 109, 105, 113, 114, 112, 53, 80, 97, 91, 85, 95, 106, 101, 75, 104, 77, 50, 90, 86, 54, 38, 7, 72, 36, 25, 35, 19, 20, 56, 26, 27, 28, 17, 10, 11, 12, 15, 6, 37, 31, 34, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 51, 88, 18, 16, 71, 14, 21, 23, 32, 52, 67, 69, 70, 78, 79, 82, 84, 30, 29, 83.

THE (violent) MEDINA KORAN: 2, 8, 3, 33, 60, 4, 99, 57, 47, 13, 55, 76, 65, 98, 59, 24, 22, 63, 58, 49, 66, 64, 61, 62, 48, 5, 9, 110.

Whatever number system you prefer to use, in terms of the dualistic Koran division they are almost the same, therefore: any nice and peaceful text from Mecca can be abrogated by the hateful and violent verses of the Medina Koran in either system. Instructions for the use of abrogation: When there is a text in the Koran that contradicts another text in the Koran, then the younger text automatically has authority over the older text! This is the reason why the most violent chapters 9 and 5, for example, outweigh any of the other chapters!

THE FIVE PRECEPTS IN BUDDHISM

Since my childhood, when I was living together with Asian Buddhists, I was aware that the second part of the Ten Commandments had been well-known in the Eastern World. What I did not know was the extent and form they had. I did find the following examples within a couple of days.

The Five Precepts (Sanskrit and Pali: Pancha Sila) or five rules of training is the most important system of morality for Buddhist lay people. They constitute the basic code of ethics to be respected by lay followers of Buddhism. The Five Precepts build the foundation of all Buddhist practice, and in that respect, can be compared with the Ten Commandments in Judaism and Christianity or the ethical codes of Confucianism. According to the Dhammika Sutta and other Buddhist texts, the Buddha notes that a householder's obligations prevent a "householder" (married person, layman) from fully pursuing a monk's path. Thus, the Buddha articulates "the layman's duty" (Pali: gahatthavatta), what are essentially the Five Precepts, as follows:

1. Do not kill or hurt living beings or incite others to kill (Abstention from killing living beings; mind kindness and compassion)
2. Do not steal or take what is not given or incite others to do so (Abstention from theft; mind generosity and renunciation)
3. Do not have sex with another's wife; as monk observe celibacy (Abstention from sexual misconduct; mind contentment and respect for faithfulness)
4. Do not lie or incite others to lie (Abstention from speaking lies or falsehoods; mind being honest and dependable)
5. Do not drink alcohol or incite others to drink intoxicants (Abstention from intoxication; preserve mindfulness and responsibility)

Siddhartha Gautama, most commonly referred to as "the Buddha" ("the awakened or enlightened"), was born in Lumbini, today's Nepal. He lived in the northeast of India during the 6th or 5th century BC and founded Buddhism. He died in Kushinagar, attaining pari-nirvana; his ashes were burried in Piprahvah, India, only a few miles apart from Lumbini in Nepal. His tomb was found by William Claxton Peppe in 1889. An inscription on the lid of an urn identified the massive pyramid-like tomb as that of the Buddha.

Originally, Buddhism was not founded as a religion but developed out of psychoanalysis and treatment of a mind-suffering person. The psychoanalysis was called the "Four Noble Truths" which are traditionally identified as the first teaching given by the Buddha, and considered one of the most important teachings in Buddhism. Basically, they are dealing with a psychlogical analysis on the misery and sufferings that all humans come across in their lifetime. 2500 years before Sigmund Freud, Siddharta Gautama formulated his analysis in four points and called them The Four Noble Truths:

1. dukkha is the suffering itself; life itself always contains suffering.
2. samudaya is becoming aware of the origin of the suffering which lies in unrealistic high desire or attachment on possessions
3. nirodha deals with the teaching how to end of this situation by renouncement
4. magga is path to a successful treatment by going through the stages of the Noble Eightfold Path

The Buddha's Psychotherapy deals principally with self-disciplinising which is called the "Noble Eightfold Path." The suffering person is taught how to go through the 8-step programme. The teaching deals with the correction of harmful habits and behaviours and learning how to keep discipline in a new lifestyle that is less harmful to ones mind and to others. One could call this process Purification. The programme in short:

1. The Right Speech: no lying, no rude speech, no telling one person what another says about him to cause discord or harm their relationship.
2. The Right Conduct or Action: refraining from killing, stealing, sexual misconduct
3. The Right Livelihood: Gaining one's livelihood by benefiting others also not selling weapons, poisons or intoxicants
4. The Right Effort by doing meditation about oneself
5. The Right Mindfulness: learn how to never be absent minded and being conscious of what one is doing at all times
6. The Right Concentration: focus ones mind on one particular task and execute it from the beginning to the end
7. The Right View: our actions have consequences, death is not the end, and our actions and beliefs have consequences after death.
8. The Right Resolve or Intention: the giving up of home and adopting the life of compassion into an environment of non-sensuality, non-ill-will (to loving kindness), peaceful renunciation of wordly things (stay away from always wanting some things), stay away from cruelty, have (compassion) towards loving God and all life.

Later followers have deified the Buddha out of gratitude towards him and at the same time elevated his teachings to that what western people call "religion". Buddha himself perhaps had no intention to found a new religion as he hardly ever mentioned gods or which gods he would favour. The general attitude of an Indian religious group called the Jains is similar to Buddhists.

THE FIVE JAIN VOWS

Jainism was founded or restored by a man called Mahavira. He was born in the early part of the 6th century BC into a royal Kshatriya Jain family in ancient India. His earliest iconography is from archaeological sites in the North Indian city of Mathura, and is dated from between the 1st century BC and the 2nd century AD.

Historically, Mahavira, who revived and preached Jainism in ancient India, was an older contemporary and distant relative of Gautama Buddha whose Shakya clan was also a branch of the Solar dynasty.

In Indian tradition, the Ikshvaku dynasty was founded by the legendary king Ikshvaku. The dynasty is also known as Sūryavaṃśa ("Solar dynasty" or "Descendants of the Sun"), which means that this dynasty prays to the Sun as their God and their originator, and along with the Lunar dynasty, comprises one of the main lineages of the Kshatriya Varna.

Jain ethical code prescribes two dharmas or rules of conduct. One for those who wish to become ascetic and another for the śrāvaka (householders). Five fundamental vows are prescribed for both votaries. These vows are observed by sravakas (householders) partially and are termed as anuvratas (small vows). Ascetics observe these fives vows more strictly and therefore observe complete abstinence. All these subdivisions (injury, falsehood, stealing, unchastity, and attachment) are himsa as indulgence in these sullies the pure nature of the soul. According to the Jain text in the Purusartha Siddhyupaya, there are five vows:

- Ahimsa (non-injury) is the vow not to kill and injure anyone
- Satya (Truth) is the vow not to lie, and to speak the truth
- Asteya (Non-stealing) is the vow not to take anything which is not freely given and without permission.
- Brahmacharya (Chastity) is the vow to remain sexually faithful to one's chosen partner
- Aparigraha (Non-possession) is the vow of not to covet or being greedy

THE FIVE PRECEPTS IN DAOISM

The Five Precepts are also known in China. In Daoism (Dao = 'the way'), the Five Precepts (Chinese: Wǔ Jiè) constitute the basic code of ethics undertaken mainly by laymen. For monks and nuns, there are more advanced and stricter precepts. The Five Precepts are nearly the same as the Five Precepts of Buddhism; however, there are minor differences to fit in with Chinese society. Laozi said: "These five precepts are the fundamentals for keeping one's body in purity, and are the roots of the upholding of the holy teachings. For those virtuous men and virtuous women who enjoy the virtuous teachings, if they can accept and keep these precepts, and never violate any of them till the end of their lifetimes, they are recognised as those with pure faith, they will gain the Way to Dao, will gain the holy principles of enlightenment." According to the Zhengtong Daozang (正統道藏), there are five basic precepts (with definitions by Laozi):

1. No Killing: "All living beings, including all kinds of animals, and those as small as insects, worms, and so forth, are containers of the uncreated energy, thus one should not kill any of them."
2. No Stealing: "One should not take anything that he does not own and is not given to him, whether it belongs to someone or not."
3. No Sexual Misconduct: "If a sexual conduct happens, but it is not with your married spouse, it is a Sexual Misconduct.
4. No False Speech: "If one did not witness what happened himself but telling something to others, or if one lies with knowing it's a lie, this constitutes False Speech."
5. No Taking of Intoxicants: "One should not take any alcoholic drinks, unless he has to take some to cure his illness, to regale the guests with a feast, or to conduct religious ceremonies."

THE FIVE YAMAS AND THE FIVE NIYAMAS (10 Commandments) IN HINDUISM

The teaching that comes closest to the Jewish teachings is Hinduism, and the probable reason for that is history. The Commandments of the Hindus are most likely the oldest in India.

The Hebrews appeared in India in the 7th or 6th century BC when the Persian Empire expanded. They worked for their liberators from Babylonian captivity. They became scribes and even Persian government officials for the simple fact that all of them spoke Aramaic, the official language of Persian foreign affairs. At that time, writing was totally onknown in the Indian civilisation. Hindus, Buddhists and others used monasteries as "memorisation factories" for their holy texts; monks had to memorise the texts and teach them to other monks. The conquest of Alexander the Great changed everything. Chandragupta Maurya, who witnessed the events, became some years later emperor. He and his right-hand-man Chanakya recognised the value of writing and developed from the Aramaic alphabet an own Indian writing system called Brahmi. For the first time, law texts were written down in India, such as the following ones:

1. The Five Yamas

Yamas are ethical rules in Hinduism and can be thought of as moral imperatives (the "don'ts"). The Yoga Sutras of Patanjali, in Book 2, states how and why each of the above self-restraints helps in an individual's personal growth. For example, in verse II.35, Patanjali states that the virtue of nonviolence and non-injury to others (Ahimsa) leads to the abandonment of enmity, a state that leads the yogi to the perfection of inner and outer amity with everyone, everything. The Five Yamas pretty much look like the second half of the Ten Commandments. They are listed by the Yoga Sutras of Patanjali (and by the Ashtanga Yoga) 2.30 as follows:

1. Ahimsa: Nonviolence, (non-harming other living beings)
2. Satya: Truthfulness, (non-falsehood)
3. Asteya: non-stealing
4. Brahmacharya: Chastity, (marital fidelity or sexual restraint)
5. Aparigraha: non-avarice, non-possessiveness (do not covet)

2. The Five Niyamas

The second component of Patanjali's Yoga path is niyama, which includes virtuous habits and observances (the "dos"). As with the Yamas, Patanjali explains how and why each of the Niyamas helps in personal growth. For example, in verse II.42, Patanjali states that the virtue of contentment and acceptance of others as they are (Santosha) leads to the state where inner sources of joy matter most, and the craving for external sources of pleasure ceases. The Niyamas remind us of Jewish and Stoic teachings. Sadhana Pada Verse 32 lists the 5 niyamas as:

1. Shaucha: purity, cleanness of body, mind and speech (very important rules also in Judaism and Persia's Zoroastrianism)
2. Santosha: contentment, acceptance of others, acceptance of one's circumstances as they are in order to get past or change them, optimism for self
3. Tapas: persistence, perseverance, austerity, asceticism, self-discipline
4. Svadhyaya (Selfstudy, Meditation, study of Vedas, introspection of self's thoughts, speech and actions
5. Isvara Pranidhana (Devotion to the Lord, the "supreme being" who is called Brahma and known as True Self and Unchanging Reality)

THE INSTRUCTIONS OF SHURUPPAK

After that research, I did not find anything for quite a while. I was not sure which versions were the older ones, the versions in the Hebrew Bible or those ones from India. The next document on ethical law, I found three years later . . . and it made me stop breathing for a while.

In 1963 and 1965, an American expedition from the Oriental Institute of Chicago led by Donald P. Hansen made an amazing find at Abu Salabikh, which lies around 20 km (12 mi) northwest of the site of the ancient city of Nippur in Al-Qadisiyyah Governorate, Iraq. During the excavation campain, that lasted for a total of 8 weeks, the archaeologists found around 500 tablets and fragments, containing some of the earliest ancient literature.

Among them was the book "Instructions of Shuruppak". This book from 2600 BC was a sensation as it was the very oldest example of the commandments or precepts which much later appeared in the Bible and manuscripts in India and China. The book was written on clay tablets which were found in a low "tell" (mound) at Abu Salabikh. Its contemporary name probably was Eresh and it was a small Sumerian city of the mid third millennium BC, with cultural connexions to the cities of Kish, Mari and Ebla.

This book was obviously written to teach virtues in order to preserve community standards. The about 100 precepts are placed in the mouth of a King Shuruppak, son of Ubara-Tutu. Ubara-Tutu is recorded in the Sumerian king list as being the final king of Sumer prior to the Deluge. The ancient Sumerian city of Shuruppak probably was named after King Shuruppak. It was situated not far away from the finding place of the clay tablets, at the site of the modern Tell Fara, about 55 kilometres (35 mi) south of Nippur on the banks of the Euphrates in Iraq's Al-Qadisiyyah Governorate.

The text consists of admonitory sayings of King Shuruppak addressed to his son Ziusudra (the flood hero who is also known as Utnapishtin in Akkad). Lots of the book's precepts bear resemblance to those ones which we can read in the Torah (the Five books of Moses). But the commandments of King Shuruppak are far more detailed, much more direct, and refreshingly blunt. Here a little selection:

Thou shouldst not speak arrogantly to thy mother.
Thou shouldst not kill.
Thou shouldst not steal.
Thou shouldst not commit robbery.
Thou shouldst not speak improperly.
Thou shouldst not play around with a married young woman.
Thou shouldst not have sex with thy slave girl.
Thou shouldst not wish for the money chest.
Thou shouldst not pass judgement when thou drinkst beer.
Thou shouldst not pick a quarrel.

Some of the commandmends are purely practical: Thou shouldst not locate a field on a road; .... Thou shouldst not make a well in thy field: people will cause damage on it for thee. (lines 15–18). Moral precepts are followed by the negative practical results of transgression: Thou shouldst not play around with a married young woman: the slander could be serious. (lines 32–34). To me, the Instructions of Shuruppak is one of the most impressive prose texts I have ever come across. I am convinced that these "stone tablets" made of clay, are the blueprint for the Ten Commandments as well as all the many versions of the precepts in Asia. Almost all of the 100 precepts of Shuruppak do still have their value in the upbringing of our young people today. This book has the most beautiful voice from the past I have ever heard because it speaks to us all as loud and clear as 4600 years ago.

FINAL REMARKS

The biblical scholar and translator of the Dead Sea Scrolls, Robert Eisenman, said in an interview something we should think about: "We've challenged ourselves and extended ourselves. And people who are intelligent thinking people in the modern world are tired of just being fed with pabulum and fables in the catechism class. That has been the problem of religion for modern people. Once it had only been relegated to unthinking people. And [today's] thinking people say, 'oh, I'm not religious.' — We all need to be religious! And this will allow us to get our teeth into a challenging problem."

After my 6-years long battle with hundreds of manuscripts and holy texts, I had a compilation that might be of value to students and scholars. The Grand Bible was growing to an enormous size that I have not expected in the beginning. In the beginning, I still had the illusion, I could print my work or at least present it as printable document. Soon, however, that document grew beyond the 2000-page-limit that I have set. And equally soon, I have lost interest in any printed display as editors from outside my house would have cut my discoveries down, rendering them to some sort of standard junk. Instead of that, I discovered that a larger PDF-document had definitely its advantages over a printed book, even if it was printed in several volumes. PDF-apps usually have a search field in which we can type what we are looking for.

My compiled standard MS-document reached 36,000 pages in Times New Roman and 40,000 in Arial. I had to shrink the size of the fonts onto 7.5 and choosing a Times Roman Narrow font — still larger than a package leaflet for medication. Some smart phones struggle with that document due to its size of almost 250MB, but tablets, laptops and PCs display it nicely. Anyone — who has the money and a good printshop — can print the Grand Bible in A3 if needed.

It had 7554 pages in the 3rd edition of 2021. The book underwent many changes and improvements. In 2022, I added a 4th edition of the Grand Bible that has now, after 8 years, 8054 pages as I have expanded the Appendices with additional photos, maps and texts. Like some of my other books, the Grand Bible is being updated from time to time. The download is for free.

I hope that I have contributed something that helps to solve the problem of understanding holy books. These texts are not weird stories to serve the spiritual needs of individuals only. As texts of law and advice, they are in fact the basis of our civilisation.

GRIMM

are the epitome of the folk tale as a genre, and there is a good reason for it. In order to save folk tradition from extinction by the Industrial Revolution, the Brothers Grimm launched a collecting project for fairy tales that lasted for half a century. For the first time, we have published all their 250 collected fairy tales together here on Internet Archive to give you swift and easy access to a bygone age that deserves attention. GRIMM'S FAIRY TALES

Lord Henfield added all 40 tales that had formerly been removed over time from Grimm's authorised versions.

This is the largest and, with now over 250 stories, the most complete edition of the "Children's and Household Tales collected by the Brothers Grimm" that has ever been produced in one single volume in English. Free download.

In 1945, archaeologists found a complete copy of THE GOSPEL OF THOMAS in Nag Hammadi, Egypt.

In 2017, Lord Henfield made a sensational discovery: The 114th paragraph of that book contains a quote from the Buddhist Lotus Sutra, one of the most sacred books of Buddhism. Free Download.

THOUGHT:

AS GOD HAS MADE THE WORLD AND ALL IN IT
WE ALL HAVE GOD IN OURSELVES

ANYONE WHO FORCES SOMEONE TO BELIEVE
DOES NOT COME FROM GOD BUT FROM SATAN

FREEDOM MUST BE FOUGHT FOR BY SPEAKING UP AGAINST THOSE WHO TRY TO MAKE YOU SHUT UP

RELIGION IS NOT MADE BY GOD BUT BY MAN
TO PUT YOU IN CHAINS AND GAIN FROM YOU

FAITH CANNOT BE ENFORCED BUT MUST BE FOUND

THE GRAND BIBLE

An Encyclopaedic Compilation
by Lord Henfield

With over 20 million words in fine print and a size of 250 MB, this document is one of the largest compilations of its kind in history. It is a searchable and printable PDF. All of these documents are available online. However, it is extremely laboursome to find all of them. It took the work of more than 20,000 hours to get them, to analyse them, and to attach relevant information to them.

These documents are the voices of our past, the thoughts, feelings, and ideas of people who can speak to us now although they have died hundreds or even thousands of years ago. Ancient scriptures may mirror beliefs and convictions. They are much more than just religious texts. They are in fact the foundations of all our civilisations. Their commandments, precepts, and laws form the basis of all things we do today.

During the last 200 years, archaeologists, historians, linguists, translators, scientists and other investigators brought hundreds of thousands new documents to light. Entire libraries of documents have been found in Mesopotamia, Egypt, China, India, and other parts of the World. The voices of these documents tell us things we never would have believed before. Suddenly, we do not only hear them but we understand what they are saying.

Biblia is a Greek word which denotes a collection of books. We only can understand their contents when we show them side by side together with eyewitness accounts from the same period of time. This is the reason why this compilation contains not just religious texts but also historical accounts. Just like having completed large parts of a jigsaw puzzle, all the documents taken here together, bring an image to emerge that makes us free from unilateral stereotypes. Like in a birds-eye-view that is coming out of clouds of fog, a landscape of the past appear before our very eyes. This is the reason why this compilation bears the name Grand Bible; it truly is a large library put together in one single document.
